

The Ramakrishna Mission
Institute of Culture Library

Presented by
Dr. Baridbaran Mukerji

ES111L 8

19876

19876

and RAYYET

PRINCE & PEASANT

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

VIII.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1886.

No. 2

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

THE SONG OF THE BELL.

WAKE, Wake, Wake!

Up, sluggard, up! the sun appears

Awake, awake—thy bed forsake

Before the flowers have dried their tears

Before the last star sinks away,

Lost in the golden hues of day.

Hark, the Matin Bell

Sounds o'er hill and dell

Ding, Dong, Bell.

Bread, Bread, Bread!

Merchant, scholar and artisan,

Hasten, hasten—the board is spread—

Thank the Giver, thou thankless man!

How many poor ones hear my voice,

Yet never, never like thee rejoice

At the dinner Bell,

With its peal and swell,

Ding, Dong, Bell.

One, Two, Three!

Hark, the numbering of the hours

Mark, mark, the moments swiftly flee

The past the present still devours.

Seven and eight and nine and ten.

They never will return again

Mark the hourly Bell

Its oft told story tell,

Ding, Dong, Bell.

Fire, Fire, Fire!

Hurry the engine, hearts of oak,

For the flame is rising—higher, higher!

Man on the ladder, mind your stroke!

Dash in the window—grasp that child!

Pass him along—the mother is wild!

Peal, peal, the Fire Bell,

Crash, crash—who was it fell?

Ding, Dong, Bell.

Toll, Toll, Toll!

As the dark hearse moves o'er the lea

Toll, toll, toll for the passing soul

Whose earthly house dissolved must be

Dust goes to dust and earth to earth,

Cease, careless trifter, cease thy mirth.

For the funeral Bell

Soon will ring thy knell,

Ding, Dong, Bell.

Peal, Peal, Peal!

The merry, merry, Marriage Bell—

Two hearts are joined for woe or weal,

Together, while life lives to dwell

Peal, peal—the golden knot is tied,

Who would not bless the fair young Bride

List—the merry Bell

The joyful tidings tell,

Ding, Dong, Bell.

Hurrah, Hurrah, Hurrah!

The battle's done, the town is won,

The thunder notes of victory

Drown the cry of the desolate one;

Fathers, husbands, children are slain,

Who heeds the dead? Who heeds the pain?

While the pealing Bell

The victor notes swell,

Ding, Dong, Bell.

Hurry, Hurry, Hark away!

The steam-ship vomits fire and smoke,

'Gainst wind and tide she moves to-day

With hundred arms and giant stroke

Like a fiery steed she pants and springs,

Let go there, men, the last bell rings.

Run, run, the ship Bell,

Run on beam and pole Bell

Ding, Dong, Bell.

Pray, Pray, Pray

The Sabbath Bell rings solemnly

For thy soul's good, oh, come away,

Visit the house of prayer to-day,

Listen to the good shepherd's cry

To guide thee on the rocky shore.

Hark, the Sabbath Bell

To win thy soul from hell

Ding, Dong, Bell.

Rest, Rest, Rest!

Weary laborers go to rest to-day

Under the eye of the Lord to-day

Who watches thy defence to-day

Sleep while the day, the week, the year,

Weave in the dance as only men

Though the Venge Bell

Hath warned them well

Ding, Dong, Bell.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills are beyond all doubt the most valuable and most convenient medicine that travellers can take with them to the sea to distant climes, for change of climate and the new conditions and surrounding of life to which they will be exposed will necessarily give rise to great disturbances of the system and to such especial morbid states of the blood and constitution generally as will render the use of these efficient remedies highly necessary, for they will find in them a ready and safe means of relief from most of the diseases which afflict the human race, and with them at hand they may be said to have a physician always at their call.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND COMMENTS

12 May Year 1890, and was with me at the Peace. King Albert, received a Year 1890 from the Congress Diplomatic and he loved the race was a urel for May 1890. At the same time, the liberal member of the League, there was of opinion with the trade alliance in 1890, the League was not out and himself, and the preservation of peace during the current President Carnot, in becoming the French Ambassador referred the forthcoming French Exhibition as being a peace.

MANY OF SYCAMORE have entered into such engagements for a period of six months. Many more find articles—cotton, emulating at a low level down with cotton thread, for example.

Empire equal £22,500,000 at 4 per cent. and

The American Government has abolished the import duty on all goods from the Philippines.

in 1902 Bank of America from London to

RE DEFERRED: In 1961, I left my job and went to the 100th Airborne Division for an assignment in Europe.

(A) On 7-21-68, the primary destroyed ...
... mile. The ongoing ... were shattered. Three persons were killed. Several ... The loss is estimated at 1500 ...

But what in the use of goodness, is a meal-dust explosion? We can understand a gun-powder or gun-cotton or dynamite explosion. We know the bursting of a steam-engine or a coal-miner. The gates are usually prisoners, to be sure. The corks of bottles often burst, and bottles themselves burst. Even the stoppers of peaceful beverages, like the juice of pomegranate, sometimes spring from their sockets. But we never suspected the latent spirit of meal-dust. In fact, we have been taught to associate ideas of sweetness and peace with meal. Thus we speak of "a mealy mouth." Our elementary notions of things receive a rude shock when a part of a great city is overwhelmed in destruction from the invisible particles of meal reduced to powder.

As an auxiliary to the Lushan Expedition, a temporary division of the Public Works Department with Mr. C. H. Mull, Inspector of local works in the Chittagong division, in charge, has been sanctioned under the name of the Chittagong Hill Tract Division, and will undertake all the works in the Chittagong Hill Tracts and beyond the frontier.

A TELEGRAM from Rangoon says that one of the chief officers in Burma Police Mr. Percival, is a prominent of Police, was shot in his bungalow at Myingit, 30 miles north-east of Yangon, on 31st in the 31st December last. The same bullet merely wounded his companion Mr. Bartles, Assistant Superintendent of Police. The murderer is yet unknown.

There was a Durbar at Rangoon on the New Year day, at which Esman's loyalty was rewarded. How, we are not told

2.11 Chinay Fort is to be dismantled.

THE Presbyterian Mission at Rampur Beaulieu have built a house for girls. Mr. Badcock, the District Judge, opened it on December last.

IN the closing month of the expired year—during the
it was open—2,554 male and 2,551 female natives and 91
265 female Europeans, and 137,493 at a daily average of 1,627 —visited the Indian Museum. This number, we believe includes such visitors as the Viceroy, who, on Friday, 11th
the big ugly pile and was received by the Superintendent, Wood-Mason.

ball, discarding the trash attended.

Mr. WHITE, the Eurasian leader out of danger.

THE Ed. News's Own from Ma
Connemara for England shortly.

THERE was a State Ball at Government

THE Observer has announced the award of "successive attempts to serve the public," he paid a total of Rs. 5,000. He was indeed blind with his zeal to serve the public, or else he could have known his reward earlier.

... ..

reserved as home run in World War II. He was for the breeding of the animals.

...of the ... from the ... of the Pathoma, besides otherwise receiving the ... subjects.

They have formed an Export Society in Berlin. The idea is to hold a National Aesthetic Exhibition in the interest of the German Trade. The prospectus, among other things, explains:—

Although the efforts of the former have been very successful in procuring that amount of conviction as to the value and cheapness of German manufactures to the minds of foreigners that is necessary to the interest of German trade. The only right way or at least the best way is to visit the foreign dealer in his own country and thereby bring his attention to such articles as would otherwise escape his notice. These are the views that have led to the idea of starting a permanent Exhibition for which purpose the new steamer is to be specially constructed; it is proposed to make a regular tour about once in two years, and the largest ports of the world where the exhibition will be held not only to buyers but also to the inspection of the general public. The steamer which is to be named the "Kaiser Wilhelm" is to be 375 feet long, 45 feet broad and of a height of 25 feet, and will cost, if the project is carried out, about 3 million marks. The necessary outfitting capital would be about 5 million marks. The directors of the Exhibition are of opinion that the Exhibition should be started in Spring of 1900. Nothing has however yet been said as to the manner in which the total is to be procured.

14. Example A prominent and interesting experiment, conducted in France and related in the British Medical Journal, to test the influence of the mind on the body.

The criminal was sentenced to penal servitude for life was chosen as the subject for the test. He was led to believe that the experiment would be a comparatively painless one, and that if he did not succumb, a free pardon would already have been granted him. On his consenting to the operation, the doctor told him that they were going to open one of his veins, and that if he did not bleed to death in a given time he would be released. An incision was made in his arm with a sharp instrument and the blood seemed to trickle down. And a single drop of blood flowed from the hole at first, but nevertheless death ensued. It had been a mere matter of a few minutes.

Her book, like the same writer, is the newest "fad" in the medical world. Faith-healing, described as -- consists of the employment of suggestion combined with hypnosis as a therapeutic agent, and it is directed to the treatment of all fanciful and nervous complaints, but to the subjection of every detail of a patient's case is elicited, his temperament, and surroundings, before treatment is attempted. The doctor doses his patient without reference to his rank or wealth, rich after all might be the real malady. He is then seated and subjected to a mesmeric influence under deep sleep. Let us imagine him suffering from chronic indigestion. The parts of the body chiefly affected are gently pressed and the doctor who assures the sufferer that the pain will soon cease will never trouble him again. That a healthy condition will be maintained and that all the pains and peculiarities attendant on the treatment is repeated, on every occasion good is effected, until at last the suggestions are thoroughly acted upon, and the patient is cured."

Verily, as has been said, there is nothing new under the sun. The newest mode of cure is the oldest, for the latest, like the earliest, depends chiefly upon belief for much of its efficacy.

RE, from America, is the recipe for a new fluid which claims to erase and remove writing and marks of ink from paper, cloth and other stuff or substance:—

"To a quart of water, which has been previously boiled and cooled, add 4 ounces of nitric acid, and after the acid has been dissolved, add 6 ounces of a saturated solution of borax, and 12 ounces of chlorinated lime. Place the whole in a stoppered quart bottle, shake well occasionally in the course of several hours, then allow to settle, and decant the clear liquid for use."

AT the last matriculation examination of the Bombay University, three Native and thirteen European ladies passed. Of the former, one is a Miss Padsha, another is a daughter of Mr. Daulabhai Naoroji, and the third a daughter of the well-known Dr. Atmarang Pandurang. It is satisfactory to know that three ladies will continue their studies.

WE are glad to learn that

"The Dholepore Dmbar troops have succeeded in breaking up a band of dacoits who have long infested the Agra Gwalior border. A man, named Chhatra, for whom a reward of Rs. 6,000 was offered, and Zahera and Rakhma, two other well-known leaders, were killed, and a third, called Padma, captured."

THE following appears under the "Births, Marriages, and Deaths" heading in the Phoenix:—

"DEATH.—O. and R. Railway Company, Limited—At Lucknow, at midnight, on 31st December, 1888, the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway Company, Limited, after a long and protracted struggle (Very deeply regretted by an extensive circle of relatives and friends, some of whom are now left to their own resources.)"

Are we to suppose that our contemporary's "domestic occurrences" are of the same figurative character?

When a letter-press joke is indulged in in the shape of an advertisement of any kind, it is inserted under conditions which prevent its being passed over or its bringing suspicion upon the genuine matter-of-fact announcements.

MR. JUSTICE O KINEALY has obtained furlough from the 21st February to the 8th September 1889.

FOR the better sanitation of emigrant coolies, the Government of India has proposed the following addition to the Rules under the Indian Emigration Act, XXI of 1883:

"Every emigrant ship shall have a clearing space on the upper-deck of at least four square feet for each adult carried in the between-decks."

OUR sovereign is always happy in her personal intercourse with the poor. A boy named Thomas Bond having picked up a pocket-handkerchief dropped from the Queen's carriage as Her Majesty and the Empress Frederick were driving near Windsor, his sister sent it with a letter to the Castle. She has received a prompt answer, thanking her for her letter and the handkerchief, which, she was thereby informed, belonged to the Empress Frederick. The cream of the letter for its poor recipient was its enclosure which is referred to in the conclusion, thus:—"Sir H. Ponsonby, in expressing the Queen's thanks to Thomas Bond, is desired to send him the enclosed postal order for £1 as a donation from Her Majesty." God save the Queen!

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE New Year dawned with the usual parade, before the Viceroy, on the Madras, of the troops in garrison and the local Volunteers, and the firing of the royal salute and feu de joie in remembrance of the Assumption of title of Empress by the Queen. The auspicious day closed with the State Banquet at Government House and the customary Gazette of Honors. The Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne gave celat to the dinner by their united presence. The Fancy Fair at the Zoo was not omitted. It was attended by the Viceroy and the ladies of Government House who were received by Mr. Gubbay and Nawab Abdool Lateef of the Committee. Lord Lansdowne contributed to the Charities by entering appearance at many of the stalls. The last of the Honored is as follows:

To be Knights Commanders, Star of India.

The Hon. David Miller Barbour, C.S.I., Bengal Civil Service, Member of the Council of the Governor-General.

Nawab Muhammad Akram Khan, C.S.I., Chief of Amb. in the Hazara District of the Punjab.

To be Companions, Star of India.

The Hon. Andrew Richard Scoble, Q.C., Ordinary Member of the Council of the Governor-General.

George Douglas Bures, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, Commissioner, Northern Division of Upper Burma.

To be Knights Commanders, Indian Empire.

Henry Mortimer Durand, Esq., C.S.I., Bengal Civil Service, Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department.

Maharaja Krishna Pratap Sahu Bahadur, of Hata, in Bengal.

Arthur George Mapherson, Esq., Judicial and Public Secretary, India Office, London.

William Mackay, Esq., late Puisne Judge of the Calcutta High Court.

Henry Stuart Cunningham, Esq., late Puisne Judge of the Calcutta High Court.

To be Companions, Indian Empire.

Lieutenant-Colonel Edwin Henry Hyatt Collett, Bengal Staff Corps, Secretary to the Government of India in the Military Department.

The Hon. S. Subramanya Aiyar, Rai Bahadur, Additional Member of the Council of the Governor of Fort St. George for making Laws and Regulations.

Edwin Felix Thomas Atkinson, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, Accountant-General of Bengal.

Captain John Hext, Royal Navy, A. D. C., Director of Marine under the Government of India.

Ramakrishna Gopud Bhandarkar, Professor of Oriental Languages in the Deccan College, Poona.

Lieutenant-Colonel William Breerton Hudson, Commandant of the Behn Light Horse.

Surgeon-Major John Findlay, M. B., Army Medical Department, late Surgeon to the Viceroy.

Sayid Mubbar Ali, Honorary Magistrate of Thanet Galsathi, in the Bulandshahr District of the North-Western Provinces.

Henry Josiah Whympere, Esq., Manager of the Muree Brewery Company.

Raja Sudhal Deo, Feudatory Chief of Bamra, in the Central Provinces.

Fredrick William Stevens, Esq., Associate of the Institution of Civil Engineers.

Babu Pratap Chandra Rai, of Calcutta.

Arthur Wills Paul, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, Deputy Commissioner of Darjiling.

Maharaja (hereditary)

Lieutenant-Colonel His Highness Maharaja Raja Sawar Mangal Singh Bahadur, G. C. S. I., of Alwar.

Maharao (hereditary)

His Highness Rao Kesh Singh Bahadur, of Serohi.

Raja Bahadur (personal)

Kumar Balkunth Nath Dey, of Balesore.

Raja (personal)

Ra Baidyo Nath Pundit Bahadur, Zemindar of Dupna, in the Cuttack District.

Babu Shasta Shaktiwar Roy, Zemindar of Gourpur, in the Rajshahi District.

Tendook Pulger, of Kannee, Honorary Magistrate in the Dapling District.

Ra Bahadur Seth Gokuldas, of Jubbulpur.

Shams-ul-Uluma (personal)

Dastur Dr. Peshotun Behramji Saigum, Principal of the Zoon Laboratory Zoon and Petalva Meentessa, in Bombay.

Maulvi Syed Wahedooddeen, Khan Bahadur, of Patna.

Khatra Fakhra (personal)

Khan Sahib Rattunji Begum, of the Communal Department in Bombay.

Senior Apothecary Shrikumar, Assistant to the Surgeon to the Exchequer the Governor of Bombay.

Sardar Surtan Bhirum, Subedar, Extra Assistant Commissioner in the Peshawar District.

Mir Rasul Bakh, Rai-un, of Surawm, in Balauchistan.

Muhammad Ghaseemuddin, Inspector in the Department for the Suppression of Thuggee and Dacoity.

Rao Bahadur (personal)

Rao Sahib Ranchandra Trimbak Acharya, District Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor in the Hanc District of the Bombay Presidency.

Rao Sahib Ahmad Trilokdas Bhojvan, B. A., Deputy Educational Inspector at Karachi.

A. V. Nara Singa Rao, F. R. A. S., of the Vizagapatam District of the Madras Presidency.

N. Siva Rao, Pleader, Municipal Councillor at Mandlore in the Madras Presidency.

P. Puranya Panabai, Huzur Sarishtadar of Vizagapatam and temporarily Deputy Collector of Bellary in the Madras Presidency.

Salem Ramaswami Modaliyar, M. A., B. L., Municipal Commissioner at Madras.

Rao Yado Rao Pande, Honorary Magistrate of Bhandara, in the Central Provinces.

Thakur Gobind Singh, of Jampur, in Rajputana.

Rao Bahadur (personal.)

Babu Ram Pershad, late Subordinate Judge of Patna.

Babu Gopal Chunder Mookerjee, Honorary Assistant Examiner in the Public Work Department of the Government of Bengal.

Assistant Surgeon, Prosunno Roy, Additional Chemical Examiner to the Bengal Medical Department, Calcutta.

Barindra Chandra Ghosal, late First Grade Inspector of Police in the Leeward Provinces of Bengal.

B. C. Ghosh and Boro, Municipal Commissioner, Honorary Magistrate and Justice of the Peace for the Town of Calcutta.

Babu Umdant Dass, Assistant Political Agent of Hill Tipperah.

Sardar Bahadur (personal.)

Sardar Ratan Singh, District Superintendent of Police in the Central Provinces.

Khin Sahib (personal.)

Cowasji Hormuji Dada Charji, Contractor at Aden.

Rao Sahib (personal.)

Lalubhai Kasandas, late Nao Subah under the Baroda Darbar.

Seth Askaran, Honorary Magistrate of Raipur, in the Central Provinces.

Kyet thaye zung shwe Salwe ya Min (personal.)

Maung Gale, Extra Assistant Commissioner in the Tavoy District.

Maung Ne Dun, Municipal Commissioner and Honorary Magistrate in Prome.

Yin Wei Shang, of Mandalay.

Thure gung ngaw Da ya Min (personal.)

Maung San Ya, Myook of Salu, in the Minbu District.

Maung Tun Hla, Head Constable of Police in the Myingyan District.

Mhmadun gung Tawek ya Min (personal.)

Maung Hle, Honorary Magistrate and Municipal Commissioner in Moulmein.

Maung Tha Dun, Municipal Commissioner in Mergui.

Maung Pe, Wun of Myadung.

Maung Sa, Myook of Uyu, in the Upper Chindwin District.

Maung Bya Gale, Karen elder, of Pegu.

THE latest telegram throws light of no lurid grimness on the fate of the heroes who, having penetrated to the heart of the Dark Continent, had been cut off from communication with the rest of the world and were understood to have been cut down or captured. An Egyptian soldier, it is believed, has returned at Wadi Hulfa from Omdurman, which he left in the last days of November. According to him, Emin Pasha goes in the Soudan as the "White Pasha," and he reports that Emin has not been captured. On the contrary, in October, the Pasha hurled back a formidable attack on his position by the followers of the Madhi, six thousand strong.

IN Germany, the new Emperor has commenced the reaction by decorating with the Black Eagle the minister Herr Von Puttkammer. In the late Emperor's time, he was not only Minister of the Interior but also Vice-President of the Council of Ministers. The liberal Frederick divided the organised mind and action with the free choice by the people of their representatives, with the reproach of constitutionalism of the Continent. He proved his earnestness by a really winning letter in favour of an impartial attitude by Government and urging them to stop official pressure at elections. That letter involved the Emperor in a serious quarrel with his Cabinet. Prince Bismarck, protected against the publication of a document which was tantamount to a condemnation of the Great Chancellor's methods of "educating" his party and the people. That letter ought never to have been written, but having been fulminated, its existence could not be helped by even the resourceful genius of a Bismarck.

A covering autograph could not, of course, be formally withdrawn, but it could be suppressed. Bismarck could not allow a publication which would discredit the Government and ruin his own prestige. He would take it as an expression of the Emperor's want of confidence in him and resign. The Chancellor was far too important to be so lightly sacrificed, and yet the Emperor could not, at the very outset of his reign, consent to eat humble pie. Bismarck thought fit to moderate his pretensions and the poor Vice-President Puttkammer was offered as a vicarious sacrifice. He is now making amends to his protégé. The enemy on the throne is no more. With the ascension of a loyal Emperor, the great Chancellor's influence is again whole and entire, and he has once more the opportunity to serve his friends and followers as well as his cause, and recover the continuity of his policy. That is the significance of the decoration conferred on Herr Von Puttkammer. The order of the Black Eagle rescues that statesman from unmerited obscurity. We expect him to be soon recalled to the theatre of action.

THE Prime Minister is suffering, as he deserves, for his unworthy slip of a facile tongue, in sneering at our brother of the same ilk—Dadabhai—as a "black man." Our countrymen in Great Britain fired off volleys of letters of indignant protest in the newspapers. The Radical press took up the cause of the "coloured" Radical candidate. The leader of the Opposition and champion of humanity, the Grand Old Man, did not, of course, let slip such an opportunity for political capital, but roundly challenged the Premier. His eloquent son, Mr. Herbert Gladstone, took the cue and, at a public meeting in the country, said that he had seen both men, the former Liberal Candidate for Holborn and the Marquis of Salisbury, and he had a distinct impression that the latter is the blacker man. The joke now spread. One of the evening papers distinguished itself by printing a dark profile intended for the portrait of Mr. Ritchie, the President of the Local Government Board, in the act of reading the Premier's Edinburgh speech, saying, "Lord Salisbury says no more black men: what, then, is to become of me?"—Mr. Ritchie being about the darkest member of the House of Commons! This sort of ridicule is the just punishment for such offence, and is far more effective than the brimstone and fury of our friends nearer home.

THERE has been a tempest in a teapot, at the Oxford University. There is a university journal called the Undergraduate, issued from New College. The tone of this journal was the tone of the hobbledehoyhood of the day—far from gentlemanly. After the easy-going indifference, not to say pusillanimity, of the day, however, the authorities do not interfere with the impertinent publication, until their own withers were specially and individually tried. The inevitable collision came at last. One fine Wednesday morning, as the Hon. L. J. Bathurst was entertaining his undergraduate fellows of the Undergraduate staff at breakfast, doubtless discussing with the viands on the table the pungent paragraphs of the last issue and preparing for the scandal of the next, a peremptory message for his immediate attendance brought him up before the enraged Warden and other dons sitting in solemn conclave to decide his fate. He was told that there had been complaints against the Undergraduate, that they had made inquiries and discovered his hand in the concern. Some passages objected to were pointed out. The Hon. boy was honourable and sensible enough not to deny his complicity. He had not written the paragraphs but had seen and passed them. There was no use in attempting any explanation after that. His doom had been settled in the despotic way of the schoolmasters before he had entered appearance. The chief pedagogue—the Warden—would have used the tether which their own weakness had given the culprit to hang him with almost. He was for expulsion, but the tutors were less sanguinarily disposed. The Hon. Master Bathurst was ordered to rusticate for a year.

The announcement of the sentence against the publicist of the College and the leader of the undergraduates, caused a storm of indignation in the College. To us in this country, the incident recalls the fury of the schoolboy population of Calcutta when the redoubtable Surrender Not was sent to prison by the High Court for a worse outrage—an utterly unjustifiable libel not on the authorities of educational institution but one of Her Majesty's Judges. We are bound to confess that the British boys show themselves off to advantage in the comparison. Under an equal exacerbation of feeling, they exhibited better temper and discipline than our unruly chaps trained under our arch patriot. They petitioned, begged, entreated, cried, some of them may have remonstrated, but they did not break the windows of New College. Failing in their prayer in behalf of the condemned, they demonstrated their sympathy for him. They assembled in large numbers in the quadrangle in front, before 2 O'clock of Thursday, when Master Bathurst was to leave, drowned the short speech he made from his carriage window in their vociferous cheering, and unharnessing the horse, took its place, and drew the cab through the street to the railway.

And then, as usual—in England as in Bengal—there was—an end of it.

To signalize the visit of Sir Stewart Bayley to Balasore, the sons and heirs of the late Raja Shyamanand De Bahadoor, Kumars

Baikuntha Nath and Satyendra Nath, have placed at the disposal of the Magistrate of Balasore a sum of Rs. 500 for an annual medal to the most successful boy of the Balasore zillah school, in Sanskrit at the University Entrance Examination. And, in memory of their father, they have transferred to the Balasore District Board the zemindary right in Mouzah Bargan with an annual income of Rs. 300, Rs. 200 of which is to be devoted to new wells and tanks and the balance to the Chanchah Pilgrim Hospital, under the name of the "Rani Steemati Endowment." The brothers are sharp men of the world, so well they serve their interests in all the worlds. They kill three birds by one shot. They fully deserve the thanks of the Local Government which have been accorded them. The titled mantle of the father falls on Kumar Baikuntha Nath, according to the New Year's Gazette.

It is announced in the Evening News that "the leave which Mr. Westland is about to take will probably extend to a year." The announcement may perhaps be extended without hurt to probability. We take it the financial gentleman is leaving us, in expressive English colloquialism, for good. For good or better—or worse, he is not going to serve under his inferiors or fellows. It is even said that he was dishonoured for the nonce, by way of preparation for the inevitable descent from the heights of the official Avernus to the vale of retirement and that bottomless pit of bubbling English life, in which the White rivers of the East are extinguished. He utilised the opportunity for a voluminous but lucid Budget Statement. As Economic Discourses are caveat to the general, he has got himself into the portrait gallery of The Empress, the illustrated fortnightly.

"A district Magistrate" writes to the Englishman:—"At meetings that have been held recently in various places, to express sympathy with the objects of the National Congress, gentlemen associated with Government as members of District Boards and Municipalities, as Government pleaders, and in other ways, have taken part in proceedings and have consented to be elected delegates. Those gentlemen must have been aware that, in the writings, at least, of some of the most prominent advocates of the Congress, British rule has been mendaciously, maliciously and seditiously assailed, while persistent endeavours have been made to excite hatred against those by whom the Government of the country is carried on. Is the action of these gentlemen consistent with their position?"

The Bombay Times from which we take the quotation prints it as "very pertinent." That may be the rhetorically conceded, but to what purpose? The matter is one of good feeling and propriety which can never be enforced by statute or rule, till the thoughtlessness takes a pronounced form. Our Dacca contemporary is wroth with the chairman of the local municipality and another member of it, being as such public servants, going to the Congress which has circulated seditious pamphlets. The writer apparently desires that the Magistrate should take serious notice of their conduct. We hope he will do nothing of the kind. Indeed, he may be relied upon not to disturb the hornets' nest.

LIKE the Moharram, Christmas week too has its collisions and casualties. At Benares, a party of the Lancashire Regiment landed into a hamlet and rifled an attack shop. A correspondent writes on the subject:—

"From what I have been able to gather of this occurrence, it appears that a gang of a dozen men—in fact, more—last Thursday night entered a native village at the rear of the military cantonary, and breaking into a liquor shop, walked off with a quantity of liquor. One chuttie full was subsequently found in the old telegraph office. They milled to their hearts' content, and about eight or nine men were so drunk that they could not conceal their state the following morning. Two men in particular were very, very bad. One died as he was being lifted up, and an injection had to be passed into the arm of another to restore animation. In order to get at the other offenders, I believe a full parade was held, and the natives of the village asked to identify any they could; but, of course, they failed to do so."

Not a doubt of it! One of the most difficult feats under the sun is to identify Europeans—they are so much alike in their loud glaring white colour. We wonder whether their friends and relations are at a loss as to who's who.

This fact has a judicial aspect. We hope it will be remembered at the next trial of a European soldier for murdering a native, for the protection of the native witnesses from bullying by eminent barristers who ought to be above Bow Street lawyer tactics.

WE forgot to notice that the Advocate of India had nearly doubled itself. It is, on the face of it, a hazardous feat, and we congratulate our contemporary on its success in it. The notable part of the matter is that the increase in bulk involves not the customers in any additional charge. This is avoided by increased advertisements and using cheaper printing-paper.

THE same paper has a curious article on the India. Question. It starts with the discovery of the tea plant in Assam. Member of Council in 1823, the absence of private enterprise to utilise the opportunity presented, the establishment of the first garden in Lakhmoo in 1835, and the transfer of the business to private hands five years after when, encouraged by the results of the state experiment, private capitalists came forward to take it over. Early enough was experienced the difficulty of procuring labourers in a wild country with a then lazy population. But let our contemporary speak:—

"An Act passed in the year 1859 helped, from the employer's point of view, to simplify some of the difficulties that must always arise among imported labourers. The planters could only obtain the Bengalee coolies at considerable expense. No doubt at first people living just beyond the border could be induced to emigrate to Assam; but the number of these waifs and strays must soon have been exhausted. In a few years it was common for recruiters to go abroad for hundreds of miles in search of emigrants; indeed, much has lately been heard of women being kidnapped in Calcutta for work in Assam—which is equivalent to saying that Kurrachee look to this city for its labourers. But it often happened that the emigrants had no sooner been set to work than they became home-sick, and ran away; or the work on the garden did not suit them, and they refused to continue at it. In any case the planter was the sufferer. He not only lost a valuable servant, but he forfeited the money he had already spent in procuring him. In this emergency it occurred to ingenious men that the Indian Artificers' Act of 1859 might be worked so as to bind coolies to a specified period of servitude, under the pain of imprisonment.

It is one of the chief objections to the Assam coolie traffic that the framers of this enactment had not occupied themselves with coolie contracts: probably if they had done so, the special circumstances of Assam would have received treatment of a different kind. But, in some way, the High Court once held that the Act was applicable to contract coolie labour in Assam. Of the abuses that soon grew up in Bengal under the wide provisions of this measure there is lasting record in several well-known law-suits and in that famous 'Mirror of Indigo' for which an English missionary, who desired to bring them to light, suffered imprisonment. Technically, no doubt, he had been guilty of a libel; but he convinced the Government of the need for special coolie legislation. An Act of 1872 was therefore passed, with a view of anchoring the condition of the contract labourers."

This is history at express speed, to be sure! From 1861, when the Rev. James Long was sent to jail, at the indictment of the Editor of the Englishman, to 1872, a leap worthy of the worthies of the Heroic Period of New York enshrined in the classic pages of Diedrich Knickerbocker. Nor is that all. The transition from Tea to Indigo, is equally without notice. The writer is evidently innocent of the "Mirror of Indigo," or he would not describe it as a picture of "the abuses that soon grew up in Bengal under the wide provisions of this measure."

To wit, the Indian Artificers' Act of 1859. There were abuses enough, but they were not the result of that law or any other, but rather of the defective working of law. Practically, the peasantry were denied protection of all law. It was the wilder horrors of that anomalous system that that crude and sensational book had dished up. The book was written before the Act and, of course, had no reference to it. Such being the book, Mr. Long's suffering could have no bearing upon the legislation of 1859, or any other. Nevertheless, the upshot of the celebrated trial in the opinion of this Bombay writer was to expose the Act of 1859. The book is rich for absurdity, and the absurdity is emphasised by the wording of our contemporary, "he [Mr. Long] convinced the Government of the need for special coolie legislation." No coolies were mentioned at all during the trial, in the court or out of it. Not was the attention of Government called to them. Neither the author of the "Mirror of Indigo" nor its translator, had anything to do with coolies; for the simple reason that, though coolies are employed in the factories, it is the peasantry, the raggys as they are called—who are mainly concerned in Indigo cultivation.

A FRIENDLY gentleman, William Wight, of the Arab's Tent, Chislehurst, formerly vicar of Harbury, died leaving a will by which he desired to found a college for ladies, for he was not satisfied that they were being properly trained for the duties of wife, mistress and mother. He laid down that women should be something more useful and more noble than a pretty doll, a butterfly, or a plaything for her husband. To make them so, he prescribed, in his will, early rising of the ladies at the college; cold baths in the morning; quarterly conversations at the college, two-thirds of the invitations to be sent to single gentlemen. It was also his wish to be buried in his garden by the grave of his noble Labrador dog "Friend." This expression of a truly benevolent soul came under the consideration of a philistine on the bench, who has set his face against the charity and barked at the ghost of the honest Labrador gent "Friend." Mr. Justice Chitty has pronounced these provisions of the will illegal—perhaps against good policy or the ruling fashion of the hour—and ordered the distribution of the property among the next-of-kin. If the clergyman had lived to carry out his wishes—if in his lifetime he had attempted the reform, he would not have been called eccentric as he is now, and many wise ones would have supported him in his good work. But now he is dead, his spirit must submit to the wisdom of the survivors and the scorching blasts of the unsympathetic.

Verily, the wisdom of the law is beyond us. We cannot imagine what could so entirely upset the bench or what was most offensive to it. Was it the early rising or the cold bath? Or, was it the unbecoming friendship of the Christian minister with poor doggey? Or, was it an irritation against the nefarious attempt to determine the doll and butterfly existence for women? We are prepared to go a great way with the learned Judge. We think early rising a bore, and the habit a slavery. To plunge poor girls at random at this time of the year, in the British climate, into cold water, is a positive barbarity which ought to subject the offender to the heaviest penalties of a good Cruelty to Animals Act. But, surely, none of these was reason enough for robbing the world of a fine institution. Surely, some or all of these provisions might have been knocked on the head and yet Mr. Wight's main idea of a college for giving a substantial, as distinguished from a showy, education to girls, preserved!

ERRATA IN VOL. VII.

Page 570, column 2, line 9 from bottom, for depended read deepened

Page 533, column 1, line 34 from bottom, for appointment read addition

Same page and col. 1, 19 from bottom, for backs read legs

P. 594, c. 1, l. 13 from below, for with read on; c. 2, l. 7, for unwilling read unwitting and omit the comma in l. 12.

P. 592, c. 2, last note, l. 5, for Muza's read Meer Saheb's

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1889.

We tender to Government and People—governors and governed alike—our ashceerbād. To one and all, we wish a Happy New Year.

THE NEW HONOURS.

In another column we have already given the New Year's Honours List. We will here review it at length.

Mr. Barbour is not only an able servant of the state but a persona grata with the powers, both here and there. He realises the Indian example of luck of the man who before climbing the tree finds a bunch of fruit at the root. He enters on his promotion to the Supreme Council with a distinguished handle to his name. His case was secure when the late Viceroy did him the honour to quote him in the St. Andrew's dinner oration. In fact, he had already charmed the India Office by his evidence that the people of this country were making rapid strides in prosperity and had already absorbed several hundred crores of the precious metals. Chaffing apart, a worthier man could scarcely be found for the sovereign to honour.

The Hazara Chief would have appreciated a jagir better. The letters of the English alphabet are wasted upon one who is not very learned.

The Companions for the same Order are well selected. Mr. Scoble is a genial veteran of lucid understanding who works quietly on well-tryed lines. In this way he has already done good service to the state not only as legislator but also as the constant legal adviser of the Viceroy. The importance of his functions is paramount. Ours is pre-eminently a régime of law, and the influence of the one man of law in the Government of India cannot be exaggerated. Yet that influence is not only exerted in secret, but is frequently so subtle in itself as to escape public notice. Duties, however, are none the less onerous because they are performed without fuss and away from the observation of the world. This remark is not confined to Mr. Scoble. We dwell on the point the more readily, because it applies to a great many officers and subjects to whom the state is beholden. Indeed, the Law Member enjoys opportunities for public distinction which are out of the reach of many and many classes of public servants. So far as we may judge, chiefly by the negative process, Mr. Scoble's influence on Government has been of the best. He may not startle you with legislative rockets or projects of crude originality or impracticable reform—but he gives one a sense of security. He is far from an antiquated traditionalist. He is above the weakness of change for sake of change or his own name. He has more consequence and self-respect than that. He has purged our statute-book of the inhumanity of the barbarous law of debtor and creditor.

We are sure he will, continuing as he has begun, give us some enduring work of industry and art. He has a splendid field in Burma. He may yet be to Upper Burma what Cornwallis has been to Bengal and Elphinstone to Bombay. In India Proper, he can give us a nomenclature. It is high time to dispense with the old world Moonsiff and Tehsildar—Mr. Burgess has done good service in Upper Burma.

The time had come for Mr. Durand's knighthood. The worthy son of a worthy father, he has a hereditary familiarity with the Foreign department, into which he was early inducted. He has earned the good opinions of successive Viceroys. We are glad to see the Maharaja of Hutwa has at last attained the acme of ambition. Mr. Macpherson's work lies out of our jurisdiction. Dr. Markby is a Pandit, and we did not know that he was solicitous of the honour of knighthood. Perhaps it is for the lady. Mr. Cunningham was always a tuft-hunter.

Colonel Collen as Military Secretary to Government has had in late times an extraordinary strain to bear, and properly gets his Companionship of the Indian Empire. He is reputed to be a genial, kind officer, whose distinction is a source of satisfaction to the natives of his department. We congratulate Mr. E. F. T. Atkinson. To his services as Accountant-General, he adds an interest in the literature and history of the country which is rare among contemporary Civil Servants. Mr. Stevens is the adorer of Bombay. Such men who contribute to the enjoyment and taste of a people for all time are peculiar objects of attention and honour by the state. Mr. A. W. Paul is Companioned obviously for his share in the war and peace with Thibet. India having abolished its navy, Capt. Hext, we suppose, has been useful in advising on the coast and river defences. Might he not with some advantage be put to devise some method by which the frequent loss of passenger vessels might be prevented? An unexceptionable appointment is that of Col. W. B. Hudson, Commandant of the Behar Light Horse. Considering the great fame and unbounded influence of Mr. Hudson, it is incredible that he had not been singled out for decoration before. For himself, the leader of the strong unofficial Europeans of Behar did not stand in need of Government recognition, to make his position one of surpassing dignity. And the Government scarcely dared to approach a power in the land with their pitiful gewgaws and their alphabetic combinations. Even now, we regard this C. I. E. as a compliment, poor enough as it is, to the Volunteers of India. It is, of course, the prelude.

The native gentlemen selected for the Companionship of the Indian Empire, are all men of position or of mark in some way or another. First comes the Doyen of Young Madras, the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur S. Subramaniya Aiyar. A leading Pleader of the local High Court, and a weighty writer, he is one of the formators of native public opinion, in the South. Active in all movements for well-doing, he is one of the most retiring men, with modesty equal to his talents. He is a specimen of the finest type of modern Brahmanhood—a survival of all that was best in the race, strengthened by Western cultivation. It is an enjoyment to see him and watch him at work, as we had an opportunity of doing at the Calcutta Congress. To the credit of Lord Connemara, his services in the legislature were promptly recognised by the bestowal of a Rai Bahaduri. More credit to the same statesman, who has now got him this new honour. The ruler who knights this quiet patriot will honour himself and exalt the Order. We wonder why another sterling Southerner and glory of the Brahman race, Mr. Anand Charloo, is left in the lurch. Is it possible he has trodden on any official corns? He is apt to be impatient of nonsense, even though it come from a magnate, and may have given offence. But he is just the man to be useful to the state, from his talents, his knowledge, and his independence. He too is a lawyer and a man of thought as well as action. He is capable of holding his own in any assembly, yet modest withal. An earnest politician and devoted public man, he clings to the obscurity in which he loves to work. Such public virtue is rare in any country.

Professor Bhandarkar is a savant of European distinction. A Pandit of the old learning and modern methods, he has long enriched the pages of the Indian Antiquary and the transactions of learned societies, with his disquisitions on the antiquities and ancient literature of India. His presence at the last Oriental Congress, with his sleek burly form and dirty sacred string peeping from beneath his not irreproachable under-clothes, was an event in the learned world. Such an apparition of a Hindu Dr. Johnson had never been seen by the untravelled Sanskritists of Europe, who try to teach the Vedas and to set the old Rishis right, without coming near India or having the advantage of listening to the living repositories of Rishi tradition. Great was the interest created for the moment by the visit, and the visitor was duly honoured.

The claims of Saiyid Mihrban Ali, Honorary Magistrate in Bulundshar, we are not aware of. Probably, he assisted in preserving order during the Moharram disturbances. Raja Sudhal Deo, of Bamra, is the Chief of a state in the Central Provinces so little known even to the most knowing that we better give some information. Bamra lies in the Sambalpur District. It is the fourth of the native states in that Government for extent, its area being some 2,000 square miles. The population, however, is insignificant, about 57,000, and the revenue trilling, about Rs. 6,000 per annum. It pays an annual tribute of Rs. 350. In that backward back Province, all that represents a respectable income and a good position. The Raja is a man of influence as the head of an ignorant population, who may be led to any mischief by their lord. We dare say he has been found to exercise his position for good. His seat is Deoghar—one of the half dozen places in India of that name.

The next native name was an inevitable one. Pratap Chandra Roy is a name now famous throughout the civilised world. He has risen from nothing—all the more honour to him! Long before a single European heard of him, he was known in his country as a cheap publisher and gratuitous distributor of the sacred literature of India, in original as well as in vernacular translations, made to order by him by different scholars. His success emboldened him to undertake a work, the colossal character of which had scared away the industry of the savants and the enterprise of the booksellers of the West—the translation of the Mahabharata. He has already done a good proportion of the work and sown thousands of copies broadcast throughout the world, free of charge or at a nominal price. Of course, he has done it all by public subscription, and latterly with some help from Government. But those who have ever attempted to do anything in the same line, understand the difficulty of it and the energy and tact required. Pratap Chandra has devoted himself to the work. He has laid the world under obligation, and served the cause of his country. The most eminent men of all quarters of the globe, have acknowledged this. Her Majesty has graciously received his Mahabharat and, what is better, read it with interest. This honour, therefore, comes as a matter of course.

We must reserve comments on the remainder of the List for another time.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

THE sittings of the great National Congress are over, and the delegates are returning to their own places, after a week's pleasant labour. The new feature of the movement, this year, is that, at the head of the fourteen hundred delegates, an eminent Anglo-Indian, a very respectable member of the merchant community of Calcutta, Mr. George Yule, presided. Another European gentleman, a member of the English bar at Madras was very prominent in taking part in the discussions of the assembly. A third, a member of the Eurasian community and the presiding deity in all matters concerning it in the Madras Presidency, would have been found helping the assembly with his official experience and mature judgment on questions of education and other general matters; but illness detained him in his native town. We regret his absence from the Congress, especially because, as an old man broken in official harness, Mr. D. S. White is the only person to know exactly what to ask and how to ask the many concessions that are in the Congress programme, and his suggestions would have been of great value to the delegates.

The resolutions passed, were almost identical with those of previous years, with one or two additions.

It is due to our readers as well as to ourselves, that we should at last express our opinion on the more prominent at least of the conclusions arrived at. We have hitherto purposely refrained from saying anything on the merits of those questions, because our views were very different from those generally held. Speaking plainly, we feared, we would create much unpleasantness in many quarters, without being able to bring our friends to the right path. The principal thing to be regretted about this Congress movement, is the overzealousness of almost all the leaders, which make them obstinate in their own ideas of reforms and deaf to the remonstrance of honest critics. And hence, it is, that we miss the most important of all the resolutions, that we expected to be passed by the delegates. A resolution embodying the simple acknowledgement of the Madras Committee's mistake in approving, as Congress publications, political tracts which really contained some seditious matters, would have been sufficient to bring back in our ranks many high officials like Sir Auckland Colvin. But such a proposition, the subject Committee did not think worth its consideration. And this they did for one of the two reasons. It might be that the Committee was afraid to offend Mr. Hume, who is the author of one of those tracts, or they satisfied themselves with the assurance of Mr. Hume himself that the book was not seditious. Whatever it was, for the sake of the Congress itself, as well as of the credit of the educated classes, we were pained to see that the delegates omitted to do their first duty to the Government as well to the people. Then again, in asking for the reform of the Supreme and the Provincial Legislative Councils, every one forgot the many difficulties that stand in the way of the Government in acceding to this demand. Not one of the speakers had enlightened us in detail, as to how the reform should be carried into effect, and the reason was that they could not. Mr. George Yule, in his inaugural speech, said: "We propose that the constituencies should consist of Members of municipalities, Chambers of Commerce, Trades Associations, Associations like the British Indian Association and, generally, all persons possessing such qualifications, educational and pecuniary, as may be deemed necessary." Now, taking the Bengal Presidency, as an example, we see that it consists of 48 Districts, each of which has got many wealthy Zemindars within its jurisdiction, many respectable pleaders in its law courts, many municipal boards having intelligent and educated members. Next, we have the many metropolitan and mofussil associations, which are also useful adjuncts to the Government even now. If the elective system is at all introduced, and if the Government is to maintain an impartial position to all the resident population, all those we have enumerated above, must have the franchise. For, all of them are qualified to vote either from point of education or of wealth. Over and above these, are the many diverse interests throughout the province, which demand at the hands of the Government an equal treatment. To limit the elective power to metropolitan associations and to educated and wealthy men, would be an injustice to the mofussil population, and they can not look on such reforms with indifference. Unless the Councils become unusually large, anything by way of election is impossible. Of course, the Government can increase the number of non-official* members and take in many intelligent and educated men of the community by means of nomination, and that is the only thing possible at present. We need hardly say that in the Supreme Council, anything by way of election is more impracticable, as it holds its sway over the whole of India.

G.

State Paper.

No. 169.

From P. Nolan, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, on Special Duty,

To the Secretary to the Government of India, Revenue and Agricultural Department

Dated Calcutta, the 24th October 1888.

[Continued from vol. vii. p. 598.]

11. The assistance of the immigrants who arrive in great numbers not only from Bengal, but also from Madras and from Upper Burma, forming one-seventh of the whole population, is absolutely necessary for the maintenance of the present economical condition of Lower Burma, for without them the rice crop could not be harvested, carried to the ports, or husked in the factories for exportation. And further aid will be required if an advance is to be made, if the waste land which forms 82 per cent. of the area of the province is to be reclaimed, if the more valuable crops are to be introduced, if manufactures are to be established, mines and springs of mineral oil to be worked. Though the natural multiplication of the population is rapid, it has not in the past, and cannot in the immediate future, keep pace with the growing requirements of industry. This is a fact realized by all business men in Burma: it is everywhere felt that remunerative investments for capital remain unused for want of labour, and the desire is universal to foster immigration in order to promote the prosperity of the province.

12. It seems obvious that the exchequer must benefit in many ways by the conversion of a labourer who, in Behar, can but imperfectly supply himself with the primary necessities of life into a prosperous cultivator, or highly-paid workman in Burma. The precise extent of this benefit hardly admits of calculation: but I may remark that the incidence of taxation, imperial and provincial, which is only a rupee a head in Bengal,* amounts to seven rupees a head in Burma. The whole of the excess of six rupees a year is probably gained by Government on each permanent settler, as such men really contribute nothing in their native province, except by a trifling consumption of salt, while in Burma they aid in the reclamation of revenue-paying land, and generally take their share in the industry and in the burdens of the country. In particular, they pay, after five years' residence, the capitation tax, which is levied at the rate of Rs. 2 8 on bachelors, Rs. 5 on married men, and, after numerous deductions for transfers of this source of income in certain places to municipalities, yields to Government about a rupee a head on the whole population, including women and children. This tax is not in force elsewhere, and is a tangible source of profit to the exchequer in the case of migration to Burma.

13. In my letter No. 87 T.R., dated 30th June, the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal was expressed that the immensity of the wages paid in certain districts was due to the superabundant supply of labour,—a view borne out by the fact that the evil is not felt where population has been kept down by endemic disease, as in Burdwan, or where scope for its increase is given by the existence of reclaimable waste, as in Chittagong. If Behar has suffered more than other parts of Bengal in this respect, it is because its inhabitants are more healthy, and its agricultural resources have been developed at an earlier period, so that the population increases without finding an outlet. The soil in these districts is fertile, there is no want of capital for any enterprise of real promise, the people are industrious and frugal; all the conditions of agricultural prosperity exist except the most essential, that is, the maintenance of a due proportion between the population and the natural resources of the country. Under such circumstances, it is felt that every man who leaves Behar makes room for another, who might otherwise fail to find employment, and it has for many years been the settled policy of Government to encourage emigration by every possible means, in particular by the construction of roads and railways in the direction in which the population seeks an outlet. It is sometimes said that the relief thus given is inappreciable, and I own that there seems no immediate prospect of emigration on a scale sufficient to effect a material increase in the wages current in Upper India. The population of the districts specified by the Government of Bengal as those in which the pressure is most felt exceeds fifteen millions, and behind these there are the inhabitants of Oudh and of a part of the North-Western Provinces, who seem to be, so far as the landless labourers are concerned, in much the same position as those who reside in the worst part of Behar. The case requires the transfer of millions, while the most sanguine can only hope to move hundreds of thousands. And the causes of over-population may continue to act for an indefinite period, whereas the field for emigration, if it be adequately worked, must be exhausted, at the furthest, in half a century. But these considerations are useful only as tending to prevent the adoption by Government of the sanguine expectations sometimes raised by those who do not compare with sufficient attention the numerical proportion between the population which it is desired to relieve and the emigrants for whom practical provision can be made. Emigration, whether to Burma, Assam, or the Colonies, on any scale which can be reasonably contemplated, is not, it must be confessed, a panacea for the evils of the working classes; but it is at least a palliative, and as such it should not be despised. A complete remedy can, perhaps, be sought only in the alteration of customs adapted to economic conditions the reverse of those which at present exist; and Government may, in my opinion, promote such a change most efficiently by extending popular education, which is in a most backward state in Behar, where its influence can hardly be said to have even touched the labouring classes. It is only with their own intelligent co-operation that the masses can be rescued from the evils under which they suffer, and such co-operation will never be secured while they remain in their present state of primeval ignorance.

* It is nearly two rupees a head if we include opium, but the receipts of this branch of the revenue, derived as they are from the Chinese consumers, can hardly be connected in any special way with Bengal, and certainly should not be taken into account for the present purpose.

14. In the correspondence which has taken place on the subject of the promotion of emigration to Burma, it has been stated by some that we want cultivators to reclaim the waste lands, not mere labourers for hire; by others that we require permanent settlers, not sojourners; by others, again, that emigration should be encouraged from certain districts only, that is from those which are considered congested. A consideration of the advantages enumerated above will show that all voluntary emigration from Bengal to Burma is beneficial, being for the good of the emigrant himself, of the country he leaves, of that in which he settles, and of the revenue. It is quite true that the permanent transfer of labourers from Behar for the reclamation of the waste lands in Burma is of special use, but we must not for that reason overlook the appreciable, if inferior, advantages of the visits paid by harvesters from Chittagong, without whose assistance the Arracan rice crop could not be gathered, or prepared for export. The migration of labour in Upper India seems to be from west to east, from the North-West to the Lower Provinces, from Behar to Bengal Proper, from Bengal to Burma or Assam; and any assistance given to this movement at one end must be felt in its effects along the whole line. As to the special objection taken to temporary emigration, on the ground that it does not really relieve the over-populated districts, I may remark that it is the usual precursor of permanent emigration. Those who go for a time often end by settling for life, and even if they return, they bring back with them not only sums of money very acceptable to their families, but also knowledge, which may be useful to their neighbours, in particular the knowledge of the road to Burma.

15. In considering how Government can best assist this migration, it is desirable to remember that state interference may easily be hurtful, by depriving the movement of the spontaneity which is the best assurance of its success. Under a free system those only emigrate who feel within them a spirit of enterprise prompting them to undergo present inconvenience for the sake of future advantages; and of the emigrants those only attempt the cultivation of new land who have a vocation for that very difficult and arduous occupation. But when, as under the Bengal scheme of 1874, the Madras scheme of 1876, and the Behar scheme of 1882, Government intervenes, to tempt men to emigrate by the voices of paid recruiters, to pay their passages out, feed them in depôts while awaiting work, and to advance to them the capital requisite to establish them as cultivators, this guarantee is lost, and many leave their country merely because from weakness of character they are unable to resist persuasion, promises, and the prospect of receiving money. The complaint made by the Burma officers in all the cases cited above was that the men sent out, though tolerable labourers, were quite unfit to reclaim waste on their own account. What is required is, not that Government action should now supersede the voluntary system which has established a quarter of a million Hindustanis in Burma, but that the freest scope should be given to individual efforts by such means as the reduction of the cost of the journey, and the offer of land or employment on reasonable terms.

16. It fortunately happens that Government is in a position to give very substantial aid to existing emigration without in the least interfering with its spontaneous character. The contract between the British India Steam Navigation Company, Limited, and the Secretary of State for India, executed on the 1st of June 1885, contains the following clause:—

The Company shall also in like manner if and when required so to do by the Government of India at any time during the continuance of this contract convey deck passengers by the vessels of the said Company employed under this contract on lines Nos. 1 and 4 at the following maximum rates, viz.:—

Maximum rates.	From Calcutta to Rangoon.	From ports north of Madras to Rangoon.	From Madras and ports south of Madras to Rangoon.
For each adult	Rs. A. 5 0	Rs. A. 8 0	Rs. A. 10 0
" each child from 3 to 12 years	2 8	4 0	5 0
" each child under 3 years in charge of an adult ...	Free	Free	Free and shall in respect of such service if and when required to perform the same but not otherwise receive the additional subsidies following, viz.:—

In respect of line 1 a special annual subsidy of Rs. 16,000.

In respect of line 4 a special annual subsidy of Rs. 25,000.

This provision was obviously inserted in the agreement with the intention of assisting emigration, and it is now proposed that the original design should be carried out. The Company almost monopolises passenger traffic, it has the best ships, and no rates higher than those charged by it can, it is believed, be maintained by any competing agency. The present fare of a deck passenger is ten rupees, so that the measure proposed will reduce the passage money by one-half. In estimating the results which may be anticipated from such action we are not left entirely to conjecture, as in 1882-83 the Local Administration of Burma procured a reduction in the rates to the extent now suggested, and, according to a letter addressed to the Government of India, No. 1197-160R, dated 7th July 1885, "the consequence of this reduction in rates was that the number of emigrants in 1882-83 was about 72,000 (nearly double that of 1881-82), and it was estimated that half of this number settled in the province." The difference between the scheme adopted in 1882, which was abandoned in 1884 for financial reasons, and that now proposed is, that whereas under the one system Government had to pay Rs. 1-8 a head for every emigrant from Calcutta, and disbursed two lakhs and three quarters in all, the charge will now be only Rs. 16,000 a year, or about eight annas a head on the 31,554 emigrants of 1887. Should the eventual result of the reduction of fares be to double the number of passengers, the charge will be at the rate of four annas a head only, by which payment Government would secure a benefit of five rupees to each passenger. This must be regarded as an economical method of encouraging emigration, inasmuch as the direct pecuniary gain to the individual is from ten to twenty-fold the expenditure incurred by Government. And from a financial point of view, I cannot but look upon the scheme as presenting a fair prospect of yielding a profit—a prospect better than that which Government considers sufficient in the case of other reproductive works. I will not, for this purpose, assume the correctness of the statement made by the Burma Administration in 1885, that the increase of a hundred per cent. in the emigration returns of 1881-82 was due to the reduction of the rates, to the exclusion of every other cause; nor will I anticipate any such striking, not to say extraordinary, effect from the precisely similar reduction which it is now proposed to effect. But it is obvious that when the passage money is diminished by half, some effect must be produced in the direction of increasing the number of migrants. Notwithstanding all that has been said as to the reluctance of the Indian to quit his native home, it appears that in practice the great obstacle to emigration is material rather than sentimental. Beharis go in their hundreds to Assam, to work of a more distasteful kind than that to be found in Burma, under contracts of labour enforced by imprisonment in the criminal jail, and for a wage of only five rupees a month, merely because their expenses by the way are paid by the employer. They undertake the arduous voyage round the Cape of Good Hope and Cape Horn to the Fiji Islands for the same reason, with prospects inferior to those which await them in Burma. A considerable proportion of those who emigrate to the colonies are Brahmans and Rajputs, so that it would appear that it is not the ties of caste, but the tighter bonds of poverty which chain Indian cultivators to their homes. Such being the conditions, we may safely say that if some thirty-two thousand emigrants leave Calcutta yearly for Rangoon when the passage costs ten rupees, a larger number will go when the expenses are reduced to five rupees; and I can scarcely err otherwise than on the safe side in assuming that the increase will be at least twenty per cent., or more than six thousand persons, one-half of whom will settle in Burma. According to the estimate made in the twelfth paragraph of this report, the permanent transfer of three thousand persons from Bengal to Burma implies an increase of eighteen thousand rupees in the annual revenue, so that the outlay will yield a return of about a hundred per cent. The capitation tax paid by the settlers in Burma would alone yield an interest of twenty per cent. I am aware that the return is not absolutely certain; but this is an objection which applies to all expenditure classed as reproductive.

17. The objection that this measure will encourage emigration from Upper India generally, and not exclusively that from the more congested districts, was fully considered at the meeting of public officers which discussed the matter in Rangoon, and also by the Chief Commissioner. It seems impossible to limit this particular form of assistance more strictly to defined limits, and therefore the special encouragement which we desire to give to emigration from Behar must be bestowed in other ways. It is mainly to meet this objection that the advantages of emigration have been analysed in the present report, and the fact that they are not confined to emigration from Behar has been pointed out. The proposed subsidy would not benefit the Chittagong men, who proceed directly from their own port, or by land, to Burma, and thus it does not touch that part of emigration which is least advantageous. Passengers from Calcutta will generally come from districts more or less congested, and even when they do not their departure for a province where labourers are so much required, and yield so much to the State in revenue, must be well worth the moderate outlay proposed.

18. As an experimental measure, a grant of 15,000 acres of waste land has been made to Mr. Mylne, the well-known inventor of the Beheca sugar-mill, to be held rent-free for twelve years, then at a progressive rent of Rs. 1,000 rising to Rs. 2,500, and Rs. 4,000 after periods of seven years; and finally, after the expiration of thirty three years, to be assessed at one half of the current rates-- Mr. Mylne undertaking to cultivate mainly through Indian settlers, the Burmese employed never exceeding ten per cent. of the whole number. It is now proposed that grants should be offered on similar terms to other capitalists willing to undertake the introduction of Indian rayyets. The conditions would be to the following effect :

- (1). No one grant should exceed 10,000 acres.
- (2). The land to be cultivated only by natives of Behar and Chutia Nagpur ; Behar to include the districts of Bhagulpore and Monghyr, as well as the Patna Division ; provided that ten per cent. of those settled or employed on the estates may be taken from any other places.
- (3). The land to be revenue-free for twelve years, after which an increasing rent will be charged on the whole area, as follows :---

For seven years, 1 anna an acre.

" " 2½ annas "

" " 4 " "

After the expiry of thirty-three years, two-thirds of the rates assessed on similar land in the neighbourhood.

- (4). Ten per cent. of the area to be brought under cultivation during the first five years, an additional ten per cent. during each succeeding period of seven years, up to the end of thirty years, when the grant will become absolute.
- (5). Subject to compliance with the conditions specified during the first thirty-three years, the grantee to have a perpetual and transferable title.
- (6). Not more than 100,000 acres will be assigned under these rules until further orders.

These terms, with any modifications considered desirable, should be embodied in a set of detailed rules, similar to those for the grant of land in Burma and Assam for tea cultivation.

NOTICE.

THEIR Excellencies the Viceroy and Marchioness of Lansdowne will receive, on Thursday afternoon, the 10th January 1889, in the Gardens of Government House, from 4 to 6 P. M.

All Ladies and Gentlemen having the entrée at Government House are invited to attend and those having children to bring them.

WILLIAM BERESFORD,
Lieut.-Colonel,
Military Secretary to the Viceroy.

GOVT. HOUSE CALCUTTA,
Military Secretary's Office,
28th December 1888.

BENGAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. Calcutta, 28th December, 1888.

The Committee of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, empowered on that behalf by the Resolution passed at a Special General Meeting of the Chamber, held on 5th December, 1888, do hereby declare that the holidays specified below shall be the holidays during the year 1889 recognised by the Chamber under Shipping Orders and Charter Parties as holidays according to the custom of the Port :—

Date.	Holidays.	Number of days to be observed as holidays.
1st January...	New Year's Day ...	1 day.
5th February	Sripancham ...	1 day.
19th April ...	Good Friday ...	1 day.
24th May ...	Empress's Birthday ...	1 day.
1st, 3rd, 4th, & 7th October.	Durga and Lakh Pujas ...	4 days.
23rd October...	Kali Puja ...	1 day.
1st November	Jagadhatri Puja ...	1 day.
25th and 26th December.	Christmas Day and the day following Christmas Day ...	2 days.

In the Durga and Lakh Pujas the holidays for ships that have salt on board will be from 1st to 7th October inclusive.

All Sundays are holidays.

By order of the Committee,
S. E. J. CLARKE,
Secretary.

NOTICE.

Licensed Measurers' Department

Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

Calcutta, the 31st December, 1888.

The Committee have appointed Captain J. A. Aheson, Superintendent of Licensed Measurers as from the 1st January 1889.

By order,
R. SMITH, for Secretary.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

OBTAINED

Thirty-three Prize Medals and First Class Certificates and were specially appointed by the Royal Commission for the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in 1886, where not a single case of illness occurred amongst the native artisans there employed.

Authorized by the Government of India ; and largely used by the Calcutta and other Municipalities.

Sanctioned

by Her Majesty's Board of Trade.

Used in the Royal Households, by Her Majesty's Government Establishments, by the Corporation of London, Parochial Vestries, Smithfield and Finsbury Markets, Peninsular and Oriental and other Steam Navigation Companies, the Railway Companies, Principal Hospitals, &c.

Agents: —DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co. "Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "BURMAH" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 11th inst., and on Tuesday the 8th idem, the Steamer "MAKUM" will leave Calcutta for Cachar.

All cargo for shipment by either of the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godowns at Juggannah Ghat the day previous to the vessels leaving Calcutta.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sundays and Thursdays, and Debrooghur on Mondays and Fridays.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents.

1-2, Chive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

BEETHAM'S

GLYCERINE - AND - CUCUMBER

For INDIA and all HOT CLIMATES this sweetly scented emollient Milk is INVALUABLE.
IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and REFRESHED in the HOTTEST WEATHER,
Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, REDNESS, FRECKLES, TAN, etc., and RENDERS the SKIN DELICATELY SOFT, SMOOTH and WHITE.
It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY and WRINKLED, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN and WIND more effectually than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BITES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin, this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.
Sole Makers M. BEETHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusli Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lockets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelsmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutta, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

NOW READY.

The Report of the 3rd Indian National Congress, held at Madras during the last week of 1887.

Price Re. 1 including postage. Apply to M. V. Charriar, 100, Mount Road, Madras.

READY

Price	...	Post free	Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt	...		Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound	...		Rs. 5 3.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable

Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,

BY

SAMBHU J. MOOKERJEE,Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,

(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa.)

*Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, CALCUTTA.

OPINION OF THE PRESS.

It is many years since I first met, and some years since I last met, Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee, editor of the Reis and Rayyet (Prince and Peasant), and an author of high repute among the kindly, as well as acute and intellectual, people of Bengal. One of the real misfortunes of India was, and still is, Lord Macaulay's picture of the Bengalee. The picture true perhaps as regards Nuncomar and many Bengalees, is not accurate as representation of the people generally, taking them as an Englishman may find them if he looks fairly. If they had been unfaithful, the sad story of the Mutiny had been vastly sadder; and, apart from the Mutiny, many Englishmen could give individual instances of Bengalee faithfulness almost unique in history, taking all the circumstances of our relation to India into account. The Bengalee is generally eager for knowledge of all kinds, and is often both courageous in the expression of his opinions, and gifted to a remarkable degree with the power to express those opinions with force and precision. Mr. Fawcett once told me that an unprepared speech made, on his behalf, during an election, by a young Hindoo, surpassed, in force as well as eloquence, any unprepared speech he ever had heard made by any member of the House of Commons, if four or five members of the House were excepted.

Among these Bengalees there is a small body of men—small for that large province—who are, nominally or otherwise termed "Young Bengal." Some of them are no longer young, but brave and aged; some have, in the course of years, been highly distinguished for their public services and their scientific and other attainments. Some have at times been misrepresented, and their language misinterpreted, so that on its return to them it has amazed none more than themselves. Nothing of this has been done by the really great administrators of India. That it has been done, however, cannot be denied.

In the forefront of this little band is the author of this book of travels, Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee, a writer of high repute, as I have said, also an administrator, as the reader will see from the title page to this book. A keen, yet a kinder satirist, one might seek for and not find. His use of the English language has astonished many an educated Englishman; and the quality of his reading is shown by his marvellous power of quotation; not merely from authors like Shakespeare, and Milton, and Macaulay, and men eminent in science, but from out-of-the-way old ballads, and little known old pamphlets, in the application of which he leaves one wondering—first, how he obtained the productions at all, and secondly, how, having obtained them, he learned to apply them so appositely to the subjects which he intends them to illustrate.

Passing from the author to his book, we shall, perhaps, first of all be attracted to the work of the administrator. He comes upon a milkman's village, on which he finds fastened the grip of a Court favourite. He unloosens the grip, and re-settles the village, in the double interest of Prince and Peasant. And all the time he sees everything. The poor people bathing on the rivers' banks, have his gentle and kindly, if also at times, what a Scotchman would call, his "pawky" notice. A "fair maid of Sonagoin" attracts his attention by the gracefulness with which she carries a vessel of water from the river; and, though the fair maid and he are divided by race and faith (she is Mussulman), she has his full meed of praise. Indeed, it must be admitted, and he will not be offended with me for saying so—that he never meets with a fair face, without at least giving evidence of the fact that he has eyes to see and a heart to comprehend.

Of his wide and generous sympathies, much might be said, and still leave much more to say. He meets a missionary on the river, and evidently is inclined, in writing his notes, to pass a joke on the subject. He nips it, however, in the bud, and contents himself with saying, "So new is preaching here, that the simple people said the padre had been singing in the street." He meets Catholic and Protestant missionaries on shipboard, and chuckles over their disputes, while he astonishes them by his command of the English language, and even by his knowledge of the Bible—a knowledge, I may add, which is evident in many of his writings.

A parrot falls overboard, and is drowned in its cage, to his great distress, which is not however paraded. He says: [Extract.]

These are not the words of a Christian, but of a Hindoo.

Again, he has a faithful ugly dog, whose name is Tom, and whose glory it once was to quail, with a noble independence, at some very dignified Sahibs. Our author is compelled to leave Tom behind; and here is his farewell [Extract.]

I think this is a very fine passage, and one that will draw the author very close to the great heart of humanity, wherever the words are read. Could anything be finer than the testimony to the two foreign "gentlemen," ending with the "Bengalee pariah, my poor Tom?" Not the pariah merely, but the pariah dog. The passage is worthy of the author, and of the great meritfulness of the land that bore him.

Whoever reads this book must be prepared further to find bold and manly language. The author is no flatterer of John Bull, though he gives Joan his due, and admits that India owes him a great debt. Here is one passage relating to foreign fruits: [Extract.]

Among the sketches of country word-pictures, the reader will find some exceedingly pretty, and all the more valuable in that they are taken from a standpoint purely Indian; not English. Where an English artist's mind would be filled with European ideas, the mind of this gifted Eastern artist is ruled with a class of ideas totally different, yet equally instructive and certainly not less subtle and far-reaching.

On the eve of one of his journeys, our author was placed in a dilemma of a kind not unknown to travellers in India, but not on that account the less stupid. He wished to go by a particular boat, and took time by the forelock for that purpose. The fare was at first stated as 90 rupees, to pay which he offered "a new crisp, fresh British India" note for 100 rupees. "It was," he adds, "fresh from the Currency Office, and had been received only the day before from another Government department." The rest of the story is thus told: [Extract.]

The humour of the little sketch is worth something. I can fancy the author laughing even in his dismay; for he can laugh well at others, and equally well at himself. I shall only venture on one more passage; and I give it as showing the spirit of the man who dares to call his newspaper Prince and Peasant. He desired to return to his home in Bengal, and to bid adieu, for a time at least, to Independent Tipperah, where he had been located "some two years." He received the Maharajah's permission to return home; but still he could not get away. [Extract.]

There is, I think, a sound lesson in this passage; the lesson of the immense value of courtesy and urbanity in the relations of rulers and ruled. There is a great deal in that sentence, "He serve flesh and blood." The best administrator in India is not always the ablest, the man whose plans are the wisest as plans; but the man who, with plans or without them, gives confidence to the people, and confidence not merely in his justice, but also in his consideration and forbearance. A clever man once said that the art of success in India is the art of giving good dinners. It may be so; but the peril is great, the peril of debt; and in any case the art is not in limits, and its natural collapse. Even dinners and champagne paid in the end. But there is one art that never fails—the art of true courtesy; of that courtesy which, being natural, is not needed by any whim or caprice, either of the person who possesses it, or of anyone with whom he has relations.

In bidding farewell to this little book, I once more recall, as I easily and very vividly can, the author's kindly face and gentle voice, as known to me many years ago. I see him, as I see Baboo Kristo Das Pal, Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar, and some others, including a much-abused editor of the Amrita Bazar Patrika; and I feel and say, with all earnestness and sincerity, that among these are men whom the Government of India would be wise in recognising and winning entirely to its side. They are men on whom no really generous word—true as well as generous—ever is thrown away. I have compared them at times with men of kindred occupations at home, and I think that they are as a rule by far the truer gentlemen in good manners, and often in very much more than mere manners. May the great God, whose sacred Name they use as that of the Father of all, guide them to a nobler destiny than any they yet have known, and with them, and by them, bless their native land!

JAMES ROULEDGE.

—The Indian Magazine, Mar. 1888.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."*All who suffer find sure relief fromLITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM*The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the torture of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co Limited.

*Price by post 3½ annas.ASRUKANA

A Collection of poems in Bengali by SRIMATI GIRINDRAMOHINI DASSY

(Author of Kichakan, Bharat Kisan)

Asrukana is a collection of poetical pieces of singular pathos and beauty of expression. It is a series of mournful songs that the reader is here presented with and they must touch a sympathetic cord in every heart that can feel. There is a singular appropriateness in the title of the work, and in its pious dedication to the memory of the husband of the fair writer, The Indian Union.

The authoress is not unknown to Bengali readers. She has already published two or three poems by which she is favourably known, but between these poems and this is a difference that hardly admits of being measured.

This is poetry in life

We have read Sumati Girindramohini's poems in a reverential spirit. The poems are all of a lyrical description. The lyre is soft, sweet and tender, but awfully strong.

The tone of the poems is inexpressibly gentle, inexpressibly pure, and inexpressibly tender and affectionate. It is the tone of a world mother.

Bengal should be proud of this poem—The Calcutta Review.

Apply at the Bee Press,
1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Calcutta.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,

(Opposite the Police Court.)

THE CALCUTTA

HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.

11F

EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE

DISPENSARY IN ASIA

OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,

WHICH

INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE

TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY

and maintains to this day

THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF

THIS

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co., beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

*No EXTRA CHARGE.BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas

or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.*By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.*Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT*THE PILLS

Purify the blood, cure all Disorders of the LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS. They invigorate and rectify the action of the bowels, and are invaluable in all cases of the debility and various diseases of children and the aged.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Faded Skin, Pimples, Ulcers, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for curing all kinds of skin diseases.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no equal. It is a British Preparation and is sold by all respectable Chemists and Druggists. Manufactured only at Professor Holloway's Establishment, OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

TEA!TEA!*TEA*Cheapest & Best,SUPPLIED BY
THEINDIAN TEA SUPPLY CO.*"LIMITED."

In packets of 1 oz., 2 oz. and 4 oz. each from 3 pice only and upwards.

Note the Low Price.
A Packet of Tea for 3 pice!

Important News for India,
WHERE FEVERS AND CHOLERA
REIGN SUPREME.

A RECENT TRAVELLER ON THE Chinese Coast found that District remarkably FREE FROM TYPHOID FEVER and CHOLERA. He soon discovered the cause. The people there do not drink cold water from tanks or wells, often extremely impure, but keep a pan of water constantly boiling, into which from time to time they drop a little Tea, and when thirsty THEY DRINK HOT TEA! If the weak and adulterated Teas of China can do this, what may not the pure and strong Teas of India be expected to effect?

Also in tins ½ lb to 10 lbs of various qualities to suit all tastes.

Ask for the Indian Tea Supply Company's Teas.

We have Agents all over the Country, but want more.

Managing Agents:

LYALL MARSHALL & CO.,
4, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,*London,Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,

Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION,
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysalul Hospital.

Address:—
2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET*(PRINCE AND PEASANT)WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly	... "	... " 7
Quarterly	... "	... " 4
Monthly	... "	... Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 5, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager, and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. {

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1889.

} No. 356

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

THE GHOST-CARAVAN.

[Translation of Freiligrath's "Traveller's Vision."]

'T was in the desert's depths we took our night-rest on the ground,
Our steeds unbridled, and by each a Bedouin sleeping sound.
Afar the moonbeams gleamed upon the long low hills of Nile,
Round us white bones of camels strewed the sands for many a mile.

I slept not : for a pillow my light saddle propp'd my head ;
A wallet with my store of dates served in a bolster's stead ;
My caftan was my coverlet ; and ready to my hand,
My naked sword, my lance and gun lay by my couch of sand.

All silent, save the flickering flame, or crack of thorn in burning ;
Save the hoarse croak of some vulture to his eyrie late returning ;
Save the fitful stamp of hoofs in sleep among our tethered cattle ;
Save the hasty clutching of a lance by one who dreamed of battle.

At once the earth is rocking, ghastly vapours wrap the sky,
Across the waste, in frantic haste, affrighted wild beasts fly ;
The horses snort and plunge—our Sheikh grasps the banner—like a man
Unnerved, he drops it, muttering, " Lord, the ghostly caravan ! "

It comes. The phantom drivers lead the camels with their freight
Of lovely women, all unveiled, throned in voluptuous state.
Next after them, walk maidens bearing pitchers, like Rebecca
At the fountain ; horsemen follow ; and they gallop on for Mecca.

Still others, still, past counting ; ever endless seems the train.
Look ! look ! the bones around us strewn, are camels once again ;
And whirling up in dusky wreaths, fast changes the brown sand
To men, that seize the camel's rein each in his dusky hand.

For this the night, when all o'er whom the sand-flood ever heaved,
Whose wind-tossed dust this day, belike, unto our tongues hath cleaved,
Whose crumbling skulls our coursers' hoofs beat flat upon the plain,
Arise, and march to kneel and pray at Mecca's holy fane.

Still others, still ; the hindmost of the train not yet have past,
And back, even now, with slackened rein, come the foremost trooping fast.

O'er Afric's breadth, from Cape de Verd to the shores of the Red Sea They've galloped, ere my struggling horse from the foot-rope could get free.

The horses, ho !—they're breaking loose : quick, each man to his own !
For shame ! like sheep by lions scared—why quake ye so and groan ?
Though they press you close, though their floating robes your very beards are brushing,
Shout Allah ! Allah ! and away the spectre host goes rushing.

Stand fast, till in the morning breeze your turban feathers stream,
Glad cheer will come with morning's breath, with morning's ruddy gleam.

THE LION'S RIDE.

(Freiligrath.)

The Lion is the desert's king ; through his domain so wide
Right swiftly and right royally this night he means to ride.
By the sedgy brink, where the wild herds drink, close couches the grim chief ;

The trembling sycamore above whispers with every leaf

At evening on the Table Mount when ye can see no more
The changeful play of signals gay ; when the gloom is speckled o'er
With kral fires : when the Caffie wends home through the lone karroo ;
When the boshbok in the thicket sleeps, and by the stream the gnu ;

Then bend your gaze across the waste : what see ye ? The giraffe
Majestic stalks towards the lagoon, the turbid lymph to quaff ;
With outstretched neck and tongue adust, he kneels him down to cool
His hot thirst with a welcome draught from the foul and brackish pool.

A rustling sound—a roar—a bound—the lion sits astride
Upon his giant courser's back. Did ever king so ride ?
Had ever king a steed so rare, caparisoned of state
To match the dappled skin whereon that rider sits elate ?

In the muscles of the neck his teeth are plunged with ravenous greed ;
His tawny mane is tossing round the withers of the steed.
Upleaping with a hollow yell of anguish and surprise,
Away, away, in wild dismay, the camel-leopard flies.

His feet have wings ; see how he springs across the moonlit plain !
As from their sockets they would burst his glaring eyeballs strain ;
In thick black streams of purling blood full fast his life is fleeing ,
The stillness of the desert hears his heart's tumultuous beating.

Like the cloud that through the wilderness the path of Israel traced,
Like an airy phantom dull and wan, a spirit of the waste,
From the sandy sea uprising, as the waterspout from ocean,
A whirling cloud of dust keeps pace with the courser's fiery motion.

Croaking companion of their flight the vulture whirs on high ;
Below, the terror of the fold, the panther fierce and sly,
And hyenas foul, round graves that prowl, join in the horrid race ;
By the footprints wet with gore and sweat their monarch's course they trace.

They see him on his living throne, and quake with fear, the while
With claws of steel he tears piecemeal his cushion's painted pile.
On ! on ! no pause, no rest, giraffe, while life and strength remain ;
The steed by such a rider backed, may madly plunge in vain !

Reeling upon the desert's verge he falls and breathes his last ;
The courser, stained with dust and foam, is the rider's fell repast.
O'er Madagascar, eastward far, a faint flush is described :—
Thus nightly o'er his broad domain the king of beasts doth ride.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

ERRATUM.—Page 2, column 2, line 6, for Lord read Lady

THANK you, Mr. Indian Daily News, for the correction. The mixture of sexes we mean the derangement of epitaphs—was of our doing, not yours, you Gaffer of the Argus eye. But our specs were not so much at fault, as the contemplation of the ways of the not only Upper Ten but the Upper Two (literally), in the great House down South, turned our poor pate, already uneasy with the crown of massive silk which is so much your envy.

THE Englishman's Own telegraphed from Pakyong on the 9th that "it is rumoured that the Tibetans insist upon the acknowledgement of their suzerainty in Sikkim, and that, as Sir Henry Durand will not give in on this point, the negotiations at Ghatong are likely to come to a deadlock." And so are at a deadlock now. There is no knowing when the situation will improve, or what is to be the end of it all—peace or war. We are afraid the present temper on our side seems to be to patch up matters.

THAT scamp of Tehri, Nuthoo Wilson, who has been let off for his last murder with a nominal sentence of five years, and whose case was lately the subject of a question in Parliament, is to be retried.

WHILE the merchants of Calcutta are for virtually suppressing the national Hindu holiday in Bengal on the Doorga Pooja, the Mahomedans in Upper India are moving for addition to the list of holidays the Chihilum or fortieth day from the anniversary of the battle of Kerbela, whose memory is preserved by the Shias to this day annually in the Moharrum.

THE Advocate reports that the Raja of Bhinga has spent about Rs. 75,000 in entertaining Sir Auckland Colvin at his native town, and that Raja Amir Hassan Khan Bahadur, with all his family, is going on the pilgrimage to Karbala. The whole party is over 900 men, women and children, and the trip is estimated to cost a lac and a quarter of money.

CONGRESSING is the order of the day :—

"The great Hindu Religious and Social Conference, called the Bharat Dharma Maha Mandal meets for the fourth time at Brindaban. The millionaire of the place, Seth Luchman Dass, C. S. I., is the President of the Reception Committee. Delegates from all parts of India are expected. Though the Congress is too orthodox, still the Pandits have voted for sea-voyage."

And the Five Nechans, including the precious droppings of the cow, afterwards, we dare say!

GOVERNMENT has at last made up its mind to abandon the export duty on silver plate.

THE Sane Canal water will be supplied this season at Re. 1-4. On account of the scarcity, the rate has been reduced by 5 annas.

DR. SAUER was robbed by his sweeper of his gold watch and chain and some currency notes. Mr. Marsden has sentenced the thief to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

FOR change of air ordered by the Doctors to the Maharanee, the Maharaja of Mysore has brought her to Madras.

GOVERNMENT students at the Dehra Forest School will, in future, be required to do official service for at least five years, after completion of their school curriculum.

ORDER has been published withdrawing, from the 1st April 1889, the Inland Emigration Act I of 1882 from the labour-districts of Chittagong and the Chittagong Hill Tracts.

THE first criminal sessions of the High Court begins on Monday, the 11th February.

THE four young sons of the King of Siam are coming to Calcutta by the S. S. Africa. Rooms have been engaged for them at the Great Eastern.

THE Evening News has run out the sands of its hour glass. After life's fitful fever—of a most galloping character—it takes its rest.

FOR the triple murder—of a Parsi lady, her daughter and grandson—at Dadur, a suburb of Bombay, Narayen Nanu has been committed. He had confessed his guilt to the Police, but retracted it before the Magistrate, making a rambling statement about the occurrence and denying all knowledge of the crime. Of course, he had seen lawyers in the mean time.

SEVEN carriages of the down Calcutta mail train were derailed on the 4th inst. at Ladhawal between Phillour and Ludhiana, blocking the line and delaying the up Calcutta mail four hours. The Civil and Military Gazette points out that these detentions are on the increase.

THE Amir of Afghanistan writing from Mazari Sharif on the 26th December reports that he was fired at at a parade. The ball missed His Highness and wounded a servant. The would be assassin was immediately killed by officers present.—Press Commissioner. The Amir probably winters in Afghan Turkestan.

HER Majesty the Queen goes to Barritz in March.

PROCEEDINGS against Professor Geffken, for disclosing the contents of the Emperor Frederick's Diary, have, as might be expected, been abandoned. It would not do to wash the dirty linen of German royalty and statesmanship in public. Too many disclosures were imminent, we suppose.

THE Right Honourable Charles Shaw Lefevre, the first and the last Viscount Eversley, a former Speaker of the House of Commons, has died at the advanced age of 94. He was born in 1794 and in 1830 was returned to the House of Commons. In 1839 he was elected Speaker, in succession to the late Mr. Abercrombie (afterwards Lord Dunfermline.) In 1857 he retired and was raised to the peerage. He married in 1817. His wife died in 1857. He leaves no family.

OUR ignorance and superstition form, with many, the stock argument for keeping us for ever in tutelage and denying the people of India liberal institutions. Such European reasoners regard themselves for the nonce as coming from, or belonging to, an ideal land of thorough enlightenment. In point of fact, there is much in common between Europe—nay, the United Kingdom—and India. Not long ago, capital was made by Anglo-Indian writers of certain indications of barbarous credulity discovered in certain quarters in India. These gentlemen are invited to mark the following :—

"Extraordinary excitement is being occasioned in the towns and villages of Donegal county by what are declared to be miraculous cures effected by a young Catholic priest named Larkin, lately arrived from Surrey. Enormous crowds follow the priest's steps, and scenes of excitement occur such as are associated with the famous apparitions at Knock. Cripples carried many miles are said to have cast away their crutches and walked, and sight is reported to have been restored to the blind.

It may be said that that is in Ireland. But then the Irish are not a whit more modest in their pretensions than the Britons. They are all Sahebs for us.

THE Bulkeley Court-Martial has ended disastrously to the Colonel. The Court found him guilty of embezzlement and misappropriation of the regimental funds, and, on conviction, ordered him to be cashiered and imprisoned for twelve months, besides fining him Rs. 24,000. The sentence has been confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief.

This officer deserves no sympathy. His peculation was of a peculiarly pusillanimous kind. He robbed the poor dumb sepoy, whom it was his duty to protect. He was a bad officer and worse gentleman.

SIDNEY AUGUSTIN O'DANNE, a retired Captain and once Military Governor of the German Emperor, is being tried, in camera, for swindling and attempting to extort money from Major Baron Hune, the Prussian Military Attaché in Paris. But why camera? In Germany, as in India, this camera is apt to turn out a camera obscura.

THE Lieutenant-Governor is out again on his tour. This time, Sir Stuart Bayley has selected the distressed parts of Behar—Chumparun, Mozuffepore and Durbhanga Districts. He returns to the capital on the 24th.

AFTER a welcome audience from King Humbert and a cordial interview with Queen Margherita, the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava with the Marchioness left Rome on the 10th for London.

THE Duke of Connaught has sprained his knee. His visit to Hyderabad is therefore postponed.

THE Kuki Kheyls are at their old tricks again. Only recently they fired upon Colonel Warburton and Lieutenant Macdonald to the south west of Jumrood and paid a fine. Six days ago, beyond Jumrood, Lieutenant Macdonald was fired at. They are evidently tempting Fate.

AN important despatch having been lost last autumn in the Austrian post office, a courier service has been established between the Berlin Foreign Office and the German Embassy at Vienna.

SIR Lepel H. Griffin, K.C.S.I., has been permitted to detach himself from the Bengal Civil Service from the 1st of this month.

COLONEL Sir O. B. C. St. John, K.C.S.I., R.E., has been promoted from the 2nd to the 1st Class Resident and is Gazetted Resident in Mysore and Chief Commissioner of Coorg, his place as Governor-General's Agent at Baroda being officiated by General Sir H. N. D. Prendergast, K.C.B., V.C., R.E., from Mysore.

MAULVI Kabir-ud-din Ahmad, Khan Bahadur, Chief Maulvi to the Board of Examiners at Calcutta, is Gazetted a Shams-ul-ulama. Long live the Political Judge and the Catholic Cabal!

THE Venerable B. T. Atlay, Archdeacon of Calcutta, retires from the service from the 6th February 1889.

THE Inspector of Schools, Assam, will henceforth be known by the more dignified title of Director of Public Instruction, Assam.

THE Vaitarna Relief Fund, at Bombay, amounts to Rs. 3,400. But there is no distress to relieve. The Committee have therefore addressed themselves to the Political Agents of Cutch and Kathiawar enquiring whether there are any distressed or destitute relatives of the dead.

MR. TWIDALE, the wellknown Pleader of our High Court, applied, through Mr. Doynce, to practise before Her Majesty's Privy Council as an agent. Following the precedent laid down in Mr. Taylor's case, Lord Hobhouse, on behalf of their Lordships, refused the permission. His Lordship pointed out that unless a man were enrolled a solicitor in England or in India or the Colonies, the rules did not apply. The judicial Medes!

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Fourth Indian National Congress will be chiefly remembered for the apparition of Raja Sheoprasad, during the sitting, and the assault by Captain Hearsey on Mr. Chesney, the editor-in-chief of the Pioneer, in connection with it. The Captain, one of the delegates, took umbrage at the expressions "Half-Caste" and "Brown Captain" in "A Study of the Congress, by an Eye-Witness" in the Pioneer. He called on the editor with a whip and laid it on him, who immediately pounced upon the Captain, when the staff ran to the rescue of their Chief, and bundled the enemy out of the premises. The matter has gone into court. As yet, the summons have not been served, as Captain Hearsey had returned to Dehra Dun.

THE Grand Remonstrance of the Rebel Honoraries has not gone for nothing. The Bengal Office has surrendered, not at discretion though, nor with, altogether. The thin end of the wedge in the word "unpaid" has been withdrawn, and the great Hyder Naik reverts to his position as the all-powerful Mayor of the Palace directing and controlling the affairs of a faimeant magistracy, instead of reigning direct in propria persona as Sultan de jure.

THE Bengal Government has replied to the protest of the Honorary Magistrates of Calcutta against the rules for the conduct of Benches. The letter is addressed to the Chief Magistrate, who is asked to submit a revised set of rules. The Chief Secretary explains that the word "unpaid" was used in the rules in no way to disparage the non-Stipendiary Presidency Magistrates or to alter the character of the office. Rather, the Government was anxious to remove the impression obtaining in some quarters that the term implied "a titular distinction without correlative duties," and to discourage applications on that behalf from applicants who based their claims on their "rank and social position or upon services rendered in wholly different capacities." Objection being taken to the word by the Magistrates, the Lieutenant-Governor who "appreciates their services and their importance too highly to put anything like an intentional slight upon them," withdraws his objection to the old phrase "Honorary Presidency Magistrate." Sir Stuart Bayley is further willing to relax the rule as to the adjourned cases being taken up day after day, for he is "fully aware that part-heard cases cannot in all instances be carried on literally from day to day, but in such instances an effort should be made to let the adjourned hearing be fixed for the earliest available date so as to ensure the case being decided with the least practicable delay." Under the circumstances, the relaxation is a matter of course, and it is a wonder that it should come as a concession. Even this tardy grace is spoiled in the qualification. The Benches are simply consigned to the mercy of Ivan the Terrible—we mean Hyder the Inevitable. In prose earnest, we confess, we are afraid, the Magistrates are put in a worse plight. In fixing the dates, they must consult the convenience of the office instead their own. What is worse, they must submit to its views the interests of the justice. The Lieutenant-Governor cannot agree to alter the rule as to the times when the Magistrates should sit or rise, nor is he prepared to leave the election of the Chairman of a Bench to the Magistrates themselves, for, according to him, "legal knowledge and ability are more important qualifications for conducting the proceedings of a Court than those conferred by seniority, social position, or official precedence." Just so. And the Magistrates themselves always give the precedence to these qualifications. It will not be so now, he may depend upon it. It is something that the rule defining the Registrar's duties in connection with the Bench, empowering him openly to control the Magistrates, is to be altogether excluded.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY has passed an extremely lenient sentence on Mr. Goodricke. He will not be allowed to rejoin his place in the Calcutta Collectorate, but may apply for pension. For all his transgressions, he will enjoy his leave allowance and then his pension earned as for good service.

OUR readers will remember the case of Mr. Goodricke, Collector of Calcutta. This journal was the first to notice the abuses in the collection of the Income Tax. The first and the last almost we may say, our contemporaries discreetly avoiding the subject till all danger from the evil eye of the Collectorate was past. The Collector's immediate superior officer, the Commissioner of the Presidency Division, took the matter up with interest and pursued it in right earnest. This is creditable to Mr. Smith's honesty of purpose. Nothing but a strong sense of duty would induce a man to undertake a thankless Herculean task. It was at once a delicate and difficult inquiry into which he plunged himself, neck and crop, heart and soul. After long weeks of patient research, he reported against the Collector. The inquiry had resulted in startling discoveries. This uncovenanted tax-gatherer, who began life in a menial capacity and whose original appointment to Government Service was an abuse of patronage, was a little official Cressus. He had been financing on a pretty good scale, lending to the tune of quarter lacs and half lacs on house property in town. The most notable revelation was the discovery of a broker of bribes and a pettifoggish limb of the law attached to the department. Thousands of Rupees had been raised by the former and paid to the latter for the latter's patron. The report now reached the Board of Revenue, whose officers examined the materials therein contained and made their own inquiries and, after satisfying themselves, endorsed it and sent it up to the Government of Bengal. The Secretariat now threshed the subject in its own mull, in its own way, and the Lieutenant-Governor then formed his opinion. At length the time came for the deliverance of the Great Circumlocution Office, and the outcome of the mountain's protracted labour is a pitiful exhibition. It is true to its motto—Not to do it, or to do something infinitesimal. It maintains its patronly regard for official Mahrattas who impose the Chauth on all and sundry. Its tenderness for their freaks is charming. Early in the stages of this matter, as soon as the Collector was found out, he was permitted to go on leave, apparently to keep himself out of harm's way should anything might transpire serious enough to compel the authorities to seek the interference of the criminal judicature. It was supposed he would have the grave or prudence not to embarrass them by insisting on his appearance again with a view to reemployment. But they had not taken the true measure of their customer and had themselves smoothed his way back. And now the ghost hovers in sight and stalks proudly towards them. Having neglected to take decisive action in proper time, they are reduced to wash their hands out of the business by another compromise. May this be a warning for the future, is all we can say!

THERE have been heavy defalcations in the Faridpur Collectorate. The misappropriation extends to over Rs. 30,000. The Deputy Collector has been suspended and Ru Bahadoor Rajendranath Mitter of the Alipur Collectorate has orders to repair to the place to make the necessary investigations.

PUNDIT Jibananda Vidyasagar has gone to Benares to expiate the crimes of his family in connection with the murder of his daughter-in-law, for which her husband, his son, Suddhabode has been hanged.

"A BENGALI JOURNALIST" still airs his "Stray Thoughts from Bengal" in the Indian Spectator. The thoughts are very stray indeed—off the right track of fact and sense. And from the very outset. Thus—

"I see our friends at Madras held a meeting the other day of the Indian Social Conference organized on the occasion of the last National Congress. This Conference was meant to be as representative a body as the National Congress, but I was sorry to see that many of the delegates abstained from joining it last year."

Here is fog enough for straying out of the way! One is driven quite into the open sea as regards time and place and substance. "The other day" may mean anything, from a few days to a few years. The scene is equally indeterminate. "Our friends at Madras" means of course our friends of Madras. Was the meeting, too, held at Madras? "A meeting of the Indian Social Conference organized on the occasion of the last National Conference"—whichever might be meant—might take place equally there and elsewhere, and might well, nay, with greater propriety, be held at Allahabad. Indeed, "the last National Congress" itself is uncertain. The Stray Thoughts are not specially dated; they are evidently an emanation of the New Year. Appearing as they do in a paper of the 6th January 1889, then last Congress may well be the Congress of 1888. Coupling the expression "the other day" with "I see" and fixing our mind upon the matter, we conclude, not without hesitation, that the writer refers to a very recent transaction. Besides, if "this Conference was meant to be as representative a body as the National Congress," the meeting of the former must necessarily be a meeting at Allahabad. In that case, there arises the difficulty—why should our friends at Madras or of Madras, in particular, be represented as holding it? Stray Thoughts may be easy thoughts for the Stray Thinker, but they are hard nuts to crack for the unhappy reader. Writing for a lucid paper like the Spectator, our Bengali brother should take more care.

The writer goes on—

"The objection which the abstainers made was, I believe, that discussion in social matters would disturb the spirit of unity which had been effected by the National Congress."

One would have thought that the objection would strike most reasonable men as weighty. Not so with this "Bengali Journalist" who sends his wisdom to Bombay. He says—"I do not think it a reasonable objection" at all. He can do all things but, for the life of him, he "cannot imagine how differences on social questions would have a prejudicial effect on the unity in a political sense which is being brought about among all Indian nationalities by means of the Congress." This is really a pity. And he goes on at this rate—

"We may differ on social questions, but may at the same time be agreed in our political opinions. As the Social Conference would be a body distinct from the National Congress, the one could have no effect on the other."

And so on, and so on. We leave him to his own reflections.

The "Bengali Journalist" evidently belongs to the Irreconcilable camp. He still harps on the exploded myth that the stay of Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace is a part of the game of Old Nick Dufferin to perpetuate himself in India, in spite of the light and leading of that angel of perfection the Editor of the Indian Mirror—

"Lord Lansdowne has now the advantage or disadvantage of the assistance of two Private Secretaries, viz., Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace and Colonel Ardagh. This is quite unprecedented, and it is plain that the step has been adopted at the suggestion of the late Viceroy who is naturally desirous that his policy should be continued to be observed during his successor's administration in this country. I fear the result of the schooling of Lord Lansdowne by Sir Donald might not be beneficial to the people of India, for it is possible, that by this means the unprejudiced frame of mind with which the new Viceroy has come to our shores might be upset. It would, however, be a matter for congratulation if Lord Lansdowne succeeded in keeping his spirit of independence untouched, after he had undergone the schooling process at the hands of Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace."

THE latest of the great Cities of the World is San Francisco. Founded within the memory of the living, its greatness is scarcely fifty years old. It is no longer parvenu though, having become almost historical. It is not one of the novus riches. Within the short period of its existence, it has had its ups and downs. Its annals have been stirring and stormy. This has been a century of surprises, and the marvel of the Californian meteor has been thrown into the shade by the appearance of the huge comet with its long sweeping tail in the Southern Heavens. The Exodus of the seekers of the Golden Fleece in the Pacific State, has long since been diverted to the farthest ends of the earth. A season of disaster followed and Ruin seized California. It was a brief season, however. The indomitable energy of a new community of picked men working in a virgin land of extraordinary richness recovered lost ground. If gold was exhausted, other natural resources of the country were developed. Other industries—agricultural as well as mineral—employed the activity and skill of the people. Early in the Gold paroxysm, the trade in provisions and the business of purveying was found only less lucrative than digging and more certain. There is at least one resident of Calcutta who came here in 1857, who remembers the first windfall of Californian luck and participated in the prosperity, and suffered from the succeeding decline. He gave up the search for gold direct to set up a flour mill. Since his time mills and manufactories of various kinds have multiplied. After many vicissitudes, California has reached the haven of a staid safe, if not bounding, success. The various fortunes through which she has passed, have lent colour and interest to her history. If there are no ivy-crowned castles, there are neglected factories and ruined farm-houses and tumble-down mansions and abandoned sites of business. There are decayed hospitals and colleges and newspapers and magazines and institutions and clubs, as there are thriving ones. Already, California is a sort of antique among the Pacific states. And the genius of Bret Harte has thrown over the cities of yesterday—San Francisco and Sacramento—the halo of a neo-classicism.

With this necessary introduction to bespeak the Indian reader's interest, we lay the following account of one of the founders of the prosperity of the Golden City of the Eastern shore of the Pacific:—

"A romantic story has reached England. It is to the effect that a man named Blyth has died intestate in California, leaving an immense property, consisting of some 20 million dollars, and land to the extent of half a county. Some 200 persons living in America, England, Scotland, and Ireland have come forward alleging that they are heirs to the property, and an investigation is being made into their claims. These persons state that the deceased millionaire some 50 years ago resided in Leamington, being once transported for felony. In 1849 he started in a sailing vessel round Cape Horn for California, whence glowing accounts had come of the discovery of gold. On his arrival there he was entirely without money, and some of the passengers, out of charity, gave him their lamps, which, according to the custom among passengers in sailing ships, they used in their cabins. These he sold in the streets, and with the proceeds purchased articles which he hawked in turn. He then got a pack, and became a regular hawker. His business progressed so rapidly that he was soon the possessor of £1,000 which he lent out on mortgage on a couple of acres of land outside the then village of San Francisco. Shortly after the mortgage failed, and Blyth was left with the two acres of useless land on his hands. Not knowing what to do with the land, he went to the gold diggings. On his return, to his amazement he found a regular 'boom' had set in, and the land which had fallen into his hands was worth a lot of money. He determined not to sell, although he had innumerable offers, and leased it off for building purpose. On the site now stands a grand block of buildings. It is one of the first and most valuable sites in San Francisco. He started in business, and everything he touched turned to gold, until he became, one of the richest men among the many wealthy ones in the city. He died but a year ago, leaving no Will, and his estate has been taken charge of by the receiver of the San Francisco Court. Several alleged heirs live in Leamington, and are in very poor circumstances indeed two or three following the occupation of cattle drovers."

MR. JAMES ARCHER, the famous painter, is again among us, having returned from a professional tour through the South and the West. In fact, he has been here sometime and will now be going away for ever. We hope our community, European and Native, will take advantage of his presence again among us, to keep as many mementos of his brush as possible. Portraits of any length are no doubt costly, but it is worth denying oneself ephemeral luxuries to have at once a perfect and expressive likeness such as a master can give—and a permanent work of art, which not only might adorn the owner's house, as the most valuable of its furniture, but would also be sought for for exhibitions, to be catalogued and displayed and admired by thousands, and returned, after the show, with the thanks of the committee of the most eminent men. In Mr. Archer, besides, Calcutta has this moment the advantage of not only an artist, who is correct in drawing, effective in colouring and eloquent in expression, but also one who is great in landscape as well as portraiture. And what is more, and almost singular, he combines both departments on the same canvas. He gives as much attention to his background as to the person and costume of his sitter. This method of his tasks him, but the advantage is all for his employer and the seer. His backgrounds are finished landscapes. Rightly judged, his price is very much reduced. He charges for his portrait only, but gives two pictures in one for one. This is a public ground on which we wish he might be largely patronised. Of course, we wish that some of our Princes and noblemen and merchant princes might employ him on the scenes of this country—on gardens and chateaux and family traditions and historical events—if necessary, to let him take notes and send the works hereafter. If our country is to advance in art culture, it must first be filled with pictures by the best living hands, as with copies of the Old Masters.

As for portraiture, money is wasted on a picture which is no true and vivid likeness. Even ordinary men of no great means can, if they understand the usefulness of the thing, have such a likeness by sitting for what is called a chalk drawing. We do not know what Mr. Archer's charges are, but the charge for a chalk sketch cannot be much—certainly not above the means of even a native gentleman who draws a decent salary or has a similar income from other sources. Of course, the importance of leaving to one's family and friends a life-like likeness to be treasured up, is worth a sacrifice.

THE social season of the new year has commenced with spirit. The honor of setting the ball of festivity in motion belongs to a modest and interesting couple of our own nation, of whom we have reason to be proud—Mr. P. L. Roy, representative of a wellknown family of Brahman landlords in Barisal, and Mrs. Roy, daughter of the late distinguished Professor S. G. Chuckerbutty, of the Covenanted Medical Service. They gave a party in honour of Miss Manning, the philanthropist from England, who was living with them. The gathering was select, and there was, in consequence, no crush and, of course, there was more enjoyable intercourse. Shortly after, there was a garden party at Belvedere and again an evening party on Tuesday last. Both occasions were graced by the beaming face and bright eyes of the Marquis of Lansdowne and the fascinating presence of his good fairy of a consort. On the first, the host received and bowed out every guest. On the second, he did his best to notice as many as he was permitted to do by the everlasting cordon of the inevitable natives. On Wednesday, the India Club introduced the elephant into their hole, to use an Indian expression—inviting a host, including camp-followers of every description, to a small corner to see how a Lieutenant-Governor could penetrate through a crowd or see in the dark. For the place was supposed to be illumined by electricity, and, as the batteries failed, there was an end of the matter, the wise and liberal Committee not having provided a farthing rushlight—even a cherag to light the path of the innocent guests out of their predicament. The party were strongly reminded of their proximity to the Black Hole. There was indeed some danger in the situation. Then came the garden party at Government House on Thursday. It was very fully attended.

We were glad to see the nuisance of the "whiskered Pandoor" of an unlearned Pandey A.D.C. trying to spell out unfamiliar native names and making a ludicrous mess of it. Dissatisfaction was expressed by many at one feature of the introduction, which we forbear noticing pending fuller inquiry. On the whole, the party was a great success. The weather was fine. The week closed with a grand gathering in the lawn of the neglected Woodlands of the Maharaja of Cooch Behar. This Prince is a rather shy man who knows only Europeans, and had nothing to say to his native guests beyond offering his hand, but his lady, daughter of the famous Keshub Chunder Sen who was as distinguished for his social tact as for his gifts and accomplishments, made up as far as possible. For the rest, Lord Lansdowne and the Marchioness and Sir Stenart and Lady Bayley, who were present, and made themselves at home, raised the clat and completed the success of an occasion favoured by the gods. The weather was simply charming.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1889.

EIGHTEEN HUNDRED & EIGHTY EIGHT.

THE year 1888 closed amidst the echoes of Lord Dufferin's leave-taking and the usual formalities attending a new succession to the Viceroyalty. It began with foreshadowings of those events. Early in the year, the Viceroy made an announcement, from his place in Council, of his resigning of the Viceroyalty, in consequence of private reasons, at the expiration of the fourth year of his term. This was followed by another communication from the Press Commissioner's Office relating to the selection by Her Majesty's Government of the Marquis of Lansdowne, then Governor-General of Canada, to succeed the Earl of Dufferin, and the likelihood of his arriving in India towards the end of the year. The news naturally created a sensation. As we expected at the time, it evoked all but universal regret. The charm of Lord Dufferin's personal influence had been widely felt, and it was with almost a sense of personal bereavement that the intelligence was felt in many quarters. Even political oppositionists were able to appreciate the loss of a finished statesman just as he had been thoroughly seasoned for his great office. Great, however, as the loss was, it was unavoidable. Private claims are sometimes inexorable, even in the case of public and exalted characters, and India had to be reconciled to the contingency as best she might. The announcement made early in the year has had its fulfilment at its end. The two Viceroys met at the capital, and after the installation of the one, the other left. The incidents of Lord Dufferin's departure were some of them very touching. While deeply moved by the tokens of appreciation which he received at the hands of Indian communities in general, there was in all his parting utterances an undertone of keen regret at the abnormal attitude of the Irreconcilable oppositionists. In his Lordship's two speeches amongst his own countrymen, at the St. Andrew's Dinner at Calcutta and at the Bombay Byculla Club, the departing Viceroy evidently breathed forth the fulness of his heart—in their midst he felt himself at home, after all—in their verdict he had his reward. All through his four years' administration—indeed, from his very first meeting at Government House with some of the representative men of Calcutta native society, in which, with his usual candour, he unwittingly offended the wearers of European costumes amongst our countrymen—has it been Lord Dufferin's fate to bear an unceasing volley of coarse abuse outpoured on him by a section of the Native Press. His Lordship's candour has proved his enemy—the candour by which he meant to win friendship and confidence—nay, the same candour, be it remembered, the traditional absence of which in men in official position had been hitherto keenly missed, and even resented as a personal offence. An opportunity thus afforded by the Viceroy's personal characteristics, was not merely wasted but turned to the worst account, till things have come to a miserable pass indeed. All faith in the very sanity—not to say, wisdom—of some leaders of native opinion has been shaken—nay, in the very decencies of their public conduct. Deeply has the official class been exasperated by the virulent tone of criticism with which it has of late been the wont of our loudest tongues to assail it, in season and out of season, for grievances which were never denied by the official class itself: Only it did not see its way towards their immediate removal. But the cry of our self-called leaders is, after the well-known peremptory parole, Stand and deliver!—Now, or we have nothing but to abuse you. They forget that the term of a Vicerealty may be too short for even a reform in course of consummation. They lose sight of the fact, that there is a will higher than any Indian Viceroy's that may interpose and has often interposed in the way of the best intentions. And there are a hundred other things of detail that must intervene between your asking and getting. All this may never strike the commoner minds, but it is surprising our representatives and leaders should be in the same category. They put forth a bill of grievances, and that is enough ground for their receiving their due to the least fraction of the demand and that immediately. The Viceroy is Chief, and can give if only he will. So, as soon as one new man lands, he is beset with clamorous claims, and woe unto him if these claims remain unsatisfied about the time his office expires! What a change then in the demeanour of those so lately adorning him with fulsome adulation! What bitter curses take the place of all their hollow blessings and congratulations. Now, these tactics, we say, won't do. They have been discovered, and have come to be regarded with just disdain. The reputation of an outgoing Proconsul cannot be left at the mercy of such irrational judges. An Association will turn out in full phalanx with a laudatory farewell Address and a vote for a statue, only provided some of the leading spirits of the body have received substantial marks of favor during the régime about to close. This latter condition unfulfilled, what obligations have they to bid even a decent farewell? Be an Administration as beneficent as it will, if it any way associate itself with a legislation which they, in their infallible wisdom, regard to be hostile to their class interest, there is an end of the matter—the Administration has no certificate so far as the influence of the Association can prevent it. This power of address-giving, hitherto employed much in the same way as the power of voting supplies inherent in the House of Commons, having been so frequently abused, our Governors have come to make themselves rather independent of the tickle favor of such representatives. The very representative character of these representatives has come to be impugned. It hardly requires any "reading between the lines" to understand the significance of Lord Lansdowne's replies to some of the native deputations that lately waited upon him with addresses of welcome. To the British Indian Association his Lordship was strikingly curt and reticent. A more bald and guarded reply it would be impossible to conceive. His Lordship appreciated the high position the members of the Association held in the body politic, and merely "took note" of their congratulations. He observed that they were impressed with the benefits of British Rule and told them that they were sure to be more and more impressed with the beneficent character of that rule the more it was rightly understood. To the khas Indian, the new Viceroy gave a delicate hint of his apprehensions as to the transient character of that sympathy and support which they accorded him in such full measure on his coming. Nothing could be plainer than this from the following words in his Lordship's reply to the address from the Indian Association: "The kindness of your greeting, your ready recognition of the services of my ancestors, and your kindly reference to my own desire to do my duty by your country, are, I hope, conclusive evidence that I shall approach my task with the support of your sympathy. The subsequent portion of your address, in which you enumerate a series of great questions in the solution of which you are interested, shows me, however, that while you are ready to accord a newly appointed Viceroy a liberal measure of indulgence and of time in which to make himself thoroughly familiar with the circumstances and condition of the country committed to his charge, he must not expect to be allowed to remain for an unlimited period in the pleasant region of memories derived from the past and of agreeable but vague expectations with regard to the future. He must no more allow himself to believe that he will be permitted to enjoy such considerate treatment for an indefinite time than he must allow himself to expect that the climate of Calcutta so delightfully temperate and enjoyable during the last and first few weeks of the year will continue to deal with him as gently later in the season." Let our public characters who take it upon themselves to make the fame of our rulers, ponder on the above passage. They now rummage and ransack old shelves in search of liberal antecedents of Lord Lansdowne's ancestors, but there is no knowing in what a different direction their activity will be directed after the lapse of some time, should, in the meantime, their programme of possible or impossible reform remain unrealized. Lord Lansdowne is apparently prepared for his fate, as much as he is prepared for the scorching blasts of an Indian summer, after the pleasant climate in which he found himself on his coming.

It is the year of Viceregal change, and that is our apology for the long digression into which we have been led. It need not, however, be quite a digression. The Indian year 1888 is preeminently the one in which Lord Dufferin had been hard at work in gathering up the threads of his past measures, and it is so completely associated with his memory that a record of the year involuntarily slides into references to his personality. Our year's review naturally grows into Lord Dufferin's.

We have not time to go into full details of an annual retrospect, and shall content ourselves with brief references to some of its prominent political events. It is curious, at the outset, that, in spite of the small enthusiasm among sections of the native populations, Lord Dufferin has a host of admirers in other quarters who claim a high measure of success for his administration. His Lordship himself has left on record a review of his Vicerealty which no candid man can peruse without feeling that, at any rate, far more was due to him than his adverse critics would allow. In his elaborate reply to the address voted to him by the Calcutta community on the eve of his last departure for Simla, he made a serious effort to right himself with his accusers, and whatever may be the radical differences of opinion among politicians, as to the wisdom of his external policy—a policy hitherto systematically followed by the British Government in regard to frontier states—once admitted that that is the policy enjoined upon the Government of India for the time being, there need be no difficulty in appraising the success of Lord Dufferin's measures. Once admitted that considerations of imperial security made the conquest of Burma or the undertaking, at enormous cost, of frontier railways and other measures of defence of vital necessity to the well-being of the Indian Empire, it only remains for lay critics to decide how far he has been successful in carrying those measures through. And in this, opinions of military experts and of officials otherwise in a position to give an authoritative verdict, appear to be unanimous that the result of Lord Dufferin's actions in regard to these objects has been considerably to add to the strength and security of Her Majesty's dominions in the East.

The retention of an odious impost like the income tax, must, in this poor country, be disastrous to the reputation of any ruler. Could Lord Dufferin see his way to abolish it, his name would have rung now from one end of the country to the other, as that of one of India's greatest deliverers. In fact, this tax is working a vast deal of unhappiness amongst the people. But the financial difficulties of the State, due, no doubt, in a great measure, to the State's own action and methods of action, hardly leave a Viceroy much liberty in the matter. What is the Viceroy's control over the Home Charges—that perennial drain upon the Indian exchequer? The abolition of the import duties has been another cause of the financial strain which the Government of India finds itself bound to face, and certainly it was not any Government of India responsible for that measure of gross injustice to the Indian taxpayer. So far as Lord Dufferin is personally concerned, he cannot be sufficiently complimented for the courage with which he charged the Finance Committee which he appointed for the retrenchment of expenditure, to include within the purview of their enquiries the subject of the Home Charges. But the Secretary of State intervened, and all the expenditure which is incurred in England in the name of the Government of India was excluded from the sphere of their examination. Notwithstanding the peremptory restriction thus imposed on Lord Dufferin's manly and honest endeavours to make the two ends meet, as far as possible without further adding to the burdens of the Indian tax-payer, that Committee have achieved no mean measure of success. Lord Dufferin, in his self vindication from the accusations so lightly brought against him, before the Calcutta community assembled last year in the Town Hall to vote him a valedictory address, triumphantly pointed to his Finance Committee and his Public Service Commission, as measures of domestic administration of which he would always feel proud. The recommendations of the Service Commission, if they do not go far enough, are conceived in a thoroughly liberal spirit, and, if the Secretary of State does not whittle them away by his interferences, they are sure to afford some satisfaction to the aspirations of educated Indians.

The year that has closed was one distinguished for considerable material advancement of the country. Handicapped as the Government was by financial difficulties, and absorbed as its funds were by the demands of its military policy, it did not starve those works of public utility upon which depended the advancement of agriculture and commerce and manufactures. The representatives of those interests speak in high approbation of Lord Dufferin's sympathetic treatment of the claims of the commercial and manufacturing enterprise, and this is no small praise for a ruler who could promote the arts of peace amidst his ceaseless distractions on account of war.

The year that is gone, may in God's Providence be fruitful of measures likely to alleviate the pressure of population and poverty in overcrowded districts of the country. His absorbing cares, not only on account of the organization of Burma but of a number of small military expeditions, necessitated by regard for the honor and prestige of the Government did not prevent Lord Dufferin from taking up and dealing with the great economical question of the poverty of the people. His Lordship directed an enquiry into the question, and probably the decision which his Lordship's resolution on the subject embodies, is in the main a sound one, viz., that, although British administration has been productive of a measure of prosperity to several classes of the population, there are parts of the country suffering from congestion of population and the worst types of poverty and misery.

The year 1888 will be memorable in the annals of the Native States. The dark intrigues which prevailed in the Foreign Office in its treatment of the Feudatory Princes, received, under Lord Dufferin's personal influence, an effectual check, and for the first time a purer atmosphere seemed to pervade that bureau. The effects of Lord Dufferin's personal intervention in the affairs of our Native States, were conspicuously apparent in the case of the premier state Hyderabad, and, probably the most notable event of the old year in connection with the administration of the foreign office, was the light thrown upon its dark chambers by the investigations of the Deccan Mining Concessions Commission.

Another memorable event of the old year was the passing of the Bill for abolishing imprisonment for debt. We had always advocated the measure which is only in harmony with the humanity of the age.

A review of the year, however brief and hurried, can hardly be concluded by a journalist in Bengal without placing on record the high reputation acquired by the Local Administration. Never was the Bengal Government so popular. The result is due not only to the Lieutenant-Governor, but also to the two principal Secretaries. Sir Stuart Bayley is specially lucky in his Chief Secretary, Mr. Edgar, an able and upright man of large experience, who works with all the devotion of a personal interest in the fame of his Chief. By his kindly demeanour towards the subject population and keen eye to their welfare and happiness, the Lieutenant-Governor himself has won all hearts. Conciliating and, at the same time, firm—gracious in his manners, and, above all, full of sympathies for his people, his very mistakes are condoned. The passing of the Calcutta Municipal Bill brought him into a temporary difficulty with the citizens of his capital, but, however opinions may differ as to the necessity of the measure, it has long ago passed the region of discussion, and what remains is to hope that it may be productive of the maximum of improvement with as little as possible of worry and harassment to the people. Sir Stuart Bayley's attitude towards the scheme of Local Self-Government is all that could be desired.

In a short sketch, from which we have kept out many things which usually form the staple of a regular review, we will not refer to disastrous visitations of Providence, like the tornado of Dacca, nor rake up unpleasant memories of official misdeeds and scandals. The year has, indeed, obtained a notoriety of its own, by the number as well as gravity of its scandalous disclosures of a flagrant character sufficient to shake one's faith in very civilization itself. But it is the old story of the serpent trailing in the path of man, and let all who are weak themselves draw a veil over a weakness that seems to be an inheritance of our common humanity.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

Lowther Castle, Allahabad, Dec. 31, 1888.

TO-DAY is the closing day of the year of grace 1888; and with it closes a week of merry-making and festivities that may not recur again. We spent the outgoing week in a feverish state of excitement. It was one prolonged Lord Mayor's day. Delegates began to drop in as early as the 20th instant, and it is noteworthy the earliest to come were from the farthest part of India, from the Madras side. One of the earliest arrivals was V. Anuntharow Pantulu Garu, Rao Sahib, Bimlipatam. They, however, did not stop long after giving intimation of their arrival. Some formally and others informally. Scarcely had they gone to "do" the places of pilgrimage—such as Kashi, Mathura, Brindaban, &c.—and we all know how unadulterated and undiluted their Hinduism is of the most orthodox type—when we were called upon to take care of fresh arrivals from the Behar and Oude Side. On the 24th and 25th, there was quite a rush of passengers, almost all delegates. By the 26th, all had arrived. The enthusiasm, the bustle and the confusion consequent thereon, can be better imagined than described. The arrangements for reception and accommodation may not have been of the best kind; but they were by no means imperfect or hopelessly confusing. If I were to refer to causes which would explain the little mismanagement that prevailed, I would not only be anticipating facts but I would do a serious injustice to the managers of the Reception Committee, to Babu Charu Chandra Mitra and others, who spared nothing that lay in their power to consult the convenience and comfort of the delegates. There was a number of "volunteers"—generally the Muir College students—upon the platform awaiting every incoming train, led by a few members of the Reception Committee, or at any rate by a "volunteer officer." As soon as the delegates came out of their respective compartments, they found volunteers waiting to take care of their luggage, and others to comfortably seat them in conveyances which were ever ready at the disposal of the members of the Reception Committee. All the Railway coolies were engaged: So there would be no difficulty or confusion in the transmission of luggage. The delegates would then drive, accompanied by one or more volunteers, straight to Lowther Castle—a distance of by no means less than a mile, if not more. At the Castle, they would be received by a fresh batch of volunteers under a volunteer officer who was to instruct his subordinates to which "block" to take which arrivals. These subordinate officers would take the delegates to blocks according to the part of India or circle they came from. There were no less than, I believe, seven blocks, each under, what a gentleman facetiously called, two "blockheads." And whenever there was the least delay in the carrying out of any delegate's order, down would come upon the officers of the block the humorous wrath of witty delegates who exclaimed, "How can we expect a better state of affairs when the block-heads are our rulers?" These block heads had under their command a corps of volunteers who were to work under the direction and control of the heads of each block. The volunteers, of whose number there was registered more than 200, were gentlemen, mostly the senior students of the local College, who had volunteered their services to wait upon, and every way to minister to the comfort of, delegates. Their distinctive badge was a flower which they wore on their breast. The Reception Committee, whose members wore a bigger flower made this concession in their behalf that they would be admitted free to witness the proceedings of the Congress. This was too strong a temptation to a large body of students; and applications began to pour in very freely for the enrolment of volunteers. Many, I am afraid, were not at all enthusiastic about the work for which they very generously volunteered their services; only a few cared for their self-imposed task, and discharged it right loyally and with heart-whole devotion. The majority were seized with a desire anyhow to get a free ticket of admission, perhaps they did not carefully weigh the responsibility and arduousness of the task they willingly and cheerfully undertook to perform, or did but little understand the nature of the work they would be called upon to discharge. For many did never put in their appearance, and more were little better than faggots in the muster-roll. But better could not have been expected of students. In the Castle itself, there was room only for the office, the General Secretary, Mr. Digby, Baboo Charu Chandra, the more important of the Mahomedan Nawabs and princelings and a few other persons of ill-health and a few more confirmed valetudinarians. In the spacious compound of the Castle, which had been rented at Rs. 500 for 2 months, innumerable tents were pitched for the accommodation of an overwhelming majority of the delegates. The Madras alone, as having travelled the longest distance and as most susceptible to the cold of the northern winter, were provided with mud houses and bungalows, all others being housed in tents. Two small tents were reserved for the "Intelligence Department and Delegates' Register." Not very far from these was the Library, or, more correctly speaking, the Reading Room. The lane between these two would lead us to the market-place which, at its terminus, opens out into a large field lying fallow. To one entering the Lowther Castle compound from the Parkside, about the first thing that presents itself to his view is the capacious Pandal; while outside the Pandal itself there fluttered in the wind a whole train of flags occupying the several angles, bearing on them the names of places represented—a pleasing and variegated show. To the right of the visitor making his way to the Castle, there were a number of shawl shops, newspaper and book stalls, &c., &c. The left side of the Pandal was wholly taken up with tents of a block reserved for Europeans and Natives preferring English fashion, which was largely availed of by our anglicised Babus. Between the Pandal and the Castle, was a large and beautiful tent, the gift of the Maharaja of Durbhanga, the premier zemindar of Bengal. This was utilised for the purposes of the drawing-room. Here the provincial delegates held their meetings for the election of the members of the Subject Committee and the Brahmos their first conference. Here also the Madras delegates interviewed Messrs. Caine and Digby. Conferences were the order of the day. At one time it seemed as if we were to be deluged with these offshoots. Verily, between our endless varieties of races, creeds and classes, sects and sections, we were threatened with the very plague of locusts of numerous minor interests at a moment our attention and energies should be concentrated on the one great object! Here was the Kshetriya Conference, the Brahmo Conference and many other conferences of which I have no knowledge, and proposals were also made for a conference of the members of the press to discuss general politics and other leading burning topics of the day. It was acknowledged on all hands that the pandal this year was bigger and decenter than that at Madras. A floating rumour, which was largely believed and which created some alarm, was that our enemies were on the look-out for an opportunity to set the pandal on fire. To timely provide against such a contingency, more than a dozen sentinels were posted around and about it, strictly ordered to be always on the alert. Further provision was made against such a catastrophe or in case any tent took fire by accident by having tanks full of water close by. When you learn that all this was done within the incredibly short space of six weeks, you will be inclined to wonder at, and admire, the pluck and the enterprising capacity of the managers. Earlier than this it was not possible for them to arrange for things for causes which hardly reflect any credit upon the honour and honesty of the local authorities. For once the ekkas were scarce in Allahabad, the city of dust and of ekkas! Allahabad,

Thanks to the genius of reflective humour of Mr. Mozumdar, is already known to the civilised world as the city of ekkas; but to Mr. N. N. Ghosh is perhaps reserved to make known to the world the dusty abundance of the sacred city of the Hindus, in one of his reflective fits of mind in which he is excelled by himself alone. The Morning Post has been amply rewarded for its Yankee enterprise of publishing day after day a pretty exhaustive account of the proceedings. The most attractive feature of the Congress numbers of the Post were the introductory articles reputed to have been written by Mr. William Digby, C.I.E. At a more convenient time, in my leisure, I propose to send you further accounts of the Congress, not indeed in the form of reports, nor in the shape of a series of systematic articles, but as incidents present themselves to me, which have been overlooked by others but which are nonetheless likely to interest and enlighten your readers.

B.

State Paper.

No. 169.

From P. Nolan, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, on Special Duty,

To the Secretary to the Government of India, Revenue and Agricultural Department.

Dated Calcutta, the 24th October 1888.

[Concluded from page 10.]

19. Although these terms are more liberal than those on which waste lands are ordinarily granted, they do not involve any loss of revenue, inasmuch as whatever tax may ultimately be obtained from lands cultivated on the system proposed will be a clear addition to that levied under the ordinary rules. In the districts where these large tracts are available for reclamation there is enough for all, and the Burmese will not cease to take up as much new land as the capital and labour at their disposal permit, merely because Indian settlers may, at the same time, be bringing the assigned grants under cultivation. The allowance on the ryotwari rate to be made to the grantees after thirty-three years does not exceed that given in other provinces where the settlement is made with zemindars. The total amount which it is proposed to assign at first, a hundred thousand acres, forms an insignificant fraction of the available waste in Burma, and if the experiment does not prove in every respect satisfactory, it need not be repeated. On the other hand, it is hoped that the grants may induce capitalists to settle Beharis in considerable numbers on lands in Burma, and if this is done, the benefit will certainly not be limited to the areas directly affected. Although Bengalis now settle on waste land in Burma, it is understood that Beharis and the men of Chutia Nagpur (where wages are lower than those current in Behar) do not, and what is desired is that an example should be set of success in this direction. Once we have established a movement, and can point to its good results, it will continue of itself.

20. It is further proposed that Government should start one or more clearances on land favourably situated, for the settlement of Behar emigrants, to whom assistance may be given in the form of advances. This recommendation is made on the principle that the State, as the chief landholder in Burma, may properly set an example of reclamation on the system which it commends to other proprietors. Some facilities are presented for the purposes by the existence of "fuel reserves" established to supply the new railway, but no longer needed, as the engines burn only coal, and also by the recent appointment of an experienced officer as Director of Agriculture for the province. The sites of these reserves, which are fertile and convenient for the purpose, might be made available for cultivation by merely clearing the thicker jungle, and sinking wells, leaving the settlers themselves to deal with the lighter jungle. It is true that an attempt to settle Beharis on waste land failed utterly in 1882, and that some previous efforts made to accomplish the same objects came to nothing; but in these instances no means whatever were adopted to select suitable rayyets, or to insist on the observances of any rules which would give scope for a system of natural selection. It was assumed that every Behari labourer was fit to act as a small capitalist in Burma, to be trusted with advances

Holloway's Pills.—Nervousness and want of Energy.—When first the nerves feel unstrung, and listlessness supplants energy, the time has come to take some such alternative as Holloway's Pills to restrain a disorder from developing itself into a disease. These excellent Pills correct all irregularities and weaknesses. They act so kindly, yet so energetically on the functions of digestion and assimilation, that the whole body is revived, the blood rendered richer and purer, while the muscles become firmer and stronger, and the nervous and absorbent systems are invigorated. These Pills are suitable for all classes and all ages. They have a most marvellous effect on persons who are out of condition; they soon rectify whatever is in fault, restore strength to the body and confidence to the mind.

equal to ten times his annual income in his native land, to eradicate jungle, and cultivate the land reclaimed on his own account. The settlers were therefore recruited by an agent in Behar, paid so much a head, with the result that they were found absolutely unfit for the work before them. This is what might easily have been anticipated from the first. It is not every one who can farm at a profit, even on land which he receives in a state of thorough cultivation, and in his own country. To do so on waste land in a foreign province, differing much in climate and soil from that with which he is acquainted, is a difficult task, requiring special gifts for its successful performance. While any stout Behari can get good wages in Burma by ploughing and reaping for others, or at any rate by carrying rice-bags at the wharf, it is not one in ten who is fit for the difficult work of independent cultivation. The most careful selection is therefore necessary in the choice of rayyets; or rather it is desirable to establish a system under which they may select themselves. Emigrants on their first arrival should, as a general rule, work for others, and when they have become acclimatised, and learned something of the ways and language of the country, those who feel equal to the enterprise may set up as cultivators, investing their savings on their holdings. To such men, when they settle on Government clearances, advances may be freely given, as they risk something of their own in the venture, thereby giving a guarantee. It has been objected that we would not by assisting men of this class really promote emigration, as they are already in Burma; but if the scheme be considered in its ultimate consequences, it will be found to include the promotion of emigration in the very best and most effectual way. Every man withdrawn from the ordinary labour market leaves a vacancy which another emigrant may probably supply, while nothing would encourage Beharis more to seek work in Burma than the existence of settled colonies of their caste-fellows in the province, who would not only afford them society and countenance, but in many cases would even assist them to find their passage-money, and give them employment. With regard to the cost of the undertaking, it would be sufficient to proceed on a small scale at first, for the purpose of experiment; and I should say that an expenditure of Rs. 8,000 would be enough to establish a village or hamlet. It is estimated that Rs. 250 is required to clear a holding, build a habitation, and find the tenant in stock; so that, if Government advances half this sum, the rayyet finding the other half, the proposed outlay would be sufficient to set up fifty families, leaving a margin for the construction of wells, and for cutting noxious jungle where this should be done by the landlord:—

	Rs.
Advances to 50 tenants, at Rs. 125 each	6,250
Digging wells	1,000
Clearing jungle where this should be done by the landlord	750
Total	8,000

The charges would be of an ordinary nature, classified as on account of muazzari advances, and the improvement of Government estates. They would fall on the Burma Administration.

21. The above are the only proposals which I have to lay before the Government of India; but certain suggestions have also been made which, while I do not recommend their immediate adoption, I report for consideration. I was at one time disposed to think that Government might with advantage issue in Bankipore, at the discretion of local officers, free passes for the voyage from Calcutta to Rangoon, leaving the emigrant to pay his own railway fare from Behar to Calcutta, and recovering from him, after he had found employment in Burma, the value of the passage, which will be only five rupees. The payment of the railway fare would be some evidence that the intending emigrant was not a mere pauper, and it would also prevent the fraudulent use of free passes from Bankipore to Calcutta. Passengers by steamers have to appear before starting in the Company's office; and, considering this liability, and the fact that the advances are recoverable, I do not think there would be any danger of the sale of the passes. With regard to the possibility of recovering the advances in Burma, the facts we have to go on are that 7,397 immigrants were landed by Government at Rangoon under the Bengal emigration scheme of 1874, at an estimated cost of Rs. 21-4 a head, afterwards raised to Rs. 23-4; before March 1876, that is to say, within a year or two years of their arrival, this charge, which was treated as an advance, had been recovered in full from 29 per cent. of the emigrants, 21 per cent. had at that date paid more than half the debt, and only 12 per cent. had paid nothing. If such progress was made in recovering a really considerable debt—one which would absorb the whole savings of a labourer for a year—I should have thought that the realization of an advance which would easily be discharged in two months would have been comparatively easy, and that an allowance of 10 per cent. for bad debts would have been ample. The Burma officers consulted were, however, much opposed to undertaking the responsibility of recovering the advances, and were inclined to recommend, as an alternative scheme, that free passes for the whole journey from Bankipore to Rangoon should be issued as a gift to suitable emigrants. This appears to me to involve the adoption of the system of 1874 in regard to the maintenance of depôts in Bengal for emigrants on their way out, and in Burma for the new arrivals, until employment could be found for them—a system to which officers in Burma are much opposed. I fail to see how we could pay in full the railway fares and steamer passages without adopting such precautions, as it would be a scandal to leave State emigrants to starve in the streets of Calcutta and Rangoon. The only safe policy is, in my opinion, to favour and assist those who travel at least partly at their own expense, while avoiding the institution of a system of pauper emigration, conducted at the charge and responsibility of the State. The original proposal as to the issue of free passes to Beharis from Calcutta to Rangoon by way of advance is not pressed at present, but may be renewed should any special opportunity present itself, such as a scarcity in Bengal, or an exceptional demand for labour in Burma.

19 876.

22. I understand that a considerable number of immigrants are at present employed on public works in Burma, and it appears to me that suitable labourers might be engaged in Behar for the purpose under the British Burma Labour Law, or otherwise, and their outward expenses advanced, subjects to subsequent recovery by deduction from their wages. The most suitable of the labourers thus imported might, after proving their industry and learning the ways of the country, be settled on Government clearances, the execution of public works being thus made a means of ultimately securing the reclamation of waste lands. To this proposal the Burma officers consulted were opposed, on the ground that it would interfere with the system of executing such works by contract, and would add to their cost. Mr. Hodgkinson also considered it desirable to encourage the Burmese themselves to seek employment of this kind. I gathered from the Chief Commissioner that the objection on the score of cost impressed him most, and he entirely agreed with his officers in rejecting the suggestion, unless the Bengal Government would undertake to pay any loss which its adoption might involve. In my opinion the importation of labourers from Behar for labour on public works in Burma, if the system were permanently adopted, would involve trouble rather than cost; properly conducted, it might even be made profitable, as in the case of the importation of labourers from the same districts to Assam, where local wages are not so high as in Burma. At first there would, no doubt, be some expense, in the probable event of the arrangements being defective; but ultimately it can hardly injure an employer to engage his labourers in a very cheap instead of in a very dear market. I do not, however, find that the present moment is opportune for putting forward the proposal. Should any great public works be undertaken requiring a supply of labour larger than can be met from local sources, the Burma Administration may be disposed to entertain the suggestion with greater favour; while in the event of scarcity occurring in Behar, the Bengal Government may be prepared to assist to the extent of advancing the requisite funds.

23. The Financial Commissioner advocates the construction of a line to connect the Burmese railway system with that of Bengal. This would undoubtedly do more to promote emigration than all the other measures taken together, dread of crossing the sea being deeply implanted in the breasts of upcountrymen. I only mention the project, as I have not had the opportunity of considering it in any detail.

24. The British Burma Emigration Law of 1876 can be said to have come into operation only in so far as Government in the following year imported some Madrassis with the intention of assigning them to employers according to the procedure described in section 48; but no one would accept their services on the troublesome conditions prescribed by the Act, so they had to be allowed to work on the ordinary terms. No private person has ever put the law in force, and few are aware of its existence. The practice of importing labourers at the employer's expense does not obtain in Burma, and therefore the Act framed to facilitate such importation finds no scope for operation. It has been suggested that as Madrassis are generally brought over at the cost of petty native contractors, legislation is desirable for the more easy recovery of advances; but Burma officers are not unanimous on this point, and in the absence of any demand on the part of the contractors themselves, interference would, I think, be premature.

25. The general result of the discussions which took place during my visit to Burma is to show that emigration to that province from Bengal is most beneficial to individuals, and also to the State; that it is proceeding on a large scale which may be greatly increased; and that the voluntary system on which it is conducted works extremely well. The inference is that the movement should be encouraged in every practicable way, without depriving it of the spontaneity which is its most valuable characteristic. The measures immediately recommended with this object are three—the reduction of the cost of the passage from Calcutta to Rangoon by one-half, the offer of equitable terms to capitalists willing to reclaim waste land by the agency of Indian labourers or rayyets, and the settlement of Bengalis on selected Government estates. For carrying out the first of these proposals there is a special opportunity, the terms of the contract between the principal carrying Company and Government providing for its accomplishment at a trifling cost, while the approaching completion of the railway from Rangoon to Mandalay, and the existence of fuel reserves no longer required, offer similar facilities for the immediate adoption of the remaining suggestions. These measures were unanimously approved by those consulted in Burma and are supported by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal; they are as desirable on financial as on general grounds, and I hope that they may be carried into effect as expeditiously as possible. Further facilities may, in my opinion, be afforded for emigration by the advance to Beharis, under certain conditions, of the amount of their passage-money from Calcutta to Rangoon, and by importing labourers for employment on large public works; but on these points there is some difference of opinion, and it may be desirable to await a more opportune moment for their discussion.

THE ADJOURNED SPECIAL GENERAL MEETING

of the Commissioners of the Town of Calcutta
WILL BE HELD AT THE TOWN HALL,
on Thursday, the 17th January 1889, at 3 P. M., when the business left undisposed of at the Special General Meeting held on the 31st January will be brought forward.

At the close of the Adjourned Special General Meeting,

A SPECIAL MEETING will be held to sanction the application of Messrs. George Henderson & Co. for renewal of license for Jute Godowns at Nos. 42 and 43, Doorga Churn Mookerjee's Street.

JOWN COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.

NOTICE.

It is hereby notified for general information that a Convocation of the University of Calcutta for conferring degrees will be held at the Senate House, College Square, on Saturday, the 19th January, at 3 P. M.

Graduates of the University in academic costume are admissible, on presenting themselves at the Senate House, at 2 P. M.

P. K. RAY, D.Sc., Registrar.
Senate House, the 31st Dec. 1888.

THE SILVER JUBILEE OF THE MAHOMEDAN LITERARY SOCIETY.

The Society having completed a career of a Quarter of a Century, will hold its Twenty-Fifth Annual Conversation, at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 28th January 1889, at 9 P.M.

ABDOOL LUTEEF,
Secretary.

JEYES' DISINFECTANTS:

The best and cheapest Antiseptics,
Doodorizers and Cleansers.

Jejes' Perfect Purifier

supersedes Carbolic and other Disinfectants, being much more efficacious, non-poisonous,
non-corrosive, harmless in use, and cheaper.
Prevents contagion by destroying its cause.
Instantly removes bad smells. It is an almost unfailing cure for Eczema and other Skin
Diseases; and is the best known Insecticide.
Can be had in the various forms of Liquid,
Powder, Soap and Ointment.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

prevents infection by destroying its cause, killing the very germs of contagious diseases.
It removes instantly all noxious smells, not by temporarily disguising them (as is often the case), but by chemical combination, substituting instantaneously for a poisonous a pure and healthy atmosphere, and thoroughly eradicating the evil.

Agents:—DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co. "Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "MYSORE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 18th inst., and on Tuesday the 15th idem the Steamer "OUDH" will leave Calcutta for Cachar.

All cargo for shipment by either of the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godowns at Juggannauth Ghat the day previous to the vessels leaving Calcutta.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri
daily immediately on arrival of the mails from
Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S.
Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sundays and Thursdays, and Debrooghur on Mondays and Fridays.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi. Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Locketts, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelsmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutta, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

NOW READY.

The Report of the 3rd Indian National Congress, held at Madras during the last week of 1887.

Price Re. 1 including postage. Apply to M. V. Charriar, 100, Mount Road, Madras.

READY

Price	Post free Rs. 6.
Cloth Gift	Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound	Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Utkoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINION OF THE PRESS.

It is many years since I first met, and some years since I last met, Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee, editor of the Reis and Rayyet (Prince and Peasant), and an author of high repute among the kindly, as well as acute and intellectual, people of Bengal. One of the real misfortunes of India was, and still is, Lord Macaulay's picture of the Bengalee. The picture true perhaps as regards Nuncomar and many Bengalees, is not accurate as representation of the people generally, taking them as an Englishman may find them if he looks fairly. If they had been unfaithful, the sad story of the Mutiny had been vastly sadder; and, apart from the Mutiny, many Englishmen could give individual instances of Bengalee faithfulness almost unique in history, taking all the circumstances of our relation to India into account. The Bengalee is generally eager for knowledge of all kinds, and is often both courageous in the expression of his opinions, and gifted to a remarkable degree with the power to express those opinions with force and precision. Mr. Fawcett once told me that an unprepared speech made, on his behalf, during an election, by a young Hindoo, surpassed, in force as well as eloquence, any unprepared speech he ever had heard made by any member of the House of Commons, if four or five members of the House were excepted.

Among these Bengalees there is a small body of men—small for that large province—who are, ironically or otherwise termed "Young Bengal." Some of them are no longer young, but grave and aged; some have, in the course of years, been highly distinguished for their public services and their scientific and other attainments. Some have at times been misrepresented, and their language misinterpreted, so that on its return to them it has amazed none more than themselves. Nothing of this has been done by the really great administrators of India. That it has been done, however, cannot be denied.

In the forefront of this little band is the author of this book of travels, Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee: a writer of high repute, as I have said, also an administrator, as the reader will see from the title-page to this book. A keener, yet a kinder satirist, one might seek for and not find. His use of the English language has astonished many an educated Englishman; and the quality of his reading is shown by his marvellous power of quotation; not merely from authors like Shakespeare, and Milton, and Macaulay, and men eminent in science, but from out-of-the-way old ballads, and little-known old pamphlets, in the application of which he leaves one wondering—first, how he obtained the productions at all, and secondly, how, having obtained them, he learned to apply them so appositely to the subjects which he intends them to illustrate.

Passing from the author to his book, we shall, perhaps, first of all be attracted to the work of the administrator. He comes upon a milkman's village, on which he finds fastened the grip of a Court favourite. He unloosens the grip, and re-settles the village, in the double interest of Prince and Peasant. And all the time he sees everything. The poor people bathing on the rivers' banks, have his genial and kindly, if also at times, what a Scotchman would call, his "pawky" notice. A "fair maid of Sonargam" attracts his attention by the gracefulness with which she carries a vessel of water from the river; and, though the fair maid and he are divided by race and faith (she is Musulman), she has his full meed of praise. Indeed, it must be admitted—and he will not be offended with me for saying so—that he never meets with a fair face, without at least giving evidence of the fact that he has eyes to see and a heart to comprehend.

Of his wide and generous sympathies, much might be said, and still leave much more to say. He meets a missionary on the river, and evidently is inclined, in writing his notes, to pass a joke on the subject. He nips it, however, in the bud, and contents himself with saying, "So now is preaching here, that the simple people said the padre had been singing in the street." He meets Catholic and Protestant missionaries on shipboard, and chuckles over their disputes, while he astonishes them by his command of the English language, and even by his knowledge of the Bible—a knowledge, I may add, which is evident in many of his writings.

A parrot falls overboard, and is drowned in its cage, to his great distress, which is not however paraded. He says: [Extract.]

These are not the words of a Christian, but of a Hindoo.

Again, he has a faithful ugly dog, whose name is Tom, and whose glory it once was to quark, with a noble independence, at some very dignified Sahibs. Our author is compelled to leave Tom behind; and here is his farewell: [Extract.]

I think this is a very fine passage, and one that will draw the author very close to the great heart of humanity, wherever the words are read. Could anything be finer than the testimony to the two foreign "gentlemen," ending with the "Bengalee pariah, my poor Tom"? Not the pariah merely, but the pariah dog. The passage is worthy of the author, and of the great mercifulness of the land that bore him.

Whoever reads this book must be prepared further to find bold and manly language. The author is no flatterer of John Bull, though he gives John his due, and admits that India owes him a great debt. Here is one passage relating to foreign fruits: [Extract.]

Among the sketches of country—word-pictures—the reader will find some exceedingly pretty, and all the more valuable in that they are taken from a standpoint purely Indian; not English. Where an English artist's mind would be filled with European ideas, the mind of this gifted Eastern artist is filled with a class of ideas totally different, yet equally instructive and certainly not less subtle and far-reaching.

On the eve of one of his journeys, our author was placed in a dilemma of a kind not unknown to travellers in India, but not on that account the less stupid. He wished to go by a particular boat, add took time by the forelock for that purpose. The fare was at first stated as 90 rupees, to pay which he offered "a new crisp, fresh British India" note for 100 rupees. "It was," he adds, "fresh from the Currency Office, and had been received only the day before from another Government department." The rest of the story is thus told: [Extract.]

The humour of the little sketch is worth something. I can fancy the author laughing even in his dismay; for he can laugh well at others, and equally well at himself. I shall only venture on one more passage; and I give it as showing the spirit of the man who dares to call his newspaper Prince and Peasant. He desired to return to his home in Bengal, and to bid adieu, for a time at least, to Independent Tipperah, where he had been located "some two years." He received the Maharajah's permission to return home; but still he could not get away. [Extract.]

There is, I think, a sound lesson in this passage; the lesson of the immense value of courtesy and urbanity in the relations of rulers and ruled. There is a great deal in that sentence, "We serve flesh and blood." The best administrator in India is not always the ablest, the man whose plans are the wisest as plans; but the man who, with plans or without them, gives confidence to the people, and confidence not merely in his justice, but also in his consideration and forbearance. A clever man once said that the art of success in India is the art of giving good dinners. It may be so; but the peril is great—the peril of debt; and in any case the art has its limits, and its natural collapse. Even dinners and champagne pall in the end. But there is one art that never fails—the art of true courtesy; of that courtesy which, being natural, is not affected by any whim or caprice, either of the person who possesses it, or of any one with whom he has relations.

In bidding farewell to this little book, I once more recall, as I easily and very vividly can, the author's kindly face and gentle voice, as known to me many years ago. I see him, as I see Baboo Kisto Das Pal, Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar, and some others, including a much-abused editor of the Amrita Bazar Patrika; and I feel and say, with all earnestness and sincerity, that among these are men whom the Government of India would be wise to recognise and winning entirely to its side. They are men on whom no really generous word true as well as generous ever is thrown away. I have compared them at times with men of kindred occupations at home, and I think that they are as a rule by far the truer gentlemen in good manners, and often in very much more than mere manners. May the great God, whose sacred Name they use as that of the Father of all, guide them to a nobler destiny than any they yet have known, and with them, and by them, bless their native land!

JAMES ROUTLEDGE.

—The Indian Magazine, Mar. 1888.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."*All who suffer find sure relief fromThe Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the torture of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta, Smith Street & Co. R Scott Thompson & Co. and Balgathe & Co. Limited.

*Price by post 8½ annas.ASRUKANA

A Collection of poems in Bengali by SRIMATI GIRINDRAMOHINI DASSY
(Author of Kabitar, Bharat Kusum.)

Astukana is a collection of poetical pieces of singular pathos and beauty of expression. It is a series of mournful songs that the reader is here presented with and they must touch a sympathetic cord in every heart that can feel. There is a singular appropriateness in the title of the work, and in its pious dedication to the memory of the husband of the fair writer—The Indian Nation.

The authoress is not unknown to Bengali readers. She has already published two or three poems by which she is favourably known, but between these poems and this is a difference that hardly admits of being measured.

This is poetry in life

We have read Sumati Girindra Mohini's poems in a reverential spirit. The poems are all of a lyrical description. The lyric is soft, sweet and tender, but awfully strong.

The tone of the poems is inexpressibly gentle, inexpressibly pure, and inexpressibly tender and affectionate. It is the tone of a world mother.

Bengal should be proud of this poem—The Calcutta Review.

Apply at the Bee Press,

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Calcutta.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,

(Opposite the Police Court.)

THE CALCUTTA

HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY,

THE

EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE

DISPENSARY IN ASIA

OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,

WHICH

INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE

TRADE ININDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY

and maintains to this day

THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF

THE

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

*No EXTRA CHARGE.BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

*In Pamphlet, Price 4 annasor 6 copies for a Rupee,ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENTTHE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS. They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incident to Females of all ages. For children and the aged they act precisely.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment: OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

TEA!TEA!*TEA!

Cheapest & Best,
SUPPLIED BY
THE

INDIAN TEA SUPPLY CO."LIMITED."

In packets of 1 oz., 2 oz. and 4 oz. each from 3 pice only and upwards.

Note the Low Price.A Packet of Tea for 3 pice!*Important News for India,

WHERE FEVERS AND CHOLERA
REIGN SUPREME.

A RECENT TRAVELLER ON THE Chinese Coast found that District remarkably FREE FROM TYPHOID FEVER and CHOLERA. He soon discovered the cause. The people there do not drink cold water from tanks or wells, often extremely impure, but keep a pan of water constantly boiling, into which from time to time they drop a little Tea, and when thirsty THEY DRINK HOT TEA! If the weak and adulterated Teas of China can do this, what may not the pure and strong Teas of India be expected to effect?

Also in tins ½ lb to 10 lbs of various qualities to suit all tastes.

Ask for the Indian Tea Supply Company's Teas.

We have Agents all over the Country, but want more.

Managing Agents:

LYALL MARSHALL & CO.,
4, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION,
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,

2, Ukkur Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta

REIS & RAYYET(PRINCE AND PEASANT)*WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society
RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly " 7
Quarterly " 4
Monthly Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 5, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager, and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" or "Reis & Rayyet,"

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. {

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1889.

} No. 357

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

THE SOUNDS OF INDUSTRY.

I LOVE the banging hammer,
The whirring of the plane,
The crashing of the busy saw,
The creaking of the crane,
The ringing of the anvil,
The grating of the drill,
The clattering of the turning-lathe,
The whirling of the mill,
The buzzing of the spindle,
The rattling of the loom,
The puffing of the engine,
And the fan's continuous boom—
The clipping of the tailor's shears,
The driving of the awl—
The sounds of BUSY LABOR,
I love, I love them all.

I love the ploughman's whistle,
The reaper's cheerful song,
The drover's oft-repeated shout,
As he spurs his stock along ;
The bustle of the market man,
As he hies him to the town ;
The halloo from the tree-top,
As the ripening fruit comes down.
The busy sound of thrashers,
As they clean the ripened grain,
And the huskers' joke, and mirth, and glee,
'Neath the moonlight on the plain,
The kind voice of the dairyman,
The shepherd's gentle call—
These sounds of active industry,
I love, I love them all.

For they tell my longing spirit
Of the earnestness of life,
How much of all its happiness
Comes out of toil and strife ;
Not that toil and strife that fainteth,
And murmureth all the way—
Not the toil and strife that groaneth
Beneath the tyrant's sway ;
But the toil and strife that springeth
From a free and willing heart,
A strife which ever bringeth
To the striver all his part.

O! there is a good in labor,
If we labor but aright,
That gives vigor to the day-time,
And a sweeter sleep at night,

A good that bringeth pleasure,
Even to the toiling hours ;
For duty cheers the spirit
As the dew revives the flowers.

FRANCES D. GAGE.

THE BLIND BOY.

IT was a blessed summer day,
The floweret bloomed, the air was mild,
The little birds poured forth their lay,
And every thing in nature smiled.

In pleasant thought I wandered on
Beneath the deep wood's ample shade,
Till suddenly I came upon
Two children that had hither strayed.

Just at an aged birch-tree's foot
A little boy and girl reclined,
His hand in hers she kindly put,
And then I saw the boy was blind !

"Dear Mary," said the poor blind boy,
"That little bird sings very long,
Say, do you see him in his joy ?
And is he pretty as his song ?"

"Yes, Edward, yes," replied the maid,
"I see the bird on yonder tree ;"
The poor boy sighed, and gently said—
"Sister, I wish that I could see.

"The flowers, you say, are very fair,
And bright green leaves are on the trees,
And pretty birds are singing there,
How beautiful for one who sees !"

"Yet I the fragrant flower can smell,
And I can feel the green leaf's shade,
And I can hear the notes that swell
From these dear birds that God has made.

"So, sister, God is kind to me,
Though sight, alas ! he has not given ;
But tell me are there any blind
Among the children up in heaven ?"

"No, dearest Edward, there all see !
But wherefore ask a thing so odd ?"

"Oh ! Mary, he's so good to me,
I thought I'd like to look at God."

Ere long, disease his hand had laid
On that dear boy so meek and mild ;
His widowed mother wept, and prayed
That God would spare her sightless child.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

He felt the warm tears on his face,
And said, "Oh never weep for me!
I'm going to a bright, bright place,
Where, Mary says, I God shall see.

"And you'll come there, dear Mary, too,
And mother, when you get up there,
Tell Edward, mother, that 't is you,—
You know I never saw you here."

He spoke no more, but sweetly smiled,
Until the final blow was given,
When God took up that poor blind boy,
And opened first his eyes in heaven.

"KENNST DU DAS LAND," ETC.

AWAY with all jesting, sit procal! ye scorners,
I sing the land of tobacco about!
Of Gnadige Frauen, and Hoch Wohlgebornen,
Of Hamels Coteletten, and eke sauer kraut;
Where even the language can interdict joking,
Nor gleam of bright fancy can ever arouse
The brains that are torpid by hourly smoking,
Or inventing flat phrases to flatter fat Fraus;
Where men have no higher enjoyment than spitting,
Or lounging in gardens to sip sour wine;
And lady like pastimes are centred in knitting,
Or cooking fat messes adapted for swine;
Where age is like childhood, and childhood old-fashioned,
Where prising and twaddle are taken for sense;
Where even young manhood is never impassioned,
And the semblance of pleasantry deemed an offence.
The fancy-struck maiden— I hope I shan't kill her
By letting such treason escape from my hand;
But such is the country of Goethe and Schiller,
And such are the types of the famed Fatherland.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

Punch disposes of the great question, which is exercising the Indian Mirror and its satellites, with a conundrum. Why is Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji like the devil? Because he's not so black as he's painted.

ONE Harald Mulji Mackwana, by an advertisement in the Bombay Government Gazette, has cast away his native name altogether, and will henceforth call himself Herbert Maurice Dixon. This poor fellow who is ashamed of his parentage, will for all his efforts, be a Mokanna.

THE Americans not only earn but also spend. Nay, what is more to the purpose, they can give away without compunction. Their liberality is free like their boundless prairies. Look at Peabody! Look at Slater! Look at Daniel Hand! who has just given $1,000,000 for the education of the freedmen in the old slave States.

NATURE has supplied her own barometer. The "weather plant," first noticed by an Austrian savant, was tested by the Committee of the late Vienna Exhibition and found to report the weather correctly in 97 cases out of 100, for six months, 48 hours beforehand. The discoverer has offered to report the weather daily from his vegetable barometer to the various English newspapers.

LUN-YUEN PHUOCK, the redoubtable adversary of the French in Tonquin, died lately. He was appointed Viceroy of Tonquin by the Emperor of China, and after the peace with the French, retired to China where he obtained a command.

At a Durbar at Nowshehro Feroz, the Commissioner in Sind gave away some presents, more substantial than empty titles. Khan Bahadur Kadirdad Khan, in charge of a sub-division, received a rifle. This is a distinguished recognition in a land where the possession of arms by natives is penal. Rao Saheb Esardas Metharam, Special Inspector, Salt Department, was given a kinkhab and a lungi. A few Zemindars were also presented with lungis.

At Hohenmuth, in Bohemia, during a public performance of a strolling menagerie, a young female tamer named Bertha Bumgarten was torn to pieces by a Bengal tiger.

"She entered an empty cage, and the door of an adjoining cage was then opened to let a lion and a Bengal tiger enter. The lion walked on quietly: but the tiger, a ferocious beast, which had three times wounded its keepers, crouched in the doorway and showed temper. The girl lost nerve, cried for help, and slipped. As she did so the tiger made a spring, bit her on the shoulder, then seized her by the throat, literally rent her to pieces, and tossed her body about. Half the audience ran to the doors in horror, while the attendants tried to beat off the tiger by poking hot irons into the cage; but the girl was dead long before the animal was driven away. The lion seems to have been as much frightened as the human spectators, for he took no part in the carnage."

This Bertha Bumgarten is the third victim to the same tiger in the same Show. And yet these Shows are not prohibited!

MR. MARSDEN has sentenced a desperate villain of a Jehu to 3 months' hard labor, for refusing to hire out his conveyance and whipping his would-be fare, J. Bennett of the Mint, and for rash driving. According to a Police report in the Statesman,

"On New-year's day complainant sent his bearer for a carriage, and though accused was at the stand at the foot of the Hooghly Bridge, he refused to go. Complainant on hearing of this walked from the Mint to the spot, and accused again emphatically refused to hire out his conveyance, giving some frivolous excuse, on which complainant mounted the step. Immediately after accused whipped his horses and drove off, leaving complainant to stand on the step of the conveyance. While thus driving, accused commenced to whip complainant, whose hat was knocked off. He then resorted to the butt end of the whip, and again assaulted complainant, who bore marks of violence on the face, head, and body. As he came into Canning-street, accused drove so furiously that his conveyance came in contact with some materials on the road and capsized, causing complainant to fall on the road, and injure himself. Baboo Gopal Lal Seal appeared for accused and pleaded not guilty. The Charge having been satisfactorily proved, his worship sentenced accused to three months' hard labour."

Served right!

Native Public Opinion of Bombay begins the year, we are glad to observe, in, if not quite a new shape at any rate, an improved style of get-up, with new type and good paper and some increase of size. The matter is nearly all about the Congress, and not the newest and best of its kind. This is how our contemporary disposes of the charge of sedition:—

"But suppose for argument's sake, the aims and objects of the Congress were of a questionable character, how could Lord Dufferin himself whose beneficence at the St. Andrew's dinner at Calcutta seems to have got better of his otherwise sympathetic mind, propose a scheme of reform in our Legislative Councils to the Secretary of State? One of the local contemporaries seems to throw doubt upon this statement but the mention of the same scheme in the London Times is an evidence confirmatory of the statement. The existence of a proposal like the one we mention from Lord Dufferin himself is a standing protest against the charge of sedition against the Congress."

THE relations between the young Nawab of Sachin and his Administrator, Mr. Nannu Mia, have for some time been very unsatisfactory. Government is understood to have interfered. It is believed that Nannu Mia will be provided elsewhere and the Magistrate of the Chou-rasi Division of Surat will succeed him at Sachin.

THE Advocate of India learns on good authority, that, after the conclusion of the Crawford Commission, the Commissionership of the Central Division itself will be abolished, the work now done by it being redistributed.

MR. T. M. Gibbon has rejoined his permanent place in the Bettia Raj and taken over charge from Mr. W. E. Hudson.

THE Income tax is payable on the amount actually received, therefore, the Government of India has ruled that no tax is payable on the fines deducted from salaries, in other words, they are not to be taken into account in calculating the tax.

THE Syndicate of the Parisian Press have nominated the officers of their Bureau for the year 1889. M. Adrien Hébrard of the Temps is President, M. Edouard Hervé of the Soleil, Vice-president, M. Maunon of the Petit Journal, Treasurer, and M. Joseph Reinach of the Republique, Secretary.

THE French Government has appointed a Vice-Consul at Bushire in consequence of the opening of the river Karum for foreign navigation.

ACCORDING to the Statistische Monatschrift, the "illiterates" in the three Slavic States of Roumania, Servia and Russia are the greatest in number. In these 80 per cent. of the population are unable to read and write. Of the Latin-speaking races, Spain comes out foremost with 63 per cent., then follows Italy with 48, France and Belgium giving 15 per cent. Hungary numbers 43, Austria 39, Ireland 21, England 13, Holland 10, United States (white population) 8 and Scotland 7. In the purely Teutonic States, the "illiterates" are reduced to very poor percentage, namely, Switzerland 15 and the whole German Empire only one per cent.

WE reported last week the theft at Dr. Salzer's house. His loss was a gold watch and chain and two boxes containing Rs. 600 in currency notes. Of these, notes to the value of only Rs. 150 were recovered and the Police subsequently found Rs. 1,300 in the thief's house. What is the destination of this sum? The presumption is that it is stolen property, and there is only one person known who has a claim against the last possessor of this sum for Rs. 600.

THE following paragraph appears in many journals:--

"The Shah of Bokhara has, on the suggestion of Russia, recently constructed two regular cantonments for troops. One at Darwazai Nimazgah and the other at Bahaud Din. Hitherto there have been no fixed stations for troops in Bokhara, but the soldiers used to live at their own homes. All this is to be changed, and the barrack system has been introduced, and drill and discipline are taught by Russian officers."

That is a typical example of the ignorance of our journals and the carelessness with which they are conducted. Whatever the enterprise of the Press, the value of the news purveyed by it, to say nothing of its reflections, is reduced to a minimum by the absence in the conductors of acquaintance with the rudiments of geography and history. The above news may have been procured at considerable cost, and there may be truth as probability in it. But what confidence can be placed on the statements of a writer who speaks of the Shah in the connection?

By a Presidential decree, importation of saccharin and all compounds of it have been interdicted in France and Algeria.

THE Supreme Government has asked the opinions of the local Governments for an alternative standard for the University Entrance Examination.

THE benefits of a foreign civilization are not enjoyed without a heavy cost. Thus English education has clearly blunted the edge of vivacity of the nation, until its most eminent publicists openly express disappointment with a book of the class of Eothen, The Crescent and the Cross, Victor Hugo's Rhine and About's Greece, for not dealing with the burning political and social topics of the hour. The Congress movement seems to have the same benumbing melancholy effect on our people. It has led to a good deal of spouting and literary activity, but not of a kind to be proud of. In fact, it has developed decided symptoms of the cacoethes loquendi and the cacoethes scribendi. In the South, the epidemic has taken a metrical turn. The organ of the Congress there is, from time to time, filled with the outpourings of the sufferers who are probably regarded with the interest with which patients under hysterics and convulsions have sometimes, even in Europe, been treated. Sometime ago, we reproduced some specimens for the delectation of our readers. The friends of the Congress who thought that the verse did not come up to this standard of the perfection of the great movement, actually accused us of having, in our mischievous way, manufactured the pieces, without for a moment reflecting how far the feat was above us. But these are evidently the true salt of the Congress earth. The genuine Congressists are above unworthy suspicions. They at once recognize their own. Accordingly, we find the Allahabad Indian Union, the out and out Congress organ of Raja Rampal Singh, has conveyed the odes of WELCOME TO MESSRS. EARDLY NORTON AND WOOMESH CHUNDER BONNERJEA, BARRISTERS-AT-LAW, from our issue of December 8, not in Pistol's sense, but honourably, with full acknowledgment, with our intermediate characterization and final remark.

THE robber and murderer Gustave Bacquet has been condemned, by a French Jury at the Seine Assizes, to penal servitude for life. He is only 18 years of age, and murdered his employer Madame Ploq de Berthier, and attempted the life of M. Cavallo, the organist of St. Germain des Pres, whom he wanted to rob by first cutting out the poor fellow's tongue. He was in constant request by artists as a model for beauty of the angelic order. How deceitful are appearance! The charming dandy little Kal Nagini is the deadliest of the reptile world.

MR. W. C. FORD, of Washington, U. S., is collecting the letters and other writings of George Washington.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE return of the Chinese Amban, on failure of his mission, has been intercepted for the moment. He was to have started the day before yesterday, but the night before last he received a telegraphic order from the Peking Government to await the arrival of an English official of the Chinese Government who has been deputed to assist in the negotiation. He is expected early next month. Meanwhile, however, Sir Henry Durand returns to Calcutta to-morrow. Such is the report of the Englishman's special. Is Peking connected by electric wire with the Himalayan frontiers?

AFTER the last Revolution in Nepal, the new Government despatched an embassy to the Suzerain China at Peking. The party has returned at last at Katmandoo, after a year's stay at the capital of the Celestial Empire. Besides the usual presents to China, they took with them a lot of merchandise of indigenous produce for which they did not find a ready sale. The most valuable of their cargo was Nepal opium, but even this did not sell well. And why not? Was the Nepal drug of inferior quality? Or, was the Cheefoo Convention in the way? The Government of India which depends so much on this article, should inquire.

AFTER an adjournment for a month, the Parnell Commission resumed business on the 15th. It commenced with the trial of Mr. W. O'Brien, M. P., proprietor of the "United Ireland" for contempt of the court. In a letter in that paper Mr. O'Brien had called the Commission "Forgeries Commission" and otherwise attacked its conduct. The Parnellite denied that he was personally disrespectful to the Judges, but would not withdraw any portion of the letter. After taking time to consider the order, Sir James Hannen censured the letter but let off the writer. A wise step, as it was a manly one on the part of the journalist to stick to his phrase. Such mild literary scorn as is implied in the nickname is no legitimate subject of judicial complaint, though it may be a source of annoyance, more or less, according to temperament.

IN view doubtless of coming complications in Europe, Belgium is settling her house in order. She is about to revolutionise her whole military system. The Belgian army is about 130,000 men. A Bill is ready for introduction in the present session of the Chamber for the establishment of universal obligatory service. By this means it is proposed to raise the effective force in time of war to 250,000 to 300,000 men and to reduce the number in peaceful times to 18,000, without any increase of the military budget. The success of the contemplated measure will certainly make Belgium a Power of consequence, whose alliance will be worth counting by the great states. Unfortunately, she is geographically placed at a disadvantage, without natural defences, exposed to attack on all sides, and surrounded by powerful neighbours who covet her rich country with its teeming thrifty thriving and intelligent population. Under the proposed conscription, with a first class alliance, she may yet for long maintain her separate existence, until the inevitable absorption into the next nation with which she may develop the most social and political affinity. It were well for France and perhaps Europe too, if she could unite with her sister of the same tongue on her Northern frontier. That would more than compensate her for her losses on the Rhine and Eastern frontier. But there is no immediate prospect of any such windfall in her favour. In the first place, the Belgians are still as sturdy in their self-consciousness as Cæsar found them or Goldsmith in the last century described them. They are full of that love of independence so characteristic of small states. At the same time, the French have lost character. Finally, Germany will not permit of any such strengthening of her old rival and now victim, and Germany is mistress of Europe. After the incredible folly of France in continually threatening her, Germany cannot be blamed for her jealousy of French aggrandisement.

It is said that Mr. Moreton Frewen lately telegraphed to the Nizam for permission to represent His Highness at the Congress, and that the consent was given, but the managers of the Congress refused to allow Mr. Moreton Frewen to attend. They were afraid it was a dodge to discredit the movement in England as trying to intrigue with the Native Princes. This is a poor compliment to an accomplished English gentleman of good connections, whose influence in the Deccan has been for the best. It was he whose persistent efforts forced the frauds in connection with the Mining Company upon public notice, until a Parliamentary Committee was appointed. Such a man was entitled to a better turn than a gratuitous insult. Mr. George Yule might just as well have been suspected of a conspiracy, only that he was of the Doyen's choice. Or, was it that Mr. Frewen, by reason of his relationship to Lord Randolph Churchill, belongs to the opposite party in English politics to that which the Congress is courting?

WE condole with Mr. Nanabhai Haridas on his sad bereavement. In the death of Bai Kamalagauri, not only has the Hon'ble Justice lost an only daughter on whom he doted, but society has been deprived of a jewel. An enlightened Hindu gentleman himself, the father had given his daughter the best education. She was fully worthy of the care bestowed on her. An elegant scholar in her vernacular Gujarati, she was acquainted with both Sanskrit and English. She had learnt science too, and was well grounded in the principles of biology and chemistry. She has been taken away from this world after she completed her teens, leaving only an infant son for the solace of her parent.

THE Municipal Elections are on us. The Municipality has published the Franchise Roll as laid down in the law—of persons qualified to vote by virtue of their ownership of any land or house or of occupation of any house assessed at Rs. 300 and upwards, or of payment of Rs. 25 and upwards for trade license. There are other persons competent to vote, but they must apply for enrolment of their names. The published list is admittedly defective. Other information vouchsafed will be found in the following Notice of the Chairman dated the 14th January 1889:—

"In publishing this list under Section 20 Act II. (B. C.) of 1888, the Chairman takes the opportunity of reminding intending candidates and electors that as the register of owners and occupiers is at present much more imperfect than it may be hoped, that it will be, after the new Act has been some time in force, the list necessarily contains many names of voters who are dead or have long since ceased to own or occupy the properties against which their names showed.

Intending candidates or their agents should, so far as they may be in a position to do so, object to these names within the next 15 days under Section 21, so that the final list of voters published under Section 22 on or about the 28th February, may be more correct. Persons whose names are omitted, though legally qualified to vote, should also apply for inclusion of their names within the same period.

Voters whose qualification arises from their owning and also occupying houses assessed at Rs. 150 to Rs. 300, are specially reminded that the present list does not purport to shew their names. It is for them to come forward within 15 days, and apply in writing to have their names added to the list.

The same remark applies to voters whose qualification is due to their having paid in all Rs. 24 as rates and taxes. It is for them to apply and shew how the amount is made up, bringing with them, if possible, the receipts for such rates and taxes.

All claims to the admission of new names to the list or objections to names already in the list, will be heard ward by ward on dates, which will be fixed hereafter when the number of such objections is known, and the hour and date of hearing for each ward will be duly notified in all places in which this list is published.

A copy of this list may be obtainable at the Municipal Office on payment of one anna."

It is a delicate subject for us to speak upon, but much inconvenience has been caused, and even absolute mischief by the general Election and the new conditions under which they are to be held, not being duly advertised.

WHILE the most desperate and costly efforts are being made in Australia, to uproot the plague of rabbits from land, in the Mother country, under game laws passed and maintained by a legislature of landlords and would be landlords, they do not permit starving men to live by reducing by one the worshipful rabbits preserved for sport by zemindars, which are such a nuisance to the neighbouring farmers whose cultivation they overrun. At Woolwich, lately, three wretches were prosecuted. The poor fellows did not deny the cruel impeachment. But, then, one was out of work, another had eight children, and the third had ten boys and girls. It had been a hard struggle with them to live, and they had been tempted to try to catch a few rabbits, which were running about by hundreds, to the great injury of the adjoining farmers, that they might give themselves and their families some food. The plea was so true that the prosecutor did not press for a heavy penalty. Notwithstanding, the Magistrate Mr. Marsham fined them 5s. each, with 2s. costs, or seven days. As there was no charitable soul to offer the guinea, the three men were taken to prison. There at least they were sure of a dinner for themselves. Their families were left to starve at home. In no Asiatic country, under an indigenous system, is such a mockery of justice possible.

AT Ahmedabad, they have formed a "Guzerat Ladies' Club" "to promote social intercourse between Europeans and the people of India, to the steady improvement, if possible, of the latter." The Club already numbers 46 members. The Committee is composed of Mrs. Doig, president, Mrs. Moscardi, treasurer, Mrs. Morgan Thomas, secretary, and Mrs. Dalal, Mrs. Manilal Chotalal and Miss Cornelia Sorabjee, B. A., members. The Club would not let the grass grow under its feet, but must take immediate measures for giving effect to its views. It has already begun its operations for the great object of the promotion of social intercourse between the two races, to the steady improvement of the natives, if possible, and the certainty of converting our Bais into Beebees. It has been resolved that "to this end classes be formed and instruction be given in (a) English, advanced and elementary, (b) needle work, fancy and plain, cutting out, (c) drawing, and (d) games."

THE Burdwan suit maturing in the High Court, Original Side, has brought out the fact that the costs of the Miller prosecution of the Statesman for defamation have been charged to the Raj estate under the Court of Wards. In justice to the estate itself, the Board should also sanction the costs of the defence.

MISS MANNING has drawn her programme in Calcutta to a close. After a stay of three weeks, she leaves tomorrow for Lahore. She stayed the whole period with Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Roy, with the exception of a few days that she had been abducted by the Alis, apparently to make political capital of her.

BABOO Nilmoney Dey, the Head Assistant of the Registration Department, who was dismissed for corruption by the Bengal Government, has been taken back to service. On appeal by the Baboo, the Government of India did not fully approve of the action of the local Government, and ordered his reinstatement. The Baboo is not to be allowed to resume his old place, but has been provided for in the Board of Revenue on a reduced pay of Rs. 200. He loses Rs. 100 in the pay.

WITH the retirement of Mr. R. M. Towers, Mr. J. F. Stevens, District and Sessions Judge, Gya, gets a lift to the first grade of District and Sessions Judges from the 1st November 1888, Mr. B. L. Gupta, Officiating District and Sessions Judge, Furreedpore, fills the place in the second grade vacated by Mr. Towers, and the Hon'ble Syud Ameer Hossein is confirmed in the post of paid Presidency Magistrate in which he had been hitherto officiating for Mr. Gupta. The Syud is now safe and free for higher game. Was he not to have been translated to the High Court bench? The Englishman once mentioned him for a District Judgeship.

THE Dacca Prakash reports the conversion of a respectable Brahman to Islam in Dacca. His Hindu name is Manoranjan Ganguli, but he is now a Mahomed with some other Mahomedan surname, of course. Why not Mahomed Ganguli, as converts to Christianity are Peter Bose, Paul Ghose, and so forth? We see that the new Mussulman is bent on forcing his Hindu wife out of her creed to accept him and Islam into the bargain. As she is naturally averse to give up her religion, and live with him, Mahomed ne Manoranjan Ganguli has actually filed a suit in the court of the Second Munsiff against the poor lady, Srimati Poornasashi Debya, for restitution of conjugal rights. No right-minded man can sympathise with him. He ought certainly to have given her time instead of being so precipitate. Time might have revived her love for her lord, crushed for the moment by his extraordinary step in forsaking his creed and society and home and friends. Her loneliness might have conquered her resolution against sacrificing her soul.

ALAS for Cashmere! Here is a straw showing the direction of the wind. Orders have come from St. Petersburg for a supply of the Guide to Cashmere advertised in an Indian paper. Thereupon, "We shall probably hear," says our contemporary, "of more Russian visitors via Cashmere at no distant date." Not necessarily. The book may be required for the political and military departments, for strategic and other state purposes. The Russians may be contemplating a diversion in that quarter. The book might help them with information for a descent on India, through the passes to Cashmere and down the Valley.

At yesterday's sitting of the Supreme Legislative Council, the Finance Minister presented the report of the Select Committee on the Metal Tokens Bill to prohibit the making or issue by private persons of pieces of metal for use as money and the making of coins in resemblance or similitude of coins of Foreign States. The only non-official member who spoke on the report was the Hon'ble Mr. Steel. He wished the Bill had been wider in its scope. It only prohibited the manufacture and importation of unauthorized coin and the receipt of such coin by any local authority or railway administration, but not the ordinary circulation now in existence. He pointed out that the Bill does not redress the existing inconvenience, on the contrary, it may increase the inconvenience of the holders by shutting out the outlets. Here was touched the weakest point in the Bill. He therefore suggested the buying up of the unauthorized coins and substituting them by copper of Her Majesty's Mint, the cost of conversion not being prohibitive. In its present form, he considered the Bill as a palliative in preparation for a radical cure. Sir David Barbour replied. Government would be a loser by taking up the coins at their value, and more coin would be manufactured for Government to buy up. Besides, there are places where the Queen's coin is not in circulation, and it would indeed be a severe measure to prohibit the unauthorized coin altogether. The Bill wisely prohibits the manufacture only, leaving for a future period a more drastic measure, if found necessary. Sir Charles Elliot had only one word to add to the short discussion. In his investigation of the accounts of the Mints, on the part of the Finance Committee, he found that the gain to Government in the copper coinage was extremely small, almost infinitesimal and he doubted whether there would be any compensation to the Government from the circulation of its own coin in place of the coin to be suppressed.

The Finance Minister withdrew the Salt Duty Bill introduced by Mr. Westland to regulate the payment of duty on salt when there has been an alteration of the rate of duty payable thereon. Sir David at the same time signified his intention to bring in a general Bill to include other goods as well, letting the Council know that there was no proposition thereby to revive the import duties.

The next business, with which the Council closed for the month, was (after leave granted for the purpose) the introduction by Sir David Barbour of a Bill to amend the Sea Customs Act 1878 and the Indian Tariff Act 1882. The object of the Bill is fourfold. First,—to repeal the proviso to Sec. 37 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, which enacts that when the rate of duty or tariff-valuation (if any) applicable to any goods imported has been raised after the grant of port-clearance at the port of shipment, the rate and valuation applicable to such goods shall be, not the rate and valuation in force on the date on which the bill-of-entry thereof is delivered to the Customs-Collector under section 86 of the Act, but the rate and valuation in force on the date on which port-clearance at the port of shipment was granted. The proviso has seriously disturbed trade, causing heavy loss of revenue. It has no existence in the law of England or of any other country. Second—to make it clear that where, after goods liable to duty have been assessed and warehoused, the duty is repealed, the goods may be cleared from the warehouse for home consumption free of duty. Third—to introduce into India the rule enacted in 18 & 19 Vict., c. 97, s. 9, and continued in 39 & 40 Vict., c. 36, s. 20—enabling sellers and purchasers to add to or deduct from the contract-price, an equivalent to the duty or increase, or decrease or remission of duty of customs or excise imposed or ordered on any article after the making of any contract. Lastly—to define the expression "arms, ammunition and military stores," as used in the Indian Tariff Act, 1882, and to enable the Governor-General in Council to declare from time to time what articles are to be deemed to be "military stores" within the meaning of the Act.

FOR all its high education and readiness for revolution at the slightest pretext, the Continent is still eminently conservative. Thus enlightened Western Europe itself is not yet prepared to recognise the pretensions of women to share in the rougher business of life. For the first time, lately, in Belgium, appeared a lady before the Barreau, or society of the bar, equivalent to the Benchers in England, asking to be admitted as an advocate. Miss Popelin, such is the lady's name, is a native of Brussels, of about 31 years of age. She was entered at the University of Brussels, where she very brilliantly passed her examinations. Having consecrated the best years of her youth to the study of the law, she at last obtained her diploma of Doctor in Law. Presented to the Barreau by one of the Committee of the Belgian Bar, Mr. Gaillery, she maintained before that body with energy and well a good thesis. Her cause having been rejected in the first instance, it was taken up and defended with spirit by Mr. Gaillery. The Court, however, decided against Miss Popelin, and thus, after all, she was not admitted as an advocate. Nearly three hundred years ago, Shakespeare showed the effectiveness of a forensic address delivered by a lady, though disguised in the garb of a man. In France, the authentic case of Eloisa had still earlier proved the female capacity for hard studies. Nevertheless, women are not there admitted to the professions. In India, the British are more go-ahead than at home, and just as we enjoy advantages which others had to acquire with their blood, our ladies have been admitted to privileges of education and employment without the preliminary of a tedious Woman's Rights agitation. Up to this, our enterprising girls are all going in for medicine. Is it not time enough for a diversion in another field? Why should not some of the charming Ghoses and Boses try the Law, and appear as advocates in our Courts? Surely, they would be more welcome, if only as a variety and an ornament, than the rougher namesakes. The Age of Chivalry is not so wholly gone that they will want briefs to display their powers. And once they get the chance, they are sure to command juries without eloquence and win judges by a smile. The time is ripe for the novelty. There is indeed a crying want. The bench is human enough, we hope, and the hideous male bar is abusing its monopoly. We can think of no other plan to put down the irrepressible Woodroffe. Hurrah for the girl Counsel!

WEDNESDAY was a special night at the Emerald. The house was crowded. It was an all-round patronage night—of the Bench and the Bar as well as the platform and the counter. The Bench was represented in the person of Mr. Justice Macpherson. Messrs. Woodroffe, Bonnerjee, the younger Ghose and others of the Bar were there, either in the house or in the refreshment room. For Hon'ble Mr. Steel and Mr. Yule both represented European Commerce, while the latter is the now famous President of the Indian Congress. There were other Europeans besides. They all enjoyed themselves as well as they could, without understanding the language, sitting out the first two of the three pieces put on the boards, drawing, at the end of the first, fresh inspiration by a welcome visit to the green-room. It was a night indeed, for the third piece must have extended to the smallest hours.—Tonight, the Hon'ble Mr. Scoble goes.

WE have no time this week to notice the Convocation of the Calcutta University. We shall only mention that the Viceroy was there and spoke, the Vice-Chancellor reading the convocation address. Sir Conner Petheram was better prepared this time. The lucky son-in-law was at his best. As Registrar, he had freely distributed cards of admission, but before the appointed hour he kept strict watch at the door, apparently not to admit any who was not known to himself or his or was not related to any on whom he depended for his power and pelf and continuance in place.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—These remedies are unequalled throughout the world for bad legs, wounds, foul sores, bad breasts, and ulcers. Used according to direction given with them there is no wound, bad leg, or ulcerous sore, however obstinate or long standing, but will yield to their healing and curative properties. Many poor sufferers who have been patients in the large hospitals under the care of eminent surgeons, and have derived little or no benefit from their treatment have been thoroughly cured by Holloway's Ointment and Pills. For glandular swellings, tumours, "piles," and diseases of the skin there is nothing that can be used with so much benefit. In fact, in the worst forms of disease, dependent upon the condition of the blood, these medicines, used conjointly, are irresistible.

THE New Year's Fellows of the Calcutta University are :—

Deputy Surgeon-General A. H. Hilson, M.D.; W. King, Esq., B.A., D.Sc., F.G.S.; C. E. Buckland, Esq., B.A.; Shams-ul-Ulama Shaik Mahmud Jilani; J. H. Apjohn, Esq., M.A., M.I.C.E.; G. W. Küchler, Esq., B.A.; Babu Protap Chunder Mozumdar; C. Little, Esq., M.A.; J. C. Bose, Esq., B.A., B.Sc.; Babu Srinath Dass; Babu Ashotosh Mukhapadhyaya, M.A., F.R.A.S., F.R.S.E.; Babu Gonesh Chundra Chundra; Moulavi Muhammad Abdur Rawuf.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1889.

PROGRESS IN SOUTHERN AND WESTERN INDIA.

GOVERNOR REAY'S LAST TOUR.

ON the 9th of this month, the Governor of Bombay returned to his capital, after a short tour in the Southern part of his jurisdiction. It was a hurried business visit, replete with interest. His Excellency had an opportunity of seeing with his own eyes and hearing on the spot with his own ears, the great changes taking place in the provinces. It must have delighted his liberal heart to see the evidences of activity and growing intelligence and material prosperity all around him in the country through which he passed. We wish our people in the North and East would study the record of these Governors' journeys, if they could not go to the places themselves. Nothing like a personal inspection, and the object is well worth the sacrifice required. We in these parts have no idea of the vast strides our brethren in the West and the South are taking. We talk of progress in Bengal, but we only talk; there they do. Our very Bengal idea of progress is a poor contemptible weakling beside the robust manlier model of the active South and the busy West. We are immersed in the pursuit of words and phrases; book-knowledge is our be all and end all. Hence, we are content to acquire degrees and diplomas—our highest ambition is to wear the decoration of some Order or another. We vegetate on our titles of honour and starve on our academic distinctions. Our country remains still a virgin field untouched. It is a reservoir of boundless possibilities untapped, unless by the stranger. We have neither discovered any new resources nor developed any old resources. We are not ashamed to crowd the old professions. We are a nation of clerks, school-masters, lawyers, doctors, and road engineers. We are political, if distributing a moderate share of literary and political talent between a numerous press and a number of imperfect or make-believe societies is to be political. Nevertheless, our best work is literary—our proudest achievement the creation of a respectable indigenous literature. How much superior are our brethren in the distance! Madras is extremely handicapped, yet she has done her best in the very teeth of Nature, and Bombay, favoured by situation and climate, has done wonders. Her people have developed a truly European energy. They have made the most of their advantages, utilising their knowledge and opportunities as children of the soil, until they successfully compete with Europeans.

At Dharwar, the Governor was received with the usual address from the municipality, which was read by the Chairman Rao Bahadoor Trimalrao Venkateah. His Excellency's reply was translated into Canarese by the Secretary. Notwithstanding his detention till a late hour, at a party given by the leading official inviting the residents to meet the Governor,

Lord Reay was up early following morning to inspect the jail, the hospital, and the lunatic asylum. Fifty Burman prisoners constitute the speciality in the personnel of the jail. The visitor was charmed with the mad establishment. He gave the genial Irishman at its head what must have sounded a rather strange compliment, when he said that Dr. McConaghy was just the man for the place or something to the same effect. Before breakfast, he had also seen the mission-house of the quiet philanthropic Basel brotherhood, and joined divine service. After breakfast, the local magnates received each the honour of a formal interview. First came their Highnesses Sir Desai of Sawantwari and the Nawab of Savanour, whose visits were returned in the afternoon. Then followed Rao Bahadoor Trimalrao Venkateah and Mr. Sorabji Byabatti, Chairmen of the Dharwar and Hoobli Corporations respectively, Mr. Rodda, Deputy Inspector of Schools, and Principal Venkatta Katti, of the Training College. This was too much activity of the world worldly to stuff the Sabbath with, and probably Lord Reay felt it. So he had divine service in the evening at church before he consigned himself to chew the cud of penitential reflections till the kindly approach of "tired Nature's sweet restorer."

The partial rest of Sunday was more than compensated for the next day, when the Governor went to the College, which he thoroughly ransacked as it were, not only going over every part and into every corner of the buildings and offices, in and out, but even entering into conversation with the students about their comforts and conveniences, their position and prospects, their studies and aims in life. He not only examined the boys but carefully inspected the school books. The comic element in this tour on business was supplied by the strange apparition of a huge mammoth in a tight imitation bearskin all over, with dogskin gloves lined with lambwool, looking much like an Esquimaux in search of the North Pole, which His Excellency discerned in passing down the quadrangle. He made bold to beckon it. On nearer view, the mystery evaporated like camphor. It was neither ghost nor mammoth, but, in the classical language of the Times of India's Special, a "stout party" only, who was the teacher of gymnastics. Lord Reay got some work and amusement out of this queer being, who put some of his class through some interesting exercises, and finally put his own great corporeal mass into some impossible situations. Before leaving, the Governor made a short speech to the students, which was interpreted by the Principal, on their duties and responsibilities. He reminded them that they would be the teachers of a new generation, and appealed to them to make themselves worthy of such high vocation. Some might be journalists, he thought, and he impressed upon such the bounden duty of careful inquiry and absolute veracity, even though they were to write anonymously. From the normal college, the Governor went to the High School. The School was closed for the holidays, still the Governor insisted on going through the deserted buildings. The next object of inspection was the girls' school, a flourishing institution containing a number of interesting scholars. Here, Mr. Rodda did the honors. In his speech, alluding to the help in needle work, &c. given by the Basel missionaries, his Lordship thought that the time was come to have a normal institution for the raising of women school-masters for girls. Many years ago, in 1867, on this side, the same point was pressed in a lecture before the Bethune Society by Sir John Phear. On that occasion, we were amused to see what appeared a self-evident proposition to the assembled Indian audience, utterly condemned by the late lamented Rev. C. H. A. Dall, the Unitarian missionary, rich in his trans-Atlantic experience. But the people were not yet prepared to Americanise their institutions, and so the protest fell flat. It was in pursuance of Mr. Justice Phear and Miss Carpenter's agitation, that ladies like Miss Ackroyd (now Mrs. Beveridge) came out as Zenana teachers, but they soon carved out better career for themselves than enlightening the daughters of the soil. After having a look at the public tank which had failed to supply water, Lord Reay, with a large party, left at a quarter past 11 in the forenoon, by special train, for the now important town of Hoobli, the centre of the railway system in the Southern Marhatta Country.

From the railway station, the Governor drove between rows of flying flags and through triumphal arches, till he reached the awning for his reception. These arches, we are told, were the veriest make-believe, constructed of newspapers—a base use of the records of the intellectual activity of the instructors of Civilization, against which we protest. The Caliph of European calumny could not be guilty of a worse vandalism. We are reminded of the noble dust of Alexander stopping a bung-hole. But the dust of Alexander is no better than the dust of Johnny Snooks and good for nothing more exalted. Whereas there is still evidence of a living mind in the newspaper, however old. People have no idea of the waste involved in the destruction of old newspapers. There is scarcely an inquiring spirit but has derived ideas and information of much interest and usefulness from stray copies of newspapers thrown away as rubbish. The older and more ill-conditioned the newspaper, the more valuable. The enlightenment of the future will, we are sure, take more systematic care of what is now indiscriminately destroyed or put to uses which are but one remove from pure waste. The business at Hoobli was more important, as the reception more popular and grand. The Municipal address read by Mr. Byabatti, noticed many interesting topics, on all which the Governor dwelt suitably in his reply. The chief of these related to the starting of a commercial and industrial school in connection with the railway workshops, and the development of technical education in which that Presidency, under the sympathetic encouragement of the Governor, has taken the lead, while we at Calcutta are still at the talking stage. They have already established the Victoria Technical Institute at Bombay, and they are ready to start another sister institution at the great railway town of Hoobli, which promises, in the near future, to be an Indian Crewe or Swindon. This latter will be a second grade technical school, supported by a Government grant and favoured by the Railway Companies. These Companies will not only assist in training the boys, but also in finding employment for many, for they need skilled hands. The school will have the advantage of the laboratories of the railway workshops. After the students have completed their terms here, they will be provided with scholarships and drafted to finish their education at the superior Institute at Bombay. Thus has Bombay solved the question of Technical Education. We are more concerned with a miniature Parliament as the panacea for all the evils of pauperism and idleness and discontent. Even on this question, strange as it may sound, the strength of the Congress which is agitating it, lies in the South and West, rather than in the North and East.

VOLAPUK, OR THE NEW BABEL.

OUR readers have, doubtless, from time to time, heard of Volapuk. Few of them, we are afraid, have any clear notion of what it may be. The Indian public have now an opportunity of learning it in the Indian Spectator, which lately contained a notice of a pamphlet purporting to be "An Introduction to the Universal Language, Volapuk," by Jules A. Van Aalst, an officer of the Chinese Customs Service. Volapuk is an invention with the object of enabling foreigners to speak and correspond with one another, without knowing each other's vernacular. It was the discovery of a German is might be expected—named John Martin Schleyer, born in 1831 in Baden, the son of a teacher and himself a priest, now pensioned and living at Constance, where he was last plying his vocation. It is necessary that he is a linguist, and we may easily imagine that he had a turn for linguistics from the first. The writer in the Bombay paper—not our khas brother of the quill—in his enthusiasm for the Wizard of a new trick, holds this language:—

"It would seem that his greatest pastime is the study of languages, which he has pursued with such success that he has mastered the extraordinary number of 50—and deserves to be called the greatest living linguist. In addition to this, he is a poet and a musician, is skilled in chemistry, and the Physical Sciences, and is certainly one of the most eminent men of this century."

In other words, he is a Mezzofanti, a Goethe, and an Admirable Chrichton rolled into one! And this wonderful compound has been strangely overlooked!

The Volapuk Creed has been reduced to 18 Articles. The first, on which all the rest rest, is—"To one humanity one language." And why not, one figure—one colour—one appearance—one thinking—one country? Strange, it did not occur to these amiable gentlemen how their fundamental clashes with obvious facts, not to say, what a blasphemous criticism it implies of the divine plan with its location of a diversified humanity in different parts of the globe. Our Oriental and Orientalist readers will remember the famous opening of Meer Aman's Bagh O' Bahar, in which the Almighty is glorified for having produced countless varieties of the human family, with individuals in each no two of whom agree in their physical characteristics. It now seems all a mistake—where praise is given by the wondering Mussulman, blame should attach, in the opinion of this enlightened ex-pastor of Constance. Volapuk will remedy the original defect.

The following are the fundamental principles which guided him in the elaboration of his system:—

"1. To one humanity one language; 2. To one language one writing; 3. To one writing one reading; 4. To each sound only one sign; 5. To each sign only one sound; 6. Roman letters to be used; 7. No mute or superfluous letters; 8. Everywhere the same orthography; 9. The accent always on the last syllable; 10. Simple rules and no exceptions; 11. No artificial genders; 12. Only one declension; 13. One simple conjugation and no irregular verbs; 14. No adative, in instrumental or locative, &c.; 15. At the end of declinable words, the letters S, J, C, X, Z to be avoided; 16. Only one sound of plural; 17. Monosyllabic radicals; 18. All the good, the beautiful, the short, the simple, the free, and logical of other tongues to be used."

As explained by the present disciple,

"the compared study of languages is based on three elements. The alphabet, the grammar, and the dictionary. The number of alphabetical signs in the Indo-European languages is nowhere sufficient for the number of fundamental sounds. Sanskrit has 17 letters, Russian 32. Italian 22 numbers, insufficient, since many of the letters have accidental sounds. French has only 25 letters for 37 phonetic elements, and some sounds may be written 20 or 30 different ways. Volapuk has only 27 letters and 27 sounds. Its letters have no accidental sounds, and the same sound is always written with the same letters. As to the English it possesses 26 letters, 26 models of inconsistency."

Unless there is a misprint here, whatever languages this master Volapukist may be versed in, he does not know Sanskrit, the key-tongue of Comparative Philology. The great Mahomedan languages too are ignored. The difficulty will be with these all. It is not possible to represent the more recondite sounds of Sanskrit and Arabic by any existing European alphabet, and we do not think the Volapuk will do it. Its makers are not expected to catch the sounds in question.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

WE have received a number of schoolbooks for notice, of which we have been able to look into only a few. Baboo Manmatha Mustafi is already known to our readers for his useful Speaker which we noticed last year. He makes his appearance again with a sort of Joyce's Scientific Dialogues.

It* is a small brochure shabbily printed, because to be sold cheap, but likely to be of great use to junior students as an aid to the memory in passing their examinations. It pemi-canises the more urgent contents of a large number of scientific text-books and hand-books, from old Joyce of our youth to Huxley, Ganot, Jevons, and others.

Babu Bireswar Pande is a well-known compiler, who has produced a new Bengali Grammar† for schools of all three classes. There has been no end of Grammars in Bengali since the great Ram Mohan Roy and the illustrious Baptist Missionaries first gave law to the language, down to the Shama Charans and Loharans and the Vidyasagars and Nyayagishes of our day. Still there remained work to be done, and at the advice of men like the Hon'ble Baboo Gurudas Banerjee, Baboo Bireswar Pande undertook to do it. The present work supplies many of the deficiencies of previous ones. The merit of the performance may almost be taken for granted when, as we are told in the preface, that, besides Dr. Gurudas Banerjee, eminent scholars like Baboo Chandra Nath Bose and others have assisted in the execution.

The same author has published two other schoolbooks of an excellent character. Arya Pātha‡ and Arya Shikshā§. The first consists of elementary examples of good conduct, illustrating the great virtues of probity, all drawn from Indian history. The second, besides such illustrations, contains a chapter on the early homes of the Aryans in India, and another on Hindu Astronomy. These would form a good preparation for the regular study of history and science. It would be easy to find fault with books of this description, traversing such wide ground, involving the most debatable questions in ethics, in history, and in the history of science. A queer statement, for instance, appears at p. 82 of the latter to the effect that, according to tradition, Brahma the progenitor lived and produced the world or mankind on the banks of the Saraswati. On the whole, Babu Pande has done his work well and on rational lines.

A very excellent School Reader in Bengali has been put forth by the literary veteran Baboo Nobin Krishna Banerjee, the successor of the late Akshay Kumar Dutt on the Tattwabodhini Patrika. It is now thirty years since we reviewed his Natural Theology—the first of its kind in Bengali. He has lost nothing of his cunning of his hand by age. His present book is a mixture of Indian instances with the principles and facts of science discovered by Europeans, and all the more welcome on that account. Apart from its educational purpose, it is very interesting and may be read with profit and amusement by all classes.

Mr. Mustafi has published also Dialogues on Physical Geography||. We are glad to see this book better got up, while it shows equal industry in compilation. But strange to say, the title page has no date, either of place or time! Our bookmakers must take care and enter a more decent appearance than they are wont to do, or we shall refuse to notice them hereafter. People do not know the harm that this reign of slovenliness does to the best interests of the nation.

INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

II.

Allahabad, the 17th January, 1889.

Still at Allahabad! Leading a camp life, away from the frequented parts of the city. I overlooked, in my last letter, one important feature of the "City of dust and of ekkas." Sitting now as I do in the heart of the city, with khaprañls above, below and around me, it is but proper that I should not ignore perhaps this most important feature of the seat of the Fourth National Congress. Well, if I have remained behind when all have gone back to their respective homes, carrying with them, it is hoped, pleasant reminiscences of the Fourth Congress, I must pay the penalty for this overstay. I have to endure the sight of Lowther Castle relaps-ing into its old form. It is again a scene of desolation and ruin, the haunts of jackals and wild birds. It seems as if the magic wand of Viswa Karmā turned it into a temporary paradise for the purposes of the Congress, only to disappear again gourd-like on its expiry. There was, however, a peculiar fitness of things in holding the Congress at a place which was by turns a nunnery, a seminary of education, the Government House, and the nursery of our infant political aspirations. I say only, the evolution is natural!

The Congress has not only outlived the calumny of its traducers, both official and non-official, it has also outgrown. We are once again in a position to assert its originally contemplated dimensions. About 1,500 delegates were present. The number of delegates generally was more than double: the number of Mahomedan delegates had trebled itself this year. Is it merely for serio-comic performances that these 1,500 delegates came—some of them from the farthest corners of India, from Peshawar and Travancore? Can the rankest opponents of the Congress deny that this annual assemblage of the best and the most enlightened in the land—the galaxy of Indian geniuses—represents one of the best, if not the best, phase of the British rule in India? To assume that those, who have been the recipients of the greatest good at the hands of the British Government, should come all the way and meet annually openly to preach sedition against the very Government, which has been the making of them, tantamounts to this: that the seed of English education sown by Macaulay, Trevelyan and others has fallen upon barren ground and that a century-and-a-half of British rule could not make a better impression upon the people. This is the standpoint of our opponents, and it involves a condemnation both of English education and English rule. But we of the Congress take our stand upon a different and as, we believe, a higher platform. We are deeply grateful for the past blessings and past advantages; we now claim for more. We no longer regard the British Government as an alien Government, but look upon it as a national Government. English is our lingua franca: of English institutions we have become deeply enamoured; and, as we have been trained up on lines peculiarly British, we cannot do aught but ask for the privileges of British citizenship. Now, which view is more creditable to the British nation? To argue that a grateful nation like the Indians, whose obliging and grateful nature has passed into the regions of History and Philosophy and who are easily contented to a proverb, who have deified their smallest benefactors, which fact, according to Sir Alfred Lyall (Vide his Asiatic Studies) explains for the thirty-three crores of Indian gods and goddesses—to argue that such a race is discontented and dissatisfied with British rule, is like cursing it with bell, book and candle! It is not true that we see no good in British rule; on the contrary, we see much, and naturally wish for more. We feel and wish that our interests be indissolubly bound up with those of the English. Our argument is that there is still room for improvement, and our confident faith is that our prayers for reform, not revolution, will not be refused. If it were true that the secret ambition of the Congress was the overthrow of the British Government, no Europeans would be found taking part in it, there would be no Hume, Adam, Norton, Howard, Kennedy, Hearsey, Atkins; there would be no Christian converts, Kalicharan Bannerjee, Ram Chandra Bose, David Mohun, Peter Paul Pillay; no man enjoying high position and honor, Sir T. Madhava Rao, K.C.S.I., W. C. Bonnerjee, the Hon'ble K. T. Telang, C.I.E., the Hon'ble Govinda Ranade, the Hon'ble G. Subramaniya Iyer, the Hon'ble P. Mehta, the Hon'ble Pandit Ayodhy Nath; no landholder having a permanent interest in the country, as the Maharaja of Durbhanga, Sheikh Raza Hossein Khan, Raja Rampal Singh, Sirdar Dayal Singh, Raja Tejnarain Singh, and many others of this class whose names must never see the light of day but who are nevertheless supporting the Congress with men (yes with men!) and money; bankers like Lala Ram Charan; and, last but not the least, the Bengalees whose worst enemy have not denied them the possession of a keen intellect, and who have little to gain and almost everything to lose, by subversion of the British Government. Our opponents, when they charge us of sedition-preaching, give us little credit for common prudence, when they see that we carry on our proceedings in broad day-light, before thousands of visitors—belonging, as some of them do, to the camp of our enemies. Perhaps, this we do to lull suspicion and allay apprehension!

* A Guide to the City of Allahabad, to the Elementary Science By Manamatha Mustafi, B.A. Calcutta, 1888.

† Bangla Bhasa Grammar. By Bireswar Pande. Calcutta.

‡ Arya Pātha. By Bireswar Pande. Calcutta. 1295 Bengali.

§ Arya Shikshā. By Bireswar Pande. Calcutta. 1295 Bengali.

|| A Guide to Physical Geography, containing about 400 Questions with Answers including miscellaneous, glossary of terms, and answers to Entrance Examination Questions for the students preparing for the Entrance Examination. By M. Mustafi, B.A.

Well, in spite of the many obstacles thrown in our way, of which the general public has no idea, the last Congress at Allahabad was an unqualified and unqualifiable success. Look at it from whatever point we may, either as regards the number of delegates present or as regards the attendance of Mahomedan delegates, the fresh accession of strength—by the adhesion of non-official Europeans or the co-operation of the leading landholders and Taluqdars—it was such a complete success that even “fools who came to scoff remained to pray.” For proof of this, I would point out to you the columns of the eagle-eyed Pioneer. Finding nothing in the programme of the Congress nor in its methods and measures, objectionable, it took to reviling individual delegates, rummaging their private life to see if it could find out something to the tastes of its readers, something that would “pay.” To call one a “nervous parrot,” to find fault with one’s hat because there was nothing faulty in his arguments, to call another a “half-caste” and a “brown Captain,” to find nothing else to edify him and to attract his notice than the stand for the “national barbers,” to be forced to avow that although we spend the whole year in sedition-preaching, once a year at least we conduct ourselves loyally!—are these not damaging confessions in all conscience for the Pioneer to make? Not only this. Mr. Allen, of the Pioneer, was not only present throughout the two sittings of the Congress and signified, as is notorious now, his approval of at least one resolution—the key-note of all our reforms—in the only way he could do, but went out of his way to invite two of the Congress leaders, Messrs. Bonnerjee and Norton (Mr. Norton and Mr. Allen, it is said, are related through their wives) not one day but I believe thrice, to his house. There Mr. Allen was not slow to throw out the hint that Mr. Hume should be now made to retire from the movement. Such was his solicitude for the Congress that he was afraid of Mr. Hume’s further connection doing it harm. There also Mr. Norton, probably for the first time, made the declaration that he proposed very soon to go to England to contest for a seat in Parliament and dedicate the remainder of his noble and precious life to India’s service. Perhaps this it was that made him say in the opening part of that speech of his would be the last of its kind in India. We for our part would have preferred to see Englishmen of robust moral fibres of the stamp of Mr. Norton, whose number in India there is, alas! so small, to stay here longer to inspire us in their person with hope and encouragement.

Only three small incidents occurred during the sittings of the Fourth National Congress to disturb or rather to interrupt the otherwise harmonious character of the Congress. First. The attempt of a Mahomedan prophet of evil—a Beelzebub hailing probably from Aligarh—to decoy or spirit away Mahomedan Congress-wallahs. For once he had counted without his host. For once he was mistaken in the choice of his victims. This took place on the eve of the Congress. The Mullah was caught red-handed plying his ugly job, and no mistake! He was hauled up before the Hon’ble President of the Reception Committee, who recognised in him an old Mahomedan acquaintance. The Pandit told him he had been doing a base and dirty work. He excused him that time, however, but warned him that, on a repetition of the offence, he would meet with condign punishment. The warning was lost; evidently, the Meah Sahib counted too much upon his old acquaintance’s leniency, for, he was caught at his old game again. He had to be expelled. Second. The second incident of course was the unexpected adhesion, at the last moment, of Raja Siva Prasad, C. S. I. It may not be generally known, but it is a fact that the Raja was one of the earliest depositors of the delegate’s fee. He not only paid his Rs. 10, but paid another ten rupees for any “indigent delegate.” Prolonged conversation went on with him and that sturdy taluqdar patriot—“the citizen Singh,” Raja Rampal. But nothing practically came out of it. Less than a month ago, this very man was the central figure of a movement to damn the Congress. What made him to change sides in the rulerim? Was it the fiasco in which the Lucknow demonstration ended?—or was it the exchange of angry and even obscene words between him and Sir Syed? Be his motives whatever they may, there he was in our midst—as a staunch Congress-wallah. True, none counted him for much. His adhesion was regarded by all as an accession of weakness rather than of strength—in short, he was rated at his true worth. There was not one redeeming feature in the antecedents of this mealy-mouthed patriot. A consistent supporter of everything for which there could be found an official standing up, a notorious turn-coat, a profound calculator, a born time-server of the kamia class, how could any man pin his faith upon him? And he by his subsequent conduct more than justified our misgivings. For some reasons not known, he did not turn up on the inaugural day, the 26th. On the 27th also he was looked for in vain at the opening time. It was sometime after noon, business had commenced, the Hon’ble K. T. Telang had already riveted the attention of the audience by the flood of eloquence that he was pouring forth, and a perfect silence reigned throughout the vast hall, when a gate-keeper brought a note to Raja Rampal who went out. In another moment lo and behold! the very Raja Siva Prasad, supported by Raja Rampal Singh, was seen entering the hall. This was the signal for a few suppressed hisses. Raja Rampal conducted him to a seat by him near the Reporters’ Lodge. He then sat down and began to attack Raja Rampal with repeated questions to the evident annoyance of the latter. Next rose Baboo Surendra Nath Bannerjee, whose wordy torrent filled the whole audience, not excepting the unimpressible titular Raja, with a vague excitement more akin to animal spirits than intellectual satisfaction. Some other speakers followed him, when up rose Raja Siva Prasad and solicited permission to speak a few words. He ascended the platform amidst hisses and groans which Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, assisted by Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee and others, managed to stop with great difficulty. But when the audacious Siva Prasad went on, perfectly heedless of, and indifferent to, all these, as if he was used to this kind of treatment, and brought forward his proposal for the suppression of the very Congress, all at once the pent-up feelings of the 6,000 persons sitting beneath the pandal burst out with a fury. For a time, all order was lost, and it seemed as if quiet could not again be restored. It was a moment of sore trial both to Raja Siva Prasad and to those upon whom he tried to palm off his view and thus win a diplomatic victory. Not only the delegates but even the visitors who were strictly forbidden to signify their assent to or dissent from any proposal, for a time forgot themselves and became awfully excited. Many were prepared to hurl their shoes at him, but wiser counsels prevailed. The silver ringing voice of Bonnerjee availed not, the thundering admonition of Surendra and the Hon’ble Pandit Ayadhya Nath’s stentorian warning fared hardly better, Hume’s cry for “order” was drowned in the universal din, when the repeated sound of the gong brought the people to their senses. For a few moments the Pandal was a scene of utter confusion and disorder. Methought at the time that the very object for which Siva Prasad came had been gained. It was the convulsion of a moment only, however. To continue our account. Who is that yonder figure—is it human or inhuman? Wait, let me see. Is it not the clearly-shaved visage of the Honourable member of one of these councils for whose reform we were just listening to the Hon’ble K. T. Telang, C. I. E.? Now, how comes it that one councillor, still in the Council and far more able and enlightened, supports it with his whole heart, while another opposes it tooth and nail? No, no, it can’t be a Member of the Council. Why is it trembling like an aspen tree? Am I in my right senses? It must be a criminal hauled up before a Court of Justice. Hush! he is speaking. Now I am more than ever convinced that it is certainly not Raja Siva Prasad that is speaking, whoever else it may be. He has a louder, a steadier voice, a less faltering accent. See he is coming. Let us try if we can recognise the perspiring figure, reddened by this physical and moral struggle. He takes his seat piteously asking for the reporter of the Pioneer. Bah! before me stands, still oscillating like the pendulum of a clock, the self-same Raja Siva Prasad—yes, the very person who thirty years ago was selected for his voice to read out the Royal Proclamation of 1858 in Benares. How signally and miserably his voice failed him today! Such is the stifling and paralysing impotency of a vicious intrigue! He would not for the fear of his very life go without an escort of notable Congresswallahs. Mr. Bhimji and Captain Banon conducted him to a safe distance in his conveyance, or which is the same thing the old Maharaja of Benares’s conveyance. Third. The last and the least important of the interruptions was due to an excited frame of mind of a nervous Jessore pleader, Baboo Jadu Nath Mazumdar, who after the performance of his part with which he seemed to be perfectly satisfied, was anxious to inform people that he was for sometime connected with the Tribune (Lahore) as its editor, as a set off, we believe, to the impertinent words that he, in an unguarded moment, let fall from his lips. I understand he afterwards had the good sense to apologise for his rude behaviour. He is an example of a person making a good cause appear bad and weakening a strong defence—a drawback by the way inexcusable in a pleader. But to his credit it must be known that he was the first to rise up against the resolution on the Arms Act which Surendra's well-mouthed fluency and eloquent gesticulation carried through the Congress by a large majority. In a rambling low-voiced speech, then, the Jessore pleader opposed it, but failed as did Mr. Telang, Captain Hearsey, &c. A more detailed and exhaustive discussion and review of the several speeches, I reserve for a future issue. In the meantime, I cannot help admiring the wonderful command and influence which your "Surrender Not"—for once true to your interpretation of his name—can and does exercise over his audience.

B.

* * So much the worse for his hearers! It scarcely gives us an exalted idea of the personnel of the Congress that the 1,500 or, for that matter, 6,000 odd men from all parts assembled at Allahabad, could not be persuaded by an expert in ratiocination like Mr. Telang, supported by the experience of such an ancient dweller of the frontier hills in the North, but submitted easily to our Bengalee windbag. But it has ever been so. The more noise, the less wool. But it is sound and fury that illusionises the general.—ED. R. & R.

MONGHYR.

Jamalpur, January 14.

We had a downpour the other day accompanied by hail in abundance, varying in size from $\frac{1}{4}$ " to 2" respectively, lasting for a few minutes. The streets, and by-lanes and "compounds" of several dwellings were covered as if with white sheet for some time, having a beautiful aspect. This untimely shower will no doubt seriously tell on rabi-crops.

A FANCY FAIR

In an Ancient English Street

with attendants in costume

WILL BE HELD AT THE

FREE SCHOOL

on the 1st, 2nd, 4th, 5th, & 6th February,

under the Patronage and immediate

PRESENCE OF

T. E. THE VICEROY AND

The Marchioness of Lansdowne.

Tableux Vivants, Theatricals, Waxworks, Fireworks, Marry-go-rounds and other amusements too numerous to detail.

MASSED BANDS.

Gates open from 4-30 to 11 P.M.,

Admission fee Re. 1, Children 4 As.

Saturday, 2nd February,

From 1 o'clock to 4-30 p. m.

WILL BE SET ASIDE AT THE

FANCY FAIR,

CALCUTTA FREE SCHOOL,

Expressly for Zenana Ladies,

H. E. The Marchioness of Lansdowne

Has promised to be present.

AN OLD ENGLISH STREET

With Attendants in Costume will be on View.

TABLEUX VIVANTS

In which only Ladies will appear.

AN ORGAN RECITAL

By Miss GRAY,

ERAN PEE,

Full of Presents for the Children.

All Purdah arrangements will be strictly adhered to; and all Attendants will be Ladies.

Tickets of Admission can be procured beforehand from

H. H. THE MAHARINI OF ...Cooch Behar.

MRS. COLQUHOUN GRANT ...Kidderpore.

MRS. M. GHOSE ...4, Theatre Road.

LADY WILSON ...34, Chowringhee.

MISS HOARE ...Peculputty Road.

MRS. AMEER ALI ...8, Harrington St.

MRS. JOUBERT ...54, Chowringhee.

If any Native Gentlemen should wish to see the arrangements made for the Zenana Ladies, and will previously communicate with Lady Wilson, 34, Chowringhee, she will be happy to meet them at the Free

I am sorry to inform you that the local H. C. Native School, which, since its establishment, won golden opinion from all quarters in the Behar district, is now going to lose its reputation owing to an indiscreet and whimsical action of the school committee, in selecting pupils for the coming university examination. I understand the whole of the first class boys numbering twenty-six, are to be sent up for the matriculation examination this year, notwithstanding that two-thirds of them have been plucked more or less in three or four branches in the test examination. In a matter like this, the Head-master was the best judge and not the committee members. I am at a loss to make out why this indiscriminate selection was permitted in defiance of the Headmaster's wishes.

The rate-payers of the Jamalpur Municipality are still in suspense regarding various irregularities and more especially the exorbitant tax fixed for vats, notwithstanding several memorials submitted to the Chairman and the District Magistrate from time to time. Receiving no redress from any quarter, the hard-pressed rate-payers have determined to form a rate-payers' association to be headed by a local Behari Zamindar. The move appears to be in the right direction. The sooner the association commences its operation, the better.

The present topic now-a-days here is nothing but reduction in the E. I. Railway office establishment, more especially in the Loco. Branch offices. It is a great pity indeed to see many of the clerical staff who spent the major portion of their lives in the E. I. Railway service, now about to be sent adrift.

The happy New Year went off here with an unpleasant incident. During the New Year holidays there were a number of sports in the race course maidan purposely got up for the occasion, such as racing, &c. A Tomy Dod, a metal pointer was in full swing at the races. Both natives and Europeans were allowed to play. Some disagreement arose between a European and a native Behary of the place regarding winning numbers, hot discussion ensued, wherein the former pushed the latter and the latter took off his country shoe (Nagra), struck the European with it, causing a wound on his forehead. The Behary was prosecuted before the Magistrate of Monghyr and, on conviction, sentenced to one week's imprisonment and a fine of Rs. (10) ten.

I presume you are aware of the ex-Viceroy's walking stick, an ebony one with a gold handle, a present to His Excellency from the Raja of Patiala, being stolen by one of the hired servants, during Lord Dufferin's visit to Jamalpur. The thief was detected and, on conviction, has been sentenced by the Magistrate of Monghyr to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

School, on Thursday, the 31st instant, between 10 a. m. and 12 noon.

NOTICE.

In accordance with the Resolution of the Government of Bengal in the General Department, dated the 6th March 1886, published on page 541 of the Calcutta Gazette of the 31st of the same month, notice is hereby given that an examination for the admission of female students to the certificate class of the Calcutta Medical College will be held in the Theatre of that College on Tuesday, the 12th February 1889, and following days.

Hours and Subjects of Examination.

Tuesday.—English dictation, Grammar, and Composition—from 1 to 4 P.M.

Wednesday.—History of England and India.

Geography: General, and of India in particular—from 1 to

4 P. M.

Thursday.—Arithmetic: the first four rules, vulgar and decimal fractions,

and proportion—from 1 to

4 P. M.

Candidates must apply in writing to the Principal of the Medical College, Calcutta, not later than Saturday, the 9th February, for permission to appear at the examination.

Applications for permission to reside in the Sarnanayi Hostel should be addressed to the Honorary Secretary to the Bengal Branch of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund, 36, Chowringhee, Calcutta.

A. CROFT,

Director of Public Instruction.

The 7th January 1889.

NOTICE

Is hereby given that the right of disposing of blood and dung, &c., of cattle slaughtered in the Municipal Slaughter Houses, from 1st February 1889 to March 1890, will be put up to public auction, at the Municipal Office, on the 22nd January 1889, at 12 A.M.

JOHN COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.

THE SILVER JUBILEE

OF THE
MAHOMEDAN LITERARY SOCIETY.

The Society having completed a career of a Quarter of a Century, will hold its Twenty-Fifth Annual Conversazione, at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 28th January 1889, at 9 P.M.

ABDOOL LUTEEF,
Secretary.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Locketts, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelsmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikudla, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "MYSORE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 18th inst., and on Tuesday the 15th idem the Steamer "OUDH" will leave Calcutta for Cachar.

All cargo for shipment by either of the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godowns at Juggannauth Ghat the day previous to the vessels leaving Calcutta.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sundays and Thursdays, and Debrooghur on Mondays and Fridays.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

FOR SALE

Price Post free Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BY

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah.

BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADUR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoori Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadur, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman. The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to see her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course. —[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

JEYES' SANITARY COMPOUNDS

In the various shapes of

Liquid, Powder, Soap and Ointment

are invaluable in the Indian climate.

They are perfectly harmless, non-poisonous, and non-irritant.

They have proved efficacious in skin diseases. They cure wounds and ulcers. Even Lepers have found them valuable.

To the rich and the poor, the healthy and the sick, they are alike welcome.

They destroy the virus or contagion of small-pox, measles, typhus and typhoid fevers.

They cleanse your houses and clothes and purify the air. They keep your body clean, teeth strong and skin pure. Your bed free from bugs, your drains odorless, and closets free from bad smells.

They may be used with safety and with happy results in sick-room, kitchen, and every other part of a house.

Agents:—DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta

BEETHAM'S
GLYCERINE - AND -
CUCUMBER

For INDIA and all HOT CLIMATES this sweetly scented emollient Mak is INVALUABLE. IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and REFRESHED in the HOTTEST WEATHERS. Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, FRECKLES, PEPKLES TAN, etc., and RENDERS the SKIN DELICATELY SOFT, SMOOTH and WHITE.

It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY and WRINKLED, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN and WIND more effectually than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BITES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin, this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers M. BEEHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."*All who suffer find sure relief fromLITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM*The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.It has driven out from the systemAcute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs*Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.*

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co., R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

*Price by post 8½ annas.ASRUKANA*A Collection of poems in Bengali by*SRIMATI GIRINDRAMOHINI DASSY(Author of Kabitahar, Bharat Kusum.)*

Asrukana is a collection of poetical pieces of singular pathos and beauty of expression. * * It is a series of mournful songs that the reader is here presented with and they must touch a sympathetic cord in every heart that can feel. There is a singular appropriateness in the title of the work, and in its pious dedication to the memory of the husband of the fair writer. — The Indian Nation.

The authoress is not unknown to Bengali readers. She has already published two or three poems by which she is favourably known, but between these poems and this is a difference that hardly admits of being measured.

This is poetry in life

We have read Sumati Girindra Mohini's poems in a reverential spirit. The poems are all of a lyrical description. The lyre is soft, sweet and tender, but awfully strong.

The tone of the poems is inexpressibly gentle, inexpressibly pure, and inexpressibly tender and affectionate. It is the tone of a world mother.

Bengal should be proud of this poem—The Calcutta Review.

Apply at the Bee Press,1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Calcutta.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)

THE CALCUTTA

HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.

THE

EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVEDISPENSARY IN ASIA*OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,

WHICH

INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THETRADE IN*INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHYand maintains to this dayTHE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF

THIS

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co., beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

*No EXTRA CHARGE.BERIGNY & CO.12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.In Pamphlet, Price 4 annasor 6 copies for a Rupee,ARMY REORGANIZATIONWith special reference to the Question ofA Reserve for the Indian Army.By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.NOW READY.

The Report of the 3rd Indian National Congress, held at Madras during the last week of 1887.

Price Re. 1 including postage. Apply to M. V. Channar, 100, Mount Road, Madras.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENTTHE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS, They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incident to Females of all ages. For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bag Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

TEA!TEA!*TEA!

Cheapest & Best,
SUPPLIED BY
THE

INDIAN TEA SUPPLY CO."LIMITED."

In packets of 1 oz., 2 oz. and 4 oz. each from 3 pice only and upwards.

Note the Low Price.A Packet of Tea for 3 pice!

Important News for India,
WHERE FEVERS AND CHOLERA
REIGN SUPREME.

A RECENT TRAVELLER ON THE Chinese Coast found that District remarkably FREE FROM TYPHOID FEVER and CHOLERA. He soon discovered the cause. The people there do not drink cold water from tanks or wells, often extremely impure, but keep a pan of water constantly boiling, into which from time to time they drop a little Tea, and when thirsty THEY DRINK HOT TEA! If the weak and adulterated Teas of China can do this, what may not the pure and strong Teas of India be expected to effect?

Also in tins ½lb to 10lbs of various qualities to suit all tastes.

Ask for the Indian Tea Supply Company's Teas.

We have Agents all over the Country, but want more.

Managing Agents:

LYALL MARSHALL & CO.,
4, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION,
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE in 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

*Address,——2, Ukkur Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.REIS & RAYYET(PRINCE AND PEASANT)WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

*Review of Politics, Literature, and SocietyRATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly	... "	... " 7
Quarterly	... "	... " 4
Monthly	... "	... Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 5, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager, and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet,"

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. {

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1889.

} No. 358

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

THE BROKEN FIDDLE.

Translated from Beranger.

COME here, my poor dog, honest beast,
Munch away, never mind my despair,
Here's a morsel of cake for to-day, at the least,
If to-morrow black bread be our fare.

Last night in our valley the foe—
Victors only by trickery—spoke :
"Play a tune, we would dance ;" but I boldly said, "No !"
So my fiddle in anger they broke.

'T was the villagers' orchestra ; now
Happy days, pleasant fêtes, are no more !
In the shade who can get up our dances ? or how Shall the Loves be aroused as of yore ?

Its strings, they were lustily plied—
At the dawn of the fortunate day,
To announce the young bridegroom awaiting the bride,
With his escort to show her the way.

Did the priest give an ear to its touch
He our dance without fear would allow ;
The gladness it spread all around it was such,
It had smoothed even royalty's brow.

What and if it has preluded strains
That our glory was wont to awake !
Could I dream that the foeman invading our plains
His revenge on a fiddle would take ?

Come here, my poor dog, honest beast ;
Munch away, never mind my despair,
Here's a morsel of cake for to-day, at the least,
If to-morrow black bread be our fare.

How long will the Sundays appear,
In the barn, or beneath the old tree !
Will providence smile on our vintage this year,
Since silent the fiddle will be ?

How it shortened the toils of the poor !
How it took the chill off from their lot !
For the great, and for taxes, and tempests, a cure
All alone it enlivened the cot.

What hate it hath served to suppress !
What tears hath forbidden to flow !
What good—all the sceptres on earth have done less
Than was done by the scrape of my bow.

But my courage they warm—we must chase
Such pitiful foes from our land !
They have broken my fiddle—'t is well—in its place,
The musket I'll grasp in my hand !

All the friends whom I quit—a long list—
If I perish some day will recall,
That the barbarous hordes I refused to assist
In a dance o'er the wreck of our fall.

Then come, my poor dog, honest beast ;
Munch away, never mind my despair,
Here's a morsel of cake for to-day, at the least,
If to-morrow black bread be our fare.

TO AN OPTIMIST.

DIM eyes, clear-sighted only for the distance,
Fond fancy poring on those hills of blue,
Blamest thou me, bent only on resistance
To ills of nearer view ?

You were a painter born, and I a fighter ;
You to love beauty, I to set wrong right ;
You, where a thing is bright, to paint it brighter,
I to say, "Black's not white."

Had you been saved of old when heaven's great ruin
Crashed down in flood, and Hope itself looked dark,
You had admired "the good that rain was doing,"
And praised "the accommodation of the Ark."

You see but cherubs where, in misery bundled,
Poor children rot unheeded in a mews ;
You note the rainbow when a mop is trundled
With rinsings from the stews.

I have the fatal fault to see too clearly,
Blight in the bloom and ill in all to spy,
Believing truth itself is bought too dearly
If purchased with a lie.

So fail I, friend, to see earth as you see it,
All sunshine, angels bursting from the blue ?
Though with good health and money, I agree, it
May, while they both last, do.

What then our difference ? This ! As clever jugglers,
Who force the court-card, will not yield the plan,
You quote the one blest, not the hopeless strugglers,
The millions in their pain.

I too see good, but do not pause to praise it ;
Leave opiate praise, love rather tonic blame ;
"Improveable" I hold the world ; to raise it,
Man's only lawful aim.

Yet, oh ! thy pardon, Heaven, if oft-times grumbling,
I murmur o'er lost harvests' wasted toil ;
I know it must be, yet it is so humbling,
That best things soonest spoil.

A. G. B.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given, any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE Parliament reassembles on the 21st February.

THE Lieutenant-Governor returned on Thursday from his Behar tour.

THE present has been a remarkably mild winter in Afghanistan.

THE Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived at Hyderabad on Wednesday. The Nizam received the royal guests at the railway station.

CHOLERA is raging in South Travancore. The Travancore Government has deputed a Special Medical Officer—Assistant Surgeon Ponnen—and a staff of medical subordinates and servants to visit the afflicted localities and render medical aid and to take measures to preserve sanitation.

THE Crawford Commission has ended. It is a relief indeed. The public had long ceased to take any interest in the trial, it had grown into such a nuisance! The length of the trial extending over sixty-eight days scared away all except those immediately connected. Mr. Justice Wilson and his colleagues are to be congratulated for the trial they themselves have gone through. They will now make their report to the Bombay Government.

THE Naghabad riot case at Moradabad has ended in the conviction of seven Mahomedans. Two of them have been sentenced to six months each, four to four months and one to two months' imprisonment.

WE read in the vernacular columns of the Dacca Gazette, that Manaranjan Ganguli né Dil Mahomed—a convert to Islam—had two wives. The elder followed her lord in his new Faith but the younger, Purna Sashi—beautiful and accomplished—refused herself the pleasures of the world, and devoted herself to the service of her god. The suit against Purna Sashi in the Munsifi for restitution of conjugal rights has been decided in her favor. But the girl, immediately the order was passed and she was returning home, was forced away from her friends and taken to the house of a Mahomedan, from which she was rescued by the Police. The matter has again gone to Court.

THE Chief Magistrate has sentenced an old offender—named Kali Churn Kurni—to four years' rigorous imprisonment, for theft of clothing and brass utensils from No. 1, Lindsay Street and No. 24, Wellesley Street. There were two separate charges, and in each case Mr. Marsden awarded the punishment of two years. He evidently preferred to exercise the highest power given him by law to sending up the prisoner to the Sessions.

KUNJEN MENON, the late Sub-Judge of Tellicherry, convicted of bribery, has escaped by death the further disgrace of residence in jail. He had applied to the Privy Council for leave to appeal, but in the absence of the judgment of the Sessions Court, their Lordships refused to give any opinion, giving the appellant leave to apply again.

A GREAT mystery hangs about the African heroes, who now for some years command the attention of the world to their movements. Such a one is the now famous Osman Digna. We for one at first thought that the n in the surname was a European mistake for m. For long, we struggled against the continuity of error or the tyranny of fact. We insisted on Digma instead of Digna. Digna had no associations for us, but Digma sounded more Arabic like. In fact, we cherished the hope of identifying this Osman with a kinsman of the well-known horse-dealer Abdulla of that ilk. But alas! for the vanity of the hunt after linguistic affinities and nomenclological analogies. The telegrams and newspapers stuck to Digna and Digna let him remain to the end of the chapter. But who is Digna? There have been different accounts, but the point is undecided. A correspondent has come forward to enlighten the Army & Navy Gazette, thus:

"He is understood to be a Frenchman. George Nisbet, alias Osman Digna, was born at Reuen in 1836, and attended a school at Paris till he was 13. The Nisbet family then removed to Alexandria, and shortly after the father, Joseph Nisbet, died. Madame Nisbet having made the acquaintance of a Mussulman merchant from up-country, married him; and she and her boy George went first to Cairo and then to Suakim. George attended the military school at Cairo, and was brought up a Mussulman. He took his stepfather's name, Osman Digna, and joined him in his business as a slave-dealer at Suakim. The stepfather died in 1865. Young Digna became the Mahdi's friend and General, and the enemy of the Egyptian Government. He was a fellow-student of Arabi Pasha, and the latter's insurrection paved the way for his present career."

The editor—who by the bye is no other than the great Dr. William Howard Russell, the father, or rather the grandfather of war Correspondence—quietly notes:—

"So it is said. But so many things are said which are not true. Osman certainly does not speak French."

THE Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki has been authorized by the local Government to raise a loan of Rs. 6,20,000 to pay off and consolidate the debts of the Ramnagar Dhameri estate.

THE exchange difficulty still plays havoc with the Indian revenues. The loss on this account during the current official year is estimated at sixty lacs. In the Budget estimates, the exchange was calculated at 1s. 4½d, but the actual is 1s. 4¾d to 1s. 4¼d.

DR. TESSARINI, of Pisa, has found tobacco smoke a valuable disinfectant. He experimented it upon micro-organisms. He devised an apparatus composed of two funnels placed with their mouths opposed, and sealed with paraffin. To each small end of the funnels, tubes were attached and a cigar placed in one end. The smoke was thus drawn into the large space made by the funnels and into it was introduced a plate containing various cultures of micro-organisms. 3½ to 4½ grammes of tobacco—Virginia cigars, Cavour cigars and the best cigarette tobacco—was burnt and the microbes subjected to the smoke for about half an hour. The result is stated to be that the smoke had the effect of preventing the development of some micro-organisms wholly and of retarding that of others. The smoke in its passage through water loses its germicidal properties.

MESSRS. IMMISCH AND CO., of Malden Electric Works, Kentish Town, have launched at Platt's Eyot, Hampton, the largest electric pleasure boat of their own construction—Viscountess Bury. She is 65ft. in length, with a beam of 10ft., a mean draught of 22in., and a displacement of 12 tons. She is Mahogany built and will carry 70 to 80 passengers. The launch is worked by twin propellers, which obtain their impetus from two Immisch motors, each 7½ horse power, and driven by 200 accumulators placed underneath the floor of the boat. The whole deck is thus available for passengers.

THE Parsee High Priest of Poona, Sirdar Dr. Hosungjee Jamsajjee opened and consecrated at Bhusaval, on Sunday before last, a new Tower of Silence. Parsees from various parts of the Bombay Presidency, Malwa, Nagpur and Benar, attended the ceremony. The Dastoorjee Stoleb was presented with addresses and shawls. The assembled guests were treated to a discourse on the utility of consigning the dead to Towers of Silence.

THE editor and publisher of the Chittul Gazette have served out their 3 months in jail. A subscription was raised to pay the fine and it was paid down, thus saving them additional residence in an undesirable place.

It is understood that the New York Herald has purchased the old Globe office in the Strand, London. It was till lately occupied by the People. The object is stated to be to bring out in the English capital a morning daily on the lines of the Paris Herald.

PREVIOUS to the prorogation of Parliament on Christmas Eve, the Royal Assent was given to the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888.

It has transpired in the Irish Scotch action against the Times, that Mr. Walter holds one-sixteenth share and the half of another sixteenth share in the Thunderer, the other proprietors numbering hundreds.

M. DE LESSEPS and the Directors of the Panama Canal Company have arranged with a banking firm for a fresh issue of shares to the value of sixty millions francs. The canal project must succeed.

THE offices of the Town and Country Journal and the Evening News—fine newspaper buildings in Sydney, Australia—have been destroyed by fire. They are said to have been most complete and perfect in that island continent. Built only four years ago, they were four stories high and cost about £1,00,000.

MR. GLADSTONE completed his 79th year on December 29, 1888.

THERE was a total eclipse of the sun on New Year's day. A San Francisco telegram dated January 1, says:—

"Reports have been received here from various stations on the Pacific Coast of the total eclipse of the sun to-day. The weather was clear at nearly all points of observation. Mr. Smith, Director of the Warner Observatory, stationed at Nelson, in California, reports that, as far as it afforded an opportune search for an intra-Mercurial planet, it was a failure, owing to clouds and haze at all four contacts. A well made chronometer, previously set to Lick University time, was used. Five very small colourless protuberances were seen, all having pointed apexes. Near the point of one was another detached from the sun. Bailey's beads were seen at the second and third contacts, but entirely unlike those seen at Denver in 1878. The corona could not be drawn, but as seen through the telescopes, it was not very extensive. At Brass Valley during the period of totality the stars and large planets were seen with the naked eye. From that point the corona and protuberances offered a grand spectacle. The thermometer fell seven degrees between the moment of first contact and totality. At Virginia City, Nevada territory, the thermometer fell ten degrees during the progress of the eclipse. To the observers at Healdsburg nineteen-twentieths of the sun's surface were obscured. The period of totality was 80 seconds. Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Mercury, and the principal fixed stars were visible. The corona appeared with long rays of light parallel to the sun's equator. Professor Toll secured a number of fine photographs of the corona showing rays extending ten or twelve degrees from the sun. Only rose-coloured protuberances were visible. At Orland the period of totality was 110 seconds. Venus and other stars were visible. Three successful photographs were taken. At Winnemucca, Nevada, the observers were entirely successful. Accurate observations were made of the times of contact. One observer discovered a comet near the sun. No appreciable change of temperature was noticed at this station. Accurate observations were also made of the shadow bands. The corona was similar in general appearance to that of 1878. The streamers extended to a distance of from three to four diameters, and the red protuberances were strongly marked."

The New York Herald of the next day published a despatch from its Chicago correspondent stating that

"Nine photographs were taken during totality and seven between the first and last contacts. The naked eye view of the corona was very fine. At the beginning of totality intense red flames burst out on the sun's western side, covering a space of 90 degrees. During totality the birds flew into the trees to roost, and the cocks crowed."

AMERICA was lately startled by the romance of another and happier Alexander Selkirk. It was stated that an old gentleman of Brooklyn had, on the 11th September, received a letter from a Captain Green who, in 1858, had sailed in command of a ship named Confederation which was supposed to have been wrecked in the Pacific Ocean. The letter was brought by a whaling barque from Ojee, an island in that ocean hitherto supposed to be without human inhabitants. It stated that the Confederation foundered at sea and the Captain, with his crew of 14 men and two women, took to the boats and managed to land on the island of Ojee. They found themselves in a charming tropical country abounding in fish and fowl and fruits, with enough of fresh water. So this community of sixteen contrived to live well under their king Green, their only grievance was probably the thought of being forcibly and almost hopelessly cut off from civilization and the great world of men.

HERE is what M. Leibknecht, a socialist Deputy, has lately said regarding the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine, in his speech at the German Reichstag:—

"We now clearly perceive that the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine has been not only a crime against a nation's sovereignty, but also a grave political blunder. Every development of the German people suffers from the continual fear of a French alliance, and at the same time there is kept up within the country a system of oppression towards political adversaries as violent as that which exists in some despotic states."

The French Press is more calm than the press in Germany. I know the public spirit in France. I assure you that there does not exist a Frenchman who thinks of attacking Germany. But as a set-off all Frenchmen are to be attacked by Germany, and they believe that Germany is forming a coalition against them as in 1792. It is the German Press which is the cause of this situation—it is the officious press that continually excites Europe against France. You seek for the alliance of Russia at any price. You shall never obtain it. As to the home politics I will only recall to you the antagonism which an Emperor has called the disgrace of the 19th century and what was said against the English during the reign of Emperor Frederick.

The high pressure is much heavier in Germany than what was predicted in 1870; the indirect taxes we doubled, and it is precisely the expenses of the workmen that have increased."

The present armed state of Europe and the consequent dread of an outbreak of war, are no doubt an outcome of the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine by Germany.

A TELEGRAM dated Shanghai the 17th January, says:—

"Great distress prevails in China from famine in the Yangtze and Yellow River valleys.

The prefectures of Fengyang, Yingchow and Shuchow, in the province of Anhui, have been flooded by the Yellow River.

In the prefectures of Zingchow, Chinkiang, Hsuechow and Chiangning, in the province of Kiangsu, the crops have entirely failed from drought.

In Shantung and Newchwang there are extensive floods.

The area of suffering is immense; it is impossible to estimate the numbers of starving, probably several millions.

In the Hofer district alone the number is half-a-million. The distress is widespread, and is a national calamity.

A strong committee has been formed at Shanghai by request of the Chinese authorities to collect subscriptions. Assistance is earnestly sought."

The Lord Mayor of London has invited public subscriptions.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

SIR Henry Mortimer Durand has not yet come. He is expected tomorrow. In the meantime, the Chinese delegate Mr. James Hart—has arrived and is the guest of Mr. Balfour, Agent of the Hong-Kong and Shanghai Bank. He cannot idle himself here but must leave for Gnatong. He probably awaits Sir Mortimer's arrival. He has had an interview with Mr. Cunningham, the Under-Secretary in the Foreign Department, and with a representative of the Indian Daily News, but Mr. Hart was courteously reticent to both as regards his instructions. How could he disclose his line of action, except in proper time to proper men?

THE Great Circumlocution Office is still on the Great Exodus Question—that is, dodging round and round it. The Government here, which enjoys the change from a tropical summer to the bracing and pleasant coolness of a temperate zone on the heights of the Himalayas, must naturally be indisposed to face it. The superior authority in England is formed of men who, while in India, were committed to the maintenance of the periodical migration, having enjoyed the privilege themselves, and are certainly connected by ties of kindred and fellow-feeling with the official classes in India. The question is, moreover, practically in the hands of the Government of India. Between the several authorities, it has been whittled down to a minimum. Zeus has been prevailed upon not to abolish the Indian Olympus, but he thinks it preposterous that many gods of all degrees, with their cupbearers and army of underlings, should crowd and vulgarise so nice a retreat. Simla is to be maintained, but reserved for the supreme duties' delight during the scorching heats of the plains. Such was the Secretary of State's fiat. It is now an old decision. The Government of India was so overjoyed at this result of the popular agitation against the "Exodus," that it gladly undertook to assist the Home Government in reducing the proportions of the periodical transport of departments to the hill retreats. For two years, it has been at it, collecting opinions and information. The late Viceroy was anxious to settle the matter, but was not allowed: All the necessary information was not forthcoming. We are glad to find that the present Viceroy has early taken up the subject, and in earnest. The new officiating Secretary in the Financial Department, Mr. Fanshawe, has been directed to draw up a memorandum exhibiting in brief the views of the different authorities.

We are not of those who are clamouring against Lord Lansdowne's going to Simla at all. Perhaps it will be necessary for his Lordship to go for once, the better to be able to judge its pretensions. Only, there is the chance of the blandishments of Capna proving too much for the soul of a young exile.

AMID the weakness of the greater portion of the native press, in the entire Bengal Presidency, it is a relief to find some capital organs of native opinion. Such a one is the Lahore Tribune. We have reason to be proud of the ability with which this paper is conducted. For that matter, it has, with rare exceptions, been always very respectable. But, of late, there has been a remarkable change for the better. It is now unusually vigorous and even smart. In a part of the country exceptionally strong in its British press, the credit of Young India needed particularly good publicists. The Tribune, we are glad to see, is able to hold its own against its British neighbour. We regret that we can not share many of our contemporary's views—for instance, it is imbued with the unfortunate prejudice against the late Viceroy, so common with the ultra congressist journals—hence our opinion might be all the more entitled to consideration.

THERE has been consternation in the high official camp. It was understood that Lord Lansdowne contemplated a longer stay at Calcutta than has been usual with the Government of India of late years. Thereupon, the Pioneer thus broke out—

"There is nothing in the wide world to stop them (the Viceroys) from remaining in Calcutta from January to December. For aught that can be foreseen, the present Viceroy may do so; but as long as Calcutta is what it is, there is small likelihood of his repeating the experiment."

"Cold words these and rather desponding," cries the Tribune. Oh, no! Desponding perhaps, but not cold. To us they seem more as the expression of tender querulousness of love in a pet. It is much as when you hear, "Men are proverbially inconstant; they may do just as they choose, and who is to prevent them? You may make love to all the girls in the country; indeed, not to put a fine point on the matter, you are that heartless man. But I don't care, you may please yourself. There is only one little request—no, not request, but one piece of advice to give. Have a care for yourself. For Heaven's sake, do not sacrifice your reputation in this world and your prospects in the next. Avoid that flirtatious old spinster in the corner over whom you are getting so silly. She is a plain creature, I can assure you. And as for her character—well, you ought to know what is what." There is no doubt an undercurrent of pathos in that defiance of indifference.

THE Tribune thus "chaffs" the Pioneer :—

"While, therefore, condoling with him in his sorrow that Lord Lansdowne does not intend to start for Simla before the snow on its hills has melted away, we would put the question whether his apprehension has really got any foundation in fact. Will Lord Lansdowne actually forego the pleasures of a whole Simla season for the sake of the grave and responsible duty the gravest and most responsible that a statesman may be called upon to perform—that has now devolved upon him? The news seems too good to be true."

Our contemporary continues, in a serious vein—

"But why? Is there not a precedent in the matter? Did not Lord Northbrook make a similar sacrifice during the Behar famine in 1873? Has not Calcutta much improved during the last 15 years, and now come to be regarded as one of the healthiest cities in India? What Lord Northbrook did at the call of duty, it is much easier now for Lord Lansdowne to accomplish. For ourselves, however, we do not much care where Lord Lansdowne stays during the year, provided he does not come to Simla. His Lordship's health and comfort are matters of great concern to us, and nothing is further from our thoughts than that His Lordship should undergo any unnecessary hardships. But nevertheless we think it would be a very wise step if His Lordship did not come to Simla this year. We say so most advisedly. Simla is territorially in this province, and it is, therefore, a matter of pride and pleasure to us that the Viceroy stays there during the best part of the year. But the surroundings of the place are adverse to the expansion of political views, add it is consequently most desirable that Lord Lansdowne should spend his year of probation, if we may be permitted that expression, outside its vitiated atmosphere. The 'Indian Problem,' as Sir William Hunter calls it, is not easy of solution. It requires a careful, earnest and diligent study, which it is impossible to carry on properly amidst the frivolities of the Simla season. Moreover, there are other than Jungo interests to be served in India. There are other opinions besides those of the Pioneer to be consulted. And there are other people outside the circle of a close bureaucracy and its following to come in contact with."

WE have much pleasure in laying before the reader the following extract from a private letter from a Hindu friend now for some years in England. It contains the reflections of a thoughtful mind. While it traces the change undergone by an Indian from the new experience, it notices the speciality of English life :—

"I am over two years now in England, ample time for the growth of some attachment for the country and its people. Nothing of the kind; It is, what they call, as water on a duck's back. This is a land of work,—affection, attachment, heart, are meaningless terms in the people's vocabulary. London is a large mint, nearly five millions of human beings in it are shoving and pushing and jostling each other to scrape some gold dust. Hundreds of thousands are gasping their death gasp on account of this inhuman struggle. English philanthropy backed by English wealth is taxed to the uttermost to prevent death by starvation—to preserve some semblance of tenderness and charity in this huge human hive. The rigours of the conditions of bare existence here, it would be simply impossible for any mortal, bred up in another sphere under a more genial easy system, to withstand. And yet the hardy and hard-working Briton finds time and strength and temper not only to put things quite square at home, but to conquer continents, spread peace, foster civilization, in fact, to serve mankind in a way which no nation has hitherto done or is likely to do soon. As far as I can see it now, if I were to present you with a human equation of attainable perfection, I would take an Indian heart minus all morbid sensitiveness, an Indian head capable of calculating higher problems than what are set in the B. A. and M. A. papers, such as those of the unification of races and the growth of nationalities, and a stalwart Punjabi physique; and add to it the doggedness, the life and death determination, the never-to-back-out trade-mark of these shopkeepers (!); and I could not find you a higher ideal.

I could give you a long account of the different characteristics of the two peoples. You see here such an altogether new phase of humanity, your prejudice vanishes from the moment you step on board the steamer. I remember every minute of my life since I left home. I have not ceased to torment myself with the obstinate "why". Crudeness disappears laughing such a laugh at prescription, that I myself feel ashamed at its abrupt and unceremonious retreat; with all my instinctive and ingrained conservatism, I can't even tempt my old idols to stand a trial. They vanish like Macbeth's witches when I would most wish them present. New ideas, no doubt, don't find easy admission. Alas! many a time, with tearful eyes, the mind involuntarily looks back to that hallowed land left far behind, in the vain search for an adequate silencing answer to give to the intruders, who as a rule rely on their naked beauty and demand entrance with a conqueror's voice."

THE Western races have always been fond of the canine species. What wonder that the most Western of them should be preeminently doggy! By the latest advices, the Transatlantic ladies have developed a manly taste in their sympathy for the canine order. Pugs are at a discount. Lapdogs they leave to Old World women. They go in for the heroic. Their preference is worthy of the belles of the Amazonian Continent. They affect big powerful mastiffs for pets. They attack quiet homes with enormous Newfoundlanders and penetrate the sacred precincts of drawing-rooms with hulking St. Bernards by their side. This is going ahead with a vengeance. But what of our Old World myth of the "gentle sex"?

THE District Judge of Dacca, Mr. Beighton, had been to Moonsheegung on tour. The Pleaders of the Munsiffi gave an entertainment in his honor. The programme, among others, consisted of Nautches. A Correspondent "D" and the Dacca Gazette are wroth that the Judge was so honored or that he encouraged the Nautch Girls by his presence. The poor Bujers are all evil to our Brahmo brother, but he forgets that they are not so bad as he paints them. Indeed, they are altogether a more respectable and self-honoring class than many of our modern Barbees of an unpronounced social order.

THE last or second year's working of the Income Tax in Bengal was a decided gain to Government. The receipts were more and the charges less than in the previous or first year of the impost. The receipts were Rs. 37,35,621 or Rs. 1,05,641 more and charges Rs. 1,57,485 or Rs. 1,26,734 less than in 1886-87, or a net gain of Rs. 2,32,375 in 1887-88. Leaving out of calculation the assessments on the salaries of Government servants and on Government securities, the Board fixes the average incidence of the tax on the whole population of the province at Re. 1 to every 37 persons; and the proportion of the number of persons assessed to the whole population at 1 to 663. The average incidence was Re. 1 to every 203 persons in the whole province and to every 37 inhabitants in Calcutta. Including Government Servants and Securities, the incidence is reduced to 179 instead of 37 persons. The chief contributors to the tax—who are the least able to protect themselves and whom the Congress would desire to be exempted, for it recommends the raising of the taxable income to Rs. 1001—were the assesses under class I, with incomes from Rs. 500 to Rs. 750. Next to them came class VIII with incomes from Rs. 2,500 to Rs. 5,000

The first paid Rs. 5,93,769 and the last Rs. 4,69,495. The largest contributors to the tax were

Money-lenders and changers	Rs. 5,66,897
Government servants	" 3,78,045
General merchants	" 3,66,867
Dealers in other articles...	" 1,83,341
Piece-goods merchants	" 1,50,024
Barristers, &c.	" 1,28,601
Managers and Assistant Managers	" 1,26,800
House proprietors	" 1,24,371
Clerks and Accountants	" 1,12,918
Grain merchants	" 1,12,371

It is significant the money-lenders top the list, and yet how often they escape or are underassessed.

Barring individual instances of hardship—in pursuance of zid or idiosyncrasies of the assessing officers—coercive measures were sparingly enforced. The actual sales—for realisation of the tax, penalty and cost—out of the total 100,238 assessments, were confined to only 477 cases. In this list the Rungpore District figures the highest (96), then comes Monghyr (63), after it Sarun (45), next appears Furreedpore (42), followed by Dinagepore (36) and Gya (32). The largest number of warrants, however, were issued in Calcutta and next to it in Mozufferpore, but the sale in this last was only 15. It is claimed that the working has been such as to disarm opposition, the unpopularity of the tax being traceable only to the disinclination of the people to pay money. It will take many many years in India, if at all, to popularize the tax, and the Board will have enough work in future years, if the tax is still to be retained, to control the zeal and caprices of its subordinate officers in this direction. Rs. 64,311 were levied on 6,662 persons as penalties and Rs. 21,191 as costs. The Collector of Tipperah generally remitted the penalty, on prompt payment of the tax after the issue of warrant. Its indiscriminate issue in Calcutta was less than in the previous year. The percentage fell from 21 to 11. The Board points out that some persons court coercive measures to make them the ground for exemption in the following years, but it is not blind to the fact that some default from ignorance of the rules of payment and some from negligence. The Board complains of the opinion of the Advocate-General that "when once an assessment list has been completed and notification made, the Collector has no power to serve a fresh notice of an amended assessment during the year," and ascribes to its adherence, the falling off in revenue in Calcutta, and suggests alteration in the law in the next amending Act.

THE Chief Justice has made a desperate effort to retrieve his academic reputation. His Convocation Address this year was a delightful surprise. If he had only been better prepared to read it, he would have made a hit, and between an eloquent Chancellor and a classical philosophical Vice, the Convocation of 1889 would have been historical. The substance of the Address was in strange and agreeable contrast with the barrenness and inanity of the last year's attempt rather than performance. We are forcibly reminded of the Edinburgh Review's notice of a famous book—Hope's Anastasis. Though cursed with the 18th century vice of interminable length, it is a charming book, eloquent and powerful, still unapproached by any novel of Eastern life, Palgrave's Hermann Agha not excepted. It appeared anonymously, but was understood to be the production of Mr. Thomas Hope, the father of Beresford of that ilk of our day. This gentleman was a rich banker, innocent of printer's ink. He was believed to be a man of taste, but it was shown more in the character of the surroundings of his home than in the productions of his own mind. A virtuoso, he paid preposterous prices for broken marbles and rare china, and cared more for the torso of an old master than a whole of the greatest contemporary. He had a special crase about upholstery. At the best, he was a dilettanti rather than a scholar. Anastasis, if he was guilty of it, was his only offence in the literary line. Called on to review it, Sydney Smith did not know what to think of the phenomenon of such an unexpected spring of taste and ripe penmanship from so unlikely a quarter. He made no secret of his astonishment. He said:—

"Mr. Hope will excuse us,—but we could not help exclaiming, in reading it, Is this Mr. Thomas Hope?—Is this the man of chairs and tables?—the gentleman of sphinxes—the (Edipus of coalboxes—he who meditated on muffineers and planned pokers?—Where has he hidden all this eloquence and poetry up to this hour?—How is it that he has, all of a sudden, burst out into descriptions which would not disgrace the pen of Tacitus—and displayed a depth of feeling and a vigour of imagination which Lord Byron could not excel? We do not shrink from one syllable of this eulogium. The work now before us places him at once in the highest list of eloquent writers, and of superior men."

RECALLING the collapse of the Vice-Chancellor last year, as we read the scholarly and thoughtful discourse given from the Vice-Chair this year, we could not help exclaiming in a similar strain—Can it be you, my Lord? Can this be the hand of our good Chief? The thing is that Sir Comer Petheram had never given any indications of the qualities the possession whereof was necessary to the production of such a piece. He had doubtless many gifts and acquisitions of head and heart, but the humanities formed no part of them. There are, however, occasionally what in Bengali parlance we call "colour-stealing mangoes"—fruits which look green to the last, even though they may be ripe to the verge of rottenness, or, for that matter, to absolute rottenness. The wonder is how this amiable dignitary could so long contrive to hide his light under a bushel.

THE Mahomedan Literary Society celebrate their Silver Jubilee at the Town Hall on Monday. The Founder-Secretary and his old coadjutors deserve the highest praise for having maintained the Society for a quarter of a century, and they will, we are sure, receive the amplest congratulations on this happy occasion. The Mahomedans, and not a few Hindus, are indebted to the Society for bringing them together in friendly intercourse in pursuit of knowledge and instruction. The Mahomedans may well feel proud on the occasion. We hope our Hindu brethren will, by their attendance and bearing, shew their appreciation of the efforts of their fellow citizens in the good cause of fellowship and knowledge. Lord Lansdowne is expected. We trust our native friends will remember the friendly admonition of the Indian Daily News, and show themselves in becoming costume. All who understand the proprieties will, of course, wear turbans. Certainly, no one in flimsy Lucknow or Benares caps should ever deliberately appear before the representative of the sovereign. No "comforters" of course, unless of Indian shawl.

THE Honourable Andrew R. Scoble, Member of the Supreme Council, is no dark-souled Draco, who has retired into his sage's tub in the spirit in which a certain class of men, according to Dickens, elect the office of turnpike collector. He is no mere legist absorbed in his official pursuits without time or inclination for the amenities and obligations of life. A ripe genial man, with a well-balanced soul, he is ready to discharge the social duties appertaining to his high position, and to mix familiarly with all classes of the population. No doubt, he thereby not only enjoys himself but also improves in professional efficiency itself. The other day he presided at the Anniversary of the Calcutta Mahomedan College, the earliest educational institution under British rule, founded by Warren Hastings. Last week, he handsomely patronised the Emerald Theatre and passed an evening at a native play. This afternoon, he was present at the fête of the Calcutta Training Academy and gave away the prizes to the boys, concluding with a suitable speech. After the Oriental Seminary, this is the oldest independent private school in Calcutta, entirely under native management. It has survived the vicissitudes—including the intrigues and jealousies—of thirty years. Babu Nemat Charan Bose's Shambazar Amateur Band was in attendance and opened with a well-played march.

We are glad to announce that Sreemati Sarbamongala Dasi, the widow of the late Kumar Satya Jeban Ghosal of Bhukolas, has kindly contributed Rs. 500 towards the cost of erecting a building for the Victoria Barahanagar School. This is a most discriminate act of genuine charity and, coming from a Brahman widow, it is a princely donation.

THE fortunes of a wealthy Kabri Brahman family settled high up in North Bengal, must always be interesting to us down in or about South Karh. We are, therefore, highly gratified to read in the papers the good accounts of the young Chaudhuri Baboo of Chanchal, in the Malda District. As a minor under the Court of Wards, he was fortunate in his tutor and guardian Babu Tripura Charan Banerjee, an accomplished young gentleman, who appears to have succeeded in training up this child of opulence in the way he should go. He maintains a school at a cost of Rs. 200 per mensem, besides supporting inferior educational agency in other parts of his estate. He bears the chief share of the local contributions for the local Charitable Dispensary. He is trying to induce the Telegraph Department to connect the local post office by wire.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1889.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN ON ANNEXATION.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN has found out a new way of conciliating a people "passionately fond of independence." It is by subverting their independence. That a sane man should hold and preach such a doctrine, seems incredible; but we quote Sir Lepel's letter, dated Dec. 18, to the Times :—

"The policy suggested and foreshadowed in your leading article of this morning is the only one that can restore peace to the Red Sea littoral, and until it is adopted the action of this and every succeeding Government will be exposed to criticism and censure as just and reasonable as that which Lord Randolph Churchill applied to it last night. As long as we hold Suakim for the justly detested Egyptian Government, so long will the fanatical tribes under their religious leaders swarm about our outposts like bees, ever driven away and ever returning. Annex Suakim and the surrounding country to the British Empire, and station there a locally or an Indian raised corps under Englishmen, with English civil and political officers, and in six months the country will be as quiet as South Kensington. There is no other means of salvation, and all the diplomacy of officials or amateurs will be vain when the people know that we are holding Suakim as a mere temporary measure, and that it will be some day surrendered into the hands of their ancient oppressors. My experience in Afghanistan was of a population very similar to the Soudanese. The Afghans are fanatical Mahomedans—brave, and passionately fond of independence and freedom. They were completely under the control of their priests or mollahs, and were not to be influenced except through them. Our difficulty in Afghanistan was precisely that which we now experience at Suakim. We came to occupy temporarily, not to annex, and every one's hand was necessarily against us. Had we annexed Afghanistan, which we will assuredly do the next time we enter that undesirable country, the difficulties of its management would at once have disappeared. England has a special talent for ruling Mahomedans, who thoroughly appreciate her system, and her Majesty governs to-day a far larger Mahomedan population than the Sultan of Turkey, and with far greater contentment and success. The Mahomedans of the Soudan do not hate the English, but are well disposed towards us. They hate the Egyptian Government, for excellent and sufficient reasons, and we have no divine mission to slaughter brave and well-disposed tribes in the interest of that Government, which is inherently bad and corrupt, and which will return to its evil courses the moment we cease to control it, if we are ever so imbecile as to do so. If Mr. Gladstone's Ministry had only acted with decision and courage and seized Opportunity by her hair when she passed them by, and had annexed Egypt when no one was in a position to object, we should have no troubles there or in the Soudan to-day. But the chance was lost and may not return until the country and Parliament have found the sense and patriotism to accept Lord Charles Beresford's advice, and so strengthen our naval force that no Power will lightly dare to declare war against us.

"Meanwhile, let the Government do what can be alone effectual for our immediate necessities, and annex the Soudan district. Suakim cannot, with any safety, be abandoned; and, if it be held, it should be owned and administered by England, and not by Egypt."

Sir Lepel will hardly deny, what all the world maintains, that, to a people "passionately fond of independence," the yoke of the stranger is a great evil; otherwise, the "love of independence" is an unmeaning phrase. To hear him assert that such an evil is intolerable only when it is temporary, but that it will be welcomed as a boon as soon as it becomes permanent and perpetual, is enough to make one doubt his sanity. Common sense would suggest that a temporary evil is better than an endless calamity; but the acute intellect of Sir Lepel Griffin appears to be above common sense. We are called on to infer that, if the English had dethroned Shah Sujah and taken possession of his country, Akbar Khan would have rushed into the arms of Sir William Macnaghten and embraced him as a friend, and the tragedy of the Khoord Cabul Pass would not have taken place; it is only because the occupation of Cabul was temporary, that Sir William was murdered and the army of occupation massacred. Sir Lepel is at liberty to entertain such an opinion; but the public will say it is simply absurd.

Again, what is the analogy between the Indian Mussulmans and the Afghans or the Soudanese? They profess a common creed; that is all. The Soudanese and the Afghans are fanatical; the Indian Mussulmans, with a few exceptions, are not. The Afghans and the Soudanese are, according to Sir Lepel himself, passionately fond of independence—a feeling which has been almost extinguished in the breasts of the Indian Mussulmans, by long subjection to a foreign rule. Sir Syed Ahmed, the typical Indian Mussulman, is doubtless a brave man; he is certainly braver than his bête noir—the Bengali Babu—who hides himself under the table at the sight of a carving knife; but it is no disparagement to the gallant knight to say that, in respect of both good and bad qualities, he is as different as possible from the Mahdi, the typical Soudanese. In short, a precedent drawn from Indian history is wholly inapplicable to the Soudanese. The followers of the Mahdi are much more like the followers of Abdel Kader of Algiers than they are like the Indian Mussulmans, and it would be astonishing, indeed, if the English conquest of the Soudan be not followed by the same kind of troubles that attended the French conquest of Algiers, and most fortunate, if English arms be not disgraced by a crime similar to that which has left an indelible stain on the memory of Marshal St. Arnaud.

Sir Lepel says, "England has a special talent for ruling Mahomedans who thoroughly appreciate her system." By "Mahomedans," he means, of course, "Indian Mahomedans." If the Egyptian Mahomedans thoroughly appreciated the English system, Arabi Pasha would not now be at Colombo. That the Indian Mussulmans, in common with the Hindoos, are thoroughly loyal to Her Majesty and that they appreciate the benefits of the British rule, is doubtless true; but whether such appreciation can be said to be "thorough," depends on the meaning we attach to the word. Take the case of the Nizam, the greatest Mahomedan Chief in India. Can his Highness's appreciation of the British rule be said to be thorough, when his standing grievance is the annexation and unjust retention of the Berars by the British, and when a certain high British official connived at his being fleeced, on the right and left, by greedy adventurers, native as well as British? If by thorough appreciation by the mass of Indian Mussulmans, the absence of all grievance is implied, Sir Lepel is quite mistaken. The Mahomedans are at one with the Hindus in holding that they should have a larger share in the administration of the country; only they pursue the same object in different ways. We are much afraid, that, however benevolent the intentions of Her Majesty's Government may be, officials like Messrs. Cordery and Marshall and Plowden and Wilson and Salmon—to take a few recent instances out of a host—will make a thorough appreciation of the British rule impossible.

THE EXCISE.

THE OUTSTILL SYSTEM.

MR. WESTMACOTT'S enquiry into the abuses of the outstill system has, at any rate, done one good. It has brought back the question into retrieval. The present Government of Bengal appears to be determined that, if the outstill system should be retained, its working must be free from those evils the existence of which, after Mr. Westmacott's report, even the Board of Revenue are not prepared to deny. The present attitude of the Board towards the subject, is in marked contrast with the indifference and even cynical contempt with which all representations from the public, against the practical effects of the system, were used to be received. This change is, no doubt, due to the explicit expression of opinion which Sir Stuart Bayley recorded on Mr. Westmacott's report. The Board are now at great pains to set their house in order. In the last report on the Excise Administration in these provinces, the Board have considered the subject at great length and pointed out the various safeguards which have been employed for minimizing the evils of the outstills.

The main object required to be kept in view is, that the manufacture of liquor at these stills should be limited to the local demand, and that the price at which outstill liquor is sold should be sufficiently high not to stimulate its consumption. The difficulty, however, of ascertaining the local demand, appears to be almost insuperable, and the Board's report is not without indications of their appreciation of it. It is true the Patna system of working the outstills has been extended into ten additional districts in course of the last year, but some of its characteristic features were omitted. The minimum prices were not fixed, nor the use of metal vats insisted on. This system, notwithstanding these reservations, is reported by District officers to have worked fairly well, but the fact is these reports of excise officials are plainly contradicted by the actual experience of the people.

However alive the Government might be to the pernicious effects of the administration of outstills, its action in the usual course must be based upon advices from its officers. Sir Steuart Bayley, however, has come to the conclusion that the extension of the outstill system into metropolitan districts was a mistake. Of course, this extension was adopted in Sir Rivers Thompson's time upon the Board's recommendation which, in its turn, followed upon the opinion of officers. "With the light of the experience since acquired," says the present Government, "the Lieutenant-Governor is, however, disposed to think that it is probably a sound principle that, in the metropolitan districts at least, outstills should not be substituted for distilleries, and it remains for the Board to consider whether, in the face of all the facts elicited by this special enquiry, it would not be wise even now to revert to the distillery system in these districts."

We cannot be sufficiently grateful to the Government for the above expression of its views. Indeed, were it not for the active and passive obstructiveness of the Excise Department of the Government, the system would be doomed. The following extract from the Resolution of the Government would show that so far as the Government is concerned, the system has very little chance:—

"But the most valuable conclusion to be drawn from Mr. Westmacott's report is that to which the Lieutenant Governor has already drawn attention in the Government Resolution of the 13th October last, that if the outstill system is to be maintained, the regulation of the outturn is the main point to which all efforts must be directed. If this has to be given up, the system must be abandoned. The Lieutenant Governor is glad, therefore, to notice the evidences which are furnished by the Board's Administration Report that the importance of this duty is fully recognized by the Board of Revenue. Under the Patna system, —so called because it was first introduced into that district, the size and capacity of each still, and the number and capacity of the vats in which the yeast for distillation is prepared, are regulated by the local demand, and it is upon this demand that the upset fees are calculated. The difficulty of this process is obviously very great; but it ought not to be impossible, and the object aimed at is one which it is necessary to attain irrespective of revenue considerations. The Patna system was extended in 1887-88 to ten other districts, and in the current year to seven more. In regard to the local demand in these districts, the Collectors have reported that they believe the statistics furnished by them to be correct and trustworthy for all practical purposes. It is also said that there was not much difficulty in limiting the capacities of stills and vats in conformity to the local demand. The abkars made no other complaint than that the restrictions entailed additional labour and expense in distilling liquor; but this is so far satisfactory that it leads directly to the price of liquor being raised. The local officers are unanimously of opinion that the system has worked fairly well. This is a very encouraging report; and though the Lieutenant-Governor fears it is somewhat more sanguine than the circumstances altogether warrant, it indicates the determination of officers concerned to give a fair trial to the recommendations of the Excise Commission with which the Government has identified itself."

We are in hopes, at any rate, of substantial changes in the system. The time is full of promise. Mr. Westmacott is again to be deputed to deal with the practical administration of this branch of the excise. Public opinion, in the meantime, has come to a head. The strong adhesion of the Missionary body to the cause has brought an accession of strength to the popular organization for combating the evil. The study which Mr. Caine has, during his recent tour in this country, bestowed on the subject, is also expected to bear fruit. And, last of all, we have at the head of the Government a man who appears to have already been convinced of the enormities of which the excise administration in the past was capable.

MUNICIPAL RECONSTRUCTION IN THE SUBURBS.

A DEPARTURE IN PRINCIPLE AND PRACTICE.

THE South-Suburban Municipality is proposed to be split up into two municipalities. In the opinion of the Special Committee of the Suburban Municipal Commissioners, with delegates from the Baranagar and South-Suburban Municipalities, it was decided that, after the exclusion of all agricultural and waste lands, the South-Suburban Municipality should be divided into two Municipalities with the Diamond Harbour Road as the line of demarcation, and that the excluded portions of Wards I., V. and VI. of the Suburbs should be added to the Municipality on the east and on the west of the line. This Resolution appears to have been almost unanimously agreed to at the Special Committee meeting, but as the proposed revision of boundaries can only be effected by the Government on the recommendation of the Commissioners of the South-Suburban Municipality in meeting, there is a difficulty in the way. The Commissioners are not disposed to ratify the vote given by their delegates, and some of the delegates, too, are understood to be now actively opposing the arrangement to which they had given their consent at the Special Committee meeting.

As regards the Baranagar Municipality from which delegates were invited, little change was suggested. While these delegates were authorized by their Commissioners to assent to a scheme of amalgamation of the whole of their municipality with the excluded portion of Ward I. of the Suburban Municipality, namely, Cossipore and Chitpore, nothing of the sort appears to have been in the contemplation of the Suburban Municipal Commissioners. In fact, it is difficult to see why delegates from Baranagar were asked for at all, unless it were to endorse a proposal of Babu Asutosh Biswas, Vice-Chairman of the Suburban Municipality, for taking in a bit of Sintoee now enclosed in the Baranagar Municipality and adding it to the Suburbs. This the Baranagar delegates refused to do, and the only Resolution with regard to the northern portion of the excluded area was that the excluded portions of Ward I. of the Suburban Municipality, lying on the North of the Circular Canal, should be formed into a separate Municipality, the dissenting members being the Baranagar delegates and a Commissioner of the South-Suburban Municipality. Indeed, it appears to have been so far a foregone conclusion with Mr. Bolton, and his Vice-Chairman and Commissioners that, beyond a little portion of Sintoee, there should be no amalgamation with Baranagar. Not a trace of the proposition urged by the Baranagar delegates for the amalgamation of their Municipality with Cossipore and Chit-pore, on the strong grounds of the whole of these townships being of an analogous character and their having a common system of drainage, is, however, to be found in the proceedings.

The only Resolution about which there seems to be no difference of opinion, relates to the excluded portions on the east. The unanimous arrangement came to, was that the excluded portions of Ward II of the Suburban Municipality lying on the east of the Circular Canal, together with the portion of Ward I of the said municipality lying on the south and east of the said Canal, should be formed into a separate municipality.

Four municipalities are thus to arise and form the Suburbs of New Calcutta. They will necessarily be much smaller in extent than those which they supersede, and indeed the idea which seems to have found favor with the authors of this scheme, is that smaller municipalities are better for administrative purposes than larger ones. Whatever the merits of this opinion, it is, at any rate, thoroughly opposed to the principle which has all along been in the ascendant in official minds, and only a practical application of which is now the all but accomplished fact of the extension of the limits of Calcutta. As regards the Baranagar municipality, it is strange the present Commissioners of the Suburban Municipality are so strongly disinclined to any proposals for amalgamation with Baranagar, for their action now is in marked contrast with the object persistently had in view for about the last quarter of a century, by successive district and divisional authorities, for adding Baranagar to the then unwieldy limits of the Suburban Municipality, before the annexation of its best portions to Calcutta, and the present scheme of partition into small municipalities on every side.

ALCOHOL AND VIRTUE.

THE NEW SCIENTIFIC ROAD TO HEAVEN.

IT was Lord Beaconsfield, we believe, who, speaking of France, observed that it is the unlikely that happens there. That remark would lose none of its force by being made general. On all sides, we are being confronted by the unlikely. Nay, more than that. Impossible? c'est le mot d'un fou! cried Napoleon. During the greater part of a century that has since elapsed, that ominous word has gone on losing credit, until it is at its lowest. We now dare not call anything impossible, for fear of a sudden rude awakening. This is particularly the case in the sphere of science, and its application to the arts and conveniences of life. But it is scarcely less in the moral world. It is an age of surprises in every department, whether of thought or action. Discoveries come upon us thick and fast

Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks
In Vallombrosa.

Truly does the Poet sing

The old order changes giving place to new,
And God fulfils himself in many ways.

It is not only that the progress of knowledge and the multiplication of arts and industry have made things pleasant for us. The departure in the region of the mind is no less remarkable. We are passing through a revolution. Old methods have been succeeded by new—old principles have been surrendered in favour of new. There seems no help for it. The old intellectual and moral order has been slowly and imperceptibly but surely undermined, and the beliefs of ages are expiring. In fact, there is more destruction than construction. The scene is filled with broken towers, but there are no equal traces of new architecture. There is far too much prevalence of distrust and doubt everywhere. Earthquakes are the order of the day. The ground has become peculiarly sensitive and liable to disturbance.

There is no depending on the security of any foundations, however stable. One would have thought, for instance, that whatever might be uncertain, the connection between drunk-eness and crime is, at any rate, sure. But even that position is now being assailed, and by a formidable enemy, with a strong heavy battery. While Mr. Caine was agitating throughout India the cause of temperance, a European philosopher in France was laying before the world the results of his patient inquiry into the effects of ebriety and inebriety on the nations, and giving the palm to the latter. We refer to Mons de Flaix, who, after a study of the influence of alcohol on morality and health, has come to the following conclusions:

"France consumes less alcohol than the United Kingdom: its birth-rate is less, and its mortality, criminality, and suicide rates are greater. Italy consumes very little alcohol; its criminality is appalling. Spain consumes three times less alcohol than Italy: its criminality is double. Sweden, Denmark, and Norway, with a population of about one-third, consume four times the quantity of alcohol consumed in Italy, and yet the criminality of the former is very small, while that of the latter is appalling."

Could anything be more startling? If ever there was unanimity on any point, it was on this. The most abandoned toper never claimed any special merit for his grog—he only apologised for his individual weakness. The boldest reasoner dared not to go beyond a word in favour of mild hilarity over a glass. It is cruel, therefore, to be so treated in respect of our most cherished notion. But it is a hopeless case, we are afraid. There is no contending against fate. The truth has been declared by the voice of statistics. Facts are stubborn things. The irresistible logic of figures has declared against the established consensus of opinion, and opinion—even the consensus of it must go. Truth is great and must prevail. In loyalty to it, let us be content to make this sacrifice.

Sacrifice, indeed! The surrender involves little sacrifice. The sacrifice is all the other way. What could be more welcome to mankind than the teaching of M. de Flaix's facts and figures? We are all ready enough for the devil without much effort at temptation from that restless old gentleman. But what a handle for a plea does he give! The rosy paths of pleasure need little extraneous encouragement to fill them. The opportunity of sinning in good company proves too strong a call to many minds. Here we are not only beguiled by the "fascination of a name hoodwinked," but actually commanded as it were to vice by all-knowing philosophy and all powerful science.

But is the case really so bad? We confess the finale of M. Flaix's enquiries—the conclusion of his labours as summarised in the above quotation—brought forcibly to our mind the famous epigram of Lord Melbourne—Nothing is so fallacious as facts—except figures. A profound truth, the fruition of the rich experience of life and affairs of a sagacious, and by no means a truly cynical, statesman. Here, all at once, we perceive the superiority of the a priori method. Our instinct tells us that there must be some mistake in the matter. At any rate, there can be no ground for the alleged connection between crime and temperance as between intemperance and a virtuous life and conversation. There must be other causes, which have been lost sight of, to account for the anomaly—the queer result. Herein, indeed, is always the rub. Hasty generalization is the bane of reasoning.

We are apt to be staggered by an array of facts and figures. It would be better if we kept our heads and maintained our courage to look into the matter and look about us. Facts may be stubborn, but we ought to take care to ascertain that they are not pretenders under a false name. The logic of figures may be inexorable, but we ought to remember that figures may be inaccurate, and even "cooked." We impute no dishonesty to M. Flaix, but he may have been deceived. We know as a fact that they are often wonderfully manipulated by reasoners who could not in private life tell a fib even for a great advantage.

In the present discussion, accepting the facts and figures, all that they make out is, that certain countries are none the worse for indulgence in alcohol, while others are no better for their abstention. But who knows but that the good are so in spite of indulgence and that the bad are bad from some other reason independent of temperance in vinous liquor.

M. Flaix's announcement must be a godsend to the publicans and sinners. The former have, of late, been in rather a bad way, from the assaults of their enemies, chief of whom is the progress of education and of comfort in home life. Our teetotal friends are not likely to lose heart under the revelation. They are bigotted enough to stare in the face of electric light in comfortable unconsciousness.

THE CONVOCATION ADDRESS

DELIVERED BY SIR COMER PETHERAM.

Your Excellency the Chancellor, Members of the Senate, and Graduates of the University of Calcutta,—Literature is full of truisms based on the contrast between promise and performance, on the disproportion of lofty designs to the meagre results which they too often produce. The vanity of human wishes, the futility of human schemes, has been part of the stock-in-trade of the critic ever since men began to reflect upon the irony of cause and effect. Wit of this order is mainly occupied with pointing the morals to be drawn from attempts to do something very great which result in achieving very little. It fixes on a would-be mountain of a cause and makes merry over the tiny consequence to which it has given birth. The converse case is one we hear less about. The critic finds small scope for ridicule in those apparently minor causes which commence life in a quiet and unpretentious style and end by bringing about consequences out of all proportion to what was expected of them. Many, if not most, of the forces which have transformed the world were in their origin obscure, nor had the men who set them going the least idea of the importance of what they were doing. To the day of his death Columbus believed that he had merely found a new way to India, when he had really discovered the whole vast continent of America. In the face of contrasts of this sort, where performance so immeasurably outruns promise, the average critic is silent. There is no opening for his cynicism there. He usually takes refuge in being studiously wise after the event, and protests in more or less ornamental language that he knew it all before. The measure to which the Calcutta University owes, if not its existence, at any rate the highly-developed form in which it comes before us to-day, seems to me worthy to rank among the second of the two classes of causes which I have endeavoured to distinguish—among those measures the effects of which surpass rather than fall short of the expectations of their authors. Fifty-four years ago, when Lord Macaulay wrote the splendid Minute, which led Lord William Bentinck to decide that “the great object of the British Government ought to be the promotion of European literature and science among the natives of India,” it may be doubted whether any of the men who took part in that historic controversy fully realised the momentous character of the decision which closed it. Lord Macaulay himself, though laying stress on the civilizing influence of the languages of Western Europe, seems to have regarded the whole question mainly from the literary point of view, and to have had no inkling of the far-reaching consequences, social, religious, and political, which the Governor-General’s decision involved not for India only, but possibly for the whole of Asia. This need not surprise us. Lord Macaulay was in the first place a man of letters—that was the natural bent of his mind, and he lives for us and for the world in that character. He was a statesman only in a secondary degree, and I am doing no wrong to his deservedly great reputation—a reputation which the Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University should ever be the first to honour—when I say that he has no claim to be venerated as a prophet. He was the Columbus of Education in India, but he too realised very imperfectly the full importance of his discovery. He thought he had found an old world, when he had really created a new one—the India of the future. But without travelling beyond the literary aspects of the question, no one can fail to see that the marvellous spread of the study of the English language and literature in India is one of the most remarkable phenomena in the history of the world. Where else shall we find an instance of the leading classes of the population of a large continent, classes representing several distinct nations and speaking diverse languages—adopting of their own free will a foreign language for the expression of their most highly educated thought and feeling? Here is no question of Government influence or pressure—of a Russia striving to extirpate the Polish language from Poland, and using every device open to a really despotic Government to discourage and prohibit its use. Such things have been done, but not in India and not by England. Nothing indeed is more striking than the spontaneous character of the demand for English education in Bengal, and the comparatively small extent to which it has been artificially fostered by Government. When a stranger entering one of our district courts hears the advocates on both sides arguing in fluent English, his first thought would naturally be that we had followed the example of the Mahomedan rulers of Bengal and had made English, as they made Persian, the official language of the courts. Nothing of the kind, however, has been attempted or thought of. The vernacular of each province is the language of the courts, and the daily increasing use of English in pleadings and other public business is due solely to the zeal with which the upper and middle classes have given themselves to the study of that language. Historical parallels to such a state of things are hard to find. Instances are not wanting where the people of one country have derived their standard of literary excellence from the great writers of another country, but the influence thus exercised has usually been limited to style and treatment, and has not proved strong enough to induce men to turn to a foreign language as offering the readiest and most telling medium for the expression of their best thoughts. The Roman students of Greek literature did not write in Greek, nor was their close imitation of foreign models conceived of as undertaken with any other purpose than that of purifying and perfecting their own literature. Things went further, it will be said, in the Western Provinces of the Roman Empire, and, centuries later, in those parts of America which fell under Spanish influence. But in each of these cases the change of language which took place was initiated by the colonizing activity of the ruling race, and was favoured by the fact that the languages displaced were little better than barbarous dialects. Turning now from historical analogies, which are mostly futile, and may easily prove misleading, we may find much in the present state of things to arouse our keenest interest. No one is now disposed to overlook the importance of the intellectual movement that is taking place throughout India. The tendency in fact is somewhat of the opposite character. The critics fully recognise the vigour of the forces at work, and are inclined on the whole to exaggerate rather than to undervalue the actual results that have been or shortly will be produced. “We are giving,” says a philosophic observer of Oriental modes of thought, “we are giving to the Indians leisure and education, the scientific method, and the critical spirit; we are opening to them the flood-gates behind which Western knowledge is piled in far greater volume than the stream of Grecian philosophy which the Romans distributed over their Empire.” Sir Alfred Lyall goes on to predict, as the consequence of our gifts to the people of India, a wide and rapid transformation of religion within two or three generations. The same line of thought may be traced in other writers who have perhaps less claim to our respectful attention than the late Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, the founder of the sister University of Allahabad. All agree in prophesying great things of the new learning, and in speculating on the manifold changes which it may be expected to effect in all departments of human life in India. Now, it seems to me that this tendency to indulge in general statements, is one which requires to be carefully watched and, strictly controlled, if we would avoid the danger of deceiving ourselves and the rest of the world. The precept of self-knowledge is perhaps the most enduring maxim of the ancient philosophers. It is certainly one to which we may profitably turn our attention to-day. Here in Calcutta, at the centre of Western learning and culture in the East, the Delphi whence oracles issue to all Indian worshippers at the shrine of knowledge,—here surely is a fitting place, as the close of our academic year is the appropriate time, for enquiring what fruits the tree of knowledge has borne for the peoples of India. There are those who see in it even now a mere exotic sapling which will never grow into a serviceable tree, while others hold that its roots have already struck deep, and that its branches are destined to over-spread Asia and renew the failing life of the East. By the fruits only can we know which of these opinions is the nearer to the truth, and it is for this reason that I ask you to follow me now in an attempt to form some estimate of the actual results, social, religious, and political, of the English teaching of the Calcutta University. I feel that any one who addresses the members of an Indian University on this subject must be much in the position of the intelligent foreigner who figures so conspicuously in the social apologues of the eighteenth century. From the nature of the case he can observe things only from the outside, and he must expect that some of the more obscure causes will escape his view altogether. But making full allowance for this source of error, it strikes me that many of the changes which may be put down to Western influence lie only on the surface of Indian life, and that the really important factors in the social system are comparatively unaffected. No doubt there has been an enormous increase in the number of people who speak English, some prejudices regarding food have been laid aside, European dress is beginning to be fashionable, and one of the most ancient usages of Eastern etiquette has been abolished by the agency of Western boot-makers. Travelling has become more general, Indian social ideas have adapted themselves to the requirements of railways, the fullest use is made of the Post Office and the Telegraph, and every inclination is shown to take advantage of the comforts and conveniences which European ingenuity has to offer. But below this veneer of imported civilisation what signs can we discern of the weightier social changes which Western teaching might have been expected to induce? The elaborate scheme of prohibitions on intermarriage, which is called the caste system, appears to be as strong now as it was when Lord Macaulay was in India. Here and there the stringency of a rule may have been relaxed, but in its essentials the system is the same. Members of different castes can no more intermarry now than they could then, and the leading principle of the institution thus remains unshaken in spite of its manifest incompatibility with the precepts of Western culture. It may be said that to argue thus is to ask too much, that the habits of centuries cannot be unlearned in a few years, and that ideas only just struggling into existence must needs work imperfectly for a time. With the voice of warning which deprecates too rapid advance, I am, I need hardly say, entirely in accord. But if the spirit of English education had really penetrated among the people of Bengal as deeply as is alleged, might we not expect it to have effected something more definite in the way of promoting social progress and individual freedom? Could anything be more opposed to the liberal spirit by which modern India affects to be animated than the rule forbidding a widow to take a second husband, and the custom, so injurious to the physical and intellectual vigour of the race, which requires a girl to be married before she attains puberty? These blemishes are gross and palpable; they are of comparatively recent origin; and the Indian of the Vedic or Epic ages would have condemned them as strongly as the Englishman of to-day. The hesitation to attack them in earnest can only be due to the fact that the deeper lessons of English education have not really been learned; that the Indian ideal of life is still contemplative rather than active; and that the notion of going forth to combat great abuses is as strange and distasteful as that of adopting a profession which demands physical exertion as one of the conditions of success. But this contemplative habit of mind which prefers ideas to realities, theory to practice, book-learning to the observation of facts, whatever may be its weakness in the domain of action, becomes a source of strength directly we enter the cloud-land of religion. It is the fashion of the day to assume that European science and philosophy are making short work of the Hindoo religion. The distinguished writer whom I have already quoted thinks we "may conjecture that its roots are being effectually cut away," and this is a fair specimen of the tone in which the subject is usually treated. Such conjectures, if not wholly erroneous, are certainly much in advance of the evidence. This is not the place, nor have I now the time, to enter upon any lengthy discussion of the prospects of Hindooism in its encounter with European science. But the question reminds me, of the famous scene in the "Talisman" where Cœur de Lion and Saladin try their weapons. To my mind it seems as impossible for Western science to shatter the impalpable fabric of Hindooism as it was for the sword of the English King to cut through the silken cushion of the Syrian Chief. It may even be argued that in its capacity for resisting the onslaughts of science and criticism the Hindoo religion has some positive advantages over faiths of a more rigidly dogmatic type. Thus much at least is certain, the Hindooism, so far from falling to pieces in the presence of Western thought, is extending itself remarkably in certain directions. Railways have facilitated and popularised the characteristic Hindoo duty of pilgrimage, while the opening up of remote tracts of country yearly swells the ranks of a religion conspicuous for its power of adapting itself to novel conditions. If, then, in social and religious matters the tangible results arising from the teaching of this University are on the whole insignificant, to what cause should we assign the fact that its general influence is held so high?

(To be Continued.)

DACCA.

January 19, 1889.

Little of interest has transpired here since the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava left our town. And now that the celebrated Kartik Baruni Mela is drawing to a close, a word about it may not be uninteresting to your readers. It begins in December and lasts for two months. Traders from different parts of the country, meet here with varieties of articles of commerce. Situated as it is along the banks of the Dhaleswari, near the junction of the Megna, the Burigunga and the Pudma, this Mela occupies a pretty convenient site. It is only a few minutes' journey from Munshigunj, and the Dhaleswari separates it from Naraingunj, the port of East Bengal. Hundreds of shops are set up in rows, and commodities of different kinds are offered for sale. Cloths, metalware, timber, stationery, &c., are all to be found in abundance. But what struck me most was the absence of any country-made cloths throughout this big Mela, whose fame has spread so far and wide. It is a pity that native industry is gradually decaying, and we will no more hear of it ere long, if our public men do not pay immediate attention to its encouragement. But, after all, this Mela is a grand affair and ought to command the attention of those who take any interest in the commercial prosperity of India. Our patriots would be well advised to encourage this and similar other institutions in different parts of the country.

Fire worked its utmost horrors in some parts of the town only the other day. Many native sheds and huts were burnt down and heavy damage was done to the poor inmates. We fondly hope that the big folks of Dacca will not stint their liberality to render every possible help to those who suffered from the late outbreak of fire.

We are having a splendid time of it now; the weather is fine, the sky clear, and general health good: Rice is selling at Rs. 2-4 to Rs. 3-8 a maund, but the prospects of crop are anything but favourable.

Holloway's Ointment.—Miners and Workers in the Goldfields. This invaluable and renowned Ointment is extensively used and patronized by such people to their very great advantage, being easy of application and portable in small compass. When used in conjunction with Holloway's Pills in accordance with the clear and concise directions for use which accompany each pot and box, there are but few of the diseases which afflict mankind which will not yield to the sanative powers of the combined remedies. Holloway's Ointment and Pills do not deteriorate by keeping nor by change of climate, and as they contain no deleterious mineral drug, they can be used with the most perfect safety under the most adverse climatic and sanitary conditions.

A FANCY FAIR

In an Ancient English Street

with attendants in costume

WILL BE HELD AT THE

FREE SCHOOL

on the 1st, 2nd, 4th, 5th, & 6th February,

under the Patronage and immediate

PRESENCE OF

T. E. THE VICEROY AND

The Marchioness of Lansdowne.

Tableux Vivants, Theatricals, Waxworks, Fireworks, Marry-go-rounds and other amusements too numerous to detail.

MASSED BANDS.

Gates open from 4-30 to 11 P.M.,

Admission fee Re. 1, Children 4 As.

Saturday, 2nd February,

From 1 o'Clock to 4-30 p. m.

WILL BE SET ASIDE AT THE

FANCY FAIR,

CALCUTTA FREE SCHOOL,

Expressly for Zenana Ladies,

H. E. The Marchioness of Lansdowne

Has promised to be present.

AN OLD ENGLISH STREET

With Attendants in Costume will be on View.

TABLEUX VIVANTS

In which only Ladies will appear.

AN ORGAN RECITAL

By Miss GRAY,

BRAN PEE,

Full of Presents for the Children.

All Purdah arrangements will be strictly adhered to; and all Attendants will be Ladies.

Tickets of Admission can be procured beforehand from

H. H. THE MAHARANI OF ...Cooch Behar.

MRS. COLQUHOUN GRANT ...Kudder pore.

MRS. M. GHOSE... ..4, Theatre Road.

LADY WILSON34, Chowringhee.

MISS HOAREPeculputty Road.

MRS. AMER ALI8, Harrington St.

MRS. JOUBERT54, Chowringhee.

If any Native Gentlemen should wish to see the arrangements made for the Zenana Ladies, and will previously communicate with Lady Wilson, 34, Chowringhee, she will be happy to meet them at the Free

School, on Thursday, the 31st instant, between 10 a. m. and 12 noon.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co. "Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "MYSORE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 25th inst., and on Tuesday the 22nd idem the Steamer "ODUH" will leave Calcutta for Cachar.

All cargo for shipment by either of the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godowns at Juggannauth Ghat the day previous to the vessels leaving Calcutta.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, and Thursdays, and Debrooghur on Mondays and Fridays.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,

Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

NOTICE.

In accordance with the Resolution of the Government of Bengal in the General Department, dated the 6th March 1886, published on page 541 of the Calcutta Gazette of the 31st of the same month, notice is hereby given that an examination for the admission of female students to the certificate class of the Calcutta Medical College will be held in the Theatre of that College on Tuesday, the 12th February 1889, and following days.

Hours and Subjects of Examination.

Tuesday.—English dictation, Grammar, and Composition—from 1 to 4 P.M.

Wednesday.—History of England and India. Geography: General, and of India in particular from 1 to 4 P.M.

Thursday.—Arithmetic: the first four rules, vulgar and decimal fractions, and proportion—from 1 to 4 P.M.

Candidates must apply in writing to the Principal of the Medical College, Calcutta, not later than Saturday, the 9th February, for permission to appear at the examination.

Applications for permission to reside in the Sarnamayi Hostel should be addressed to the Honorary Secretary to the Bengal Branch of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund, 36, Chowringhee, Calcutta.

A. CROFT,

Director of Public Instruction.

The 7th January 1889.

THE SILVER JUBILEE

OF THE

MAHOMEDAN LITERARY SOCIETY.

The Society having completed a career of a Quarter of a Century, will hold its Twenty-Fifth Annual Conversazione, at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 28th January 1889, at 9 P.M.

ABDOOL LUTEEF,

Secretary.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulator, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusil, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lozets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmsore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutta, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

ST. LEONARDS ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

FOR SALE

Price Post free Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BY

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whether he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how central is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most envying description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course:—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

TRUE TO ITS NAME,

JEYES' "PERFECT PURIFIER"

Is the best disinfectant and exterminator of all objectionable odours and infectious diseases. It cleanses the roads, purifies the atmosphere and disinfects the drains, keeps the sick-room pure and healthy.

EQUALLY USEFUL TO

ANIMAL AND POULTRY,

It keeps a cowshed pure and sweet.
It improves the coat, destroys vermin, keeps fly off, stamps out all infectious diseases.
It is a specific for foot and mouth disease.
It kills all unpleasant smell without setting up another smell of its own.
It kills fleas, red lice and vermin of every kind in Poultry, Pigeons, Cattle, Horses, Dogs, Cats, &c. Effectually cures Gapes, Roup and Comb Disease in Poultry.

IT IS GARDENER'S FRIEND AS WELL.

It destroys moss and weeds on gravel pathways and exterminates worms from lawns.
It is a valuable destroyer of all kinds of ants.
It kills green fly, red spider, thrip, mealy bug, removes worms from the soil in pots, &c.

Agents: DYCE, NICOL & CO.,

3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

BEETHAM'S
GLYCERINE - AND -
CUCUMBER

For INDIA and all HOT CLIMATES, this is the most valuable and most effective preparation. IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and MOIST, and prevents the most dangerous effects of the SUN, REMOVES and prevents all SUNBURN, CHLORID, FRECKLES, TAN, &c., and REFINES the SKIN DELICATELY, and GIVES IT A SOFT and WHITE appearance.

It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY and WRINKLED, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN and WIND more effectively than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BURNING and STINGING OF THE SUN is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers M. BEEHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."*All who suffer find sure relief fromLITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM*The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co., R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

*Price by post 8½ annas.ASRUKANA

A Collection of poems in Bengali by
SRIMATI GIRINDRAMOHINI DASSY
(Author of Kabutar, Bhurat Kusum.)

Asrukana is a collection of poetical pieces of singular pathos and beauty of expression. It is a series of mournful songs that the reader is here presented with and they must touch a sympathetic cord in every heart that can feel. There is a singular appropriateness in the title of the work, and in its pious dedication to the memory of the husband of the fair writer. The Indian Nation.

The authoress is not unknown to Bengali readers. She has already published two or three poems by which she is favourably known, but between these poems and this is a difference that hardly admits of being measured.

This is poetry in life

We have read Sumati Guindra Mohini's poems in a reverential spirit. The poems are all of a lyrical description. The lyre is soft, sweet and tender, but awfully strong.

The tone of the poems is inexpressibly gentle, inexpressibly pure, and inexpressibly tender and affectionate. It is the tone of a world mother.

Bengal should be proud of this poem-- The Calcutta Review.

Apply at the Bee Press,

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Calcutta.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)

THE CALCUTTA
HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY,
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co., beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

*No EXTRA CHARGE.BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas

or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of
A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

NOW READY.

The Report of the 3rd Indian National Congress, held at Madras during the last week of 1887.

Price Re. 1 including postage. Apply to M. V. Chatter, 100, Mount Road, Madras.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENTTHE PILLS

Purify the Blood; correct all Disorders of the
LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incident to Females of all Ages.
For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,
Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

TEA! TEA! TEA!

Cheapest & Best,
SUPPLIED BY
THE

INDIAN TEA SUPPLY CO."LIMITED."

In packets of 1 oz., 2 oz. and 4 oz. each from 3 pice only and upwards.

Note the Low Price.
A Packet of Tea for 3 pice!

Important News for India,

WHERE FEVERS AND CHOLERA
REIGN SUPREME.

A RECENT TRAVELLER ON THE Chinese Coast found that District remarkably FREE FROM TYPHOID FEVER and CHOLERA. He soon discovered the cause. The people there do not drink cold water from tanks or wells, often extremely impure, but keep a pan of water constantly boiling, into which from time to time they drop a little Tea, and when thirsty THEY DRINK HOT TEA! If the weak and adulterated Teas of China can do this, what may not the pure and strong Teas of India be expected to effect?

Also in tins ½lb to 10lbs of various qualities to suit all tastes.

Ask for the Indian Tea Supply
Company's Teas.

We have Agents all over the Country, but want more.

Managing Agents:

LYALL MARSHALL & CO.,
4, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION,
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE in 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine
Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge,
Mysadul Hospital.

Address,

2, Ukkur Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET(PRINCE AND PEASANT)*WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly " 7
Quarterly " 4
Monthly Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager, and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. {

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1889.

} No. 360

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

THE SOLILOQUY OF MARCO.

In Manzoni's tragedy Il Conte di Carmagnola, translated from the Italian, Marco, a Venetian senator, the count's intimate friend, is confidentially informed by the Council of Ten that an order has been despatched recalling Carmagnola from the command of the army, with a view to his trial for alleged treasonable designs against the state. He is then induced to sign a paper, pledging himself to impart to no one the secret which has been thus communicated to him. His weakness of mind, infirmity of purpose, and treachery to his friend occasion a soliloquy, of which the following is a free translation :

A villain I—the die already cast—
Virtue's broad line irrevocably pass'd—
Tempted and fallen—ere this morning's light
How little knew I mine own soul aright !
Oh ! what a secret have I learnt this day ;
And could I then my trusting friend betray ?
Mark yon assassin lure him to the snare—
Yon flashing blade, yet whisper not "beware ?"
I might have saved my friend—he now must bleed—
And Heav'n, which I invoked, shall watch the deed.
This hand hath signed his doom ; if blood be spilt,
I am the damning cause—be mine the guilt.
What have I done ? why fear'd ? had I forgot
That life is oft preserved when virtue's not ?
Whence, then, this treacherous oath, and whence this fear ?
Were these grey hairs, or was my friend most dear ?
All-seeing God ! vouchsafe thine high control ;
Binge Thou my mental eye—lay bare my soul,
That I may know what caused this abject state,
Whether 't was dulness, cowardice, or fate.
When thou, my friend, shalt see (how deep the shame !)
Mid yon vile signatures, thy Marco's name—
That he invites thee—doubt shall yield to joy—
Mistrust to faith—O God ! 't is I destroy ;
Yet spoke they not of mercy—such, forsooth,
As reckless power awards to naked truth.
Mercy to him ! 't was named because his heart
Sought noble pretext for its treacherous part ;
Fear had done much, perchance without avail—
Mercy's brief mention turned the trembling scale ;
Fool did I trust, but villain did I not,
Or reason's rule or virtue's was forgot.
To each these traitors have his part assigned
By the dark guilt inherent in his mind—
To this the wreathed smile—to that the steel—
The third in brutal threats enured to deal ;
My part to make the tragic game complete,
Was base submission and most vile deceit ;
And I sustain it—baser far than they
Whom, whilst I scorn, I fear to disobey.
I sought him out—was dazzled by his fame—
His lofty genius and commanding name.
Oh ! wherefore thought I not what onerous woes
Strict ties of friendship with the great impose ?

Why did I seek up Fame's rude height to toil,
Partake the danger and divide the spoil ?
My proffered hand he grasped, and now betray'd—
Beset by foes—that hand withdraws its aid.
Waking, he seeks his friend, and where am I ?
One look of quiet scorn—he turns to die.
What have I done ? nought yet ? yon fatal scroll
Bears a deep oath—'t is graven on my soul ;
Yet if that oath were wrongful, Conscience' voice
Bids me abjure it—such be then my choice.
'A vast abyss yawns darkly 'neath mine eyes.'
One step, and I am lost ; then hold, be wise ;
Is there no middle course, my friend—mine oath ?
One word of warning shall destroy us both.
'T was a mere threat perchance—perchance 't was true.
The dreadful truth breaks flashing on my view ;
No righteous council left. Mid your dark spell,
Dissembling knaves, one thing at least is well ;
Yourselves have shaped the course that I shall go.
Yours be the obloquy, be mine the woe.
Nought will I do—enslaved and fettered still,
To your vile keeping I submit my will.
Land of my birth, adieu ! I ask no more
Than speedy death ere tidings from thy shore.
Here—urgent dangers mock my ling'ring stay,
And Heaven's especial grace ordains my way ;
I may not die for thee, most cherish'd lot,
And all thy pride and fame avail me not.
Integrity and friendship once were mine,
Both these I yield—rare offerings—at thy shrine ;
Do thou benignant teach me to control
The deep misgivings of a guilty soul !

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made with the new Meteorological Reporter of Bombay, for publishing a daily weather chart and report at the expense of the Chamber of Commerce and the Port Trust. So much for Primus in Indis.

THE East of Dacca of the 2nd inst. opens with this modest piece of information—which is doubtless going the round of our press—

"The present King of Siam has forty thousand wives !"

But which King ? For that strange country enjoys the rare luxury of more than one at the same time. The Second King's honour must require at least 30,000 of Eve's daughters to wed. Such a wide field of royal matrimony must produce an enormous mass of princes who must also marry at a princely rate, say 20,000 and 15,000 for the two Crown Princes, 15,000 and 10,000 for the Heirs Presumptive, and 4,000 on the average for each of the rest. Then there must be princesses and bridegrooms to provide for many of them. Altogether there is not room left for domestics for this family host, to say nothing of such superfluities as ministers and executive officers, in the capital which has a population of only 400,000 souls.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

ALL the English and Americans, who leased extensive lands in Goa for agricultural purposes, have, it is said, given them up. The soil is not adapted for growing coffee, opium, cinchona, &c., the taxes are high, and the Portuguese Government refuses to open out roads in the interior which it promised. Portugal remains Portugal still—the sister of “proud hopeless Spain.”

SIR John Gorst—Under-Secretary for India at the India Office—is to be promoted to one of the Secretaryships for Her Majesty. It is rumoured that Sir Richard Temple and two other well-known Anglo-Indian M. P.s are in the running for the place to be vacated.

A SHANGHAI telegram of the 6th says that the British Consulate at Chinkiang, and seven houses of the “outer-barbarians” have been burnt to the ground. There was a riot, we are told, against the foreigners, and Her Majesty's sloop of war Mulane has been sent to the scene of disturbance.

THE Legislative Council of the N. W. Provinces has completed the first three years of its existence. The official members Messrs. Woodburn and McConaghey go out, their places being filled by Messrs. W. C. Bennett and E. White. The non-official members—Mr. Conlan, Sir Syed Ahmed, Maharaja Partab Narayan Singh, Rai Bahadur Durga Prasad and Pandit Ajudha Nath—have been re-elected. It is evident Sir Auckland Colvin has conceived no prejudice against the Hon'ble Pandit for his fervid Congressal zeal, though after the foolish language of welcome at the Allahabad opening, he might well doubt the fitness of the speaker for the sober business of legislation in the new Chamber of Upper India.

THE mortal remains of the Eurasian leader of the South, Mr. D. S. White, were buried on the 2nd. About a thousand people of every section of the community—Europeans, Eurasians, Mahomedans and Hindus—attended. There were the Governor's Military Secretary, representing the Governor, Members of Council, the Director of Public Instruction, and other European Officials. The coffin was borne in procession formed by the Councillors of the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association, of which the deceased was President, the Volunteer Artillery and the Volunteer Guards, the band playing the Dead March.

RAJA Sir T. Madhava Row gave a garden-party to meet Lord and Lady Conmeara on the 2nd. It was a melancholy day, on which the great Eurasian was buried, and we are not well pleased to hear that the chiefs of the European and Native Indian communities, including the Maharaja of Mysore, the Raja of Bobbili, and the Jagbuda of Atri, attended. Something of the callousness of the grave diggers in Hamlet was shown by those who proceeded from the one scene to the other. Sir Madhava Row calls himself The Native Thinker, and delights on every conceivable occasion to lash his neighbours for their sins, real or imaginary. Strange, that such a man should have been so thoughtless. Indeed, all Madras seems to have been a party to the indecency of a social disipation on that day. The party ought to have been postponed by advertisement or private circular.

THE Raja of Bilaspur died on the 3rd. He leaves a minor son studying in the Chiefs' College, Lahore.

ISHAK KHAN has settled at Samarkand. His three brothers are in India under surveillance. As no house could be found for them at Mizapore, they have, at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Benares, been sent to Chunar.

THE Amir has appointed Mir Ahmad Shah Governor of Badakshan, with Sher Afzal Khan of Chitral as Deputy.

The Superintendence of the Revenue Department has been given to Mir Shams-ud-Din Khan.

MAJOR Drummond and Captain Hogg, on special deputation in connection with the utilization of the forces of the Native States for imperial purposes, have gone to Cashmere to reorganize the Maharaja's forces.

ON the 2nd, at a full darbar, assisted by the Resident, the Maharaja of Cashmere commenced the works for a pure water-supply for Jummoo. They have been entrusted to Messrs. Attfield and Hebbert, who have done the same thing for the Rawalpindi Municipality. This improvement will cost the Durbar several lacs. The Government of India telegraphed its congratulations to the Maharaja for “this liberal and useful measure.”

THE Maharaja of Jeypore, for his practical contribution to the defence of the Empire, has agreed to always keep ready at his own cost a thousand transport animals fully equipped for active service.

RAJA Surja Kanta Acharja Chaudhuri Bahadur, of Muktagacha, has given to the Saraswat Samiti, of which the Magistrate Mr. R. C. Dutt has been elected President, the Jubilee land and Fair. We expect great things from the infusion of new blood, the vigour of the President and the support of the local landlords.

AT the late Convocation of the Bombay University, the endowments for the year amounting to nearly a lac of Rupees were announced.

DURING his late stay at Poona for the sake of health, the Maharaja Holkar gave away Rs. 11,000 to the educational and other charities of the place.

RAJA Govind Lal Roy has subscribed Rs. 100 to the Broughton Institution.

THE Joint-Magistrate of Alipore has committed to the Sessions a girl of 16 for culpable homicide of another girl of her age. The two were the wives of a Mahomedan who paid more attention to the deceased than to the surviving wife. This the latter resented, and in proof belaboured her rival from the effects of which operation she died. The accused pleaded guilty.

A BENGAL Brahman, Girdhari Ram—a discharged private of the Queen's Sappers and Miners stationed at Bangalore—has been tried for using criminal force to the Commander-in-Chief Sir Charles Arbuthnot and sentenced by the Station District Magistrate to 3 months' hard labor. The charge was that the condemned Brahman had seized the Commander-in-Chief's bridle at a general parade, intending to force him to receive a petition. The prisoner only admitted that he wished to bring his grievances to His Excellency's notice but had no intention of using criminal force.

SURGEON-MAJOR KEITH having died of cholera at Poona, Surgeon Kilkelly has been appointed Surgeon to His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. There was an unsuccessful attempt to trace the disease to the tinned provisions served to the royal party at Hyderabad.

ANOTHER Court-Martial at Mhow. Lieutenant Kreyer, Adjutant of the 17th Bombay Infantry, has been under arrest since the Bulkley trial. He is charged in connection with the estate of Captain Mercer of whose Committee of Adjustment the Lieutenant was President.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN has concluded his seasonal tour, and reaches Allahabad to-day.

COLONEL MALLOCK, Director-General of Telegraphs, has been granted a year's extension of office.

SURGEON-MAJOR GREGG, now officiating as Sanitary Commissioner of Bengal, will be continued in the post. Brigade-Surgeon Liddell's term of service has expired.

THE Crawford Commissioners have sent in their report.

THE Junagadh-Vinaval section of the Kathiawar Railway was opened on the 1st instant.

THE Municipal Commissioners have recommended to the Government the demolition of the old Lahore Gate of Delhi, as its narrowness is a hindrance to traffic.

MESSRS. Croudace and Tuck, Executive Engineers of the Great Western Indian Railway Survey, have been more successful than Mr. Horace Bell in their journey of reconnaissance from Delhi across the Jeysumir Desert to Hyderabad in Sind. They hit upon the old trade route across or rather down the sandhills. They have not yet made their report on the feasibility of the Desert Railway.

It is probable that Sir Andrew Clarke will be the Chairman of the Delhi-Ambala-Kalka Railway Company. The prospectus of the Company provides for a capital of £800,000.

FOR adjustment of financial transactions between the British and Indian Governments, for the year 1889-90, the Secretary of State for India has, with the concurrence of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, fixed the rate of exchange at 1s. 4½d. in the rupee.

THE convention between Great Britain and Siam, for regulating the traffic in spirituous liquors, comes into operation from the 1st of April next.

THE accelerated experimental mail service from Calcutta to Bombay begins on Wednesday the 20th. A special train will start on Wednesdays at 8 P.M. in connection with the homeward Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's contract steamers. The trial will last only 8 weeks.

THE following interesting figures have lately appeared :—

"The Parisian Library contains 2,200,000 volumes. There are 500 libraries existing in France, which contain 4,598,000 volumes and 135,000 manuscripts, which represent 12½ volumes per every 100 inhabitants. Austria possesses 577 libraries, containing 5,476,803 volumes, leaving the manuscripts out of consideration, which gives an average of 16.8 volumes per 100 persons. Prussia has 398, containing 2,940,450 volumes and 58,000 manuscripts, or 11 volumes per 100 inhabitants. Russia has 145 libraries only, which contain 252,000 volumes and 24,300 manuscripts, say 1.3 volumes per 100 Russians."

THE Lieutenant-Governor, attended only by his Private Secretary, left for Cooch Behar by yesterday's afternoon mail train.

THOMAS BARTON alias Cave, of Macclesfield, England, charged with forging stock transfers of the London and North-Western Railway Company, to the value of £20,000, has been arrested in America.

THE Bombay High Court has sent a Jew, Abram Salam, to jail for 5 years, for the brutality of biting off his wife's nose. The modern world declines the wilder forms of justice, or else it is cases like this in which the similia similibus principle of the Old Jewish jurisprudence might be practised with best effect. Five years is a terrible punishment, no doubt, but it falls upon guilty and innocent alike. The true treatment for these wretches who abuse their power and opportunities over helpless woman is, besides imprisoning for a shorter term, to whip them in public and brand them in addition for a second offence.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

AS we anticipated, Mr. Parnell's suit against the Times, in the Scotch Court, has been dismissed with costs, for want of jurisdiction.

SNOW has fallen heavily on the Jelep Pass, making the communication between Gnatong and Chumbi Valley difficult. The Tibetan troops have dispersed in the Chumbi Valley. The Chinese Ampa is vegetating at Rinchingong. Mr. Paul has gone back to Darjeeling and moves on to Gnatong. The Connaught Rangers are on their march up the Teesta Valley en route to Gnatong to the relief of the Derbyshire Regiment. Where is Mr. Hart?

THE Soorajis, subjects of the Mandi State, have lost all patience with the prevailing misgovernment. They have adopted constitutional methods. They spare the Chief, and lay all the blame on the minister, only they want to compel the former to give them the right to choose the minister. With this object, they have collected themselves to the number of some thousands to march on the capital. This is a very interesting movement, and we hope, Sir Mortimer Durand will be in no hurry to support a despicable constituted authority. There is not the remotest fear of the exasperated Soorajis disturbing the British peace.

UNDER the new law, the largest number of votes to which an elector in any Ward may lay claim, is 12. To enable him to do so, he must either own or live in a house assessed, for municipal rates, at an annual value of only Rs. 5,000, or Rs. 416-10-8, a month. It is significant, however, of the times, and of the way in which Calcutta is used, that the high officers of Government are not entitled to the highest privileges of the municipal electorate. According to the published list, the Chairman of the Corporation, who draws a house allowance of Rs. 500, has only 9 votes, that is, he occupies a house assessed at less than Rs. 4000; the Law Member and the Public Works Minister have only each, 10 votes, occupying houses assessed at less than Rs. 4,500; the Hon'ble J. R. O'Kinealy and the Hon'ble W. Macpherson each 9 votes, their houses being assessed at less than Rs. 4,000. The Finance Minister has 11 votes, on a house valued at less than Rs. 4,500.

THE Bengal Government has, for the first time, taken in two Mahomedans in the supervision staff of the Education Department—Moulvie Ahmad, M.A., as an Additional Assistant Inspector of Mahomedan Schools in the Dacca and the Chittagong Divisions and Moulvie Mahomed Ibrahim, B.A., an Additional Assistant Inspector of Mahomedan Schools in the Patna and the Bhagalpore Divisions. They will each draw Rs. 200 a month. Both the Government and the Mahomedan community are to be congratulated on this departure, the community for finding the necessary educational qualifications and the Government for readiness to reward them, without prejudice.

THE convenience of the value-payable parcel post has been abused by the unscrupulous for fraudulent purposes. It has been a complaint for sometime that such parcels are addressed with value attached out of all proportion to the contents, and old debts realized on fresh supplies. On the other hand, the addressees at times refuse to receive the parcels ordered, to the loss of the commission payable to the Post Office. The Postal Department has fixed upon the following expedient for protection of its own interests :—

"With effect from the 1st April, 1889, the sender of a value-payable article will be required to sign a certificate to the effect that the article is sent in execution of a bona fide order; and in the case of a value-payable unregistered packet, the sender will, in addition to signing the certificate referred to above, be required to prepay the usual money order commission on the amount specified for recovery from the addressee, by affixing postage stamps of the value of the commission to the form filled up by him.

2. In lieu of the forms at present filled up by the senders of value payable articles, two revised forms will be substituted from the 1st April, 1889—one for use with all value payable articles other than value payable unregistered book packets, and the other for use with value payable unregistered book packets. Each form will contain the certificate to be signed by the sender, and space is provided in the form for use with value payable unregistered packets for the postage stamps to be affixed in payment of commission.

3. In case a value-payable unregistered packet is refused by the addressee or returned as unclaimed to the sender no refund of the commission prepaid will be granted."

WE have received a complaint from Junalpoore, E. I. Railway station—not from our usual correspondent. We give it the honours of the leading columns, the more so because it gives us an opportunity for a little "palavering" with our countrymen at large, on their inherent failings and growing vices, with a view to restore the lost understanding between the European and native races.

THE same correspondent notices another grievance. We better let him give it in his unsophisticated way :—

"The prospect of retrenchment of the clerical staff in the Local Branch Offices here has sent a general consternation among the clerks who belong to this Department. It is very strange that it does not occur to any European head to dispense with the services of three or four European officials who can easily be allowed to take rest without risking the Company's efficiency and thereby save the slaughter of so many poor clerks. To dispense with the services of these is really to take away their livelihood and to make them die of starvation. We therefore leave the fate of such clerks as have spent the best portion of their lives in the service of the Company to the higher authorities' honourable decision."

OUR native friends are being exercised over the rumour that Mr. Eardley Norton intends shortly to seek to enter the House of Commons. "We should indeed be sorry," writes the Advocate, "to miss Mr. Norton in India, though his presence at St. Stephen's [Chapel] would no doubt be a gain to her" [it]. The writer might spare himself his anxiety. Mr. Norton is young, and, we suppose, not rich enough to retire to the otium cum dignitate of a member of Parliament. At any rate, he is still young and with the British scent for the main chance keen. So far from going on to England, in quest of barren parliamentary honours, he does not even return to his own Madras. Having come over to Bengal, ostensibly for the Congress, he made his observations of the country as a pagoda soul, and, having satisfied himself, has struck root. And now that in the family dissensions of the Pakpara Rijas he has struck oil, he may be regarded pretty nearly as a fixture already.

THE vacancy in the House of Lords caused by the death of the Earl of Mu and Kelie, of the Scotch Peerage, has been filled by the unanimous election of the Earl of Lauderdale. The news has a special Indian interest. Lord Lauderdale is an Old Indian, having been in diplomatic employ of the Government of India as Major Mutland. The death of his cousin the late Earl, in 1885, called him home. He gave up his Political Agency, and resigned the Service, to come into the possessions and take up the position of Earl of Lauderdale. The new representative Peer, like the rest of his brethren, is a Conservative. Except the Earl of Anner, who is a Liberal Unionist, all the Representative Peers of Scotland are Conservatives.

A GOOD deal of surprise has been caused by the report of Mr. S. Wilson, Secretary to the District Board, Shajehanpore, to the Director of Public Instruction, N. W. Provinces, to the effect that in no fewer than five of the schools in the District, visited by him, he had found girls reading together with the boys, the girls being almost all Rajputs of good family, and young.

There is nothing new in this. In Hindu families, the little boys and girls are taught together in the same classes at home. We do not refer to families that have more or less seceded from the manners and customs of their forefathers and of the rest of their countrymen, but to orthodox households. Forty years ago, might be seen at the residence of the late Raja Radhakanta Deb, K.C.S.I., the Coryphæus of Hinduism, the grand-children, boys and unmarried girls, sitting for instruction at the feet of the Gurumahasaya and the Pandit.

IT is satisfactory to find that the mission of the late lamented Russian traveller Przhevalsky to Thibet has not been abandoned, Colonel Pevtsoff having been appointed by the Government of Russia to succeed him. And now another savant is about to start on the same errand of making the civilised world acquainted with the unexplored regions of the Chinese Empire. M. Joseph Martin, the French traveller, is now in St. Petersburg. He will soon start for Peking. After a short stay at the Chinese capital, for making observations and arming himself with the requisite passports and orders for his safety and assistance to his mission, he will recross the Great Wall and descend down South, along side of it or the boundary which separates China Proper from the Greater China onside, till by way of Lake Koko Nor he enters the North Eastern Frontiers of Thibet. Thence he will penetrate to Lhasa for the purpose of effecting a junction with Colonel Pevtsoff. Then he will proceed East through Eastern Thibet to the Panthay country until he reaches the Pacific in Annam, in French Cochinchina. It is estimated that this programme will occupy some three years. M. Martin's is of course a pure adventure for science. The Russian expedition may have an ulterior object. At any rate, the information derived by both the travellers may be utilised for commercial and political purposes by Russia and to some extent by England and France. The Russian expedition will carry the name of the great Tsar to regions which never heard of any Power but China— which no White man has ever touched since the romantic adventures of Marco Polo. No loyal Briton and no Indian who is proud of being a citizen of the British Empire, can look upon these enterprises without a sigh at the thought that England has no share in the glory and the full advantage thereof. Englishmen are still ready as of yore, and in full numbers, for such adventures, but their own Government would not permit any of its subjects to undertake them even on their own hook, for fear of their embroiling it with barbarous chiefs and tribes, to say nothing of sending out such scientific expeditions of its own instance. Nor is the Government to blame. It is the public temper that is to blame. The habit of hostile criticism on the slightest pretext into which we in these days have got, has had a paralysing effect on rulers.

SPRAKING at the Liverpool Junior Reform Club, on the 3rd January, Mr. Labouchere made a desperate raid on the Parnell Commission, with the obvious object of prejudging the inquiry going on, in favour of his party and of Mr. Parnell. He gave the Judges, the Government, the Times and all round, a good round slice of his Laboucherean mind and a typical sample of Laboucherean rhetoric. We have not heard that he has been taken up for contempt. Our Surrender Not was seized on a comparatively smaller exhibition. The Bengalee newspaper's language was uncalled for and indeed utterly indefensible. But it was evident that it was mere idle extravagance of speech of a foreigner not quite at home in the use of English epithets and allusions. The writer was scarcely conscious of how far his words went. No man who knows what is what, would think of seriously calling a contemporary Judge of the High Court of Bengal a Jeffries or a Scroggs. Far different is the case with Mr. Labouchere. A veteran publicist and adroit debater, he knows what he is about when he perpetrates such an outrage as his late speech amounts to. He is reported to have said that—

"those three Judges had to make a political report, not a report upon the criminal question, because the criminal issue had not yet come before them. What did they know about politics? Not more than three old women knew about them. He believed that the Times was hoping and hoping that Sir James Hannen or one of the other Commissioners might be taken ill. They were staving off the evil day when they would have to submit the evidence in regard to the letters. He knew this,—that when they did submit their evidence, not only would it be proved that Mr. Parnell and the other gentlemen accused did not write the letters, but it would be shown who did write the letters, and what the Times basely paid for them. In regard to that Commission, could anything be more unfair than the action of the Government?"

We have always denied the doctrine of sub judice, regarding it as an idle superstition, one of many such which have been handed down to the British from the darkness of the past. We have never hesitated to comment on pending litigation whenever the public interest required such interference. So far as Mr. Labouchere's example is a protest against the mischievous demand on the public to hold their tongue till a cause has been irrevocably determined in the courts, we welcome the authority of the experienced journalist and powerful Parliamentarian. None the less do we regret his aberration in the above. Such outbursts not only vulgarise political and social life, but actually make for anarchy.

WITHIN the short time of its existence as a habitable place, Queensland has already acquired an unenviable notoriety. Of all the wild shores in the far distance on which Europe discharges her superfluous or too disagreeable children, that is the worst Saxon sink. If New South Wales and other neighbouring Colonies were peopled by the true patriots who left their country for their country's good, the Pilgrim Fathers of Queensland were Walers and Victorians who relieved their respective Colonies of their presence. The Queenslanders have got a leader after their mind. A Sydney Letter dated January 11, in a contemporary thus describes Sir Thomas McIlwraith, their favorite Premier:

"From a quiet English point of view, this man is a regular 'terror.' It was he who at a former period 'annexed' the whole of New Guinea, without even consulting England! It was he who during a late visit to Sydney told the native Australians that the day was coming when Australia should be independent of Great Britain! It was he who so opposed the late Governor of Queensland, Sir Anthony Musgrave, in the exercise of the Royal prerogative of pardon, that Sir Anthony was advised from home to give way, and it is believed that Sir Anthony's end was hastened by it. And now it is the same Sir Thomas McIlwraith who would not receive Sir Henry Blake when appointed Governor to succeed Sir Anthony, and demanded that the colonies should be consulted! The best or the worst of it is that he has had his way, and Sir Henry Blake has given place to Sir Henry Norman, late Governor of Jamaica. You all must remember Sir Henry Norman well, as he was in Lord Mayo's Council, and I am extremely sorry Sir Henry Norman has accepted the appointment. Knowing so much of McIlwraith and Queensland as I do, I can predict that the gallant old Indian soldier will find his position a most uncomfortable one. Of all these colonies, the Queenslanders are the most vulgar and impudent, and, going back to ever so many Governors, I can only recall how they have disgusted and baggered them till they were glad to leave. The Marquis of Normanby, who was so successful afterwards in New Zealand and in Victoria, was glad to leave before his time. I forget who followed him. After him Sir Arthur Kennedy was literally boycotted, because he had a few Chinese servants. After him followed Sir Anthony Musgrave, whose life they made miserable till he died. It was, I think, a mistake on the part of the Colonial Office to give into Queensland in the matter of Blake's appointment. New South Wales and Victoria are colonies whose co-operation England should always secure, for they are populous and wealthy, and their aid in time of war will be appreciable. As for Queensland with her 300,000 or 400,000, over an immense extent of territory, she will never offer any aid for the next century, but will rather herself need strong protection. She might have been left without a Governor for a time, if only to show her impotence and insignificance, and to show other colonies the sad state in which they would land if bereft of England's lead and headship. As it is, she has had her own way, and will be more bumptious than ever, at the same time that an old and gallant soldier's life will be made miserable. The sort of Governor that would suit Queensland is a man like Sir John Thurston, of Fiji, one, I believe, who will be able to return the vulgar Colonists snub for snub, and twist Sir Thomas Mellwraith round his finger. Sir Thomas Mellwraith feels so ashamed of the part he has been lately playing, in predicting Australian independence, in badgering Sir Anthony Musgrave to death, and in demanding a Governor whom he would approve, that he pretends to be very ill, and has gone off on a visit to China and Japan! He is a square block of flesh weighing at least some twenty stones! Let me advise no respectable high-class Governor ever to accept Queensland if they wish to be happy, or to have their most ordinary feelings respected."

The aristocratic Norman, with his high polish and stately manners, is not the man for this wretched Colony. The ministry ought to find for it a desperate Muscular Christian, or for that matter, Heathen.

THE Sessions Judge of Allahabad has confirmed the conviction, by the Cantonment Magistrate, of Captain Hearsey, for whipping the editor of the Pioneer. Addressing the Captain, Mr. Elliot, said:—

"As I said to-day at the beginning of the case, the pleas you have urged with regard to your being a European British subject do not avail. In the first place, you were not prejudiced, because Captain Hewett is a Magistrate of the First Class and a Justice of the Peace, and it is also provided that the omission to ask you the question referred to does not invalidate the proceeding. Thus, there remain your pleas which have been urged in extenuation and with a view to the amelioration of the punishment. As to this, I have only to say that the punishment which has been inflicted upon you is that which is provided in cases of hurt inflicted under grave and sudden provocation. The provocation in your case was not even grave certainly not sudden, because the article of which you complain is dated January 1st, and the assault was committed on the 4th January. Neither was it grave, for so far as what you have said in regard to a reflection on your courage goes, it is plain that the words do not bear that construction. There is no reflection on your personal courage whatever. The writer did not name you. There is nothing to show that he knew you. The assault was premeditated and unwarrantable. We have the fact that, between 1880 and January 1st, 1888, you have been convicted three times of acts of violence. In one case there seems to have been in some degree an excuse, but in the other two, there was none. Besides that, there was another act of violence proved against you, the exact date of which does not appear. This being so, I am of opinion that you have failed to make out any case for the reduction of the sentence, and I affirm it."

Captain Hearsey applied for bail, pending another appeal. The Judge was sorry he had no power, but an application lay to the High Court for revision. The Captain was then arrested. Having so passionately resented the expressions "Half caste" and "Brown Captain," Captain Hearsey was bound to stand on his rights as a British-born. But the Judge disposed of that plea saying that the convicting Magistrate was a Magistrate of the First Class and a Justice of the Peace, and that the omission of the question—whether the appellant was a European British subject or not—did not invalidate the proceeding. The only section which saves the invalidity of proceedings is section 455 of the Code (of Criminal Procedure) and it runs in these words:—

"Where a person who is not an European British subject is dealt with as such under this Chapter (XXXIII), and does not object, the inquiry, commitment, trial or sentence (as the case may be) shall not, by reason of such dealing, be invalid."

The concluding portion of the previous section on which, we believe, the Captain rested his appeal, is in these words:—

"Unless the Magistrate has reason to believe that any person brought before him is not an European British subject, the Magistrate shall ask such person whether he is such a subject or not."

Captain Hearsey has reason to be more indignant at the treatment he received in Court than at the expressions in the Pioneer. What reason had the Magistrate for his belief, or the Judge to say ditto to Mr. Magistrate? Language could not be plainer nor mandate more peremptory. But what did the defendant gain by the clear provision of the law?

THE annual meeting of the Association for the supply of medical aid to the women of India passed off with clat on the 7th, Lord Launsdowne in the Chair, supported by Sir Stuart Bayley and cheered by the presence of Lady Launsdowne. We shall notice the proceedings more fully in our next.

THE enterprising editor of that excellent weekly Hope has issued the first instalment of his promised European and American Reminiscences. It is an unpretending little thing but a remarkable book withal. The whole when completed will be a work of permanent value. We really feel proud of our author as a fellow-countryman. He not only uses the English language as one born to it, but writes with the facility, ease, and freedom of a practised penman. His matter is as interesting and useful as his manner is good. He has the gift of observation and he had unusual opportunities for seeing and judging. The book has been written with special reference to the natives of this country, but Europeans and Americans themselves might read it with profit. For our countrymen, its value is immense, inasmuch as it is a thoroughly practical record of observations replete with accurate information and helpful suggestion and intended for their guidance. We hope it will receive the widest circulation. Hereafter we may notice it in more detail.

WE are informed that Major H. Mellis paid a visit to Gwalior, under the orders of the Government of India, and, after inspecting the Forces of that State, and staying there for a couple of days, departed.

ON the important subject of drawing from Native India efficient military help for the British Indian Empire in its time of need, this is what we have learnt about this State from reliable sources. Gwalior, under her Regent and Regency Council, presided over by Bapo Sahab Jadon, is willing and ready to do her best, in all true loyalty. After full discussion, the practical measure has been decided upon. With the concurrence of the Council of Regency, Her Highness the Maharani Regent has addressed the Government of India, through Mr. Henvey, Agent to the Governor-General in Central India, offering, out of His Highness the Maharaja Madho Rao Scindha's Army, to keep a force consisting of one Regiment of Cavalry numbering 500 men, and two Regiments of Infantry numbering 1,500 men, making a total of 2,000 men, ready, in good condition and order, and fit for any active service that may be required of them by the Government of India, on occasions of emergency.

As the present strength of the Maharaja's Army is low compared with the extent of His Highness's territories, these 2,000 men, together with the rest of the forces, shall perform the ordinary duties of the State, until their services are required by Her Majesty's Government in the defence of the Empire. Her Highness trusts that whenever they have thus occasion to leave Gwalior, the State may be authorised to employ a similar number of soldiers for the performance of the ordinary duties of the State, without the inconvenience of special reference for the purpose at each time.

This is so necessary a proviso so inherent in the nature of things—that we cannot contemplate the possibility of our Foreign Office refusing the splendid offer on the terms. There may be some scruple about the first condition, namely, that the troops intended for service in aid of the British Government and equipped, commanded and trained to that end, shall form a part of the regular Forces of the State and as such perform the usual duties pertaining to the military in the State, subject only to be called out for the special service out of the limits of Gwalior. We can imagine some such difficulty started at the suggestion of the Military Department. That Department is responsible for the efficiency of the troops that may be set apart for the service of the Government of India in times of trouble. Anything likely to impair that efficiency, it has a right to protest against. There might be danger no doubt to discipline and to the military fibre from immersion in the miscellaneous nondescript, irregular and unsavoury duties of the so-called military of ordinary Native State. But there is little room for fear with respect to Gwalior. We do not know what report Major Mellis may make, but the Gwalior Forces are popularly understood to be the best drilled and disciplined of all Native India. The late Maharaja Jeyaji Rao was a born soldier, and it was his constant delight to examine and exercise his troops personally. Indeed, he allowed his sepoys and sowars no rest, and none but soldiers true and picked could stand the incessant strain or would stay. It may be confidently presumed that the troops were never put to any demoralising or relaxing duties. Nor is there now any chance in a State with such traditions, of any regiments, far less those specially marked for difficult foreign service, being depraved by a course of incompatible duties at home.

AN application was made to the Assistant Collector of Tanna, in the Bombay Presidency, for a vacant post, the applicant strengthening his claim by a certificate of a vernacular examination. It was discovered, however, that the person applying never passed the examination but he was personated by another at the examination, who obtained in the other's name the certificate of proficiency. Both these were charged with giving false information to a public servant and abetment under Sections 182 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code. The Assistant Sessions Judge found them guilty and sentenced each to 2 months' hard labor. The Sessions Judge, however, had doubts whether the acts came under the purview of the Penal Code or any other Act, and set aside the conviction. The High Court, in its turn, has held that Sec. 182 applies. Mr. Justice Jandine and Mr. Justice Candy are of opinion that the attempt to obtain an appointment by presenting a false certificate is an offence under the law.

A CURIOUS case is now engaging the courts of the South, which is not creditable to the administration. In June last, a preacher of the Madras Hindu Tract Society complained to the Deputy Magistrate of defamation and assault against a Police Inspector named Abdul Subhan. His statement was that, while he was reading the Bhagavata and comparing it with the Bible (a copy of which was placed on a chair by him) before an audience, the Inspector came up and forbade the preaching. As he was not obeyed, he kicked both books down impartially and flung the chair in a rage at the apostle, and threatened to slipper him—by which he meant not to “shoe” the Tractarian but in Bengalee “pigeon” slang “shoeify” him—and give him six months' jail into the bargain. The Deputy rejected the complaint in the absence of the Government's sanction necessary to the prosecution of a public servant. Then the Magistrate of the District was applied to for the requisite sanction, but that authority did not give the sanction. Meanwhile, the preacher applied to the High Court to have the order of the Deputy Magistrate revised. One matter was argued by both sides before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Aiyar. For the petitioner it was urged that having grossly and palpably exceeded his powers, the Inspector had ceased to be a public servant, hence no previous sanction was required as it was in his personal capacity that he was hauled up in court. The High Court held that the Deputy Magistrate's finding that the Inspector had acted in his capacity of a public servant was final and not subject to revision by that Court. The petitioner was directed to obtain the sanction contemplated by the Code. Their Lordships thought that the allegations against the Inspector called for investigation and it was strange why sanction was withheld by the District Magistrate.

Strange to be sure in all conscience, regarded from the heights of the highest Court. But not strange in point of fact to those who know how the country is governed. Nothing is too high-handed or absurd to do for an irresponsible magistracy in India beyond the capital towns.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1889.

A LIFTING OF THE VEIL.

MR. MACKENZIE AND HIS MALGUZARS AND MAHAJANS IN THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.

OFFICIAL tours often of late are such absolute shams—an affair of the eternal scarlet cloth and bunting and floral and leafy decorations—in the glare of the spectacular display and the soft influence of the kowtowing and soft sawdaring of an Oriental people. British visitors are so apt to go away with imperfect and even false ideas, that it was with a sense of positive relief we read in the Statesman recently of Mr. Mackenzie's movements through some portions of the Central Provinces conducted under very different conditions. “I have been marching,” says the Chief Commissioner, in his address at a Durbar lately held at Hoshungabad, “through the Narsingpore and Hoshungabad districts unaccompanied by any staff in order that I might be able by free intercourse with malguzars and cultivators, to enquire for myself into the condition of the people and the state of the country at the present time.” Unaccompanied by any staff is often a condition essential to right seeing. Bureaucracy, surrounded by a cordon of subordinate myrmidons of every degree, down to the police, has too formidable an appearance to be favourable to real intercourse. Mr. Mackenzie cannot sufficiently be congratulated therefore for adopting a different plan of inspection, and well rewarded was he in the knowledge of things which he otherwise had had no chance of attaining. He saw to his great astonishment that orders, especially passed by the Government for the benefit and protection of the malguzars and cultivators, were practically a dead letter—that the very existence of them had not been made known to the classes so vitally concerned, although there were the tehsildars and other revenue officers whose duty it was to do so. One of these orders relates to agricultural improvements, and provides that any malguzar or cultivator who embanks his field will receive a sunnud from the Deputy Commissioner, the production of which at settlement will exempt the area so improved from assessment during the period of settlement. Mr. Mackenzie expresses his regret that these orders as yet are unknown to those whom they most concern. Then the rules about Tuccavee advances are likewise inoperative. The Chief Commissioner then presses upon the attention of his officers the importance of reviving the cultivation of sugarcane, and for its encouragement lays down a rule that wells constructed for agricultural purposes, such as growing sugarcane, will receive a similar recognition at settlement as embankments. “I wish every district officer, every tehsildar and every revenue inspector to make this new rule about improvements known in every village of the district. I have myself explained it in every village through which I have passed.”

The gradual extinction of the old territorial families in the Central Provinces, calls forth an expression of the Chief Commissioner's sincerest regret. After describing the decay of these families and the transfer of their estates mainly to money-lenders, Mr. Mackenzie addresses them words of advice in a truly parental spirit. He says:—

“This is a most melancholy state of things. The old patels and malguzars are rapidly being ruined. I found one gentleman a mere tenant-at-will on a part of what had been formerly his family seer. About the causes of this depression there cannot, I fear, be any doubt. Extravagance and improvidence are alone to blame. You are given by the generosity of Government rights of property in your villages, which you were not wise enough to safeguard. A light assessment encouraged you to spend—and the money lenders were only too ready to invest their capital on the security of your meahals. Some of the more important families we have been able to save by disqualifying their malguzar member at his own request and taking the villages under the Court of Wards. For this assistance I am aware that many of you here present in durbar to-day are very thankful. But it is impossible for the Deputy Commissioner to undertake the detailed management of a mass of small estates. If you are most of you to be saved at all, you must take steps to save yourselves. My strong advice to you would be that the principal castes should meet in their punchayets, and first consider the extent to which it is really incumbent on a son to make himself responsible for the personal debts of his father. Most of the indebtedness is the result of extravagance on the part of those who are dead and gone, and is only burdening the present generation because of its feelings of filial piety. There may, however, perhaps be limits even to that. It is for your punchayets to discuss and settle the point. Next I would have you settle the maximum limit which might reasonably be imposed on the expenses of marriage and other family ceremonies. These should be regulated surely with reference to a man's net income, not with reference to the supposed status of his family, or the amount of his debts. Further, it would be well if those of you who are not absolutely overwhelmed with debt would face the necessity of heroic remedies. Many a malguzar could clear himself once for all by selling a village or a share outright. It is the clinging to the appearances of being big men, while the kernel of your prosperity is being eaten out, that is leading many of you to absolute ruin. Lastly, as regards seed-grain advances, cultivators would get these from Government under the Agriculturist Loan Act on much easier terms than the ‘siwai’ or ‘derh’ of the mahajans that now carries off all the profits of their crop. Every Revenue officer in the district should know the rules for these loans and see that they are made known to the people."

Heads of Provincial Governments are hardly permitted to be brought face to face with their people, but when, by any chance, they can see their condition for themselves rather than through the eyes of subordinate officers, far more of the real state of things is always disclosed to them than is possible by any other means. The truth is, the decay of the old respectable classes, observed by Mr. Mackenzie in his own province, is at work in every part of the country. The kernel of prosperity is being eaten up everywhere, so far as the old bhadra logues—the "Bhadra-cra-cy," to use Sir John Budd Phear's handy word—are concerned, and though British rule may have been attended with decided progress and prosperity as regards several other classes of the people, its effects upon the old landed classes as well as the nobility of caste have been disastrous. By means of the Court of Wards, by agricultural advances or loans, by timely remission of assessment or exemption from the revenue, or other sympathetic acts of personal intervention on the part of Government officers, the course of decay might be arrested, but how too little is done in this behalf by subordinate revenue officers has been clearly demonstrated by Mr. Mackenzie's personal enquiry. These officers are mere birds of passage, whose stay in any district is scarcely long enough for knowledge of its peoples, far less for the growth of sympathy. After all, it is the system rather than the agency that is the prime sinner. Indeed, it is the system that is responsible for the agency. That system is, in some measure, one of the inevitable conditions of foreign rule—at any rate, of an ultra-foreign rule like that of the British in India. The evil can no doubt be abated, but for distinct mitigation a higher and purer statesmanship is required than has yet been shown by our rulers. Meanwhile, it is something to have such wise and generous functionaries as Mr. Mackenzie.

THE DIFFICULTIES OF LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT IN INDUSTRIAL TOWNS.

THE RAILWAY TOWN OF JAMALPORE.

A CORRESPONDENT gives a pitiable picture of Jamal-pore and its affairs. The White Town is all right. It is, to our mind, the nicest, beautifullest, airiest, quietest, most comfortable, most picturesque little town in the plains in the Bengal Provinces. Situated in a salubrious climate, on high ground beside a low range of the Monghyr hills, built on a regular plan, with wide well-kept metalled streets, clean and free from dust or decomposition, flanked by noble avenues, between elegant villas and cottages, inhabited by a small busy but far from noisy European population all connected with the Railway, but no official civil or military element; with a fine institute for reading rooms, theatre and lecture rooms, with drilling and parade grounds for the important body of Railway Volunteers, with target shooting ground, with racket court and tennis lawns, and connected with Monghyr, besides the rail, by a broad trunk road between rows of noble trees, it is a delightful retreat for a short honeymoon or a holiday trip for quiet unadventurous folk who would not undertake the risks of climbing up the Himalayan railway or have no taste for mountaineering in the Jelapa Pass. So far so good. But, then, over the way is the antithesis of the Black Town—the home of the "Baboos" and bearers and khansamas and kits of the white Sahib logues—the Bustee of hovels and shanties, of reed thatching and flimsy tile-roofing, with dark and dank alleys, alternately damp and dusty, always dirty, through which the unfortunate beggars have to stumble to find their way to their low ill-ventilated uncomfortable haunts. This contrast is typical of the empire, and it is a reproach to Native as well as European. Yet, if the truth is to be told, the responsibility lies more on the former than the latter. The European makes the best of the situation, not only exerting and employing his resources for his own benefit, but also using the Native to that end. The Native has neither wits nor energy nor disposition to improve his surroundings. What wonder that he should go to the wall! The poor fellow takes the wall himself, before compulsion! What is to be done with a man who seems to dote upon his ancestral dirt and shrinks from paying for his own improvement? If he is made to pay for the stranger's health and comfort, that is almost unavoidable. Perhaps, he is rightly served. It may do him good by opening his eyes to his own interests. If it irritate him to a demand for reserving his contribution for his own improvement, the temporary injustice may well be regarded as a blessing.

No doubt, the stranger has a duty towards the people. And he does perform it, more or less willingly. He has been performing it, adequately or inadequately. Where would have been the Native progress of which we now hear so much, without the countenance and example of Europeans, non-official no less than official? The example can never be withdrawn. If there has been, in any degree, a failure on the score of that countenance, this is in part to be explained by the fact that the Natives do not now stand in need of help as heretofore, but chiefly by the impracticable attitude of many Natives,—by that failure of courtesy which is being imbibed by the present generation from a foolish press and irresponsible orators.

This attitude is mere silliness—idle vapouring from a distance, or noise from behind a screen. Were there any real sturdy feeling of independence, there would be ample compensation for the rudeness, which latter would soon wear out and be succeeded by a more modest bearing. But no—the worst "check" is usually shown by the most craven.

We suppose it is the same at Jamal-pore, as elsewhere. Our correspondent complains that the resources of the municipality are expended chiefly for the benefit of the European town. There are, however, Native members. Why don't they raise their voice for obtaining their fair share for the improvement of their quarter? The explanation given is that the native Commissioners are mostly clerks in the railway, subordinates of the European members. That is no doubt a fatal position for true independence. Still we fear our Native friends do their superiors an injustice if they think that the latter will carry their municipal differences into the railway departments and punish their fellow members with official displeasure. The question is certainly worth experiment. Did our countrymen ever try? We are rather prone too hastily to attribute to Europeans what we would do under similar circumstances. We should remember that, as a race, Europeans are independent and naturally disposed to admire in others their own characteristics. Of course, tact and temper are requisite. It would not do for official subordinates when they happen for the nonce to sit on equal terms with their official superiors, to be rude or insolent. But if they can lay before the board their honest views with moderation of language and behaviour, their independent opposition is not likely to prove injurious either to their cause or to themselves, except with the most base. On the contrary, they are more likely to gain in every respect.

There was at Jamalpore one man of intelligence and independence, Babu Lal Behari Gupta, and he succeeded in doing good to his fellow-townsmen. If he suffered in position in the end, that was possibly for his own indiscretion. His unique situation in the whole place might have demoralised him at last, gradually warping his normal good sense. His independence as a townsman, at any rate, never hurt him. It was he who constructed the streets and lanes in Nowagaon, the native settlement at Jamalpore. These were never repaired since he left many years ago. So that they degenerated into a succession of most dangerous ruts. After the sufferings and cries of an age, they are now being done to shape with earth dug up from the side drains and with cinders—the refuse from the boilers of the railway. Of course, the leaven of cinder soon disappears under tread in the subjacent and adjacent abundance of earth, converting the streets into a kacha nuisance.

If the circumstances are such as to make it impossible for the Baboos to be independent on the Municipality, why should Baboos be elected! Surely, there are some others at a large place like that besides railway employés, such as intelligent tradesmen or landlords. We learn that a Ratepayers' Association has been founded, headed by a local Behari zemindar. That shows the existence of some germs of life. The Association should be warmly supported towards solving the problem. The keranis are a contemptible effete order, out of which no good is to be expected. The best men are ruined by the drudgery and discipline of that service. Those who escape are the rarest birds. If there is no possibility of Natives doing their duty in the municipality, the constitution ought to be entirely altered, and, if necessary, a new Act called for.

Meanwhile, we hope this notice of ours will attract the notice of the Europeans on the municipality, and they will grant what relief is practicable. The correspondent also complains of the partiality of a tax on vats levied only on the Natives. This seems a strange thing, but as we do not know what it is all about, we will not dwell upon it. But, surely, it is a crying scandal that the Native ratepayers should be doomed to grope through dusty kacha lanes and wade through muddy paths, in sight of the finest cleanest streets.

Supposing there is no independent Native element there, the difficulty complained of at Jamalpore is not peculiar to it. Masters and employés sit on the same board at other places. The phenomenon of Natives sharing municipal duties with their European employers, is common to all industrial and commercial centres which are not also civil stations or old native towns. The question raised, therefore, is one worthy the attention of our politicians and of the Government which truly desires to foster Self-Government.

A MODERN NABOB FROM THE INDIAN EDUCATIONAL EL DORADO.

THE monopoly of Hansard in connection with the Parliamentary proceedings has ended. The contract was thrown open to public competition, and Messrs. Macrac, Curtice and Company, Limited, have obtained the privilege. Sir Roper Lethbridge is the Chairman of the Company.

This gentleman has a famous eye for the main chance. As a University don, he obtained what might be supposed to be a congenial occupation at the British Museum. While engaged among the dusty muniments of that great repository of knowledge, he probably lighted upon the tomes of old Purchas and Hakluyt, and was seized with the passion for the Golden Fleece. He sailed for the Eastern Eldorado with a schoolmaster's commission in his pocket. He found that the Pagoda Tree had been shaken and plucked down to a stunted plant, and the reduced crops which, under favourable conditions of sunshine and rain, still occasionally appeared, were the monopoly of a few favoured men in high places or in other lines of occupation, such as those billeted upon Indian Princes or controlling the destinies of native noblemen. A schoolmaster in the swamps of Bengal had no chance, for making his fortune in a trice. No loot fell to his lot; there were no pickings to cheer the path of domine. But our knight of the ferule did not despair. Let a Scotch in the midst of a desert and he will coin money there—and convert the place into a smiling garden into the bargain. Mr. Lethbridge had the Scotch secret. He coined rupees in abundance out of his capacity for work and his intelligence and the brains of other people, over and above the respectable pay he drew and saved. He had no weak punctilios. In the noble pursuit of the main chance, he did not care to stand on his dignity. He damned the schoolbooks in vogue in the country and prepared the way for his own profit. He established himself on the ruins of others. He appeared as an indefatigable if not great bookmaker himself. His position and connections in the Education department and the University gave him a great advantage, and he made the best use of his opportunities for creating a sort of monopoly. He neglected no nook or corner of the schoolbook supply trade. It was no literature but trade that he cared for.

Let us not be told that there is no room for literature or high ability in elementary works. Of late years, the highest minds are being engaged in the production of literature for the juvenile world and the masses. Men like Huxley and Roscoe and Balfour do not disdain to put their hands to the preparation of school-books, and both in Great Britain and the Continent the greatest masters of science are duly engaged in popularising science for the benefit of the world at large. It would have been better if Mr. Lethbridge had brought more conscience to his work. It was no fault of his that he had no high claims to public attention. But he might have taken the necessary pains to give sterling wares. In that case, of course, he could scarcely wax enormously fat in no time.

As he grew rich, his ambition rose. Having secured the first object of the British—to make money—he looked about for fresh fields and pastures new for distinction. He could not hope for the sceptre of royalty or even the marshal's baton, but he had outgrown the ferule at all events. He had early dabbled in the press, and from a contributor had finished as editor of the moribund Calcutta Review. As such, he lent himself to the support of men and cliques in power. He was rewarded with the sinecure of Press Commissioner. Finally, on his retirement, he was knighted.

Returned home a goodly Nabob, the indefatigable man had no rest. He employed Parliamentary agents, wooed the free and independent of different localities and got elected in the General Election in the Tory interest. He got an opportunity for notoriety during the Ilbert Bill agitation. His avarice had not been satiated, and he again sailed to the East to scrape what he could. He had made so much as schoolmaster. What wonders should he not do as genuine member of Parliament? But times had changed, perhaps. He at any rate had been found out. He had proved no tower of strength to the Europeans and had earned only the curses of the natives. The Zemindars sorely needed a champion, and they were then lavish of their money. We believe they made some arrangement with him. With that exception, the trip was a total failure in every respect. He had hoped to get some native Princes' briefs, but therein he was disappointed. The Rajas and Nawabs have their own agents.

And now this insatiable man is still at it. We suppose he will be making money until the inevitable summons to leave everything on earth and depart on the mysterious journey to none knows whither. He has now formed a company and taken over the business of authorized parliamentary reporting, hitherto associated with the familiar and historic name of Hansard.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

IV.

THE SPEECHES AND THE SPEAKERS (continued).

In my last, I had necessarily to stop short before I had fairly done with the preface. To-day, I sit down to resume the thread of my "story" where I left it. To facilitate easy reference, I think I should, at the very outset, name the more notable of the speakers. Well, then, these were the speakers that made their mark as representatives of, and thinkers for, the Indian peoples.

BENGAL.

- (1.) Mr. Kalicharan Banerjee.
- (2.) Mr. Manomohun Ghosh.
- (3.) Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee, (Bengalee.)
- (4.) Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee.
- (5.) Mr. R. D. Mehta.
- (6.) Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal, (Assam.)

BOMBAY.

- (1.) The Hon'ble K. T. Telang, C.I.E.
- (2.) The Hon'ble P. Mehta.
- (3.) Mr. Chandravarkar, (Hindu Prakash.)
- (4.) Mr. Watcha, (Indian Spectator.)
- (5.) Mr. Namjoshi, (Poona.)

MADRAS.

- (1.) Mr. Eardley Norton.
- (2.) Mr. John Adam.
- (3.) Mr. Ananda Charlu.
- (4.) Mr. Salem S. Ramaswami Mudelliar.
- (5.) Mr. G. Subramaniya Iyer, (Hindu.)
- (6.) Mr. Girija Shankar Kashiram Durvedy, (Rajyabarta Sudharmishta.)

N. W. P.

- (1.) Mr. J. E. Howard.
- (2.) Pandit Bishumbher Nath.
- (3.) The Hon'ble Pandit Ayodhya Nath.
- (4.) Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, (Hindustan.)
- (5.) Mr. F. T. Atkins, (Morning Post.)
- (6.) Captain Hearsey.
- (7.) Mr. Nasiruddin Ahmed, (Benares.)

OODE.

- (1.) Revd. Ram Chandra Bose.
- (2.) Munshi Sajjad Hossein, (Oude Punch.)
- (3.) Pandit Bishen Narayan Dar, (Advocate.)
- (4.) Moulvi Hidayat Rasul.

BEHAR.

- (1.) Mr. Pringle Kennedy, (Tirhoot Courier.)
- (2.) Mr. Sharluddin.

PUNJAB.

- (1.) Lala Lajpat Rae.

In the above, I have tried, with the help of the light within me, to arrange the speakers of each province according to the merit of their speeches. And if the arrangement does not exactly tally with that observed in Mr. L. Chunilal Parekh's forthcoming work "Twenty-three eminent men of India," it is because my standard of judgment has been different. There are speakers and speakers: 'there's "many a flower born to blush unseen and waste its sweetness on the desert air", of whom we know nothing and the world will know nothing. But they have, in their very silence and seclusion, worked wonders. Fuss and noise, go and gumption, is a distinctively imported article in India. And because it has a taking effect on our rulers, we must have recourse to it. I am not one of those who are every now and then seen to sigh for the "good old days"—the Golden Age of the poets. I do most sincerely believe in the infinity of human progress. I do also believe that the Iron Age is not before us; we have left it behind. But with Cowper and Goldsmith, I most certainly deplore that, in our craze for reform and progress, we are giving up our national characteristics, and thus making a sad bargain. Our go-ahead reformers know no middle course; their codes, be they political, moral or social, have no place for modesty and moderation. Having begun a thing once, they know not where to stop. But abler pens than mine have dwelt upon this national weakness of ours; and by none more ably than yourself in, if I mistake not, your excellent work on the visit of the Duke of Edinburgh. Well, our education and enlightenment find expression in our aping everything English—in our dress, and in the clandestine use of knives and forks. Madras, I was glad to observe, has not as yet caught this contagion, nor shews any sign of doing so. This is happy. I am of opinion with Babu Kali Charan Banerjee (you will say, perhaps, he is not the best man to quote on this point) that if we cannot rise as Indians, it is better that we should not rise at all. Let the brilliant and unique record of the "glorious Ind" and "gorgeous East," on which poets have sung and philosophers cogitated, sink for ever into the Oblivion of Lethe. But I hope when the charm of novelty will be gone and when, with growing experience and ripeness which age alone brings with it, we become more real and practical than we now are, a reaction will set in before which the fripperies of European civilisation—all that is useless and ornamental in it—will be swept away, and Mother India shall once more stand in her pristine glory—chastened and purified, proudly rearing up her head above the civilised nations of the world. The downfall and degradation of our race will then appear merely as the war of the elements—to be followed by the bright and glorious sunshine. But I am playing the Jacques, always melancholy and always moralising. To business now.

Mr. K. T. Telang.—In the forefront of the Native Indian speakers, must be placed this devoted son of Western India. A quiet and unassuming gentleman, sober, earnest and practical, you will search for his equal in India as a model speaker and search in vain. We all remember the just remarks of the Times of India on his speech when he presided at a meeting held in Bombay to welcome back Mr. Lal Mohun Ghosh. Your Bombay contemporary even gave him the palm of superiority over the Bengali orator Ghosh. And it can hardly be denied that if as a platform speaker he is not equal to Mr. Ghosh, as a speaker at the council table he far excels Mr. Ghosh. He won the esteem and regard of all; and it must have been a pleasing burden to him to carry the cart-loads of praises showered on him by all. No question of any importance came up for discussion but was contributed to by Mr. Telang. He had charge of the very first Resolution on the reform of the Legislative Councils, and I need hardly say that it could not have been entrusted to abler hands. It was he who poured oil over the troubled waters in the second Resolution on the Public Service Commission. It was he again who came to the rescue of the reputation of the Congress as a business assembly in the VI Resolution relating to the Arms Act. Who else but he could pacify the irritation of a large number of delegates who wanted a permanent settlement of the land revenue, and allay the apprehension of certain zemindars, by proposing that the discussion of the question be postponed to another year? In the meantime, the several standing Congress Committees were required to collect materials on the subject for the next year. And it goes without saying that he heartily seconded Mr. Adam's Resolution (IX) on education. Free and natural in his speech, requiring no gestures and gesticulations to help him, he was full of wise saws and modern instances. Standing stock-still, like a mute figure of marble, he poured forth a torrent of eloquence. To form an idea of his speeches, one has to go far back into classical literature and seek the help of Homer. You have but to recall to mind the description of the sage-like Ulysses' speech in the camp of the "spouting"

Holloway's Pills. Changes of temperature and weather frequently upset persons who are most careful of their health, and particular in their diet. These corrective, purifying and gentle aperient Pills are the best remedy for all defective action of the digestive organs. They augment the appetite, strengthen the stomach, correct biliousness, and carry off all that is noxious from the system. Holloway's Pills are composed of true balsams, unmixed with baser matter, and on that account are peculiarly well adapted for the young, delicate, and aged. As this priceless medicine has gained fame in the past, so will it preserve it in the future by its renovating and invigorating qualities, and the impossibility of its doing harm.

Achilles, when Ulysses formed a trio with two others and went on a mission from Agamemnon, to enable you to judge him rightly. His speeches were also appropriately interspersed with apposite humour and apt illustrations.

Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee—the deified hero of the school boys and the champion of the “dumb down-trodden millions of India,” the Father of Agitation in India—is, none can question, a very powerful speaker. To form a right conception of his style of oratory, you have in the first place to forget all that I have said above about Mr. Telang. His impassioned eloquence and fiery, furious declamation would be fully appreciated at electioneering platforms in England, but has hardly anything common with Mr. Telang. Those who cannot afford to go over to England to listen to demagogues, may safely spare themselves the time, the trouble and the money incidental to a long journey, and hear Mr. S. N. Banerjee. He largely brings into requisition the gestures and movements, the straining of the lungs, the swinging of the body, and the raising up and lowering down of hands (but I am not sure if also of feet), characteristic of Greek oratory. If you seek for maximum of sound with minimum of sense, go to Mr. Surendra Nath. He who loves to hear a speaker who never sticks to the point, who cannot proceed one step further without calling in to his aid “the dumb and down-trodden millions of India” and “the New India of changed circumstances,” who is a helpless creature, in short, of sentimental platitudes, why, where will he find a better man than Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee? His voice is at once the strength and the weakness of the gentleman. If you ask him to speak, he will thunder forth; if you ask him to debate, he will declaim; if you ask him when does he feel most in his element, he is sure to answer—in agitating. If you tell him the Congress speeches should not be agitating speeches and the Congress is not the place for them, he will tell you in reply—but the Congress itself is the result of agitation. In spite of all this, however, it must be conceded that he does possess and wield a wonderful power: I wish that it might be for good and not for evil. None should smell any animus in the foregoing observations. If they are at all caustic, Mr. Banerjee has to thank himself for it. I have felt called upon in the interests of truth and of the Congress to say so plainly. With every new year, the responsibilities of the Congress are growing. He should not overlook this fact. In the very first Resolution, he was appointed to second Mr. Telang; and you will concede the alliance of the giant and the dwarf in the fable was not more anomalous than was the union of Mr. Telang and Mr. Banerjee, unless on the assumption that it was a stroke of policy to couple these two like rabbits! Mr. Banerjee's declaiming faculty is also to be held responsible for the passing of the Arms Act Resolution. I understand he was not at first willing to undertake the responsibility involved in the step, but was spurred on to the step by Mr. Bonnerjee. Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee's argument, in defence of the Resolution, as he whispered it into the ears of Mr. Caine, was that having passed the Resolution once before it would not do to drop it now. So the best course devised was to stereotype the evil! And Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee, as the man who did not care much for bad reputation on this score and who alone had the capacity of winning over the delegates to his side, was selected for this purpose. If we accept this statement as a fact, we are bound to absolve Mr. Banerjee from much of the odium thrown upon him.

But then how will he explain away the Resolution VIII of 1887, which was passed chiefly at his instance? I remember how Mr. Chandravarkar's sensible speech was met with a fiery, eloquent speech by Mr. Banerjee. Be that as it may, none can deny that the opinion of the country on this subject is maturing, and I venture to predict that next year when all the sober speakers will put their heads together, Mr. Surendra Nath will be defeated on this question. Even after the perusal of the Patriot's article on the subject and Mr. Hume's elaborate letter to the Statesman, I have not been convinced that the step taken in 1887 and repeated last year, is not unwise and impolitic, although I can never say it is unjust. It will give a handle to our enemies who are never slow to cry that sedition is abroad. For the present, I think we should be content if we can get the Arms Act to work as liberally as it is now being worked in the Central Provinces under Mr. Mackenzie. Can we not get the Municipalities to give out licenses to proper persons? In any case, Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee must be prepared for the worst next year. He must be ready to change his plan and policy, or he shall suffer a discomfiture.

Mr. Kali Charan Banerjee.—It would be enough I think to say with regard to this first-rate speaker, that he fully kept up his reputation, if, indeed, he did not enhance it. To the breadth and liberality of his sympathies, and the depth of his learning, he unites the fervour born only of strong religious convictions. His chaste diction adds to the beauty of his eloquent and thoughtful words as they flow out of his mouth. He does not speak with the intent of winning applause, yet none who has the capacity of appreciating a really good speech can withhold from him his rightful meed of praise. His speech is not one monotonous “bel-lowing,” but he knows very well indeed what is cadence. At times, he rises to flights of perfect eloquence of which even the late lamented Keshub Chandra Sen need not have been ashamed.

Mr. Pherozeshah Mehta—has a voice scarcely less loud than Surendra Nath's, but certainly much sweeter. He can also speak to the point and, by his trenchant remarks and admirable illustrations, elicit cheers. When rising to propose the President for the Fourth National Congress, alluding to Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji as the President of the Second Congress at Calcutta, he, with a peculiar grace and emphasis, thundered forth “that black man,” the whole audience felt electrified. Again, speaking on the Arms Act Resolution, he propounded the emasculation theory, introducing a story of James II. which was very much appreciated. His speeches were, however, much more practical than Mr. Surendra Nath's speeches, but much less than those of Mr. Telang's.

The Hon'ble Pandit Ayodhya Nath.—But for this patriot, bold to indiscretion, the Congress would never have been the success it was at Allahabad. His adhesion to the cause gained back many wavering spirits, strengthened the faith of many and induced many more to join. His pyrotechnic eloquence is sure to animate hearers and elicit good humour'd laughter, as it has many a time done even from the High Court Judges and the honourable Councillors of the Lieutenant-Governor's Council. He is a man full of hobbies and idiosyncrasies. One of the most notable characteristics of this most remarkable man is, wherever he may be, in whatever station he may be placed, he must lead or he need not be there—he seems born to lead. A profound Arabic scholar as he is, and a terror to the local officials, he has probably no equal as a Urdu speaker. The very qualities which contribute to the embellishment of his Urdu speeches form the defects of his English orations. But I cannot think he cannot remove this defect, if only he wills it. He jumps and bounds and dances and frisks and gesticulates with remarkable effect when he speaks. If only he cares, he can draw forth from his store-house of knowledge wonderful and unheard of treasures. He is, let me close this to-day by saying, really the “combustible patriot” of Allahabad—an epithet applied to him by Mr. Malabari, I believe.

B.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages.

For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,

Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment

OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

FOR SALE

Price Post free Rs. 6.
 Cloth Gilt Rs. 6.
 Cloth Bound Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,

BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late
 NAWAB FARIDOO JAH BAHADOOR,
 (the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
 Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET,"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
 CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoo Jah Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following :—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river :—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detained our author's eye :—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting :—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

.....this interesting book. We are justified in so terming it, not on account of any romantic adventures that the author has to relate, nor of any very new discoveries in geography or natural history. There is something particular as regards ethnology; and a great deal of human nature in the book, shown to the reader with a simplicity and candour which bear testimony to its truth. Called from the busy haunts of men in the city to dwell for a time in Independent Tipperah as a judicious adviser to its chief, Doctor Mookerjee relates his adventures during the several journeys to and fro in that capacity, without revealing the secrets of the State, like a good diplomatist. He has adhered strictly to the advice which he offers to his brethren of the Native press, and has written what he saw and knows, without revealing all, considering what he might properly say and what withhold.....The above seems to be a curious passage to be found in a book of travels, and appears to have no connection with the subject. But it arises from a casual reference to a slaughter house, and a writer who "thundered weekly against the outrage of locating shambles in the immediate vicinity of a Hindoo temple"—where, in fact, no temple could be said to exist. Hence, the doctor advises his fellow-scribes not to be Pharisees, righteous overmuch, but to look and be sure of their facts. In the same spirit, he has written his book. He gives an account of his travels, which seem often to have been voyages, upon the widespread rivers of Eastern Bengal which in the rains become almost inland seas. On these he philosophises on the nature of the country and the people, making careful observation of his facts; and though he sometimes fancies he knows better than his boatmen, and more than suspects that they are getting the better of him, he submits with a grace that would have done credit to Socrates, and accepts the apparently inevitable in the interests of peace. The doctor is a close observer of nature, animate and inanimate, with an eye to the picturesque as well as to the sublime and beautiful. And although there is a vein of cynicism running through many of his observations, it is tempered by such evident good nature, that even a stranger would conceive him to be a laughter-loving rather than a stern philosopher. This is evident in his description of his boatmen and others, while he denounces the lawlessness which has made the poor fishermen so cautious even of honest intentions, because they have so long been the helpless victims of marauders stronger than themselves. Their only defence is flight or deceit, and the latter is then justification as a mode of self-protection. We are shown not only the weakness of the people, but the shortcomings of the administration that leave these things possible.....The author is impartial in his censures.....There is much in the book to which space forbids us to refer. That it is not a prosy one may be gathered from the fact that, for its 300 pages, there are nearly as many index references. Many of the subjects are necessarily but lightly treated, but all sensibly and fairly. And Dr. Mookerjee is such a master of the English language that in the whole book we have scarcely found a phrase that might not have been written by an Englishman "to the manner born." There is nothing in it at which any one could reasonably take offence; and there is much from which both Englishmen and natives may learn greatly-needed lessons.—The Indian Daily News, Nov. 22, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight; "she had such large languishing eyes." But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him.....Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course, some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

BEETHAM'S

GLYCERINE - AND - CUCUMBER

For INDIA and all HOT CLIMATES this sweetly scented emollient Milk is INVARIABLE IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and REFRESHED in the HOTTEST WEATHER. Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, REDNESS, FRECKLES, TAN, &c., and BLENDERS the SKIN DELICATELY SOFT, SMOOTH, and WHITE.

It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY and WRINKLED, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN and WIND more effectively than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BITES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin, this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers M. BEETHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

LITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Fry this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co., R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "SCINDE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 1st inst., and on Tuesday the 5th inst., the Steamer "INDORE" will leave Calcutta for Cachar.

All cargo for shipment by either of the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godowns at Juggannauth Ghat the day previous to the vessels leaving Calcutta.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, and Fridays, and Debrooghur on Mondays and Fridays.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY,
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Locketts, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Samkutla, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' DISINFECTANTS:

The best and cheapest Antiseptics,
Deodorizers and Cleansers.

Jejes' Perfect Purifier

supercedes Carbolic and other Disinfectants, being much more efficacious, non-poisonous, non-corrosive, stainless in use, and cheaper. Prevents contagion by destroying its cause. Instantly removes bad smells. It is an almost unfailing cure for Eczema and other Skin Diseases; and is the best known Insecticide. Can be had in the various forms of Liquid, Powder, Soap and Ointment.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

prevents infection by destroying its cause, killing the very germs of contagious diseases. It removes instantly all noxious smells, not by temporarily disguising them (as is often the case), but by chemical combination, substituting instantaneously for a poisonous a pure and healthy atmosphere, and thoroughly eradicating the evil.

Agents:—DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

TEA! TEA! TEA!
Cheapest & Best,
SUPPLIED BY
THE INDIAN TEA SUPPLY CO.
"LIMITED."

In packets of 1 oz., 2 oz. and 4 oz. each from 3 pice only and upwards.

Note the Low Price.
A Packet of Tea for 3 pice!

Important News for India,
WHERE FEVERS AND CHOLERA
REIGN SUPREME.

A RECENT TRAVELLER ON THE Chinese Coast found that District remarkably FREE FROM TYPHOID FEVER and CHOLERA. He soon discovered the cause. The people there do not drink cold water from tanks or wells, often extremely impure, but keep a pan of water constantly boiling, into which from time to time they drop a little Tea, and when thirsty THEY DRINK HOT TEA! If the weak and adulterated Teas of China can do this, what may not the pure and strong Teas of India be expected to effect?

Also in tins ½lb to 10lbs of various qualities to suit all tastes.

Ask for the Indian Tea Supply Company's Teas.

We have Agents all over the Country, but want more.

Managing Agents:

LYALL MARSHALL & CO.,
4, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION,
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.
Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine
Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge,
Mysadul Hospital.

Address,—
2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly	... "	... " 7
Quarterly	... "	... " 4
Monthly	... "	... Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1889.

No. 361

CONTEMPORARY LYRICS.

THE BALM OF SPEECH.

(By a Clergyman's wife.)

THE hum of insects, as they throng
The summer sunbeam's glorious way ;
The soaring sky-lark's early song ;
The nightingale's mellifluous lay ;—

The murmur of the peaceful wave ;
The valley-breezes gently sighing ;
The wind's wild voice in mountain cave ;
And Echo from her cell replying ;—

The soft Æolian lyre, whose notes
Upon the lonely musér rise ;
The church-bells' hallowed tone, that floats
Like music from the distant skies ;—

Could never make my spirit feel
So rapt above this lower sphere,
As when affection's accents steal,
All musical, upon mine ear.

- The harmonies of mortal art,
And e'en of nature's varied strain,
Ne'er touch, as when another's heart
Reveals in words our own again.

Oh ! may the melody of speech
Sing to me, while on earth I rove ;
And may the last faint tones that reach
My dying ear be those of love !

FLOWERS.

YE are the Scriptures of the Earth,
Sweet flowers, fair and frail ;
A sermon speaks in every bud
That wooes the summer gale.

Ye lift your heads at early morn,
To greet the sunny ray,
And cast your fragrance forth to praise
The Lord of night and day.

Sown in the damp and cheerless earth,
Ye slumber for a while,
Then waken unto glorious life,
And bid creation smile.

Thus when within the darksome tomb
Our mortal frame shall lie,
The soul, freed from the bonds of sin
Shall join the choir on high.

A PLEA FOR BEAUTIFUL THINGS.

IT is not well for deathless souls to cling
Only to that whose end must be to die !
Th' immortal spirit, borne on Faith's broad wing,
Should soar, and seek its first, best love on high.

Yet must we therefore teach our hearts to deem
The will of earth's Creator best obeyed
By those who speak of beauty as a dream,
And scorn all earthly things—because they fade ?

Not so ! not so ! for beauty, even on earth,
By love and pow'r divine alone was given ;
It is the seal of a celestial birth,
The glorious signet of the King of heaven.

"Love not the world !"—the precept is divine ;
"Love not the world !" its pomps, its idle toys,
For these with but deceitful lustre shine,
And cheat the heart with their unreal joys.

But oh ! prize all that still is truly bright,
The love of what is lovely is its due ;
'T is the soul's prophecy of realms of light,
Where all things beautiful are pure and true !

False is the cold philosophy which paints
This God-created world as but a tomb ;
Though fallen man upon his journey fains,
Still hath his path some of its early bloom.

Were it not worse than vain to close our eyes
Unto the azure sky and golden light,
Because the tempest-cloud doth sometimes rise,
And glorious day must darken into night ?

Think ye 't was meant that man should find no spell
Of joy and beauty in the song-bird's lay ?
Oh ! were the bright flow'rs only made to tell
A warning tale of bloom—that must decay ?

Not such the lessons the Great Teacher drew
From flow'rs, the living jewels of the sod ;
For men he taught, with wisdom deep and true,
To read in them the mercy of our God.

The wondrous bow, which seems the heavens to span
What is more transient ? yet by God 't is made --
Sign of a changeless covenant with man ;
And shall we still scorn all things that do fade ?

Wiser and better with a thankful mind
To bless our God for ev'ry glory giv'n,
And with a gentle heart to seek and find
In things on earth a type of things in heav'n.

X.

J. M.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE Times of India hears "on what we are inclined to think credible information, that in the report of the Commissioners Mr. Arthur Crawford is acquitted of all the charges of bribery, and found guilty of wrong conduct only on some of the charges about improper borrowing."

MR. John M. Dougall, F.C.S., has reported to the Under-Secretary of State for India that "our white wheats, when separated from all admixture, are of a very fine quality, equal to the finest in the world, and if they could be so shipped would command the highest price." The Bombay Times remarks—"Buyers of Indian wheats are under the impression that they cannot obtain them otherwise than in their present 'foul condition' nor will they until the Corn Association alter their forms of contract, and insert some limitation of dirt and dust." From a tabulated analysis of impurities in Indian, European, American and Australian wheats appended to the report, the American comes out the purest, the admixture being the least.

WE are authoritatively informed that the Viceroy has offered a Silver Medal to the Government School of Art, for competition among the students. The Medal will probably be given to the student who, at the end of the year, has made the greatest progress in any of the classes under instruction.

The Marquis of Landsdowne has also signified his intention (should His Excellency's engagements permit) to visit the School in a few weeks.

AT the elections, Dowager Lady Sandhurst and Miss Cobden have been returned to the London County Council. The question has arisen—are ladies eligible as County Councillors? And if County Councillors, why not Members of Parliament?

A PAUPER of Meriden, Conn, named Mary Griffin, is said to have fasted fifty five days, before nature failed her and she died. Oh how tenacious is life! How slow an executioner is Hunger!

If some of the wealthy dilettanti, who expended so much to test Dr. Tanner's capacity to live without food, had given some of it towards this real case of starvation, Mary Griffin might be living still.

THE French Bishops have, it is said, received instructions from Rome not to sanction cremation. Bishop Dupanloup has left an essay in which he shows that interment is not all evil. The Bishop argues the subject not only on theological but also secular grounds. He is even scientific—nothing like science in these days. And his science is eminently episcopal. According to him, the custom of burial promotes cultivation. But for it, the earth would lose all its fertility and power of reproduction. Is not cremation equally useful in that direction? The following throws some light on the question:—

"A certain professor, in Germany, with his class of students was examining various soils, and on one occasion they visited a piece of open ground which consisted of made, not virgin soil. Under the microscope in this soil were discovered the spores of glanders. A careful examination was made into the history of this ground, and it was found out that some twenty years before it had been used for the cremation of horses that had died of glanders. How necessary therefore is it that all organic debris should be entirely destroyed, and not hidden!"

There is little hope for the science of religion—as represented by bishops. But a plain question from a plain man before concluding: Would an adept—or, for that matter, a community general of the infinite host of Anointed Existence—reject glandered horseflesh, or, not rejecting, catch it, and give it to the whole tribe of scavengers of Nature's Health Officer and Sanitary Commissioner, to the destruction of that most valuable body of public servants of the animal kingdom?

THE Mitters are a famous house, not a whit inferior to the Mookerjees. Their aptitude for letters and law is remarkable. The country has not yet forgotten the brilliant Judge of that ilk of the High Court. Another able one still adorns the same Bench. There are lawyers of reputation in the bar too of the same clan. Nor is there any prospect in the immediate future of a break in the continuity. A grandson of the late Peary Chand Mitter has just passed a brilliant examination for admittance to the bar. Last term, Babu Jotish Chunder Mitter obtained a scholarship of 100 guineas in International Law and a prize of £15 in Roman Law. At the examination of December last, he felled 18 competitors and won the great prize in Roman Law—a studentship of 100 guineas.

ABBE ARMOND DAVID—the Eastern traveller and savant—reports that "the mortal remains of the great conqueror, Genghis Khan, or Dengeis Bogoto, as he is called in Mongolia, are preserved at a place called Kia-y-sen, in the land of Ordos, a desolate region in a bend of the Yellow River in Mongolia. They are contained in a large silver coffin, which the Mongols will not show to strangers without some good reason."

IN its issue of Monday the 11th, the Englishman, speaking of the filling up of a tank, denounces the operation by town sweepings, and calls for "some authoritative Government decision settling once and for all that tanks shall not be filled in the way adopted by the Corporation." It was once ascertained that it would take several years to close the tanks in the present Calcutta with town sweepings. Filling them with earth is not only costly, but dilatory and impracticable. For, after all, where is all the earth to be found? It therefore behoves all concerned to devise some plan by which these noxious sinks may be converted into useful reservoirs. It was once stated in some quarter that electricity might be subordinated to this purpose. Till that agent comes to our rescue, some other means must be found. Cannot the Sanitary Compounds help us? Jeyes's Perfect Purifier claims to be at once a true purifier and insecticide.

LORD LANSDOWNE has agreed to be the patron of the Calcutta Public Library. Cui bono? The Library never lacked viceregal patronage, yet it is going from bad to worse every year.

A JEWELLED sword, gold mounted and set with upwards of 600 diamonds, rubies and emeralds—a present from the late Runjeet Sing, the Lion of the Punjab, to his Commander-in-Chief the late General Van Cutlaedt, C. B.—was knocked down at Messrs. Debenham, Storr & Sons' Auction Rooms, in Covent Garden, for only 91 gs.

THE Wesleyan Missionary Society's annual Report for 1887, contains the following glowing account of mission work in Nagore:—

"In Nagore, the Gospel has been regularly preached in the town and surrounding villages throughout the year. There has been very little opposition and the Mahomedans once so hostile, now listen with respectful attention and take the Catechist's part in disputes with the Hindus. Twelve villages, varying in distance from one to ten miles have been visited during the year. In some of those the truth is favourably received, but caste restrains from an open profession. The Catechist spends his evenings in house to house visitations, and during the year, besides a large number of Hindu houses, he has visited those of 242 Mahomedans, in 48 of which he has been permitted to read and expound the word of God. There has been one adult baptism from heathenism, that of a woman of the shepherd caste, who, since her baptism, has maintained a good confession without wavering in spite of much persecution. Her father, an old man of 80 is, we believe, a sincere enquirer, and there is also a young man, a Brahmin by caste, who has promised to forsake all and follow Christ early next year."

"ZENANA WORK. During the year, 52 houses have been regularly visited, and 9 people have been taught to read, 6 of whom constantly read the Bible. 116 women have been under regular instruction, of whom 77 are Hindus, 37 Mahomedans, and 2 Roman Catholics. The work has been very encouraging and has produced visible fruit. In December last, one heathen woman received the rite of baptism and there is another anxious to follow her example, but is hindered by her friends. The large number of Mahomedan women, so long inaccessible is a hopeful feature of our work. They have to be visited in the evening between 7 and 9 P. M."

On this, a correspondent of the Hindu remarks:—

"The above report evidently contains several inaccuracies and is cleverly got up by the Catechist, simply to win the good graces of the Missionaries. The fact is that as he is a little bit of a physician, he used to go to Mahomedan houses and treat those who are ill. To protest against this report, a large meeting of the Mahomedans numbering about 800, was convened in which the Catechist himself confessed his errors; it was resolved that no Mahomedan should receive medicine from him, or should take him into his house, and that no one of their community should read the Bible, and that if any body were to violate the resolution passed, he would be excommunicated. The Hindus of the place established a school in which the Mahomedans heartily joined them. The conduct of some young educated Brahmins who have gone over to the Mission as teachers is a subject of much comment by Hindus and Mahomedans."

The newly started Native Middle School has on its rolls 105 students, of whom 30 are Mahomedans.

THE Raipur-Bilaspur section of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway is now open for traffic.

MESSRS. Glover & Co. have completed within time the railway line from Jhansi to Gwalior. It was inspected on the 4th. If the Government is satisfied, it will be opened to the public on the 1st March.

THE Lieutenant-Governor returned from Cooch Behar on Tuesday.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN arrived here on Tuesday morning and left for his capital by evening train the next day.

ON Thursday, the Secretaries of the Government of India entertained Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace at a farewell dinner in the United Service Club. Sir David Miller Barbour proposed the health of the guest.

MR. Justice O'Kinealy goes on leave at the end of this month. Mr. Justice Wilson goes home a few weeks later.

SIR Alfred Croft has been re-appointed a member of the Bengal Legislative Council.

MR. W. R. Larminie having obtained furlough, Mr. C. F. Worsley, Officiating Commissioner of the Orissa Division and Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, Cuttack, and not Mr. E. V. Westmacott, acts as Commissioner of the Dacca Division; Mr. J. A. Hopkins, Magistrate and Collector, Nuddea, officiates as Commissioner and Superintendent in the Orissa Division and the Tributary Mehals.

MR. D. B. Horn, Executive Engineer, Buxar Division, will temporarily be a member of the Public Works Accounts Committee.

THE Hon'ble J. W. Quinton, C.S.I., has been renominated and Munshi Muhammad Ali Khan of Jahangirabad, in the Bulandshahar District, has been taken in, as Additional Members of the Supreme Legislative Council.

SECTIONS 223 to 228 of the Code of Civil Procedure have been extended to the Sonthal Pergunnahs.

TO-DAY'S Gazette of India confirms Surgeon-Major W. H. Gregg, M.B., as Sanitary Commissioner, Bengal; Mr. F. Henvey as Agent to the Governor-General in Central India, Colonel S. B. Miles as Resident in Meywar; and Lieutenant-Colonel W. F. Prideaux as Resident at Jeyapore.

NRESINGHA CHURN ADDY has honourably earned the thanks of the Lieutenant-Governor in the Gazette, for his liberality of Rs. 15,000 towards the cost of a feeder road from the Hatipal station of the Tarkessur Railway to Bunderhatty, in the Burdwan Division, "which will be of great benefit to all residents of the surrounding neighbourhood."

LIEUTENANT Kreyer—who had been under arrest since the Bulkeley court martial and on whom a court martial was ordered—has been released and the court martial cancelled. Why?

PERSONS not in the service of the Government who reside in the Khondmals and in the Mahal of Angul in Orissa, have been entirely exempted from the Income tax.

THERE will be a revision of the settlement of the villages Batauni, Rangamatia and Khelabari in the Government Khas Mehal Damin-i-Koh, in the district of the Sonthal Pergunnahs.

THE latest hour for posting at the General Post Office for the accelerated Mail Train on Wednesdays commencing from the 20th, is 7-30 P.M.

THE law declaring the English standard yard as the legal standard measure of length in British India is published in to-day's Gazette of India as Act II of 1889. It applies to the whole of British India, but does not come into operation until the Governor-General fixes the day on that behalf. Such notification awaits the arrival from England of the imperial standard. The present measure being ancillary to the one now maturing in the Council against fraudulent marks on merchandise, it has not been deemed advisable to apply this standard to measures of land.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

BIG with the fate of great dignitaries in Church and State, of statesmen and rulers, of parties and nations, is the latest news of the week. France is passing through a parliamentary crisis which threatens the very existence of the Republic if not the nation. The late success of the firebrand Boulanger at the elections, has demonstrated the futility of Gambetta's scrutin de liste. The Ministry, therefore, resolved upon the revision of the constitution as the only means of preserving republican Government, and introduced a bill for reverting to the scrutin d'arrondissement. But the opposition of the new Chamber has proved too much for them, the Orleanists having formed a coalition with the Boulangists. By a majority of 89, the Deputies voted the adjournment—meaning the shelving of the Bill. M. Floquet and his colleagues have, in consequence, resigned. Boulanger is merry over this result, of course, claiming the defeat of the Ministry as his work. And what is more, he predicts the dissolution of the Chamber to follow soon.

THERE is another of the periodical Russian scares in the field. News comes all the way from Russia, through London, by telegraph, that the Great Northern Bear is much exercised by the Amceer's visit to his frontiers, in pursuit of the enemies in his kingdom and of his family and in his pay. As he is attended by a suitable military escort, and is doubtless taking measures for the efficient guarding of his boundaries, from the intrusion of Ishak Khan, now a fugitive in Russian territory, the Russians—or some of the busybodies among them—think this a good opportunity for picking up a quarrel. According to them, there ought to be amassing of Russian troops on the Afghan frontier. It is all nonsense, and we have every hope the Government of the Czar will do no such thing.

POOR Dhuleep Singh has been played out. He is now reduced to feigning madness in real earnest. He has issued at Paris a manifesto to the Princes and people of India which has never left France, and probably never will, in which he speaks of his supporters in Europe and America, ready to form an army for the overthrow of the British in India, provided only the little sum of four millions sterling, for munitions of war, is raised by India, the army apparently being an honorary service to be recouped from the plunder of the British Indian treasures, in the event of success. This is a queer method of clearing the way for the Prodigal's return to his guardians.

THE greatest "sensation" at Home in England is the production by the Times, before the Parnell Commission, of the Parnell letters, which are the subject of the inquiry, and of other documents in corroboration of their genuineness. These letters could not, of course, have been obtained by the enemy without treachery within. The Times's solicitor swore to Pigott, the editor of the Shamrock, as the traitor who furnished them for £3,000. The detective, who was instrumental in procuring them, also received an equal sum. Not before they were certified to by an expert, were they published or, we suppose, paid for. The solicitor believed the writing in the body of the letters was Mr. Campbell's.

THE Bishop of Lincoln is being tried for the heresy denominated Ritualism. The trial was opened at the Archbishop's Palace of Lambeth on Tuesday, the 12th instant. As might be expected, the Bishop contested the competence of the court to try him. The arguments will be resumed on the 12th of next month. This is but the beginning of the wearisome tediousness which is inflicted on the public in connection with these foolish ecclesiastical squabbles, and which, on the occasion of the Gorham trial, provoked Mr. John Lang in the Moffussilite to a famous outburst of profanity, which would have delighted the soul of Lord Thurlow. These points of doctrine appear to us so insignificant and puerile, that we wish the Bishop's preliminary objection might be as successful as was the late Archdeacon Dennison's protest. Is Christianity, after all, a matter of millinery and upholstery—of personal apparel or of the situation of a table? And yet, with all these prejudices rampant among the most enlightened Europeans, how little do they respect the similar, perhaps more rational, scruples of other nations! What ultra-radicals and out-and-out reformers they all are in India!

AFFAIRS on the East African Coast are drawing to a crisis. In the name of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar, the Admirals Commanding the British and German Squadrons, have, from noon of 2nd December 1888, declared a Blockade of the Continental Dominions of the Sultanate, against the importation of munitions of war, and the exportation of slaves only, on the continuous line of coast of Zanzibar, including the Island of Mafia and Lamu and the lesser islands adjoining the coast from 10° 28' south to 2° 10' south latitude.

All ships, to whatever nationality belonging, are liable to visit and search. They are warned to "bring to" and lower their sails immediately on a blank charge being fired. Failing that, a warning shot will be fired across their bows and the ships will be treated as hostile. Vessels engaged in ordinary trade are free to continue their voyage after being visited.

This is the result of the understanding lately come to, between the Cabinets of London and Berlin. Before such a joint demonstration, powers much greater than poor Zanzibar would bow the head in meek submission. If there should be any disposition to barbaric obstinacy or impracticable fanaticism in the man, it might possibly be smoothed down and subdued by the influence and wise counsels of Sir J. Kirk, who is so well known on the Coast and who will be soon there. The danger is that the Sultan himself may be wholly powerless before an explosion of Islamite fervour. In that case, there may be lamentable scenes on both sides of the Red Sea. All will come round in the end, however. That is a comfort.

IN 1882, the Government withdrew the Patwari-rate from the North-Western Provinces, thus relieving the Provinces of taxation to the amount of over 30 lacs of rupees. In view of the depressed condition of the Indian exchequer, the tax is to be revived and the same rate imposed on the Province of Oudh. Accordingly, the Hon'ble Mr. Quinon, at the last sitting of the Supreme Council yesterday, obtained leave and introduced a Bill for the purpose. The Patwari-rate proposed for the N. W. Provinces is 4 per cent on the revenue and 3 per cent for Oudh. It was on this business that, we suspect, Sir Auckland Colvin came on his flying visit to Calcutta, and not to coach the Finance Department, as some think, nor to pay a complimentary visit to his new Chief, as others believe.

IN conformity with its instructions to the Chief Magistrate, in reply to the protest of the Honorary Magistrates, the Government has revised the Rules for the guidance of Benches of Magistrates. The new Rules are:—

1. The Honorary Presidency Magistrates shall sit in the rotation arranged by the Chief Magistrate.
2. The Honorary Presidency Magistrates shall try only such cases as may be referred to them by the Chief Magistrate or by his orders.
3. The Honorary Presidency Magistrates shall ordinarily open their Courts at noon, and rise at 5 P. M., on the dates fixed by the Chief Magistrate. A special Bench may, however, be convened on any other day or any other hour by the Chief Magistrate.
4. A Bench shall ordinarily be composed of not less than three Magistrates, when they are all Honorary Magistrates; or of two when one of them is a Stipendiary; but the Chief Magistrate may, in his discretion, permit any two Honorary Presidency Magistrates to proceed with the hearing and disposal of cases.
5. The Chief Magistrate may, should he deem it desirable, appoint any Honorary Presidency Magistrate sitting singly to be a Court, and on business being sent to him by the Chief Magistrate, he shall dispose of the same, but not otherwise.
6. Should any Honorary Presidency Magistrate named for attendance on a Bench fail to be present on the appointed day, the Chief Magistrate may, in his discretion, either summon another Magistrate, or direct that the Bench should proceed without the absent member.
7. The Stipendiary Magistrates shall be ex officio members of Benches; the Chief Magistrate shall, if present, officiate as Chairman; in his absence, the Junior Stipendiary Magistrate shall, if sitting, officiate as Chairman. In the absence of both the Stipendiary Magistrates, the Chief Magistrate shall nominate the Chairman.
8. The Chairman shall conduct the proceedings of the Court, and exercise all the functions in that behalf usually exercised by a Stipendiary Magistrate when sitting singly. He will decide upon the admissibility of evidence, and maintain order in the Court; but it shall be open to any member of the Bench to put questions to the witnesses either direct or through the Chairman as the latter may deem advisable, and to suggest any matter for the Chairman's consideration.
9. Every member of a Bench shall have a voice in the finding and sentence. In a Bench consisting of three members, the opinion of the majority shall prevail; when there are only two members, the Chairman shall have a casting vote.

10. The Chairman shall himself ordinarily record the evidence and judgment in cases where a record of evidence and judgment is necessary; but such duty may, with his consent, be performed by any of his colleagues, or the evidence and judgment may be taken down by the Registrar of the Court at the dictation of the Chairman.

11. A Bench may hold one or more adjourned sittings, should it be necessary to do so for the disposal of business or of part-heard cases; but it shall be open to a Bench at the close of each sitting either to refer unheard cases back to the Chief Magistrate for disposal, or to postpone them to some other day as may be most convenient, but adjournments should be, as far as possible, de die in diem.

12. Any part-heard case adjourned by a Bench composed of three Magistrates may be proceeded with on the day fixed for the adjourned hearing before any two of the said Magistrates; provided always that the accused person or persons give his or their consent. All subsequent hearings of the case, where further adjournments are necessary, shall be before the same two Magistrates.

13. Any part-heard case may be sent back to the Chief Magistrate for disposal, should it appear unsuited for trial by a Bench.

These Rules thus restore the old familiar phrase "Honorary Presidency Magistrates" and withdraw the innovation "Unpaid" which so much wounded the feelings of the Great Unpaid. The Registrar is relegated to his own proper place, instead of being the visible directing spirit of the Benches. Except as Chairman of the Bench in the absence of the Chief Magistrate, the Junior Stipendiary Magistrate has no existence in these Rules. Cases from his Court must come to the Benches through the Chief Magistrate. Even in the absence of the Chief Magistrate, the Junior Stipendiary is not to exercise the authorities vested in the Chief Magistrate. This is an omission which must be rectified sooner or later. A graver mistake is that Benches are deprived of the power to appoint their own Chairmen.

LEGISLATIVE restrictions on the use of arms by the civil population work everywhere in the same way. In all more or less wild countries they leave the people at the mercy of beasts of prey and animals destructive to cultivation, as well as burglars and brigands and other human depredators. It is the same in Java as in India. In the latter country, even more than the former, the peculiarities of faith intensify the effects of legal disability. Between these causes, there has been going on a alarming multiplication in the natural breeding of the misanthropic families in the kingdom of Animated Nature, and doubtless also a proportionate advance in their boldness. As a consequence, for some years past, parts of Java are being depopulated by tigers. In 1882, the population of a whole village in the south-west of the Province of Bantam had to be removed and transferred to an island off the coast, to save them from these man-eaters. In 1887, out of a population of 600,000, 61 were killed by tigers, and it was proposed to remove the population of the most threatened part to a safer one. The people, as good Buddhists, shrink from the mortal sin of killing even beasts, unless previously attacked, when it is usually too late for taking either defensive or offensive measures. Besides, this particular district is, as the result of a previous rising, under the ban of an Arms Act. Last year, the reward for killing a Royal Java tiger was raised to 200 florins or £20.

HERE is news from the other side of India! Naive Opinion says on the 10th instant—

"We are glad to note that the Cooch Behar Raj under the personal management of the Maharaja is becoming a model state."

A pretty model to be sure. But our Bombay contemporary is scarcely to blame, perhaps, seeing that it follows a contemporary nearer home. But it is greatly to be pitied for relying upon that broken reed of journalism—the Patriot of these latter days. It seems—

"According to the Patriot all the high and responsible posts are held by men of culture. It seems the Maharaja in his duties is assisted by a Council of elders—a machinery so necessary for the good government of a district. We hope other native states also move in the same direction."

We confess we are unable to add Amen! We do hope no "other native states" will "move in the same direction." It is bad enough to have one of our states sacrificed.

OUR contemporary really enjoys an enviable frame of mind. This Canada of the Press is in ecstasy at the emancipation of the serfs of his generous imagination, thus:—

"So there is every prospect of the Assam coolie becoming a freeman sooner or later."

Well, if the coolie is a slave in Assam, it is something if there is any prospect of his enfranchisement sooner or later. But, why should he be a slave at all? Would it not be better to prevent his ever being a coolie? Our contemporary derives his prospect of the eventual release of the slave from the circumstance noted thus—

"A concession has been made in the case under which the time-expired coolie will be entitled to such lands as he may think of occupying free of rent for three years. This will be a powerful incentive to him to enter upon planting labour in tea plantations."

In other words, the freeman will consent to be a slave for a term for the prospect of becoming a freeman on such terms. But can such an arrangement be described as a slavery? We object to the use of this sensational language which not only confounds broad distinctions and prevents the calm consideration of a sober and important economic question, but also prejudices Capital and scares away Labour and altogether sets class against class—the Planters against the Coolies and vice versa, and causes unnecessary hostility between the native and the European communities. Above all, it indefinitely postpones the good day when natives of energy and capital will share in the very enterprises by which the Europeans are benefitting at the same time that they are developing the resources of the country and advancing its prosperity and improving the condition of the people. We commend this view of the matter to our politics-mad publicists and patriots. Look at the characteristic conclusion of our contemporary!

"The necessity of this concession as an inducement to labour evidently shows that the planting law is not an unmixed good in Assam."

For shame, Native Opinion! Was there ever a law in the world or anything anywhere, that was an unmixed good?

A COOK, whose name is not mentioned, earns, in London, as much as £2,000 a year

"In his own brougham he sets out towards evening for the house of some rich man who is going to give a dinner at which every dish must be above criticism. Here he alights, and goes to the kitchen, goes through the process of tasting all the soups, sauces, and made dishes, advising, when his palate suggests, a little more salt here, a pinch of herbs there, a dash of sugar in this entree, a suspicion of onion in that salutis, &c. This done, he pockets his fee of five guineas and drives on to the next dinner-giving patron. His nightly list comprises many houses all through the London season."

What a beautiful illustration of the perfection of organization in European society, securing efficiency and preventing waste! It is far cheaper to pay a taster five guineas than spoil a costly eating and the pleasure of a whole party. But most of our people would, we are afraid, save the few pounds—even a few shillings—at the risk of ruining the whole entertainment. We speak generally, for the revising chef has not the same field among us, as among nations who, however civilised in other respects, have not yet acquired the art of eating. It is only the rude cuisine of London that will admit of the tinkering and manipulation of the broughamwala Browatchee. The true Indian cookery is above it and too delicate for it. It is done on a different principle. Your European dishes are often made, and always completed, at the eating table. Ours are always finished in the kitchen. The former are frequently mere mechanical combinations. The latter, as a rule, are chemical combinations done over the kitchen fire. Besides, among the Hindus, the law of ceremonial purity discourages the application of tests before serving, but, of course, it is to some extent done on the sly, in the interest of their reputation by those who cook. Mahomedan cooks regularly taste in the course of preparation. But the principle of their art leaves little room for ante-prandium interference after cooking.

Two of the Calcutta schools have been reported by the Inspector of Schools as having passed a fraud on the University. About a dozen students who failed in the test examination of their own schools, went over to these two institutions, paid down certain fees and were returned as regular students for the Entrance examination which commenced on Monday. It is not permitted by the rules of the University to students educated at one school to appear at the examination as from another. A student can only appear from the school at which he was during the last six or eight months. The students in question could only have been sent up by falsification of registers. According to these books, they appeared to have achieved the extraordinary feat of being at two places at the same time. One of the schools implicated glories in the honoured name of a great officer of the High Court, and is bolstered up by the energies of an astute Secretary. This too clever by half person, after the ominous visit of Mr. Inspector Radhika Prasanna Mookerjee and his rummaging of the school records, hastened to put in a plea of inadvertence—in introducing new names into old registers, we suppose.

The two Institutions have been called upon to explain their conduct, but the boys have been allowed to appear at the examination pending the enquiry. How are these boys to be dealt with if they pass? If the fraud is brought home to the schools and the boys, the consequence is plain. It is scarcely fair to the boys, to send them to the examination with such a weight of anxiety on their heads. The matter ought to have been there and then decided, so far at least as the present examination was concerned.

A NEIGHBOURING contemporary has again been betrayed into school-mastering with the old Gooroo Mohasoy. It airs its knowledge by an attempt to correct our Indian geography. Let it enjoy its triumph. We are content to know that Whitefield is situated in the Neilgherries.

THE Mirror having lost all character and been thoroughly discredited all round, within as well as without the Congress, has found a ready organ in our sturdy contemporary of the Amrita Bazar. In the current number, the indefatigable Mr. Allan Hume publishes one of his anonymous manifestoes. It was probably sent as an editorial contribution—it is certainly rank with the wedon which was so offensive to the late Mr. Frederick Maurice—but the experienced editor had his own good reasons for not adopting it. There can, however, be no doubt about the "esteemed friend" who has indited this vindication of the Indian Political Agency in England. Written in the character of a veteran native politician, probably to suit, as it well does, our brother of the Amrita Bazar, it is the Old Man's Hope again all over. We regret that Mr. Hume should be so prone to this hide and seek game. We do not know whether there is any legitimate occasion for it. It can never pay in the long run. He is certainly not fit to carry it on. He is a man of ability but not of the ability to sustain different characters. He has talent but not genius, and it is genius that is required for the rôle he would enact. He can never attain to vraisemblance as a native patriot. He should stick to the reality. As a Scotchman retired from the Civil Service, who earnestly desires to do what good he can to the country, he would be at home. Speaking only from a literary point of view, without reference to the ethics of the matter, we consider his attempts to throw the public off the scent ill-judged, because vain and almost puerile. He not only lacks dramatic power, but is deficient in the almost mechanical art of disguising his hand. It is probably the palpable evidence of this want in the writing under notice that decided the editor in rejecting it as an editorial contribution.

The Indian Political Agency in England may certainly be a good thing, if well directed from India. It is certainly in proper hands in England, Mr. William Digby being the Agent. But the editor, we see, spoils his advocacy by attempting to prove too much. Thus we are told—

"The Agency has only been in existence a few months, and yet it has accomplished great things. It has been the means of bringing the Congress under the attention of the English people, and getting up dozens of public meetings where our late delegates discoursed upon Indian subjects before the English audience. It also brought several grievances of the Princes and the people of India before the House of Commons. Among the latter may be mentioned the Kirkwood case and Sir Lepel Griffin's treatment of the Begum of Bhopal. It need hardly be said that, Mr. Kirkwood or Sir Lepel Griffin would have never been compelled to resign the Civil Service, if they had not been made to cut such an unenviable figure in Parliament."

That is as magnificent a specimen of castle architecture in Spain as any to be found in the files of Congress literature! While we are all under the impression that the Agency's triumphs are in the future, here it is credited with having accomplished great things. What it has done in the way of bringing the Congress before the British public, might be effected from here. A greater agitation in favour of the Ilbert Bill was made without any special agency. The Princes have always taken care of their own interests, so far at least as bringing their grievances before Parliament is concerned. And has the Agency taken up the cause of Siddiq Hossein? But was there any other princely grievance brought before Parliament by the Agency? The concluding assertion is a fitting crown to the bravery of the whole. So Mr. Kirkwood would never have been compelled to resign but for Parliamentary pressure, and Sir Lepel Griffin has left the Service under compulsion of the same august power! So far as the first is concerned, this is simply ungrateful to the Governments here. As for the second, it is unjust to our contemporary. Was it not the Amrita Bazar that had hounded the Knight of Central India out of office and the land?

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1889.

EDUCATION IN BENGAL.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY'S latest Resolution on Sir Alfred Croft's Education Report for 1887-88, marks what may be considered a new stage in the history of education in Bengal. There is no more that furor for mass education—that hunting up of primary schools and swelling the figures of children under instruction that stinting of education of every other kind for stimulating the education of what was called the lower classes but that were no more lower classes than those attending other descriptions of schools. All this enthusiasm has given place to a more quiescent—and shall we say normal?—mood. A reaction has evidently set in. The Government Resolution is pitched in a far different key from what we had been used to in past years. Here is how the subject is curtly disposed of:—

"Practically, primary education in Bengal has reached a stationary state, and such variations as occur from year to year in the numbers are due rather to alterations in the system of registration than to any real advance or retrogression. The Provincial Government has not in recent years been able to make any increase in the assignment under this head; and there is not, as in the case of English education, a spontaneous tendency to the spread of elementary instruction, irrespective of Government assistance, beyond the classes which it at present reaches."

A similar lull marks the progress of secondary education. The financial difficulties of Government have brought about almost a standstill in the progress of educational work. Applications for new grants-in-aid have been accumulating for the last three years on the hands of the Department, nor is any indication afforded in the Resolution that a more liberal treatment of the claims of this important branch—this backbone of the educational system—might be looked forward to at an early date. The Government Resolution is distinct on the point:—

"The Director notices that applications for new grants have been accumulating for the last two or three years, and observes that it is much to be wished that Government were in a position to afford more liberal aid. This is doubtless desirable, but the fulfilment of the wish is very improbable considering not only existing financial conditions, but also the more urgent claims of primary and technical education."

It is not to be supposed that Government will be able to maintain all old grants in aid indefinitely, and at the same time to make new allowances from year to year.

The following important paragraph on collegiate instruction is recorded in the Resolution:—

"It will be seen that the Government colleges, with reference to the number of their pupils, obtained more than their share of degrees of all kinds, and that the proportion in their favour was larger, as the examination progressed in difficulty. This is most marked in the M.A. course, and is there entirely due to the superior instruction given in the Presidency College, a most useful and necessary institution, which maintains by its example, as well as by direct support, the standard of education in the province. The Director's observations on this subject are in entire accordance with the views entertained by Government. He writes: 'The Presidency College, with its high fee of Rs. 12 a month, has nearly doubled its numbers of two years back, and indeed in July, 1888, four months after the close of the year, the number of its rolls exceeded 500, a greater strength than it has ever before known. The demands made by the various courses of the University upon a limited educational staff have much increased of late years; and if, in accordance with the present policy, the strength of the Presidency College be maintained at such a level as to meet all requirements, the foregoing figures show that students will flock to its class-rooms in such numbers as to more than repay the additional cost involved. The Presidency College must maintain its position among the colleges of Bengal as that in which the best and most varied education is given, realising as far as possible the ideal of a 'teaching University.' That end must be secured even though, in order to attain it, we have to weaken the staff of some of the less important Government colleges in the province. Moreover, the rapid up-springing of private colleges throughout Bengal affords a clear proof that collegiate education to a moderate standard no longer demands the sustaining arm of Government as the necessary condition of its existence; and the policy to which I have adverted will render the gradual transition from Government control to private management a natural and easy process of development."

This is an argument for the retention of the Presidency College, though one was hardly needed. Notwithstanding all the success of native enterprise or of the missionary agency in this respect, the raison d'être of the highest State College for the maintenance of the highest standard of English education, will always remain, and it gives us great pleasure to observe that the multiplicity of independent institutions and the expansion in the numerical strength of the native colleges, have not had the apprehended effect of denuding the rolls of the Presidency. On the contrary, the Presidency has of late had great accession to its numbers. This is a proof of appreciation of the Presidency College, creditable alike to the community and the College authorities. It is at any rate clear now, that the fate of the Law classes of the Presidency is not in store for the General Department.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT AT SERAMPORE.

THE Serampore Municipality has been whitewashed. That bite noire of Dr. Lidderdale has won a certificate of behaviour and been restored to caste. Such is the mutability of sanitary opinions—so little confidence is to be placed in the reports of Sanitary Officers! This has always been so. Sometime ago, we pointed out two diametrically contrary sanitary opinions of the Uttarpara Municipality, recorded within a few days of each, by two of the highest officers of the Department. The two men evidently fell into the hands of the two factions, whose mutual animosity has made the name of Uttarpara a byword, and wrote their reports as they were "coached." In the case of Serampore, Dr. Lidderdale apparently took his cue from some people who did not relish the idea of Dr. Mitra's absentee Chairmanship. He fell in with this view, and whatever he saw or was made to see, tended to confirm it, till he flared up, and lost the balance of his judgment. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine any other explanation of a high official of mature age and experience so far forgetting himself and the law of Local Self-Government, as actually to report to Government against the election of a man who had such firm hold upon the confidence of the ratepayers, as to be elected Chairman for two successive terms. But Dr. Mitra has been vindicated. Dr. Lidderdale having taken leave, his successor, Dr. Gregg, made a series of careful inspections of the Serampore Municipality, and his report completely disproves the inflammatory impeachment of Dr. Lidderdale. Not that the sanitary condition of the municipality does not afford scope for adverse criticism here and there, but such defects as there are, are sufficiently explained by disproportionateness of funds to the extent of area, and other difficulties and obstacles. On the other hand, Dr. Gregg takes a favorable view of not a few improvements which have been effected under the present régime, and the evident tendency in every branch is towards progress. In fact, as regards the defects, no one is more regretfully conscious of their existence than the Commissioners with their Chairman themselves. But what can they do beyond the limits set to their power by the limitation of funds, and other causes? In fact, the worst thing about these inspecting officers is the superior airs they often give themselves. When they point out any defects, they seem to think they make a revelation of what, but for their superior special knowledge, would have otherwise never been brought to light. But is not the truth very different in sanitary as in other inspectors? We are free to acknowledge the importance of periodical inspections by special experts, but it is intolerable they should assume such an arrogant bearing in relation to those gentlemen whose work they are deputed to see and report upon from time to time. In the case of the Serampore municipality, could not the Chairman, Dr. Mitra himself, from his minute local knowledge, pen a far more damaging inspection memorandum than any produced by Dr. Lidderdale? Just reverse their positions, and let Dr. Mitra, under orders of Government, sit in judgment upon Dr. Lidderdale's working of the Sanitary Department. Could not Dr. Troylukhonath Mitra fairly turn the tables upon his adversary, and make him pass a bad half hour under his scathing examination? The truth is, no municipality is without defects; but of these defects, the Commissioners themselves are no whit less conscious than their official censors. For the rest, whatever may be the weak points of Local Self-Government, there can be no doubt as to the large amount of improvement which it has been the instrument of bringing about, during the short space it has been introduced.

We congratulate the Serampore municipality and its Chairman on the turn which their quarrel with the Sanitary Department has taken, and only wish other boards may be equally fortunate in their conflicts with officials. Dr. Lidderdale's letter has been wisely condemned to neglect by the Government of Bengal. It now remains for the municipal Commissioners, by energetically carrying out Dr. Gregg's more practicable suggestions, to belie their calumniators, in official or other camp.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

V.

THE SPEECHES AND THE SPEAKERS (continued).

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee.—This modest and moderate speaker won universal esteem and affection by his deeds, rather than by his words. Rejoicing in the possession, in an eminent degree, of those social virtues and those unbought graces of life—which render Shakespeare's definition of 'man' significant—Mr. George Yule could not have found a wiser councillor and better Private Secretary than Mr. Bonnerjee. One night I overheard a group of very influential and highly educated Beharis and Hindustanis discussing among them as to who could be the fittest successor to "our universal leader, Mr. A. O. Hume," and deciding, with one voice, that none better than Mr. Bonnerjee. This amiable gentleman, ever agreeable and ever accessible, a bland smile always playing upon his lips, rendered himself very acceptable to all, by going about from tent to tent and enquiring about the comfort of individual delegates. He it was also who, the previous evening, exhorted, entreated, nay beseeched each delegate not to ill-treat in the least Raja Siva Prasad, or the poor Raja would have been simply nowhere. He was accompanied by Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee. Thus he saved the Congress from a dire calamity, whose ill-effects would have been instantaneous and marked. I have been credibly informed that the titular Raja Siva Prasad, on his part, was prepared for the worst, and had actually taken his final farewell leave of his family at Benares, before starting for Allahabad. He was so assured of being waylaid and attacked, that when going back from the Congress he actually directed his attendants to prime themselves with open arms and be ready for action! But I am digressing. Mr. Bonnerjee established his reputation as a remarkable speaker in the now notorious Burdwan case, by his forensic address in defence of that great champion of Indian rights, that knight of the pen—Mr. Robert Knight. That address will remain as one of the boldest traditions of the metropolitan bar. Then we have the authority of Mr. Norton that he acquitted himself admirably in England. Being of a modest and retiring disposition of mind, he gave the slip to those who were anxious to give him an ovation on his return from England. The same unobtrusiveness of his habits manifested itself when he tried to avoid speaking; but he was prevailed upon, not however without much difficulty, to speak. His silver-ringing, echoful voice is envied by many. And when he speaks, I am disposed to liken him to—only that the comparison would be inappropriate—the sirens in the Mediterranean Sea, of whose charms we have read so much and so often in Homer.

Pandit Bishumbher Nath—is every inch of him an unsophisticated wight of the old school. A silent but steady worker, little does the outside world know of the many sterling virtues and high accomplishments that adorn this good man and true. He is one of many flowers born to blush unseen and waste their sweetness on the desert air. The contrast between his private conversations and his public addresses of classic beauty and dignity, is complete. Our wind-bags and chatter-boxes have so full a monopoly of idle talk, that these sober and sensible men have no chance for speaking. They are elbowed out, and the result is deplorable. One of the leading members of the local bar, he has contributed practically most to the success of the Congress here. He spared nothing, no amount of humiliation and shame—personally to collect the "sinews of war." His hold upon the regard and esteem of the people of Allahabad is almost fabulous. The natives have a faith in him that seems superstitious. At the same time, his fame has travelled far and wide to the interior of the United Provinces. He does not need the help of those arts which first illusionise the reason and then make the speaker felt. He makes a powerful appeal to the reason, and if he cannot in this way produce any effect upon his hearers, he does not care to produce it in any other way. Calm and collected, as he speaks he reminds one of the nine jewels in the Court of the King Vikramaditya. He is possessed, in a remarkable degree, of those qualities which went, in days of yore, to contribute to the success of a great and good minister, "guide, philosopher, and friend." And yet up to this time there has been not one syllable of recognition, either within or outside the Congress Pandal, from the Congress delegates or our "Admirable Crichtons" of the Native Press, for his invaluable services. Shall their consciences still go to enjoy an undisturbed sleep after this grave sin of omission having been pointed out to them? Pandit Bishumbher Nath is not one of those who go about seeking—a-begging—"bubble reputation." He is far above it, and strong-willed enough to afford to do very well without it. He takes his stand upon the enduring platform of Duty. But it is nonetheless your duty, and ought to be your pleasure, to give unto Caesar what is Caesar's. Long before Pandit Ayodhya Nath had been convinced of the usefulness of the Congress and thrown in his lot with it, Pandit Bishumbher Nath was the honoured leader and President of the local Standing Congress Committee of Allahabad. And it was only the other day—last year—that he vacated his chair in favor of Pandit Ayodhya Nath, fearing that Pandit Ayodhya Nath may not like to work in a subordinate capacity to him. Comparisons are always odious: so I shall avoid them; but he is in no way inferior to the Hon'ble Pandit, either in abilities or social position. It is therefore a solemn and an unfathomable mystery to me how it was that he was not even so much as honoured with a mention, as one of the chief organisers and important members of the Reception Committee; nor were Baboo Ramkali Chaudhari of Benares, Mr. Hamid Ali Khan and Baboo Bansi Lal Singh from Oude, for the invaluable services they rendered to the Congress.

Mr. Annunda Charlu.—

Now hear what every auditor expects

The unassuming simplicity of the Madrasi character is very well illustrated in the speech of the eminent pleader—who hails from Bellary. His solid reasoning, set forth by his apt examples and quaint humour, is sure before long to win your attention and command your admiration. His illustrations are so appropriate and have such a close bearing upon the points he wishes to bring out, and his humour is so well-seasoned, that one cannot help admiring his rare skill. He is probably the best speaker on the Madras side, and the speeches are characteristic of the man.

Mr. Mano Mohun Ghose.—This "terror of the Mofussil Courts in Bengal" made his individuality at once felt by his powerful speech of a quarter of an hour. It was practical and sensible all round. And although he seemed to say—

I am no orator, as Brutus is :

But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man :

and although he had to follow such an illustrious roll of speakers comprising such names as Norton, Telang, &c., he did not suffer in the least from comparison. His power of debate is wonderfully developed. A man of remarkable intellectual parts, he had for sometime—not in these degenerate times, mark you!—been Editor of the Indian Mirror, before he joined, and achieved such success at, the bar. His speech was worthy of him. It may be set before the young as a model for imitation. It was business-like, and such as parliamentary speeches are. It is no ordinary compliment paid when it is added that the Congress accepted his advice, rejecting the advice of men like Messrs. Norton, Telang, Rameswami Mudeliar, Adam. The second resolution elicited the keenest discussion, and Mr. Ghosh, by his abilities no less than by his long experience, brought it to a successful and satisfactory termination. He swung as he spoke, and seemed to speak from the depth of his heart. He spoke very feelingly.

The Revd. Ram Chandra Bose.—This "Soldier of Christ" is a veteran speaker, a good thinker, and an able writer. He is a worthy disciple of the Revd. Lal Behari De, who may well be proud of his former student. And if it were possible for the Revd. Mr. Kennedy, the father of Mr. Pringle Kennedy, of Mozufferpore, and the father-in-law of Mr. C. Tupp, Accountant-General of Allahabad, to see how successfully his godson had followed in his footsteps, his heart would have swelled with joy. This pious gentleman, who has reached the shady side of fifty and more, has a very interesting history of his own. He began life as a school-master. Then his habits of drunkenness and debauchery compelled him to seek for fresh fields and pastures new. It is said that in the class-room at Sitapur, he would expatiate, in eloquent and glowing terms, on the beauties of his lady-love. But now what a complete and wonderful transformation! He is a perfect religious and literary recluse. He has long since given up his old ways, and is now a humble and devout penitent. Intellectual exercises are now his best pastime. Go to him whenever you will, you will find him either poring over a book or writing for the papers. He is unquestionably the first literary man of Lucknow, which is his head-quarters. He delivered, at the last Congress, one of the ablest and most philosophical speeches, on the technical education question. He spoke for not more than five minutes, and I doubt if anybody, within that limited time, could give utterance to as much sense and substance as Mr. Bose did. A series of interesting lectures in America won him the degree of A. M. He has an established reputation in that ultra-radical trans-Atlantic region. His voice, as that of a worn-out, fagged gentleman who has suffered every kind of physical privation and who gladly renounced the pleasures and luxuries of this world for the inevitable hereafter, is not likely to shew him to advantage; nor do his accent and emphasis always produce the most pleasing effect. But what o' that?

Munshi Sajjad Hossein.—In his powers of humorous satire and for setting an audience into a roar, this veteran jester has probably no equal. And what subject is more congenial to the purpose than the Police? The editor of one of the most extensively read and admired Urdu papers and the person who discomfited Sir Syed Ahmed at Lucknow—beating him at his own weapon—speechifying him into stupification—he was the right man in the right place. And no sooner did he ascend the platform—feeling himself as he did in his element—than he, by his witty remarks, began to convulse people with laughter. His allusions and illustrations were not only comic, but at times lapsed into the indecent; all the same, all he said was very much appreciated. As he spoke in Urdu—a language easily intelligible to the lower classes also of these provinces—he was listened to with gaping mouth and looked at with wondering vacant eyes by the peace-makers on congressional duty who seemed for a time disposed to be peace-breakers!

Mr. Saleem S. Ramaswami Mudeliar.—He is best known to the country as the Madras delegate to England in 1887, and as a member of the Public Service Commission. He is a very effective speaker, and his speech was merely an eloquent vindication of his and his colleague Mr. Justice Mitter's character from the unjust—though insinuating—charge brought against them by the zealous Mr. Norton, your "cub of the Madras bar." And when I add to these two names, who are nothing if not independent, the name of Mr. Nulkar, of the Poona Sarvanjanik Sabha, who strangely enough had slipped so soon out of the memory of the people, and your astonishment, that such a charge was ever preferred against them, would be complete. But Mr. Mudeliar and his distinguished colleagues, did not require to be reminded of the poet's beautiful teaching:

How happy is he born and taught
That serveth not another's will;
Whose armour is his honest thought,
And simple truth his utmost skill!

They did everything in their power, he added, to safeguard the interests of their fellow-countrymen. He seemed to speak with certain effort.

Mr. Chandravarker—

Who would true valour see
Let him come hither!

A high caste Mahratta Brahman of great parts and sober calculations, he did not hesitate to go as the Bombay delegate to England in 1887. He has the characteristic excellences of a genuine Mahratta—nothing can make him yield his point. He takes good care to make his point unassailable beforehand. It requires heroic self-sacrifice to leave the dying uncle on his death-bed and join the Congress. He was doubtless assured, when he started for Allahabad, that nothing would go wrong with his uncle before his return; but when a few minutes before he was called upon to second the fourth resolution entrusted to Mr. Kali Charan Banerjee, a telegram was handed over to him, in his speech (which followed) in a choked voice and eyes suffused with tears, one could clearly read the lines of Drummond:

This life, which seems so fair
Is like a bubble blown up in the air.

To have a real insight into the genuine powers of his speech, which is simple and unadorned, one must turn to his speech on the second resolution, seconding Mr. Manomohun Ghosh. It was a very brief one, but there was the genuine article in it. He was then in his free natural state. But it was probably in the fourth resolution, when he felt most his domestic affliction, giving a shove so to speak to his feelings, that he spoke most effectively. It has ever been so. When our feelings are warmed up by some means, what we feel most we can express best.

Mr. E. Watcha.—This clever statistician and worthy disciple of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, spoke on a subject specially his own. For months, he has written and thought upon the Abkari question, and had once by one exploded all the pet theories on this subject of the Civilians on the Bombay side. He and Mr. Malabari are the twin disciples of Mr. Naoroji, and their genius is for reform. For months and years, abuses have been heaped upon their devoted heads, but they seem to be stoically indifferent to, and unaffected by, them. A better writer than a speaker, he was brief and to the point. He had no affectation nor attempt at flourishes of rhetoric in his speech. It was eminently practical; and I am sure even if Mr. Budruddin Tyebji could be present—his brother's serious illness compelling him to remain behind—he would not be able to do it better in 5 minutes. He knows how to Let brevity despatch the rapid thought;

for he has the authority of Shakespeare that brevity is the soul of wit.

B.

Holloway's Pills.—Factory Operatives and Workers in Manufactories.—The remarkable remedies which have been discovered and perfected by Thomas Holloway, and which have for more than forty years been successfully used in every quarter of the globe, are especially useful in all the manifold ailments which afflict those who by reason of their occupations are confined for years, or all their lives, in crowded buildings and workshops. Holloway's Pills and Ointment are associated remedies, the former restoring the vital powers when diminished, and always acting as an efficient blood purifier, whilst the latter relieves local maladies, checks inflammation, and acts as a cleansing and healing agent in cases of bad legs, bad breasts, ulcers and unhealing sores of all kinds.

THE BRUCE CHARITY.

1. The testatrices of this bequest, Miss Sarah Bruce and Miss Mary Ann Bruce, were the daughters of Mr. Alexander Bruce, who was for many years engaged as an indigo planter in India. After making a fortune in this country, he returned to England with his two daughters, at that time of a tender age, and took up his residence in London. In 1827 Mr. Bruce died, and left his two daughters all his fortune. They had only one near relation, a Colonel Bruce, who was their first cousin, and who is reported to have been a Waterloo veteran, and to have fought with Wellington throughout the Peninsular war.

2. The elder sister, Miss Sarah Bruce, actuated, it may be presumed, by a knowledge of the lamentable condition of the poorer classes of the domiciled Christian community in and about Calcutta, was desirous of leaving the bulk of her property for the purpose of founding an institution in Calcutta for the maintenance and education of Eurasian female children. She persuaded her sister to follow her example, and they finally executed wills by which they dedicated the greater portion of their joint fortunes to that object. The trusts created under these wills directed that the bequests should be applied "for or towards the foundation and endowment of any institution at Calcutta or at any place within 50 miles thereof for the education and maintenance of half-caste or Eurasian female children, whether legitimate or otherwise, and in particular orphans or those deserted by their parents, such children to be admitted only between the ages of 5 and 10 years, and to be maintained until they can be provided for in some respectable and useful station in life."

3. The elder sister died in 1878, and the younger in 1880. The sums received under Miss Sarah Bruce's will, after deducting legal expenses, amount to £28,766-11-6, and further securities valued at £22,000 will be added to the bequest on the death of two legatees mentioned in her will; the amount received under Miss Mary Ann Bruce's will is about £17,000. The ultimate value of the joint bequest may therefore be estimated at nearly ten lakhs of rupees.

4. It appears that as early as the year 1886, the Secretary of State for India had received communications from the Misses Bruce, intimating their intention of founding this Indian charity. In 1881, however, after the death of the testatrices, the Government of India, at the instance of the Secretary of State, requested the Government of Bengal to prepare a scheme for the administration of the legacy. On the recommendation of the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, the subject was referred to the Committee appointed to consider the question of European and Eurasian education in India. The Director of Public Instruction, as President of the Committee, in his report on the subject pointed out that a serious difficulty presented itself at the outset in the meaning to be attached to the term 'institution.' Was it necessary to build and maintain a separate home and school; or would it be sufficient if the girls to be benefited by the trust were placed in one or more existing institutions having similar objects? A further and more serious difficulty presented itself in the absence of any reference to religious distinctions. The wills made poverty and necessity the sole grounds for admission to the benefits of the trust; but the Director proceeded to say, in reference to the claim of the Roman Catholic Church to control even the secular education of children of that communion, that "if religious distinctions are ignored, the necessary result will be to deprive the majority of the class for whom the trust was devised from any share in its benefits." "It is only by recognising religious distinctions that the benefits of the trust can be extended to all denominations of the Eurasian community."

5. This was also the view which commended itself to the Governments of India and Bengal. On the receipt of the Committee's report, however, the Government of Bengal, in consultation with the law officers of Government, finally resolved to have a scheme for the administration of the trust prepared under the direction of the High Court of Calcutta. A suit was accordingly instituted (the Advocate-General of Bengal versus the Secretary of State for India in Council) "for the construction of the wills of Miss Sarah Bruce and Miss Mary Ann Bruce, deceased, as to the charitable trusts therein mentioned, and to have a scheme framed for administering the said trusts, &c." By a decree of the Hon'ble High Court dated the 26th August 1886, a scheme for the administration of the Bruce Legacy Fund was adopted, and provision was made for the establishment and management of the Institution on an undenominational basis. The costs incurred in this suit, on both sides, amounted to a sum slightly above Rs. 6,000.

6. Under this decree it was declared that "an institution shall be established for the purpose of carrying out the trusts for the benefit of half-caste or Eurasian female children, contained in the wills of Miss Sarah Bruce and Miss Mary Ann Bruce, and of administering the funds provided for that purpose. The Institution shall be called the Bruce Institution," and "shall be under the management of twelve Governors . . . The Governors shall provide an office in Calcutta at which . . . the business of the Institution shall be carried on . . . The girls to receive the benefits of the Institution shall be elected by the Governors . . . Each girl who has been elected shall be educated and maintained by the Governors at such suitable boarding school as they may from time to time select. In selecting from time to time the school at which the girls shall be educated and maintained, the Governors shall take into account . . . the religious denomination of the school and all other circumstances which they may deem material." By the interpretation thus given to the term 'institution,' the religious difficulty altogether disappeared.—The Calcutta Gazette, Feb. 6, 1889.

Law.

HIGH COURT.—CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION,—
FEBRUARY 12, 1889.

(Before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Pigott and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Reverley.)

RAJAH PARISNATH SINGH AND R. H. BODDAM vs.

RAI DHUNPUT SINGH AND OTHERS.

Mr. Justice Pigott, in delivering the judgment of the Court, spoke as follows :—

"This is an appeal from the order made by the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh on the 1st October, 1888, by which the defendant, Mr. R. H. Boddam, was restrained from carrying on the manufacture of hogs' lard, or any other trade offensive to the religious feelings of the Situmbari Society of the Jains, until the hearing of the case, or until the further orders of the Court." His lordship, after recapitulating the facts of the case, continued :— "In no portion of the plaint, and in no portion of the surprising affidavit upon which the order for the injunction was granted, are any acts of the defendant specified such as might be pronounced to be acts of the character of a nuisance. In no portion of the plaint is it stated or explained in what way the defendant's conduct in starting this manufactory wounds the religious feelings of this sect of the Jains, so that neither by a description of the general character of the sects, nor by a special allegation on the part of the Jains, showing that the defendant's conduct had been of an actionable character, is there the slightest statement to which the term 'showing cause of action' could be applied. We are far from desiring to have it implied that the acts of the defendant in carrying on the manufactory could, under the circumstances, be of such a character as to give rise to a cause of action merely because they wounded the religious feelings of the Jains. On the other hand, we by no means desire to suggest that conduct actually and improperly interfering with the public worship of a community of Her Majesty's subjects might not, under certain circumstances, give rise to 'cause of action.' It is enough to say that in the proceedings before us there is not a trace of such an assertion of wrong as in our opinion would justify the granting of the injunction. We must, however, take leave to say this that the power of granting injunctions has been perhaps a little lavishly bestowed on Mofussil Courts. It is a tremendous power, and one which Superior Courts at Home are most carefully guarded in exercising; and this is not the first occasion by any means in which the exercise of this power of granting injunction conferred on small Mofussil Courts has led to results by no means satisfactory. Here is a business which, for aught we know, has since the 1st October been suddenly and peremptorily stopped (and this is the 12th February), and without the slightest legal foundation laid before the Court. The second ground on which we make this order is this, that, even assuming that the statements made in the plaint were of such a character as to show that the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction, the injunction ought not to have been issued in the absence of the defendant without the very strongest reasons. There were no such grounds shown here. We are not at liberty to refer to what has been placed before us, and what will shortly be again before us, and we must avoid the irregularity of referring in detail to the correspondence relating to the rule; but it is quite clear that for months before this injunction was applied for or granted, the parties connected with the Jain community were fully aware of what the defendants had been doing, or was about to do. We must express our regret that the officer who granted this injunction had not before him the legal considerations which ought to have guided him in determining when the application to dissolve the injunction was made. We should be sorry to say anything whatever in disparagement of that officer: he plainly did not understand the character of the jurisdiction he was exercising, and he is not to be blamed for that. A jurisdiction originally belonging only to a Superior Court possessed of legal knowledge and experience is now imposed on a Mofussil Court, which shares with its victims the cruelty of inflicting such powers. But we must take exception to the course adopted by the Deputy Commissioner when he was applied to, on the ground that, under section 494 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he should have given notice to the other party before issuing the order. We have only to point out the extreme stringency of section 494, which provides that notice shall always be issued to the opposite party save in most exceptional cases. We make no order on the question of damages, which the appellants might very reasonably claim, as we understand that they are not anxious to press this point, as the utmost amount they could receive, Rs. 1,000, would represent a very trifling proportion to the expenses they have already incurred. We therefore allow the appeal, with assessed costs, twenty gold-mohurs."

With regard to the rule asking for the transfer of the case from the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh to some other Court, Mr. Bonnerjee informed the Court that he had suggested to his clients the advisability of having the case tried at the High Court; but that they were strongly opposed to this, urging the enormous expense they would incur and the inconvenience they would suffer if such a course were adopted. Failing this, Mr. Bonnerjee thought their lordships might see their way to directing the case to be tried by some other officer at Hazaribagh. This latter suggestion, however, the Court declined absolutely to entertain. Referring to Colonel Garbett's letters to Mr. Boddam, his lordship Mr Justice Pigott, thought it was apparent that in this matter his executive functions would interfere with the proper exercise of his judicial functions, if such had not already been the case, and he considered therefore it was desirable that the case should be transferred either to Burdwan or Calcutta. On the suggestion of the learned Advocate General, and with the concurrence of the learned counsel on either side, their lordships ordered the case to be transferred to the Court of the District and Sessions Judge of Alipore, with leave to him to either try it himself or direct the Additional or Subordinate Judge of the district to do so.

A SPECIAL GENERAL MEETING

of the Commissioners of the Town of Calcutta
WILL BE HELD AT THE TOWN HALL,
on Thursday, the 21st February 1889, at 3 P.M.

BUSINESS TO BE BROUGHT FORWARD.

1. The Chairman to lay before the Commissioners the draft Budget of income and expenditure for the year 1889-90, and to propose the appointment of a Budget Committee under Section 2, Schedule B, Act II. (B. C.) of 1888.

2. To consider the report of the Committee on the Central Road project together with a letter from the Government of Bengal, No. 261-M., dated 2nd February 1889.

[Chairman will move that as the discussion has been delayed by circumstances over which the Commissioners had no control till within a few weeks of the election of the new Corporation it will be more proper to postpone so large a question for the early consideration of the new Corporation.]

3. To consider the letter from the Government of India on the Administration Report of the Municipality for the year 1886-87, together with the Chairman's report on the bustee expenditure of that year.

4. To confirm the proceedings of the Town Council at Meetings held on the 26th January and 9th February 1889.

5. To confirm the following Resolutions of the Bustee and Sanitary Committee at the Meeting held on the 22nd January 1889:

(a) Item No. 2 confirming the distribution of grant on account of bustee improvements for 1888-89 as recommended.

(b) Sanctioning the acquisition of necessary land for improving the south-west approach of Taltollah Square.

(c) Accepting the offer of Kherodgopal Mitter, owner of No. 14 Ahireetollah Street, to take over the bustee road on the conditions stated by him.

(d) Accepting the offer of Messrs. Davis and Mullick on behalf of Baboo Upendra Nath Bhuttachejee's land for a bathing platform in Kipnathi's Lane.

(e) Sanctioning an estimate of Rs. 2,942 for a new masonry reservoir and boundary wall at the latrine at No. 84, Grey Street.

6. To confirm generally the proceedings of the Bustee and Sanitary Committee held on the 22nd January 1889.

JOHN COWIE,

Secretary to the Corporation.

NOTICE.

AN European, thoroughly acquainted with Civil Engineering, Surveying, etc., in all its branches, a good Draftsman and Estimator, seeks an engagement; outdoor work preferred. Address C. E. care of this paper.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas

or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

POSTAL NOTICE.

With effect from the 1st April 1889, the sender of a value-payable article will be required to sign a certificate to the effect that the article is sent in execution of a bona fide order; and in the case of a value-payable unregistered packet, the sender will, in addition to signing the certificate referred to above, be required to prepay the usual money order commission on the amount specified for recovery from the addressee, by affixing postage stamps of the value of the commission to the form filled up by him.

2. In lieu of the forms at present filled up by the senders of value-payable articles, two revised forms will be substituted from the 1st April 1889—one for use with all value-payable articles other than value-payable unregistered book packets, and the other for use with value-payable unregistered book packets. Each form will contain the certificate to be signed by the sender, and space is provided in the form for use with value-payable unregistered packets for the postage stamps to be affixed in payment of commission.

3. In case a value-payable unregistered packet is refused by the addressee or returned as unclaimed to the sender, no refund of the commission prepaid will be granted.

P. SHERIDAN,

Deputy Director-General of the Post Office of India.

CALCUTTA:

The 27th January 1888.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS
Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and
are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all Ages.
For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT
Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.
For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,
Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.
Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

Preparing for the Press

THE

FALL OF MANDALAY,

BY

ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery in April next; meantime Subscribers may register their names with the Publishers

Messrs. PETTIT & Co.,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

11, Old Court House Street;

or Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

198A, Upper Circular Road,

CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

Price by post 8½ annas.

ASRUKANA

A Collection of poems in Bengali by
SRIMATI GIRINDRAMOHINY DASSY

(Author of Kabitahar, Bharat Kusum.)

Asrukana is a collection of poetical pieces of singular pathos and beauty of expression. It is a series of mournful songs that the reader is here presented with and they must touch a sympathetic cord in every heart that can feel. There is a singular appropriateness in the title of the work, and in its pious dedication to the memory of the husband of the fair writer.—The Indian Nation.

The authoress is not unknown to Bengali readers. She has already published two or three poems by which she is favourably known, but between these poems and this is a difference that hardly admits of being measured.

This is poetry in life

We have read Srimiti Girindra Mohiny's poems in a reverential spirit. The poems are all of a lyrical description. The lyre is soft, sweet and tender, but awfully strong.

The tone of the poems is inexpressibly gentle, inexpressibly pure, and inexpressibly tender and affectionate. It is the tone of a world mother.

Bengal should be proud of this poem—The Calcutta Review.

Apply at the Bee Press,

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Calcutta.

FOR SALE

Price Post free Rs. 6.

Cloth Gilt Rs. 6.

Cloth Bound Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,

BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late
NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Pioneer's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detain our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course. —[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting: [Extract]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

.....this interesting book. We are justified in so terming it, not on account of any romantic adventures that the author has to relate, nor of any very new discoveries in geography or natural history. There is something particular as regards ethnology; and a great deal of human nature in the book, shown to the reader with a simplicity and candour which bear testimony to its truth. Called from the busy haunts of men in the city to dwell for a time in Independent Tipperah as a judicious adviser to its chief, Doctor Mookerjee relates his adventures during the several journeys to and fro in that capacity, without revealing the secrets of the State, like a good diplomatist. He has adhered strictly to the advice which he offers to his brethren of the Native press, and has written what he saw and knows, without revealing all, considering what he might properly say and what withhold.The above seems to be a curious passage to be found in a book of travels, and appears to have no connection with the subject. But it arises from a casual reference to a slaughter house, and a writer who "thundered weekly against the outrage of locating shambles in the immediate vicinity of a Hindoo temple" where, in fact, no temple could be said to exist. Hence, the doctor advises his fellow scribes not to be Pharisees, righteous overmuch, but to look and be sure of their facts. In the same spirit, he has written his book. He gives an account of his travels, which seem often to have been voyages, upon the widespread rivers of Eastern Bengal which in the rains become almost inland seas. On these he philosophises on the nature of the country and the people, making careful observation of his facts; and though he sometimes fancies he knows better than his boatmen, and more than suspects that they are getting the better of him, he submits with a grace that would have done credit to Socrates, and accepts the apparently inevitable in the interests of peace. The doctor is a close observer of nature, animate and inanimate, with an eye to the picturesque as well as to the sublime and beautiful. And although there is a vein of cynicism running through many of his observations, it is tempered by such evident good nature, that even a stranger would conceive him to be a laughter-loving rather than a stern philosopher. This is evident in his description of his boatmen and others, while he denounces the lawlessness which has made the poor fishermen suspicious even of honest intentions, because they have so long been the helpless victims of marauders stronger than themselves. Their only defence is flight or deceit, and the latter is their justification as a mode of self-protection. We are shown not only the weakness of the people, but the shortcomings of the administration that leave these things possible.The author is impartial in his censures.

There is much in the book to which space forbids us to refer. That it is not a prosy one may be gathered from the fact that, for its 300 pages, there are nearly as many index references. Many of the subjects are necessarily but lightly treated, but all sensibly and fairly. And Dr. Mookerjee is such a master of the English language that in the whole book we have scarcely found a phrase that might not have been written by an Englishman "to the manner born." There is nothing in it at which any one could reasonably take offence; and there is much from which both Englishmen and natives may learn greatly needed lessons.—The Indian Daily News, Nov. 22, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree. "A naked Whiteman" hints his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes." But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course, some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec. 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hue Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

BEETHAM'S
GLYCERINE SOAP

For INDIA, the following is a list of the most valuable
IT KILLS the germ which causes skin diseases, and
It is the best for the skin, and is the only soap which LATHERS EASILY, and is the only soap which
It entirely prevents the skin from becoming dry, and COMPLETION from the roughness of the skin, and other preparation. The BEETHAM'S SOAP is the only soap wholly allied by its use. For the skin, it is the only soap delightful preparation, and is the only soap which Sole Makers, BEETHAM & CO., 10, Hue Street, Calcutta.
CALCUTTA AGENTS, SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."*All who suffer find sure relief fromLITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM*The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACIACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith, Stanstreet & Co., R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."*ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "INDORE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 22nd inst., and on Tuesday the 19th idem, the Steamer "PUNJAB" will leave Calcutta for Cachar.

All cargo for shipment by either of the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godowns at Juggamau Ghat the day previous to the vessels leaving Calcutta.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH
SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, and Thursdays, and Debrooghur on Mondays and Fridays.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,

(Opposite the Police Court.)

THE CALCUTTA

HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.

THE

EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA

OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,

WHICH

INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE

TRADE IN

INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY

and maintains to this day

THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF

THIS

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lockets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Velsmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutta, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' SANITARY COMPOUNDS

In the various shapes of

Liquid, Powder, Soap and Ointment

are invaluable in the Indian climate.

They are perfectly harmless, non-poisonous, and non-irritant.

They have proved efficacious in skin diseases. They cure wounds and ulcers. Even Lepers have found them valuable.

To the rich and the poor, the healthy and the sick, they are alike welcome.

They destroy the virus or contagion of small-pox, measles, typhus and typhoid fevers.

They cleanse your homes and clothes and purify the air. They keep your body clean, teeth strong and skin pure. Your bed free from bugs, your drains inodorous, and closets free from bad smells.

They may be used with safety and with happy results in sick-room, kitchen, and every other part of a house.

Agents:—DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

TEA!TEA!*TEA!*Cheapest & Best,SUPPLIED BY
THEINDIAN TEA SUPPLY CO.*"LIMITED."

In packets of 1 oz., 2 oz. and 4 oz. each from
3 pice only and upwards.

Note the Low Price.

A Packet of Tea for 3 pice!Important News for India,WHERE FEVERS AND CHOLERA
REIGN SUPREME.

A RECENT TRAVELLER ON THE Chinese Coast found that District remarkably FREE FROM TYPHOID FEVER and CHOLERA. He soon discovered the cause. The people there do not drink cold water from tanks or wells, often extremely impure, but keep a pan of water constantly boiling, into which from time to time they drop a little Tea, and when thirsty THEY DRINK HOT TEA! If the weak and adulterated Teas of China can do this, what may not the pure and strong Teas of India be expected to effect?

Also in tins ½ lb to 10 lbs of various qualities to suit all tastes.

Ask for the Indian Tea Supply
Company's Teas.

We have Agents all over the Country,
but want more.

Managing Agents:

LYALL MARSHALL & CO.,

4, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,

London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,

Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION,

CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine
Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge,
Mysadul Hospital.

Address, —

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly " 7
Quarterly " 4
Monthly Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 5 a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington
Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1889.

No. 362

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

FREEDOM AND RIGHT.

O SAY not, believe not, the gloom of the grave
Forever has closed upon Freedom's glad light,
For that sealed are the lips of the honest and brave,
And the scooners of baseness are robbed of their right.
Though the true to their oaths into exile are driven,
Or, weary of wrong, with their own hands have given
Their blood to their rulers, their spirits of Heaven—
Yet immortal is Freedom, immortal is Right!
Freedom and Right!

Let us not be by partial defeats disconcerted;
They will make the grand triumph more signal and bright;
Thus whetted, our zeal will be doubly exerted,
And the cry be raised louder of Freedom and Right!
For these two are one, and they mock all endeavour
Of despots their holy alliance to sever,
Where there's Right be ye sure there are freemen, and ever
Where freemen are found, will God prosper the Right.
Freedom and Right!

And let this thought, too, cheer us,—more proudly defiant
The twins never bore them in fight after fight,
Never breathed forth a spirit more joyous and buoyant,
Making heroes of dastards in nature's despite.
Round the wide earth they're marching; their message they've spoken,
And nations leap up at the heart-thrilling token;
For the seif and the slave they have battled, and broken
The fetters that hung upon black limbs and white.
Freedom and Right!

And battle they still, where the voice of earth's sorrow
Tells of wrongs to avenge, of oppressors to smite;
And conquerors this day, or conquered to-morrow,
Fear ye not, in the end they will conquer outright.
Oh! to see the bright wreath round their victor brows shining,
All the leaves that are dear to the nations combining,
Lrin's shamrock, the olive of Hellas entwining
With the oak-leaf, proud emblem of Germany's might!
Freedom and Right!

There are sore aching bosoms and dim eyes of weepers
Will be gathered to rest ere that day see the light;
But ye two will hallow the graves of the sleepers,
O ye blest ones, we owe to them, Freedom and Right!
Fill your glasses meanwhile:—To the hearts that were true, boys,
To the cause that they loved when the storm fiercest blew, boys,
Who had wrong for their portion, but won right for you, boys,
Drink to them, to the Right, and to Freedom through Right!
Freedom through Right!

THE LITTLE STEP-SON.

I.

I HAVE a little step-son, the loveliest thing alive,
A noble, sturdy boy is he, and yet he's only five;
His smooth cheek hath a blooming glow—his eyes are black as jet,
And his lips are like two rose-buds, so tremulous and wet;
His days pass off in sunshine, in laughter and in song,
As careless as a summer rill that sings itself along;
For like a pretty fairy tale that's all too quickly told,
Is the young life of a little one that's only five years old.

II.

He's dreaming on his happy couch before the day grows dark,
He's up with morning's rosy ray, a singing with the lark;
Where'er the flowers are freshest, where'er the grass is green,
With light locks waving on the wind his fairy form is seen;
Amid the whistling March winds, amid the April showers;
He warbles with the singing birds, and prattles to the flowers,
He cares not for the summer heat, he cares not for the cold
My sturdy little step-son, that's only five years old.

III.

How touching 't is to see him clasp his dimpled hands in prayer,
And raise his little rosy face, with reverential air!
How simple is his eloquence! how soft his accent fall,
When pleading with the King of kings to love and bless us all,
And when from prayer he bounds away in innocence and joy,
The blessing of a smiling God goes with the infant boy
A little lambkin of the flock, within the Saviour's fold
Is he, my lovely step-son, that's only five years old.

IV.

I have not told you of our home, that in the summer hours,
Stands in its simple modesty, half hid among the flowers;
I have not said a single word about our mines of wealth,
Our treasures are—this little boy, contentment, peace and health.
For even a lordly hall to us would be a voiceless place
Without the gush of his glad voice, the gleams of his bright face
And many a country pan, I ween, would give their gems and gold
For a noble, happy boy like ours, some four or five years old.

Holloway's Pills.—Nervous irritability. No part of the human machine requires more constant supervision than the nervous system—for upon it our health—and even life—depends. These Pills strengthen the nerves, and are the safest general purifiers of the blood. Nausea, headache, giddiness, numbness, and mental apathy yield to them. They despatch in a summary manner those distressing dyspeptic symptoms, stomachic pains, fulness at the pit of the stomach, abdominal distension, and regulate alike capricious appetites and confined bowels—the commonly accompanying signs of defective or diminished nerve tone. Holloway's Pills are particularly recommended to persons of staid and sedentary habits, who gradually fall into a nervous and irritable state, unless some such restorative be occasionally taken.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THERE will be an Investiture for the new admissions to the Orders of the Star of India and the Indian Empire, at Government House, on Friday, the 1st March, at 9 in the evening. Those not belonging to the Orders and wishing to be present, must apply to the Military Secretary to the Viceroy. All particulars will be found in an advertisement elsewhere.

THE Straits Settlements seem to be the most favoured nook of Bacchus. Penang certainly is the place for publicans and sinners. There the most roaring business is that of victuallers, licensed and unlicensed. If America is the land of colossal hotels, Penang, as befits its size or rather want of it, is the land of small hotels and snug taverns. There are as many as 24 first class hotels and ten second class, and no end of eating houses and sinks for the sale and consumption of liquor, mostly kept by Chinese. No wonder that drunkenness should prevail so much. As credit is freely given, there is extravagance and waste. Then there is as free a resort to the Small Cause Court. In fine, Penang is as precious a pest as any of the cities of the Plam.

We are glad to discern a silver lining in the prospect. The board of justices have decided not to renew so many licenses as before.

THERE has been a couple of failure of justice in the South. The Madras High Court—Mr. Justice Kernan—has sentenced Corporal Thomas Hardwick, of the S. Battery, 1st Brigade, Royal Artillery, stationed at Bellary, to 5 years' rigorous imprisonment. He was brought up for the murder of his wife Emma Hardwick. The evidence shewed that the deceased was given to drinking, that she was drunk on the 7th November when there was an altercation between the wife and the husband, and that the husband cut her with a razor on the back of the neck, and she died. The Jury found him guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and strongly recommended him to mercy on account of the provocation he had received. The Judge thought there was a certain amount of deliberation. The Amrita Bazar properly points out the contrast between this tenderness to the genuine murderer and the harshness meted out to the native who slaughters in a fit of injured honour his unfaithful wife.

MARY Agnes Lee alias Schooner was tried at the same Sessions for bigamy, and was let off. She had married Cooke, a soldier in the 34th Regiment, in 1868 at Bellary. For two years they lived as man and wife and then separated. She afterwards took up with Schooner and lived with him for about 15 years, when he died in October 1887. She then married Lee, a session clerk of the Church of Scotland. Cooke deposed that she did not inform Lee of his marriage when she married him. Lee, however, contradicted Cooke saying that she did mention her former marriage before he married her. The Jury found her not guilty and the Judge discharged the prisoner.

LAST week, the Burdwan case came up before Mr. Justice Norris for settlement of issues. Mr. Woodroffe, for the Plaintiff Maharani, opposed the admission of the written statement on behalf of the minor Maharaja, as it was signed by only one of the Managers—Lala Bunbehari Kapur. Mr. Reily, the other manager, having refused to append his name to it. Mr. Hill for the defence on Monday applied for appointment of a guardian ad litem and submitted the name of the Lala as the fittest person. There was opposition. The Judge was of opinion that a guardian should be appointed, but he was not satisfied that the Lala was the proper person. He called for fresh names.

THE High Court has dismissed the appeal of the Serang commander of the Mongola steam-boat.

MOTI LAL CHANDRA, a student of the Ripon College, has been sentenced by the Joint-Magistrate of Sealdah to three months' rigorous imprisonment for cheating. At the Sealdah Railway station he met a khalasi who was bound for his home by the Goalunda mail train, and offered to buy him his ticket. Chandra received the full fare Rs. 2, for a ticket to Goalunda but purchased one for Barrackpore for 3 annas only, and pocketed the balance. He was, however, detected by the Railway Police and arrested and sent up for trial. The balance Re. 1-13 was found on his person. He pleaded not guilty—the unblushing imp! Fine Ripon College owes some explanation about its precocious product. It is these Moti Lals who mature into the Rajendra Nath Dutts who as soi-disant authors, journalists, publishers, and vendors of Infallible Cures, suppliers of marvellous watches and other impossible jewellery, and mysterious Charms, and mythical blessings in general, are preying on the credulity of the public, to the permanent injury of legitimate literature and trade.

We see the Assistant-Secretary of the Ripon College has written to the Indian Daily News, in which the report of the case appeared, saying that "there is no such name on the rolls of the Ripon College."

THE Small Cause Court allowed a landlord decree for rent claimed minus the cost of certain repairs which the tenant made to keep the house wind and water tight. There being no provision in the lease binding the landlord to keep the house wind and water tight, the High Court—Messrs. Justices O'Kinealy and Banerjee—have held that the landlord was entitled to the full rent without any deduction for repairs. A lease usually contains the clause, but this landlord is an attorney of the High Court. That perhaps explains the omission.

BABOO Joy Chandra Gupta of Baidyabatty, in the district of Hooghly, has obtained the thanks in the Gazette of the Bengal Government, for an offer of a donation of Rs. 600, "for the encouragement of high English education in his native village"—"the privilege of studying for four years in the Metropolitan Institution on payment of half fees being granted to a selected student from Baidyabatty to enable him to read up to the B. A. standard of the Calcutta University."

THE subject for Brajamohan Dutt's Prize of Rs. 40 for the year 1888-89 is "Sita and Damayanti." It is "open to all educated women, being natives of Bengal, without regard to age," to be written in either Bengali or Sanskrit, and must be sent to the Central Text-Book Committee for adjudication within six months from the 15th February 1889. The other condition attached is that each essay must be accompanied by the written declaration of the husband, parent or guardian of the competitor saying that, to the best of his belief, she has received no assistance of any kind, direct or indirect, in writing the essay. So far as regards indirect help, that is a foolish and demoralising condition. It will only prove an embarrassment to the scrupulous but not stay others. "Indirect assistance of any kind" is a wide term.

THE next half-yearly examination of Compounders will begin on Tuesday, the 2nd April, at the Campbell Medical School. Applicants must register their names and submit their certificates, together with a fee of Rs. 3, at least one week before that date.

TWO candidates—Katie Clough and Louise Tibbets—have passed the examination for the admission of females to the certificate class of the Medical College.

MR. R. M. Waller, Officiating Magistrate and Collector, Khoolna, having obtained 9 months' furlough, Mr. B. De', Joint-Magistrate and Deputy Collector, Hooghly, acts for Mr. Waller.

A QUIET little ceremony was the presentation, the other day, by the Committee of the Barahanagar English School, of the following address to Dr. Waldie:—

"We, the undersigned, Office-bearers, and Members of the Victoria Barahanagar School Committee, on behalf of the Committee and of the local public generally, beg leave, on your retirement from the business of the Chemical Works, carried on by you for over thirty years in their town and its vicinity, and the consequent termination of your residence in their midst, to present you with this valedictory address, to express the feelings of respect and attachment in which you are held by our community, as well as the Committee's sincere gratitude to you for the benefits which you have in various ways rendered to the School under their management.

The cause of education in Barahanagar could not have a steadier or more sympathetic friend than it found in you. Schools of all kinds, Vernacular or English, whether intended for the education of the higher or the lower classes, for boys or girls, equally shared your interest and support. Of the Victoria Barahanagar School, of which only as being charged with its management we can speak with authority, you have been a friend indeed, helping it in its day of struggle, and remaining staunch to it all along. In 1877 you were elected a Patron, since which time the school has always received valuable assistance at your hands. We may as well here add, as we may do with perfect truth, that your long residence in the neighbourhood and constant association with the people in their public movements have made your name a household word among them, and long will it be before your quiet, unflinching benevolence passes away from the grateful memory of Baranagar."

The address was read by Kumar Dowlat Chandra Roy. Dr. Waddie thanked the deputation for presenting him with such a testimony, in which, he thought, they had greatly overrated what small services he could render to the people of Baranagar. He was not quite a young man when he came out to this country, being then 35 years old, and the demands of his own business ever since hardly had left him much leisure to be of as much service to others as he might otherwise wish.

That was like Dr. Waddie. In fact, the whole ceremony was characteristic. If he wished it, or his Baranagar friends cared for fuss, an enthusiastic general demonstration might any day be got up in that quarter in his honor. Were it not for Baboo Atul Krishna Bose, the energetic Secretary of the Paraganah Hindu (now Victoria) School, we feel sure even this poor compliment of an address from one of the many local institutions and inhabitants whom he helped, would have been withheld from the good David Waddie. It is many long years since we saw or had any communication with him, but having once lived for a considerable period in the same suburban town and been then often thrown together on public business, we can never forget our impression of one of the best specimens of humanity.

SEVERE winter is reported from Transcaspiia. The port of Uzun Ada is entirely frozen over; whole herds of cattle have perished in the steppes; the inhabitants have been compelled to cut down for fuel large quantities of the only scrub in the region serving to solidify the quicksands.

A manjee has been sentenced to 14 days' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 20 by the Chief Magistrate, for carrying 25 passengers without a license in a green boat which would not be licensed for more than 12 passengers.

THE Exodus begins on the 6th of April when the offices close in Calcutta, but the Viceroy does not leave till the second week of that month.

THE Nepal Durbar has welcomed our new Viceroy with presents—of four elephants, a pair of pretty piebald ponies, with beautiful long tails, some gold coins, silver ingots and a number of Thibetan novelties. On Wednesday, Colonel Bhairao Bahadoor in charge with the Nepal representative in Calcutta waited on, and was received by Lord Lansdowne, at Government House.

IF Burma is not to be raised to a Lieutenant-Government, the Chief Commissioner will have some substantial satisfaction in increased pay. He will draw the pay of a Member of Council from the commencement of the present year.

THE cost of the Crawford Commission has been officially declared to be 3½ lacs of rupees. And all gone for nothing!

DADAH has taken another wife, leaving the famous Rukhmibai absolutely free to choose a second husband.

FOR the accident to them at the Victoria Terminus, Sir Henry and Lady Morland sued the G. I. P. Railway for rupees one lac and ten thousand—as damages. The High Court—Mr. Justice Scott—has decreed the suit for Rs. 30,000.

THE Honorable Black Town Magistrate had been investigating for sometime the theft at the Jetties. Here is his final deliverance:—

"In this case the defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3 were discharged on the 12th instant, and a charge was drawn against the other two defendants, and the case was adjourned to this day (Feb. 14) for judgment.

The case for the prosecution is that on the 10th January last the accused No. 4, Shib Chunder Dey, stole from the Jetty No. 1, belonging to the Port Commissioners, 34 boxes of tin consigned to his master Behary Lall Dey, and that defendant No. 1 (the shed officer), and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (the gate officers) aided and abetted the offence. The case against the fifth defendant is that he received the stolen goods from the 4th defendant, Shib Chunder, with a guilty knowledge.

It appears that 500 boxes of tin, consigned to Behary Lall Dey through Messrs. Graham & Co., had arrived in Calcutta on board the steamer Britannia, and were landed at the shed No. 1 on the 8th and 9th January. Accused No. 4, Shib Chunder, was the landing sircar of the consignment. On the 8th January he took delivery of 46 boxes, viz: the cart tickets marked C, and on the 10th January of 380 boxes, viz: the cart tickets marked I, D, E, and F. There still remained in the shed 66 boxes to be delivered. Out of these, 34 boxes were removed by the accused, Shib Chunder, in the afternoon of the 10th January on two carts, for which no cart ticket is forthcoming, and these 34 boxes, instead of going to Behary Lall Dey, found their place in the godown of Gobindo, the defendant No. 5. Under the rules prescribed by the Port Commissioners the shed officer and the gate officers are liable to make good the deficiency. But they have been criminally prosecuted for aiding and abetting the offence of theft. The proof adduced against them consists of the evidence of the two carters, the two tallymen Swaine and Peters, and Omrito Lall Bose, the landing sircar of Messrs. Graham and Co., as also the hand note marked G, executed by these three defendants in favour of Behary Lall Dey. This evidence appeared to me so unsatisfactory and unreliable that I discharged the defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3, under section 253 C. P. Code, without calling upon them to enter into their defence.

The carters say that the defendant Thomas was present when they were loading their carts, and he told them to be quick, but when the carts were leaving the shed they did not see him. One of the carters says that at the gate No. 3 they saw Day and Swaine, and they told the carters to stop, while the other carter says that they told them to drive on. These carters seem to be more intelligent than carters generally are, for they apparently seem to have taken the trouble of not only making the acquaintance of the European and Eurasian shed and gate officers, but also taking note of what those officers were doing all the time they were loading their carts.

As to the promissory note marked G, which is supported by Omrito's evidence, I am of opinion that the defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3 were frightened by Omrito into signing it. A careful perusal of Omrito's evidence, and the study of the manoeuvre adopted by him, would show to any unprejudiced mind that he had very ably set up a plan to inveigle the three Eurasian defendants, taking part in the affair in the guise of a friend and adviser. I strongly suspect that it was through Omrito's connivance that Shib Chunder managed to remove the 34 cases from the Jetty, for he admits in his evidence that the previous deliveries on the 8th and 10th were made under his supervision, and it was he who counted the carts and boxes covered by the cart tickets C to F, and put down his initials. Again, he says that he told Thomas, long before the carters were found by the police, that he knew that the carts had passed out through the gate No. 3. He could not have known this, unless Shib Chunder had either told him that or had gone out with the carts under his eyes. But when he was informed by the owner of the missing boxes he tried to save Shib Chunder by shifting the blame on the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and putting them in fear of departmental punishment, and he managed to get from them a promissory note, in favour of Behary Lall Dey. Behary Lall Dey says in his evidence that he did not authorise Omrito to get the promissory note, as he looked to Graham & Co. to make good the loss. If the witness Francis D'Almeida is to be believed and I see no reason to disbelieve him, the man Omrito owed defendant Day a grudge, as the latter had reported to Captain Alison last year that Omrito and Shib Chunder in taking delivery at the Jetty had produced a cart ticket, and on being counted, there were larger number of tin plates than they should have been on the cart.

Mr. Booth the Deputy Superintendent of the Jetties, says in his evidence: "The defendants distinctly said they were frightened or induced by Omrito to sign the promissory note."

But while adding that the execution of the promissory note by the defendants does not stamp their conduct with criminality, I feel bound to say that the defendants have shown a lamentable want of moral courage in yielding to the suggestion of Omrito, and signing the hand note. They evidently thought that unless they privately settled with the owners, and if the matter was reported to their official superiors, they would come to meet like their fellow workers, Chunder and Nundy, who were some time ago degraded for criminal neglect. Still they should have shown a better moral courage than they did on this occasion. The evidence of the witness Swaine and Peters, the tallymen, is sufficiently trustworthy that I do not wish to waste time over it. They did not inform their superior, Mr. Munro, of what they knew against Thomas until the trial of this case, had been proceeded with, and the defendants were condemned on bail.

The case against the defendant No. 4, Shib Chunder, is quite conclusive, so is the case against the 5th defendant. The latter, through his counsel, pleads good faith, but his breaking the wood boxes bearing the trade mark late in the evening, and taking away the tin plates, the next morning, a few, and running the sum of Rs. 150 on their pledge, show that he was not a bona fide receiver of the stolen goods.

I convict Shib Chunder under section 311, and Gobindo Chunder under section 311, and I sentence each of them to six months rigorous imprisonment. The property to be made over to the Port Commissioners.

Is this the first case of the kind? Or, is it the visible manifestation of the system practised at the Jetties? This can scarcely be the only time that the consignee Dey has misused goods at the Jetties? The Eurasian Shed and Gate officers suffer in purse though not in body. The Magistrate finds them all but guilty for legal conviction. We hope Mr. Munro will pursue the investigation and the Port Trust will yet bring the other offenders to justice and put a stop to the robbery. The note of hand proves a blind, for which perhaps it was designed. Behary has disowned all knowledge of it. He has his claim for the lost goods against Graham & Co. What then is to become of the note? Shib Chunder was more than a landing sircar to Behary and had more than once landed him safe at harbours.

SINCE the punishment of its editor, the Pall Mall Gazette has been making farther and farther departures from respectability. After the secession of Mr. Greenwood, it still remained an able well-written journal, conducted by educated men, for decent Liberal folk. It seems of late to hanker for the rôle of the "penny dreadful." If it goes on at this rate, it will be a formidable competition of the publications of George William Reynolds, the man of "Mysteries." It is already become absolutely radical in its language, as in the following, on the late Morier-Bismarck Correspondence:—

"Sir Robert Morier, by his manly, straightforward conduct, has conferred a public benefit upon the world which it is difficult to over-estimate. Europe has covered so long beneath the spell of the great German Chancellor that it seemed as if no one would ever be forthcoming to speak the word that would break the power of the magician by one straightforward courageous word of defiant protest. Sir Robert Morier has spoken that word, spoken it in manly fashion as an English gentleman should, and there is not a capital in Europe where men are not grateful for tearing the mask off this Reptile moonlighter of reputations."

And is Europe come to this? Has the rise of Prussia so demoralised the other powers and peoples? Has the extraordinary success of Bismarck so humbled and dumb-founded them, that they cannot muster courage for the exercise of their commonest natural rights? Never, even in the darkest hour of Europe, when the best part of the Continent was overrun by the legions of Napoleon and his vassals were on its thrones or his agents ruled at its courts, was there such a reign of terror as, on the showing of this great organ of Ultra Radicalism, exists, at this moment, in the civilised world. Then, as ever, before or since, England at any rate was the asylum of refugees from the Continent, who under British protection poured out their soul in complaints against their own princes and states, without let or hindrance. They sometimes abused the freedom allowed them, and not unfrequently led their protector into hot water with other powers, sometimes with her very allies. But their freedom was continued. Once the great Napoleon himself, as an ally, sought the protection of British law against his French libeller in England, but he was allowed to try for it on equal terms with his literary foe. How different now when one of the chief English papers proclaims it as a feat of rare courage in an Englishman holding the high office of Ambassador to Russia that he dares to vindicate his character against the aspersions cast on it by the powerful Vizier of Germany. One would think that any mild Hindoo of education would have done exactly what Sir Robert Morier is so extravagantly praised for doing, without expecting to derive so much fame from such a simple operation.

AMONG the latest arrivals in Calcutta is Nawab Mahomed Ali Khan the newly appointed Additional Member of the Imperial Legislative Council. The Calcutta public do not seem to know who he is; and as we happen to know something about him and his family, we consider it right to let the public know it.

He is descended from one of the noblest families of Delhi, which enjoyed a high consideration under the Emperors. His father, Nawab Mustafa Khan, was a large landholder, who was held in much esteem, not only for his noble origin and wealth, but also for many good personal qualities.

As one of several sons, our new Councillor inherited from his father a fine Zemindari in Jahangirabad, in the Bolnshuhur District; and his abilities and high character, as one of the foremost Mahomedan noblemen in the North-West, must have attracted the notice of the Authorities, so as to induce them to recommend him for this high distinction.

As the eldest son of a Nawab, and a descendant of a long line of Nawabs, he is addressed as a "Nawab" by all who know. We are unable to understand why he has been designated a "Munshi." His younger brother, Mahomed Isbak Khan is, we believe, a Statutory Civilian in the North Western Provinces.

While genuine Nawabs are thus made into "Munshis," every beggar of a Munshi, as soon as he obtains some superior post in the Hyderabad State and with it a title of Dowlah or Moolk or Jung, is considered entitled to the affix of "Nawab"; and English journalists, both in India and England, seem to feel a positive delight in decorating these men with the title of "Nawab," without caring to ascertain whether the title of "Nawab" has been, in due form, conferred upon them by His Highness the Nizam, and whether such title has been conferred by His Excellency the Viceroy, who alone is the Fountain of Honour in British India.

NAWAB Shojanoolmoolk Asafood-dowlah Syud Mahomed Zainool-Abideen Khan Bahadoor, Feroze Jung, of the Nizamut Family and

Head of the Akroba-i-Nizamut of Moorshedabad, had a private interview with His Excellency the Viceroy on the 22nd instant in the afternoon. His Excellency was pleased to give him a cordial reception.

NAWAB SAIDOODDEEN AHMUD KHAN—son of the late Nawab Zainooddeen Ahmud Khan Bahadur of Delhi, and uncle of the Chief of the Nawabate of Loharu now on a visit to Calcutta, was last week admitted to a private interview with the Viceroy.

LAST night, the Pleaders of the High Court gave a subscription entertainment to the new Native Judge, at the house of one of them—Baboo Sreenath Das, in our neighbourhood. Frugal and farinaceous, with a tendency perhaps to fatty degeneration, it was limited to themselves and the Native Judges.

THE Government has sanctioned a survey for a railway from Moghal Sarai through a point near Purulia towards Tarakeswar or Howrah. The project will be known as the Moghal Sarai-Howrah Survey, and will be under the control of the Director-General of Railways.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL L. Conway Gordon, C. I. E., R. E., having gone on special leave, Major M. C. Brackenbury, R. E., Under-Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department, Railway Branch, and Deputy Director-General of Railways, officiates as Deputy Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department, Railway Branch.

MR. H. F. J. T. Maguire, Joint-Magistrate and Deputy Collector, 24-Pergunnahs, officiates temporarily as a Political Agent of the 3rd class and as Assistant Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department.

MR. Justice Wilson goes home on six months' furlough on the 6th March.

THE Calcutta Corporation is being prosecuted for creating a nuisance. It will be committed to the sessions for filling a tank with town refuse. Mr. Marsden is recording evidence for the purpose. The Chairman of the Corporation, at its last meeting, in support of the proposition for a committee of enquiry, pointed out that the case will be tried on its own merits both in the Police Court and the Sessions, and that it cannot therefore be of material assistance to the Commissioners on the general question. If it is to be so, why should there be a commitment and useless waste of money. Mr. Marsden might well have stuck to his own and given his order accordingly. The High Court is wise not to pronounce any opinion on a matter not immediately before it. If the mode of filling up the particular tank is objectionable, the same process with the same materials in another case, may not be equally injurious. Is it expected that the High Court will lay down a rule for tank filling with earth or other materials, and discard town sweepings altogether?

THERE was a meeting of the Calcutta Corporation on Thursday. The list of business being heavy and important, the Commissioners assembled strong and early, the hour of commencement being three in the afternoon. They were not long detained, however, the Commissioners beginning to disperse an hour after, by 4 o'clock. By that time it was plain that the astute Chairman had taken the wind out of their sails. The Budget was referred to a Committee, the Chairman announcing that the executives had recommended no increase to the existing house rate. A Committee was appointed to arrange for the raising of a new loan of 5 lacs for the new waterworks. The Central Road question was put off for early consideration of the new Corporation. At one time it was so important that it could not be postponed for a week or so, now the Chairman finds it convenient, in hopes of better financial prospects in the future, to defer the final resolution on the subject. The Commissioners next adopted the proposition of the Chairman in the Town Council disallowing any verandahs over the entire width of the footpath in streets less than 40 feet wide. Dr. MacLeod was opposed to any verandah at all. But there were many such-verandah-owning Commissioners and others who had supported them in the ugly and insanitary improvements of their houses and they outvoted Dr. MacLeod's very rational amendment. It is satisfactory, however, to find that the Chairman has grown wiser and begun to discourage such additions. We do hope the native Commissioners will yet learn the impropriety of such structures. Dr. Sircar had given notice of a motion—that "in future no tanks be allowed to be filled in with town refuse, garbage, street sweepings or with any material containing animal or vegetable matter." Finding no sympathy from his medical colleagues, he did not press his motion, but at suggestion from the Chair, he moved for a Committee "to enquire on the effect on the public health by the filling of tanks with refuse and sweepings, and that in the meantime no tanks be so filled up." Baboos Norendranath Sen and Amritonath Mitter proposed the postponement of the question till after the prosecution against the municipality was over, but the majority were for some show of work at any rate and appointed a Committee on the whole question. Many had come prepared to denounce the present system and to offer their own remedies. The prevailing idea seems to be that the condemned tanks should be filled up with earth. They do not care what the cost may be. They only wish to avoid the nuisance of filling. They must be content with their own theory and not try to enforce it on practical men of business. A feeling is also observable that tanks ought to be maintained and the foul water substituted by unfiltered water from the pipes. This is more rational than the first. But then the tanks must be periodically dewatered and refilled. We trust the Committee appointed will try to find out some means by which germs in water could be destroyed and the liquid otherwise rendered fit for use.

THE Russian General Louis Melikoff, one of the great soldiers of his country, lately died at Nice. His career is an instance of the ethnic impartiality of Russian statesmanship. He was one of the Armenians who have risen to offices of high trust, dignity, and emoluments. Born in 1824 he commanded, as Colonel, a regiment of cavalry in the war with Turkey, in 1854. His share in the capture of Kars promoted him to the rank of General and the office of Commandant of that town. In the last war with Turkey, his intimate knowledge of Caucasia and the theatre of war in that quarter, was of the greatest usefulness to Russia, and he enhanced his reputation by his courage and his skill in handling his troops.

THE mortal remains of Count Louis Melikoff are to be transported from Nice to Tiflis, for burial in the Armenian monastery of Vonk, the pantheon of the Armenian nation, which already gives shelter to the tombs of Generals Tergoukassow, Lazarew, Schelkovnikow and other men of note of Armenian origin.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1889.

THE HYDERABAD VISITORS.

AT 10 A. M., on Thursday the 21st, Nawab Sir Asman Jah, the Prime Minister of Hyderabad, arrived at Calcutta, accompanied by Moulvi Mushtak Hosain, Syud Ali Belgrami and Faridoonji Jamshedji. Mr. Howell, the Resident, arrived here yesterday (Friday) morning by the mail train, accompanied by his Military Secretary Captain Gilchrist, and Moulvi Mehendi Ali Khan, who was detained at Allahabad by sickness, has come in by mail this morning.

These Mahomedan names we find a source of great confusion in even the best informed quarters. The "derangement of epitaphs" at the hands of even native publicists is most ludicrous. This is specially the case in regard to the personnel of the great Musulman kingdom in the Deccan. But there is some excuse for outsiders in the multiplication of names and honorific designations of the same individuals. Unless some check is imposed on the absurd facility for acquiring titles in Hyderabad, it will always be difficult to make sure who's who? there: The confusion will continue.

Now that a strong party of the Government of the Deccan is at the capital, it will be useful to the public if we attempt to determine the identity of our distinguished visitors and note their antecedents.

Sir Asman Jah, the Prime Minister, is the same as Nawab Busheerood Dowla, a quiet, well-meaning young noble of the great Shumsool Omra family, cousin and rival to the venerable Ameer-i-Kabir. On the flight of young Nawab Salar Jung—the unfortunate choice of Lord Ripon—Nawab Busheerood Dowla was recalled from England (where he had gone as the Nizam's Representative at Her Majesty's Jubilee) to take up the office left vacant, which he did at a most difficult juncture. He was scarcely treated with courtesy when, between the Residency and its adherents in power, Mr. Faridoonji Jamshedji was appointed Private Secretary to the minister while the latter was away. It was this gentleman who by telegram contradicted our true account of Colonel Marshall's outrage on a Palace sentry for doing his duty according to order—a contradiction of which the Pioneer, which ought to have known better, in reviewing our book of Travels in Bengal, made so much against us as a native journalist. We published the contradiction as it came to us from an authoritative source, but we had so much reason to trust our informant that we could not retract and did not withdraw our former statement. And when afterwards we were in a position to do so and maintained the truth of our original account, the Pioneer, in its "leading" fashion, had nothing to say. Of course, it did not do us the justice to withdraw its charge against us of furnishing imaginary news to the discredit of European officials. It simply took shelter under the leading resource of masterly inactivity and eloquent silence.

We had heard such favourable accounts of this Parsee gentleman, that we were sorry that the unfortunate contradiction came through his hands. He no doubt carried out orders, but respectable men should not submit to every kind of order. That affair of the then supreme Colonel with the sepoy, is a dark spot in the late history of Hyderabad. The minister himself behaved most lamentably, to speak mildly. He has shown weakness also in compromising with Huq at last, and it is understood that he is now here finally to patch up matters for him and his. But the information here becomes obscure—there is no penetrating the depths of Hyderabad intrigue.

Syud Ali Belgrami, we believe, now officiates as Home Secretary. He belongs to a good family of Upper India, well-known in Bengal, where his father and uncle were long ornaments of the Subordinate Executive Service, and rose to seats on the Bengal Council. He is the brother of Syud Hossein Belgrami Imaduddaula, probably the most accomplished Mahomedan living, who has well kept himself free from the entanglements of Hyderabad politics.

Moulvi Mehendi Ali Khan who bears the high title of Mohsin-ool-Moolk is the Revenue Secretary and Finance Minister. He is said to be the ablest man in the state, but is also considered the most dangerous, on account of his ambition. He has scotched his rival Huq, not killed him. Meanwhile, he has to subdue a new rival in the lucky Moulvi Mahdi Hassan, otherwise called Nawab Futteh Nawaz Jung, who holds the nominal office of Chief Justice, but is always busy with sorts of miscellaneous court jobs, from high game to the lowest. He is another of Sir Syud Ahmed's creatures.

So much for introducing these worthies. More, hereafter.

This visit is a great trial to the Government of India. It will require all the wits at the command of the Viceroy and his associates, to deal satisfactorily with these famous strangers.

THE BANQUET TO THE BLACK MAN.

THE Premier's unbecoming sneer at our veteran Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, has not been allowed to be forgotten. Lord Salisbury has been paid back in his own coin. He had made a vulgar partizan appeal to the British prejudice against colour. And now his opponents are making the utmost political capital of the Marquis's slip, by showing how very liberal are the Liberals, how firmly they believe in the sentiment that a man's a man for a' that, how they regard a native of India, no matter what his complexion, as only a man and brother, and, last not least, how the Conservatives are no better than they should be. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji is receiving a pretty good lionising from his Radical friends, in compensation for the humiliation sought to be inflicted on him by the head of the Conservative Party. In India, his friends would probably have been content with granting him a free allowance of newspaper salve to his wound. As yet, we do not see any signs of even an address of sympathy from his countrymen here to their Representative. In England, life is more lifelike and politics a business, and our own compatriots sojourning there do not fail to catch the prevailing spirit. His friends in that country, European and Asiatic, have given Mr. Naoroji a public dinner at the National Liberal Club. It was at first announced as a demonstration from the Club itself, but this was subsequently contradicted, and the movement continued as one emanating from a number of members. This would show a difference on the subject in the Liberal camp itself. As Mr. Naoroji is an out and out Gladstonian and Home Ruler, the more moderate Unionists might well fight shy of him. But the National Liberal Club is thoroughly ultra-radical. This was apparent from the first, and it was only from expediency, with the object of drawing in Unionist subscriptions, that the Gladstonians in the Council refrained from assuming for the institution an avowed Gladstonian character. The mask has now been thrown off. The entente cordiale has been broken. And the Club is now professedly what it always really was—Gladstonian and Parnellite. If it is maintained, it will be maintained by those who exercise influence in it and make the most of it. With so many institutions of the kind, corporate and proprietary, whether another great Club like this will be adequately supported is more than we can guess. This Naoroji dinner may be one of the circumstances which culminated in the split, but as the Gladstonians were strong in the Club Council when the dinner was started, it seems that the protest against it as a Club affair came from a section of the Gladstonians themselves. This may be regarded as a very small matter, but now that India has been dragged into the meshes of Party in England, these little things become of moment to us. If India had not been made to appear on the hustings there on the Liberal side, the Conservatives would never have cared to sneer at their Indian fellow-subjects as blacks. It would never have occurred to Lord Salisbury to point his sarcasm at Brother Dadabhai. Nor, if the Premier had not committed himself in that poor way, would the political opponents of the ministry have thought of this compliment to the "poor Indian." Under the circumstances, it is necessary for us to gauge the strength of the Liberal sentiment in favour of Mr. Naoroji and his cause, and of India generally. It is important to ascertain how far the Gladstonians, at any rate, are united in sentiment on this occasion and on this head.

The Dinner was a quiet respectable affair, appropriately and very worthily presided over by our former Viceroy the Marquis of Ripon, and attended by some of our English, chiefly Old Indian, friends. For ourself, we must confess to a feeling of disappointment. We certainly cannot join with those of our countrymen who are advertising it as a great triumph, or at least as an event fraught with great hopes for our country. For that matter, it was a poor enough business. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji himself, who has not yet abandoned his forlorn hope of entering Parliament even before the Millennium, may be excused for trying to make electioneering capital out of the compliment, but the truth is too glaring to allow us to shelter ourselves under any illusion. The dinner was evidently not regarded by the Liberal Party—even the extreme section—as an electioneering move in its interest. It was not regarded as a Party business at all. The chiefs of the Party were nowhere—not even the rank and file attended. Lord Ripon we take for an Old Indian—Mr. Bradlaugh as a—New: they are both committed to it. For the rest, there were Old Indians like Sir David Wedderburn and Sir W. W. Hunter—both committed too to radical reform of Indian Government, and one or two Orientalists like Professor Rhys Davids, retired from the Ceylon Civil Service, and one or two others, besides the Hindus, Mahomedans and Parsees present in England. The Irish Home Rulers were conspicuous by their absence. The purely English element was miscellaneous, not distinctively Liberal. The gathering was made up of various minute cults. It would seem as if there was an effort to create a harmony out of so many discords. The Buddhist Rhys Davids, the Positivist Harrison, and the atheist Hoalyoke and Bradlaugh under the presidency of the fervent Roman Catholic Ripon, with Seva Ram the Sivite and Ching the Confucian, with Zoroastrians and Islamites, Vishnuites and Brahmos, certainly constitute as rum a lot as could ever be ordered together anywhere in Europe.

THE CONTRETEMPS IN CASHMERE.

OUR readers will remember the accusation, brought in certain Anglo-Indian newspapers of Upper India, against the native Governor of Cashmere under the Maharaja. This functionary was charged with having, at the State dinner given by the Maharaja's Government at Her Majesty the Empress's Jubilee to the Europeans, at which the Governor, who is a Cashmeri Pandit returned from England, presided, exalted his own immediate master the Maharaja, at the expense of his sovereign and his master's liege the Empress, and made an indecent attack on her character. It was a painful story, but almost incredible, seeing that the Governor of Cashmere was the son of old Pundit Munphool, long a trusted servant of our Government, having gone on a political espionage into Central Asia to report Russian progress, and being rewarded by Sir John Lawrence's administration with the charge of Bikanir, and that the Governor himself is a gentleman who, after his Indian course, had gone and finished his education in England and returned as a barrister. That such a man, with such antecedents and so educated, should behave himself in public—nay, at a great State occasion—like a drunken cad, was not indeed absolutely impossible, but certainly highly improbable. There was no poohpoohing the affair, however. The apparition came in such a questionable shape that speak we must to it. Our duty to our sovereign required it. Such an allegation could not be passed over in silence, or disposed of with summary derision. No sooner it reached us, than we immediately expressed our abhorrence of the conduct imputed to this scapegrace of the Extra-Assistant Commissioner and pressed upon the Maharaja to make instant inquiry. Others were differently advised. Pursuing the stereotyped policy of the Native Press, they abused the Pioneer and the Civil and Military Gazette, for lending themselves to a calumny against an educated native gentleman in a high position. In fine, they disbelieved the whole story, dwelt on its inherent improbability, &c. The Maharaja of Cashmere we were glad to find above his advisers in the Native Press. With a proper sense of his responsibility, he immediately suspended his Governor Pandit Sooraj Bull, and demanded explanation. The Pandit now applied to those who were present at the dinner in question, and got many of them to favour him more or less. But all were not so good. With such certificates as he could obtain, he sent in his answer, denying the accusation. After considering the papers, the Durbar was unable to exonerate the Pandit. After all allowances made and all due weight given to the certificates, the Maharaja and his advisers could not altogether get over the strong impression of an ugly basis of truth of the charge. It was plain enough that on an occasion on which the Maharaja's representative was bound to be particularly loyal to the Empress and the Paramount Power, he had been, at any rate, dubious and offensive. Accordingly, the Maharaja dismissed him and appointed Sirdar Roop Singh in his place.

Much as the result is to be regretted on account of the Pandit, the Maharaja has done wisely. His responsibility was great, and he would not have discharged it adequately by a less decisive order. In no other way, could he have thoroughly removed the suspicion of imperfect appreciation of the enormity of the offence with which his greatest satrap and representative was charged. Any lurking suspicion of the kind would have been fatal to his reputation and prospects, nay, disastrous to his throne. The matter is not so insignificant as many might deem it. We may seem to be making a mountain of a molehill, but we are not. The European way of looking at it, to which the English-speaking section of our people too unfortunately seem disposed, is not the right way. For such truculent insolence as was attributed to Pandit Sooraj Bull, the Government of India might, with the support of opinion of all Asia, depose any subordinate Indian prince. Even as it is, with a Dalhousie at the head of our Government, the Maharaja would have run a serious risk. The British ascendancy in this country rests on prestige—that is, opinion—as well as genuine force, and it cannot permit itself to be insulted by its neighbours and dependents.

We hope our rising generation will ponder on the lesson of this incident. Our countrymen would be wise to turn the personal loss of one to the general good. We badly need to cultivate self-restraint and moderation in all things. A foreign education is fast robbing us of our courteous deportment and deferential etiquette, without teaching us the fine grace of European manners. Without being brave, we are becoming rowdy. There is nothing like a residence in Europe for a schooling in self-reliance and self-respect and in breadth of view, for the native of India. But there is danger also of the youthful traveller importing to this land the worst vices of Europe. It is not everybody that can penetrate to the salons of the faubourgs, but it is the easiest thing to pick up the peculiarities of the parlé. We hope the Srinagar contretemps will be an effectual warning to our ambitious young gentlemen that the tittle tattle of London music halls and boozing kens will not pay in India.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

VI.

THE SPEECHES AND THE SPEAKERS (continued).

[Such a long and critical history of the late session of the Congress as "B" contributes, with its notice of personalities, some at least of the self-conscious order, is usually the signal for war. Our writer has, by his fairness, up to this escaped angry comment. On the contrary, his labours seem to be generally appreciated. Men like Pandit Malaviya, who know all about the Congress and the Congressists, have testified to the accuracy as well as ability of these letters. The writer himself has been rather exercised by an omission in our presentation of his lucubrations. We cannot make the amende better than by publishing a portion of his private despatch.

"Somehow or other you, I mean the printer's d—l, have left out the name of Babu Ganga Prasad Varma, of Lucknow, from the list of Congress workers of these Provinces. Without him, the catalogue cannot be complete. What he has done for the Congress, none others have done. He has sacrificed his time and talents for it, and for it also he has been a great sufferer in money. It is altogether an inexcusable mistake; and the omission is so prominent that I have already received many remonstrating letters on the subject. One of these goes the length of accusing me of want of common decency, but hopes it was not due to malice aforethought."—EDITOR, R. & R.]

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya—One can read sincerity writ in the face of this young journalist and earnest patriot. He has done more to infuse the new-born spirit into the people of the N.W.P. than perhaps all other men put together. Long before people even dreamt of the adhesion of Pandit Ayadhya Nath, he was hammering away at it! By his itinerant speeches, he aroused people from their lethargy and awakened them to their true position and a proper sense of their duties. I have heard many Bengali gentlemen, in whom the faculty of criticism was very well developed indeed, speaking in highly eulogistic term of his Calcutta speech, and I think I am not breaking confidence when I say that, notwithstanding the adverse introductory remark, Mr. Hume regarded his Madras speech, which became something like an impassioned harangue towards the end, as one of the ablest of the session. But we can read the inner man to the best account in the delivery of this pigmy-sized "rising orator." The eloquent delivery bears ample testimony to the fact that "to his heart his tongue is true." Himself by no means born with a silver spoon in his mouth, the resolution on the Income Tax—the "poor man's resolution" as it was very aptly termed—could not have been entrusted to better advocacy. He seemed to speak with a bitter experience of the pinch of poverty; or whence else could such warm language flow? But it is the tender graces of almost feminine gestures and the sweet warbling melody of his voice, that charm the hearers. It was these, I dare say, that made Mr. Caine, M. P., enquire of me as to who this "admirable speaker" was—was he a pleader?

Pandit Bishen Narayan Dar.—

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times diseased;
The which observed, a man may prophecy,
• With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life; which in their seeds,
And weak beginnings lie intresured.

or, as Wordsworth puts it:

The child is the father of the man.

is very true in the case of this first Cashmere Barrister; and this I say notwithstanding that his last speech was not a brilliant success. He early showed signs of his future greatness, which is still, however, in its embryonic stage. A genuine thinker and a clever writer, God granting him life, India will know him yet, and look up to him. His very pleasures and pastimes are literary. And age will doubtless remove and experience polish whatever of insobriety or ruggedness in thought or style, may still be left in him. Calm and phlegmatic, he is more of a Judge than an advocate. But he is nothing if he is not thoughtful and argumentative. From a literary and philosophical point of view, his speech at the last Congress, based as it seemed to be on Mr. Froude's latest work on Canada, was one of the ablest. The analogy drawn between Canada and India was close, and the lessons deduced were very valuable indeed. And if I mistake not, it was his frequent allusion to history that induced Raja Siva Prasad to make the foolish vaunt that he had read 360 historical manuscripts in the Library of Sir Charles Elliot! But because his speech was not haranguing, therefore, forsooth, he was not allowed to proceed even to complete his train of argument. In his case, the President was too exacting, as in the case of B. Surendra Nath he was far too liberal.

Babu Bipin Chandra Pal.—This young man of dashing ambition and infinite 'go', is better known as a promising journalist, for sometime connected with the Tribune. He had taken the precaution to pave his way to the delegates' confidence, by himself opening the campaign with a skirmish in the shape of an address at the Kajastha Patshala hall on the "Duties and Responsibilities of the Delegates," Mr. Kali Charan Banerjee presiding. Mr. Pal gave to the Congress a harrowing picture of the miserable condition of the Assam coolies—he himself hailing from Sylhet. His eloquent appeal had its desired effect. The delegates were moved. The tender heart of good Madras seemed to be most affected. I wish every delegate was as keenly alive to the responsibility he owes to his constituency, as Mr. Pal no doubt was. With characteristic boldness and promptitude, he would rise up to press the views of his constituency upon the delegates; and such was his solicitude that his pet subject—the condition of the Assam Coolies—be taken up for discussion, that he tried to dovetail it into Resolution X. It was so cleverly done as to elicit a backhanded compliment from the President, upon the intellectual ingenuity of the framer. You may judge for yourself from the Resolution X, as he would have it, the amended portions (he of course said nothing of his new additions!) being underscored:

"That having regard to the poverty of the people, the importance of encouraging indigenous manufactures, and the migration of populations from the congested parts of the country, and to the difficulty of practically introducing any general systems of technical education and emigration suited to the requirements of the country with the present imperfect information, Government be moved to delay no longer the appointment of a mixed commission to enquire into the present industrial condition of the country, and to consider the question of emigration especially in relation to the working of the existing Acts bearing on the subject."

He got that sturdy champion of the Congress—the patriotic Bombay Mahomedan Mill-owner—Mr. Ali Mahomed Bhimji—to second him. Not without careful scrutiny, could Mr. Banerjee say that it won't do. His voice was loud and his action seemed violent, otherwise his speech betokened careful research and consideration. Altogether, his speech was very good—natural, free, bold and highly animated.

Mr. Sharfuddin.—This Mahomedan barrister has done for Behar what Mr. Hamid Ali Khan has done for Cutch. He is wedded to the cause like his brother barrister of Lucknow. His delivery is bold and graceful, and his "handshake" personality adds to the beauty of whatever he says. He is uncompromising and unsparing in his exposure of Sir Syed's cabals.

Lala Lajpat Rai.—To hear this very young man of short stature is to be agreeably surprised. Who could a few minutes before believe that he was capable of so much? But,

Of expectation fade, and most oft then
Where most it promises; and oft it lies,
Where hope is coldest, and despair most sits.

His intelligent, intellectual expression is a true index to his real worth. With remarkable effect, did he quote Sir Syed's former heretic (judged from his present attitude) professions from a very valuable pamphlet—Open letters to Sir Syed Ahmed—whose authorship some people would father upon him. He gave fair promise of a first-rate speaker. He should cultivate the art.

Mr. Girija Shankar Kashiram Durvedy—A young journalist and a rising speaker who hails from Madras. I ought to be excused if I am a little too partial to the unsophisticated, unadulterated Madrasis. They are no hypocrites. A practical race of patriots, in whatever they say or do their national genius displays itself. Who having heard Mr. Durvedy expatiating, in eloquent terms, upon the miseries of the curtailment of such a daily necessity as salt, could doubt that the speaker was not speaking from the bottom of his soul? As he proceeded, his voice became hoarse and choked through feeling. While his face lost colour, assuming a pale cast, his eyes became blood shot red. If you are not still moved, you are not to be envied—that's all I can say. To the ordinary listener, the words, by reason of coming from the inmost recesses of the heart, had a treble effect.

Mr. G. Subramaniya Jyer.—It is enough to say that he is the Editor of the Hindu—that very ably conducted and leading paper of Madras—indeed, it is a guarantee—that whatever he said was sober, sensible and practical. In a few words, in support of Resolution IX., moved by his fellow-Southerner Mr. Adam, he fully demonstrated the supreme importance of education. He showed the perverse folly of withdrawing grants from educational institutions, and leaving them in a helpless and hopeless condition. For the dissemination of a more extended knowledge of the Congress, he has done much in the Madras presidency. He is very quiet, and seemed to prefer undisturbed quiet. He is one of the noble band of silent workers to whom none but the all-knowing God can do full justice. And I am sure he will be richly rewarded for his labours by Him whose keen eye nothing can escape. He would fain be buried in obscurity. But is that possible?

Mr. R. D. Mehta,—who has become famous on account of wreaking his vengeance in the only effectual way possible, upon the over-ambitious though accomplished Mr. S. J. Padsha, is blessed with a large share of animal spirits. People broke out into roars of laughter on his alluding thus in terms of bitter sarcasm, to the benevolent intention of the Government of India on the system of Abkari and Excise in India, as it obtained at present:

"The intention of the Government was said to be benevolent. Benevolent, indeed; not only benevolent, but fruitful—revenueful—(loud laughter)—very benevolent as far as the Government treasury was concerned but as far as the health of the people was concerned, ruinous. (cheers)."

He would not use the language of equivocation. Mr. Watcha agreed at the time to pass the Resolution as amended; but somehow or other his paper the India Spectator now observes that it would have preferred to see the original Resolution pass. Mr. Mehta has a remarkably intelligent and prepossessing appearance. A little incident that occurred would serve to show what a jolly good soul he is. He took up the draft of a certain Resolution lying before Mr. Hume, and having read replaced it. Now Mr. Hume wanted it; but it was missing, lying somewhere in a jungle of papers. Mr. Hume was annoyed, as one is wont to be when he has outworked and outdone somebody disturbs him. What do you think, Mr. Mehta did he apologized for the mishap with profuse expressions of regret? No, nothing of the kind. He at once exclaimed "Mr. Hume by a good-burn and poke. Now, give me a minute, don't be angry, don't be angry. Don't give you little ones (including himself of course among the number) live, if you be angry with them; how can I give I will make a fair copy for you." Mr. Hume's anger was at once brightened up into a broad smile. He looked at his hat.

Mr. Nafizuddin Chaudhary.—His address was one of the best Lapsissach and beauty speeches. He found relief for the exuberance of his feelings by actually shedding tears. The Mahomedans are a most sentimental people, and this was his excuse for the exhibition of his weakness, as Europeans regard it. The Mahomedans, he said, ruled over this land, with the aid of the Hindus, for 700 years. Since the reign of Aurangzeb, that arch-oppressor of the Hindus, their feelings have been estranged from each other. He was a delegate from Benares, but he must confess before his election he was among those unfortunates, the Anti-Congress men, but he swore to the assembled Delegates as he had sworn to his Mahomedan townsmen and others that he had nothing to do with that body now, but was entirely devoted, heart and soul, to the Congress. The resolution giving assurance that the Mahomedan interests would be fully safeguarded, was necessary to dissipate the fear that had taken possession of the minds of some of his co-religionists. It was generated by the ill-winds that rose from Aligarh and Benares, and blew over the country. But the Resolution which he heartily supported ought to allay any such misgiving. He sat amidst deafening cheers.

Moulvi Hidayat Rasul--s was a very humorous speech; but it is to be feared more witty than wise. Had it not been in Urdu, I am afraid he would never have been allowed to proceed. The Congress is a business-assembly. We ought to be all seriousness while in it; that is no place for light laughter or for sallies of wit. There is a season for everything. Shakepeare is the author of both Hamlet and the Comedy of Errors! His delivery, however, was very good, and his speech telling, and was very much appreciated.

Mr. Nanjoshi. This sturdy, simple, honest patriot claims the land of Sivaji as his own. Whenever tough battles had to be fought, or intricate questions to be solved, Mr. Nanjoshi was in request. This time, however, he did not speak much beyond supporting the resolution proposing Poona as the next seat of the Congress. But he took his full share of work in the subject-committee. And if I have at all alluded to him as a speaker, it is because I am anxious that his stupendous personality should not be wrapped up, if not lost, in obscurity. Your reporters for the press did not so much as name him, evidently putting him down as a nobody nonentity. But I most emphatically protest against this method of summary disposal of one of India's best men.

I am very anxious to finish the portion relating to the speeches and speakers soon: the more so because I fear being anticipated either by Mr. Atkins or Mr. Hume. Both are busy producing their respective publications on this head. I shall, at an early date, take up the European speakers. I reserved their speeches to be separately discussed: firstly, because I wanted to compare indigenous talents between themselves, and, secondly, because I want to deduce therefrom important lessons, to be laid to heart.

B.

MONGHYR.

Jalalpur, 17th February, 1889.

The reduction of the clerical staff in the Locomotive Department ends with an unfavourable result. Some thirty clerks of the Accountant's Office have lately been served with notice, and more than five-and-twenty of the Loco. Workshops and Store Department have already been sent adrift. Of these many are found to have grown old in the service of the Company, and we are extremely sorry for these unfortunate creatures who at such an advanced age have very little prospect of getting themselves elsewhere employed. The man empowered with the slaughter of these poor clerks could have taken their case into his kind consideration for the long period they had been in the Railway. It would not be out of place here to state that Mr. Mitchell, Foreman, Blacksmith Shop, has given several proofs of the interest he takes in his clerks. Such a good and kind hearted master commands no doubt the affection and service of his subordinates.

We hope the Head of the Department will not bring discredit upon him for the mismanagement of works, which have hitherto been carried on systematically. The railway authorities will never have any cause to regret if gratuity be granted to those whose service extends over one-fourth of a century.

TRUTH.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages.

For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,

Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment

OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

NOTICE.

Military Secretary's Office.

Admission to Government House on the occasion of the Investitures of the most Exalted Order of the Star of India and of the most Eminent Order of the Indian Empire, to be held on Friday, the 1st March 1889, at 9 p.m., will be by tickets issued from the Office of the Military Secretary to the Viceroy.

All persons desiring to attend, other than members of the above Orders who will be officially present, are requested to apply to the Military Secretary stating the number of tickets and the names of the persons for whom they are required.

Applications for tickets will be received up to Saturday, the 23rd February 1889, after which date tickets will be issued and no application will be entertained.

All applications to be marked on the outside of the cover (Investiture application).

By Command,

WILLIAM HERESFORD, Lt. Colonel,
Military Secretary to the Viceroy.
Government House,
Calcutta, 9th Feb. 1889.

In Pamphlet, Price 1 annas
or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

POSTAL NOTICE.

With effect from the 1st April 1889, the sender of a value-payable article will be required to sign a certificate to the effect that the article is sent in execution of a bona fide order; and in the case of a value-payable unregistered packet, the sender will, in addition to signing the certificate referred to above, be required to prepay the usual money order commission on the amount specified for recovery from the addressee, by affixing postage stamps of the value of the commission to the form filled up by him.

2. In lieu of the forms at present filled up by the senders of value-payable articles, two revised forms will be substituted from the 1st April 1889—one for use with all value-payable articles other than value-payable unregistered book packets, and the other for use with value payable unregistered book packets. Each form will contain the certificate to be signed by the sender, and space is provided in the form for use with value-payable unregistered packets for the postage stamps to be affixed in payment of commission.

3. In case a value-payable unregistered packet is refused by the addressee or returned as unclaimed to the sender, no refund of the commission prepaid will be granted.

P. SHERIDAN,

Deputy Director General of the Post Office of India.

CALCUTTA:

Thurs 27th January 1888.

NOTICE.

AN European, thoroughly acquainted with Civil Engineering, Surveying, etc., in all its branches, a good Draftsman and Estimator, seeks an engagement; outdoor work preferred. Address C. E. care of this paper.

Price by post 8½ annas.

ASRUKANA

A Collection of poems in Bengali by

SRIMATI GIRINDRAMOHINI DASSY

(Author of Kabitahar, Bharat Kusum.)

Asrukana is a collection of poetical pieces of singular pathos and beauty of expression. It is a series of mournful songs that the reader is here presented with and they must touch a sympathetic cord in every heart that can feel. There is a singular appropriateness in the title of the work, and in its pious dedication to the memory of the husband of the fair writer.—The Indian Nation.

The authoress is not unknown to Bengali readers. She has already published two or three poems by which she is favourably known, but between these poems and this is a difference that hardly admits of being measured.

This is poetry in life

We have read Srimati Girindra Mohini's poems in a reverential spirit. The poems are all of a lyrical description. The lyre is soft, sweet and tender, but awfully strong.

The tone of the poems is inexpressibly gentle, inexpressibly pure, and inexpressibly tender and affectionate. It is the tone of a world mother.

Bengal should be proud of this poem—The Calcutta Review.

Apply at the Bee Press,
1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Calcutta.

FOR SALE

Price Post free Rs. 6.
 Cloth Gilt Rs. 6.
 Cloth Bound Rs. 5-8.
 Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
 BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late
 NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
 (the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
 Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
 CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, he might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

.....this interesting book. We are justified in so terming it, not on account of any romantic adventures that the author has to relate, nor of any very new discoveries in geography or natural history. There is something particular as regards ethnology; and a great deal of human nature in the book, shown to the reader with a simplicity and candour which bear testimony to its truth. Called from the busy haunts of men in the city to dwell for a time in Independent Tipperah as a judicious adviser to its chief, Doctor Mookerjee relates his adventures during the several journeys to and fro in that capacity, without revealing the secrets of the State, like a good diplomatist. He has adhered strictly to the advice which he offers to his brethren of the Native press, and has written what he saw and knows, without revealing all, considering what he might properly say and what withhold.....The above seems to be a curious passage to be found in a book of travels, and appears to have no connection with the subject. But it arises from a casual reference to a slaughter house, and a writer who "thundered weekly against the outrage of locating shambles in the immediate vicinity of a Hindoo temple"—where, in fact, no temple could be said to exist. Hence, the doctor advises his fellow-scribes not to be Pharisees, righteous overmuch, but to look and be sure of their facts. In the same spirit, he has written his book. He gives an account of his travels, which seem often to have been voyages, upon the widespread rivers of Eastern Bengal which in the rains become almost inland seas. On these he philosophises on the nature of the country and the people, making careful observation of his facts; and though he sometimes fancies he knows better than his boatmen, and more than suspects that they are getting the better of him, he submits with a grace that would have done credit to Socrates, and accepts the apparently inevitable in the interests of peace. The doctor is a close observer of nature, animate and inanimate, with an eye to the picturesque as well as to the sublime and beautiful. And although there is a vein of cynicism running through many of his observations, it is tempered by such evident good nature, that even a stranger would conceive him to be a laughter-loving rather than a stern philosopher. This is evident in his description of his boatmen and others, while he denounces the lawlessness which has made the poor fishermen suspicious even of honest intentions, because they have so long been the helpless victims of marauders stronger than themselves. Their only defence is flight or deceit, and the latter is their justification as a mode of self-protection. We are shown not only the weakness of the people, but the shortcomings of the administration that leave these things possible.....The author is impartial in his censures.....There is much in the book to which space forbids us to refer. That it is not a prosy one may be gathered from the fact that, for its 300 pages, there are nearly as many index references. Many of the subjects are necessarily but lightly treated, but all sensibly and fairly. And Dr. Mookerjee is such a master of the English language that in the whole book we have scarcely found a phrase that might not have been written by an Englishman "to the manner born." There is nothing in it at which any one could reasonably take offence; and there is much from which both Englishmen and natives may learn greatly-needed lessons.—The Indian Daily News, Nov. 22, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him.....Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course, some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

BEETHAM'S
GLYCERINE - AND -
CUCUMBER

For INDIA and HOT CLIMATES this sweetly scented emollient Milk is INVALUABLE
 IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and REFRESHED in the HOTTEST WEATHER,
 Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, REDNESS, FRECKLES, TAN, etc., and RESTORES the SKIN DELICATELY SOFT, SMOOTH and WHITE.

It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY and WRINKLED, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN and WIND more effectually than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BITES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin, this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers M. BEETHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."*All who suffer find sure relief fromLITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM*The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.It has driven out from the systemAcute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-lethargy and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Ru. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co., R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."*ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "INDORE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 22nd inst., and on Tuesday the 19th idem, the Steamer "PUNJAB" will leave Calcutta for Cachar.

All cargo for shipment by either of the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godowns at Jugannath Ghat the day previous to the vessels leaving Calcutta.

DIBRU & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dibrugarh immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH
SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, and Thursdays, and Debrooghur on Mondays and Fridays.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)

THE CALCUTTA
HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.

THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY.

WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE

TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY

and maintains to this day

THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF

THIS

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Stronger, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, showing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Fann, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lockets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Samkutha, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

TRUE TO ITS NAME,JEVES' "PERFECT PURIFIER"

Is the best disinfectant and exterminator of all objectionable odors and infectious diseases. It cleanses the roads, purifies the atmosphere and disinfects the drains, keeps the sick-room pure and healthy.

EQUALLY USEFUL TOANIMAL AND POULTRY,

It keeps a cow shed pure and sweet.

It improves the coat, destroys vermin, keeps fly off, stamps out all infectious diseases.

It is a specific for foot and mouth disease.

It kills all unpleasant smell without setting up another smell of its own.

It kills fleas, red lice and vermin of every kind in Poultry, Pigeons, Cattle, Horses, Dogs, Cats, &c. Effectually cures Gapes, Roup and Comb Disease in Poultry.

IT IS GARDENER'S FRIEND AS WELL.

It destroys moss and weeds on gravel pathways and exterminates worms from lawns.

It is a valuable destroyer of all kinds of ants.

It kills green fly, red spider, thrips mealy bug, removes worms from the soil in pots, &c.

Agents: DYCE, NICOL & CO.,

3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press

THE

FALL OF MANDALAY,

BY

ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery in April next; meantime Subscribers may register their names with the Publishers

Messrs. PETTIT & Co.,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

11, Old Court House Street;

or Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

198A, Upper Circular Road,

CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,

Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION,

CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,—

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly " 7
Quarterly " 4
Monthly Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page, and 102 lines to the column, are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet,"

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. }

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1889.

} No. 363

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE WHISPERWIND.

(Translated from the German of Freiligrath.)

THE Whisperwind is known to all
From north to south both great and small.
The banks of Rhine at morning seek,
You'll feel its freshness on your cheek.
Upstream it blows from four till ten,
From dewy mead and forest glen.

Aye, piping, whistling, loud and shrill,
Its course is upward, upward still ;
Like one that scorns an easy life,
And rushes gaily into strife,
It will not with the current go,
But ever in its teeth doth blow.

Where cabins stand you'll hear it sound,
Where cabins stand and mills go round ;
From strawroofed cots away it scours,
And dashing at your princely towers,
It shakes them with its sturdy brawl,
Rheinstein, Johannisberg, and all.

A saucy wind ! 't will budge no inch
Out of its course, nor cares a pinch
Of snuff for etiquette or forms :
Around the battlements it storms,
Knocking their gathered mists about,
Till clear at last the sky shines out.

Aye, clear and cloudless grows the day ;
So let it blow as blow it may !
Itself, and one more of its kin,
O then indeed will day begin !
Loud crow the cocks ; the woods are stirred ;
Another whisper hath been heard !

And upward, upward, bold and strong,
This other whisper speeds along :
From lowly spots it wings its flight
Aloft to every proudest height,
And forth from cot and workshop scours
To whistle round a monarch's towers.

Dim hang the mists those towers upon ;
But patience, they will soon begone !
For all so big they look and frown,
The Whisper will not be put down,
But charging at them, blast on blast,
Scatters their sullen heaps at last.

So may it be ! amen, amen !
Blow on good wind—O were it ten !
O were it ten, and clear the sky !
'T will now methinks be six well nigh.--
The Whisperwind ! 'T is known to all
From north to south both great and small.

A GREY DAY AT NAPLES, 1888.

THE lazy waters of the tideless sea,
That murmur homage to Parthenope,
Enveloped in November's cloak of brown,
Hide their bright azure, as the motley town
Imports from Northern climes the low-toned dress
Which masks awhile her laughing loveliness.
Southward the eye to-day can scarce divine
The clear-cut range of Capri's mountain line,
Dreaming that Autumn's spirit even thus
Fell on the dark soul of Tiberius,
And mourned with him the lights that disappear
Out of the records of the dying year.

Yet still, when Colour fails, the grace of Form
Clasps the fair coast in her embraces warm,
Even as to classic shapes inspired of Death
The sculptor's chisel lends a second breath,
And in the courts of Naples bids again
The ghosts of Cæsars stand like living men.
So,—when the sad but gracious veil of grey
Falls softly silent o'er the melting day,—
Go teach thy thoughts in unison to turn
To statued record and sepulchral urn,
And feel that dullest hour can only shroud
Eternal Beauty with a passing cloud.

Even as I write, against my window-pane
Plash early heralds of the dewy rain,
And to the sun-tired spirit sound confessed
A kind of gentle parable of Rest.
A-weary of the long internal strife,
Which surges still beneath the crust of Life,
And threatens all men in securest hour
With some dread flash of the Destroyer's power,
Till in a moment be to ruin hurled
Their bay-hold upon their treasured world,—
The mind will crave, ere sultry evening close,
From waste of fretful labour, dread Repose.

So, o'er the treacherous beauty of a soil
Quick with the live volcano's long turmoil,
In sullen murmur hinting slow desire,
And wrapping Nature in a lust of fire,
Or threatening to upheave in sudden birth
On ruins of herself unstable Earth,
Careless of all the suffering of the few,
So the great whole be to its mission true ;—

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

Still over and anon the Southern day
Pales out in quiet folds of tender grey,
As if, where first their angry watch they kept,
The very Titans in the prison slept.

With them tired heart, sleep, then, a little too,
When restful cloud obscures the vaulted blue !
If changeless sunshine flooded shore and sea,
Where would the Spirit of the Shadow be ?

HERMAN MERIVALE.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE Indian Mirror, which had affected to patronize the Lieutenant-Governor, has abandoned the uncongenial rôle, and given him over. Sir Stuart Bayley may now be allowed to reenter caste. He is certainly to be congratulated on his release from an awkward connection not of his seeking.

MR. JUSTICE NORRIS has shown independence worthy of the High Court. Very properly he would not allow Lala Bun Behary Kapur to be guardian ad litem for his son, the minor Maharaja of Burdwan, in the suit by the Dowager Maharani Narayan Kumaree to set aside his adoption by the deceased Maharani Banodeye Devi and to have her declared entitled to the Burdwan estates. His Lordship called for other names. Three names were submitted—Mr. Reynolds, of the Board of Revenue, Mr. Smith, Commissioner of the Presidency Division, and Mr. Oldham, Collector of Burdwan. Mr. Justice Norris has accepted and allowed Mr. Oldham to represent the minor. This gentleman is on the wing, having already taken his passage for England, but that does not matter. He is only required to sign the Written Statement.—Mr. Reily, the Joint Manager, has shown not only honesty but praiseworthy independence in declining to sign the Written Statement.

THE Lala has taken to exhibiting the minor in Calcutta.

MR. PUGH has given in his award on the Burdwan jewels. Most of those claimed by the Dowager Maharani go to her. His share—Rs. 19,000 for nineteen days' attendance—is to be borne by the parties in the proportion of claim disallowed. Each party had, however, to pay the arbitrator's fees in moiety before the submission of the award. The Maharani expects to get back from the Board of Revenue a large portion of the sum advanced by her.

LALU CHAND and others have sued the Agra Bank for Rs. 15,000, the amount of a cheque presented by them for encashment. It is yet a mystery who received the amount, but the drawers claim it from the Bank. The case is being heard by Mr. Justice Norris.

THE Sukkur Bridge will be opened by the Governor of Bombay on the 27th.

AFTER assisting by their royal presence the opening of the Sukkur Bridge, their Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught move on to Ulwar for some tiger-shooting. The Grand Duke of Oldenburgh accompanies them.

THEY have come upon a find of gold mohurs and sicca rupees of the Aurungzebe period at Bhugaon, Berar, in the Amraoti taluq.

ON the 27th February last, the Chief Commissioner of Burma opened the Tounghoo and Mandalay Railway. In his reply to the Mandalay Municipality, Sir Charles Crosthwaite pointed out that Government has been unusually generous to its youngest child, in that it has given it a railway connecting it with the outer world in the space of only two years. Mr. Buyers, the Manager and Engineer, came in for his share of praise for the able and expeditious completion of the line. There was a breakfast provided for both the Europeans and the Burman officials.

As an evidence of improved commercial relations with China, a large quantity of white goat skins, it is said, has gone from Thibet to Peking this winter, with other Thibetan products.

RUBY smuggling is on the increase in Upper Burma.

MR. Horace Bell estimates the cost of the Rajputana Desert Railway at Rs. 413 lacs, a bridge over the Indus being set down for 18 lacs. The earnings are calculated to yield no more than 3 per cent. Even if the actual cost does not exceed the estimate and the earnings are correctly guessed, will the project tempt private enterprise?

THE Bangalore Municipality, it seems, allows an orderly to each Commissioner. In December last, a resolution was passed confirming the arrangement and was in due course sent up to the British Resident for sanction. Sir Oliver St. John has returned the resolution for reconsideration, remarking that the indulgence is not enjoyed in other Municipalities.

THE following question appears in "Notes and Queries" :—

"A. B. goes from London to Naples, leaving his wife resident in the former city. But he, unfortunately, falls in love with a young lady at Naples; and being a wicked man with no fear of God and little fear of the law before his eyes, he determines to deceive her by a bigamous and invalid marriage. He is, accordingly, married, to all appearance legally, on board an English man-of-war in the bay, in the presence of the Captain, at eleven o'clock in the morning of February 10—the time being unquestionably ascertained. But the wife left in London died on that same February 10 at half past ten in the morning, the time being certified beyond all question. Well! the case is clear and simple. A. B. had been a widower for half an hour when he married, and could, of course, legally do so. But, stay! When it was 10-30 in London it was 11-23 in Naples. Had a telegram been despatched instantly after the wife's death it would have reached Naples a few minutes later than 11-23, and would have found A. B. a married man of over twenty minutes standing! His first wife died, in fact, twenty-three minutes subsequent to the Naples marriage, though that was authentically declared to have taken place at 11 A. M., and the wife's death was with equal certainty shown to have occurred at 10-30. Was the marriage legal and valid, or bigamous and null?"

THE Bishop Metropolitan of Calcutta, during his recent visit to England, tried for an Act of Parliament creating bishoprics for the N.-W. Provinces and Chota Nagpore. Both Lord Salisbury and Lord Cross informed him that it could not be. He has now asked the Secretary of State to permit of a See being founded in that part of Oudh which would not be affected by the existing Act of Parliament. As regards Chota Nagpore, he proposes visiting the clergy there and getting them to elect a bishop to whom they should take an oath of obedience. This is avoiding if not overriding the law to be sure. These fat ecclesiastics should have more respect for the constitution that protects their position, pay and pensions.

THE British Consulates at Pondicherry and Karikal are to be abolished—to the saving of Rs. 16,000 a year. The consuls are chiefly inspectors of emigrants to the French West Indian Islands. The coolie emigration to the French Colonies having been stopped, the consuls have now hardly anything to do but draw their allowances. The entire Consular Service is maintained as a preserve for patronage.

THERE have been serious riots among the unemployed at Rome.

IN the suit of Sir Henry and Lady Morland against the G. I. P. Railway, Mr. Justice Scott

"based his decision on the claim for damages solely on the law of negligence as applied to the facts and evidence in the case. Three rules, he said, were applicable to the case :—I. Every man (or company) owes a duty to persons who are invited by him to come upon his premises as customers or otherwise in the course of business to exercise reasonable care to prevent damage to them from unusual dangers of which the occupier of the premises has or ought to have knowledge; II. In suits for injuries caused by negligence the plaintiff cannot recover if he has so far contributed to the misfortune by his own negligence and want of care and caution that, but for such negligence and want of care and caution the accident would not have happened; and III. A master is civilly responsible for all acts done by his servant in the course of his employment. His Lordship considered there was no doubt that the public were invited to use the whole of the road as a means of leaving and coming up to the arrival platform, and the Company having invited the public to use the outer way placed upon it obstructions without sufficiently lighting them or otherwise giving notice of them to those who used the road. His Lordship therefore found against the Company on the point of negligence. On the second point, of contributory negligence his Lordship said the sole question was whether the coachman, using ordinary care, ought to have avoided the third heap. He knew nothing of its existence. He was driving along a road dedicated to the public, and presumably free from obstructions, the stones, if visible, were only dimly visible, and their colour is the same as that of the road, and his Lordship said he should impose on drivers the duty of extraordinary instead of ordinary care if he held the coachman negligent if he did not see the heap in time. Under the circumstances his Lordship said he could not hold that the disaster would not have happened if the plaintiffs' servant had exercised common and ordinary care. He did exercise due care. The defence of contributory negligence, therefore, fails. The real cause of the accident was that the defendants had placed the stones in a way likely to be dangerous without sufficiently lighting them or otherwise giving notice of them to persons lawfully using the road. As regards the question of damages, his Lordship considered that the claim of pecuniary loss for the possible continuance of employment after the expiry of the present term of office was too conjectural and speculative and remote; he therefore excluded it from consideration, and he also considered the sum claimed for breaking up the household to be excessive. His Lordship further considered one year's change of climate at the expense of the Company ample to allow, and that all the legitimate heads of damage, including the injuries, the harm and suffering, the duration of the injuries, the expense, the pecuniary loss, the first plaintiff's temporary loss of domestic comfort, and the separate claim of Lady Morland would be sufficiently covered by the sum of Rs. 30,000, which his Lordship awarded to the plaintiffs with the costs of both the suits."

THE Municipal Office was closed yesterday till one in the afternoon for the Shivaratri of the previous night. It was the day for the publication of the revised electoral list, and many persons went to find themselves disappointed.

THE Government of India has addressed the Secretary of State on the Outstill System.

ACCORDING to the Nilgiri Observer, there was an extraordinary shower of meteors in the Nilgiris, on the night of Wednesday the 20th February. "The meteors were very bright and numerous and seemed to radiate from a common centre in the north-western part of the sky between the constellations of Perseus and Andromeda. Sometimes four or five would be flying in parallel lines, again two would cross, again on the right and left solitary stars would shoot along in darkness."

ON the 12th ultimo, Mr. Howell, the Resident of Hyderabad, gave a grand dinner to His Highness the Nizam, and in proposing the health of His Highness, took the opportunity of expressing his very high appreciation of the admirable manner in which the Hyderabad state had received their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught the previous month. In the course of his speech, he lavished his praise on His Highness the Nizam, the Minister Sir Asman Jah, the Director of Public Instruction Nawab Imadood Dowlah, the Political and Financial Secretary Nawab Mohsinool Moolk, the great huntsman Nawab Vikarool Omra, and the excellent rider, excellent shot and excellent polo player Major the Nawab Afsur Jung. But he had not a word whatever for Nawab Sir Khurshed Jah, the Premier nobleman in Hyderabad, the man next in rank to the Nizam, the eldest son and successor of that splendid statesman the late Shumsool Omra Ameer-i-Kabeer—the man who is pronounced by the majority of the population of the Deccan, as the ablest Hyderabadee of high character and high rank and as the man of all others whose personal interests are most intimately involved in the well being of the state.

THE Hon'ble Syud Ameer Hossein, C. I. E., the Northern Division Magistrate, has obtained 3 months' leave from the 1st April. The native town will rejoice to hear that the experienced, upright and independent Moulvie Abdul Jubber, Deputy Magistrate and Deputy Collector, 24 Pergunnahs, officiates for the Hon'ble Syud.

BABOO GOPAL HARI MULLICK, Assistant Superintendent of Police, 24-Pergunnahs, is Gazetted to act as District Superintendent of Police, Rajshahye, during the absence on furlough of Mr. B. Rattray.

THE first half yearly Departmental Examination of 1889, of Assistants and Deputy Magistrates in the Regulation and Non-Regulation Districts, and of officers in the Police, Medical and Forest Departments, will begin on Monday, the 6th May.

THE Eastern Herald of Mhow is inconsolable at the Holkar's princely donation of one lac of Rupees to the Imperial Institute, in London, and fires off full five columns of rignarole against its neighbour the Maharaja, for his audacity in making such a diversion of his wealth, without consulting editors and patriots.

Our contemporary has been so upset that it offers this by way of its best joke worthy of a place in its leading article:—

"Indore is known to be a Hindu territory, and we are surprised to learn that the Goddess of Wealth—the ever fickle and changing Luchmi is receiving the fate of men. Her banishment is not yet complete but it is a mere commencement of that undesirable event. The only defence is that men who are banished are relegated to certain places selected for their future abode such as Rangoon and other places which have lately come to be known as Holkar's practical Andamans whereas the Indore Luchmi is gradually looking for her shelter beyond the Seas in another continent."

Verily, that is the literature of lunacy, or Mhow is the land of Gotham! Unless there had been a real act of sacrilege or closing of any temple, it would be difficult to assign a meaning to the above. As a figure of speech, the goddess of wealth is not confined to Hindu territory. Besides, on the writer's own showing, there would be nothing extraordinary in the ever fickle and changing Luchmi proceeding to fresh fields and pastures new.

HIS Highness the Maharaja of Jeypore arrived here on the 20th ultimo at 9 A.M. and has been quartered at No. 13 Park Street. The Jeypore Agent, our old friend, Colonel W. F. Prideaux, had preceded him. It was evidently through his influence that his old Lieutenant, the Head Assistant of the office of Superintendent of Oudh Political Pensions, was commissioned to make all arrangements for His Highness's reception and residence in Calcutta. The Jeypore Prime Minister finds it to his interest to be very friendly to the quondam protégé of the Political Agent.

THE Hyderabad Government has appointed Messrs. Henry S. King & Co., of London, and their branch firm King, King & Co., at Bombay, as its Agents and Bankers for the two places respectively. The head of the London House, Mr. Henry S. King is M. P. for Hull, and might be of yeoman's service whenever the interests of the state came on for discussion in the House. Members are not formally remunerated in Great Britain, but it is a great advantage in business to be an M. P.

MR. E. L. Winter, Officiating Magistrate of Saharanpur, complained to the High Court, N.-W. P. of the following Notice of suit which explains itself:—

"MUSSOORIE, Oct. 30.

E. L. WINTER, Esq., B. C. S., Saharanpur.

Notice of suit in accordance with Section 127, C. P. C.

SIR,—I regret it should be my duty to give you notice of a suit on behalf of Mr. DeCruze, a driver in the N.-W. Railway, residing at the rest house, Saharanpur. It appears that on the 17th day of December 1887 you issued a summons to Mr. DeCruze to appear before you, the officiating Joint Magistrate of Saharanpur, on the 23rd December 1887. Mr. DeCruze, in obedience to your summons, appeared on the 23rd December 1887 and waited from eleven o'clock till four o'clock for you to come to court. It also appears that on the 23rd December 1887, you were out on duty or on pleasure, or both, at Susawa. On the 24th day of December 1887 you issued a warrant worded as follows:—

"Warrant of Arrest (Section 75, Schedule I, form II.)

"To the Head-Quarter Inspector, District Police, Saharanpur.

"Whereas Mr. DeCruze, Engine Driver of N.-W. Railway, Saharanpur, stands charged with the offence of beating of coachman of Mrs. Greetham, you are directed to arrest the said Mr. DeCruze and to produce him before me. Herein fail not and to produce the accused on his arrest at once at the officiating Magistrate's house. Dated this 24th day of December 1887. E. L. Winter, offg. Magistrate."

Pardon the casual observation that, were you not a being neither born nor created but proceeding from a competitive examination the English of this warrant would be open to criticism. It appears that on the 24th of December, in pursuance of your amusements, you returned to Saharanpur. In consequence of your warrant Mr. DeCruze was arrested and forcibly taken to your private residence, from which moment the cause of action commenced. At your house Mr. DeCruze pointed out to you that he had obeyed your summons which mentioned no place but Saharanpur. You replied that he should have gone on by the midday train to Susawa. It does not seem to have appeared to you possible that Mr. DeCruze or anyone else could possibly be ignorant of the movements of so important a personage as the officiating Joint Magistrate of Saharanpur. You then ordered the police officer to take him away and release him only on his finding two good securities of one hundred rupees each. You had no jurisdiction to issue a warrant. You had no jurisdiction to order Mr. DeCruze to be taken to your house. You had no jurisdiction to order Mr. DeCruze to be detained in custody till he furnished bail. You had no jurisdiction to require him to stay on bail. You did not act in good faith either in issuing a warrant or in ordering Mr. DeCruze to be taken to your house, or in ordering his further detention after he told you of the summons issued by you, and that he had attended your court at Saharapur, or on your requiring bail from him or ordering his detention on bail. Moreover, the powers that are given to gentlemen of your profession to try cases in camp are given with the view that the public convenience may be served, instead of which you apparently seem to be under the impression that the principal object is to furnish you with travelling allowances and to enable you to go shooting or fishing according to your pleasure, and that unfortunate litigants are to follow you from one end of the district to the other, suiting themselves entirely to your personal convenience. You have no authority to make anyone follow you in camp except in good faith with due care and attention in the exercise of your jurisdiction. In any country that claims a civilised government, but parts of India and perhaps Turkey, a magistrate guilty of conduct like yours would be criminally prosecuted by the Government; but no doubt if I had recommended to Mr. DeCruze to prosecute you in the criminal courts the case would have been tried by some member of your Service, whose judicial discretion might be guided by his executive conscience and who would assuredly have acquitted you, and from such acquittal there would have been no appeal; where is in a civil suit the dismissal of the plaint in the lower court will not deprive Mr. DeCruze of all remedy. I have therefore advised Mr. DeCruze to sue you for damages. Mr. DeCruze has instructed me to inform you that he will file a suit against you for twelve hundred rupees damages occasioned to him by your afore-said and unlawful arrest and imprisonment. I have, &c., &c.—(Sd.) H. Vansittart, Counsel for Mr. DeCruze. 30th October 1888."

The High Court, (the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Straight), in the exercise of their disciplinary powers, called on Mr. H. Vansittart to answer the complaint. He appeared and questioned the proceedings against him as irregular, and protected himself by the Counsel's plea of "instructions." Ultimately, however, he expressed regret to the Court for what he had done, and the Court subsequently discharged the rule with a warning to Mr. Vansittart for better conduct in the future.

THE Bombay Government has refused to furnish Mr. Crawford with a copy or the purport of the Report of the Commission on him, or to make any communication on the subject for the Secretary of State has ruled that a report by a Commission appointed under Act No. XXXVII of 1850 is a confidential document.

Two Cabulis, travelling from Calcutta, were arrested on suspicion at Delhi, on the 20th February. They had with them a girl of 11, who said she was of Cuttack and was the wife of both, her mother having sold her to them. They had, besides large sums of money, a set of a lady's and gentleman's clothing. Are they Cabulis in truth, or Shiah Poshes? What religion are they of, we wonder. Islam does not recognise polyandry.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE country's deliverance is at hand, and the Indian Mirror may prepare his poofas of thanksgiving to his gods and his banquets to his Mahatmas. Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace makes over charge to Colonel Ardagh on the 13th, and goes to Baghdad, thence to Bushire, and on to Teheran and Shiraz and Isfahan.

But there is no rest for the perturbed spirit, we are afraid. There will still be Secretaries, Public and Private, and Europeans in plenty about. The millennium which will see the Congress set up on the ruins of the British administration, is not yet in view.

MR. J. KELLEHER, Officiating District and Sessions Judge, Hooghly, goes on furlough for 18 months from the 15th March. Mr. F. H. McLaughlin, District and Sessions Judge, Jessore, comes over to Hooghly in the same capacity, while Baboo Brojendra Coomar Seal, from Bankura, acts as District and Sessions Judge of Jessore. The Bengal Government is evidently getting over its shyness in regard to the last named. At any rate, we are glad to see Judge Seal moved out of his hole in the rude Rath and brought to the front. We hope to see him yet on the High Court. It is a pity that when a Sub-Judge was called to officiate for a time on that Bench, the right sort of officer was not chosen. Baboo Seal, for instance, would not have given cause for the prejudice against the Subordinate Judicial Service which is now in the way of its best men.

The Civil and Military Gazette understands that several Judges of the Lahore Chief Court will shortly be going home. Messrs. Burney and Roe on leave, and Mr. Tremlett "for good." Mr. Burney may not return. It also says that Mr. McEwen, the Officiating Recorder of Rangoon, has been offered one of the acting appointments, and that Mr. Baden Powell will be confirmed as a Judge, while the names of Mr. Benton, Mr. Roberts and Mr. Stogdon, of the Punjab Commission, are mentioned in connection with the other vacancies. Is there no chance for a native successor, after the late Pundit Ramnarain? Is there none eligible in the Province? There are more than one in the Court itself. Is Governor Lyall, too, afflicted with Baboophobia?

After the extraordinary way in which, in Mr. Moylan's case, he brought discredit on the bench, it was time Mr. McEwen was sent to the right about, but it would be an injustice to the Punjab if he was kicked up from the Easternmost frontier Province to the highest bench of the Westernmost.

THE Lieutenant-Governor has ruled that where the Port Trust and the District Board exercise a coincident jurisdiction in the matter of regulating ferry boats, the more stringent provisions of the rules under the port acts should be enforced and the boats be surveyed and licensed accordingly. As a consequence, the neighbouring ferryboats will be better watched and brought under stricter control.

The occasion which elicited it, justifies the order. In August last, at Budge-Budge, a ferry boat capsized and lives were lost. It had been licensed, under the ferries act by the District Board, to carry 30 passengers with a crew of two—a manji and a dandie. The port rules would not have allowed more than 10 passengers to a crew of four. The port rules may seem hard on ferry-boat owners, but they are simply humane. It is necessary that the ferry-boats should be of better make and better kept, and they should not be overcrowded. The District Boards should not be permitted to derive a revenue at the expense of the safety of passengers. The ferry-boats on the Hooghly are a disgrace to the British in India and to civilization.

A BENCH of Honorary Magistrates convicted a man for cheating under Sec. 420 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment. His offence was that he "had purchased three tins of ghee, and ordered them to be sent to his house, where he said he would pay for them. The tins were duly sent, but payment was deferred from the morning to the afternoon, and then to the night, but when the man called at night, he found the purchaser not at home." The High Court—Messrs. Justices Mitter and Trevelyan—have set aside the conviction. They are of opinion that "the bare fact of a person taking delivery of goods, promising to pay cash, and ultimately failing to keep his promise, would not amount to cheating. It must be established in the first place that the buyer's promise to pay cash was made falsely, that is, that the buyer knew he had not the means to pay cash. In the next place, it would have to be shown that the seller was deceived, that is to say, that he would not have delivered the goods if he disbelieved the representations of the buyer."

This is a section on which most Magistrates stumble. The offence is one difficult of proof, but in their moral certainty of the crime committed they ignore the legal necessities for conviction. They assume many things wanting in the chain of evidence and jump to conclusions. In sentencing the prisoner, they are quite happy at the thought of having done society a service. Their confidence receives its first shock, and anxiety is aroused when the case is taken to a higher tribunal, but even then they cling to the hope that the High Court will not disturb the finding of three Magistrates, forgetting that zeroes by multiplication do not amount to much of a tangible quantity.

Nought are they all, and all but nought!

THE Dewan of Burwan, in the Bhopawar Agency, must be a sort of Bismarck in miniature. He is so powerful that his own master the Maharana cannot oust him. He is said to be misgoverning the little chiefship. First the people became disaffected, and then the Chief himself was disgusted. At last, the Rana could bear with him no longer. But, under the peculiar situation of our princes, the Chief could not abate the nuisance of his own instance. He had to make humble application to the Political Agency. This ejectment suit the poor Rana lost. The Political would not hear of anything against the Dewan. And now the Chief is advised by his friends to appeal to the Supreme Agency of the Governor-General at Indore.

The subject is no doubt worth the attention of Mr. Henvey and the Foreign Office. Misgovernment in Burwan, if there is misgovernment, is not a trifling matter. The state is insignificant but then it is peopled mostly by Bheels and other wild tribes of the Satpura hills, who are capable of giving trouble, even to British interest.

The Dewan Chandi Persad had before been Superintendent of the Bundelkund state of Chattarpore, where he acquired an unenviable reputation. Major Robertson in his administration report severely condemned his management. His courts inspired no confidence. The people were given up to be victimised by contractors of the revenue. The settlement was an aggravation. The accounts were improperly kept, if they might be said to be kept at all. There was no supervision of public works. Add to this, a lamentable Vandalism was committed by robbing the carved treasures of the beautiful temples and ruins of Khyraus, to provide stones for the Vishwanath Sagar artificial lake. It were worth inquiring under what influence, with such a record against him, the Dewan was pitchforked into his present post.

HOWEVER contradictory may be the reports, official and non-official, on the administration in the Southernmost Principality of India, on the Malabar Coast, it is admitted on all hands that the means of communication there are very defective. Certainly, it is easier to go to Cabool than to penetrate to Trevandrum. We are glad to notice a disposition on the part of the Durbar to reduce the present barbarous isolation, so far as lies in its power. There is no immediate prospect of railway communication between Travancore and British India. The State, however, contemplates steam communication within its territory, by the Backwaters. Works are already in progress for widening and deepening the channels between the capital and Paravoor, for which a lac and seventeen thousand has been sanctioned. Meanwhile, tenders have been called for of the terms on which any individual or company is prepared to establish regular steam communication between Trevandrum and Paravoor. A note from the Chief Engineer gives the official idea of the undertaking. According to him, three small steamers would be required of the total value of Rs. 85,000, one to go, another to come, and the third to be kept ready against any accidents to the others, and for supplying their places when they go to dock one after the other, for the periodical repairs. The journey from terminus to terminus might be accomplished in 24 hours, allowing half an hour's stay at each of the three principal intermediate places, Quilon, Allepey, and Cochin, and no more than a minute or two for dropping and taking up passengers at minor stations. Each steamer is to have suitable accommodation for 10 1st class, 20 2nd class, and 100 3rd class passengers. The cost of maintaining each steamer will be Rs. 240 a month, as follows—crew (drivers and lascars) Rs. 90 per mensem and fuel Rs. 5 per diem. For two steamers, the monthly expense will be Rs. 480. The establishment of the reserve vessel will cost Rs. 50. The wear and tear of all three @ 100 will cost Rs. 300, besides an Inspector on Rs. 150 will be required. All this brings up the monthly expenses to Rs. 1,000. Add to this interest on Rs. 85,000 @ 5 per cent. or Rs. 354. Altogether, it is a matter of less than Rs. 1,500 a month, which may be recouped by a daily income of Rs. 50, and this the Chief Engineer thinks may be realised from the present traffic. In such a case, the traffic is bound to expand in a little time. The business is too small to attract the great companies, unless any of the river navigating firms have suitable steam launches idling on their hands. Certainly, here is an opening for enterprise to natives with a lac of Rupees. At any rate, a company may be started by some of our countrymen, whether natives (Hindu, Mussulman, Parsee, Christian, or Jew) or Eurasians. The company might be incorporated by law. If there is no limited liability Act in Travancore, one could be passed. We are sure the Maharaja's Government would afford every facility to such an enterprise and watch it with parental interest. Such an opportunity for beginning, on a small scale a great career, will not easily occur to our countrymen. Applications will be received by the Dewan up to the 6th August next. So there is ample time for thought and inquiry.

THERE seems something in the atmosphere of the New World favourable to breadth and boldness of view. We are continually startled by novel ideas and interesting discoveries from that Continent. There is no lack of great engineering in Great Britain or in Western Europe generally, and it was a French amateur that accomplished the world's Highway—the Suez Canal—and has been spending his dying breath on the next universal work of the kind—the Panama Canal. It was, however, reserved for America to bring within the range of practical engineering the moving of buildings, to the infinite convenience of the dwellers of crowded cities. A still more important discovery has been made in the same quarter which will revolutionise the art of building, namely, the use of paper for roofing. Paper or other vegetable fibre reduced to pulp and spread out into sheets, pressed and dried, done to any thickness or shape, is being used as a good substitute for wood or iron. Besides its convenience as to size, being reducible to any mould, this material has several other important advantages over those hitherto employed. It will not split, being flexible, without grain or joints. It will not communicate sound at all, being non-resonant. Dipped in certain chemicals and properly manipulated, it is impervious to water, unaffected by moisture, and independent of weather or climate. It may be made fire-proof, too. All this is capital, only we fear the old fogeys of our Hemispheres would like to await the full result of the practical experiment of abolishing iron and timber beams in favour of a papier-mâché substitute, before going in for the innovation themselves. Certainly, no native of India will trust his life or the lives of his dear ones to the keeping of the house of cards of go-a-head engineering.

ANOTHER discovery comes from the same enlightened Continent. It is about the physiological effects of the possession of lucre. This last has always been the scorn of philosophers, priests, and other unfortunate folks who have never enjoyed an abundance of it. "Dirty lucre" is the correct way of designating it. And, indeed, higher authority than that of any philosophers has taught us to regard Mammon as the god of Unrighteousness. Holy Writ also has placed the men of lucre out of the kingdom of Heaven. But we never suspected that it was such a virulent poison even in this life as we now learn it to be. The light comes from beyond the Atlantic. We find that lucre actually idiotises those who possess it to any great extent, or perhaps those whom it possesses. There are the Vanderbilts, for instance, colossal mehters—repositories of dirt—absolutely at a loss what to do with their overwhelming abundance. We do pity the sorrows of the poor rich men! One of these Vanderbilts has lately died, and he seems to have gone raving mad with his unholy burden. His lucre proved too much of a good thing. Here is his will:—

"I leave all I have to this young girl because her little turn-up nose made me laugh and amused me all the evening while I was at the theatre."

How different and sensible is the disposition of Signor Tagliabelli, the Italian millionaire, who has left £2,000 to the public street-sweepers, stipulating only that they should follow his body to the grave, shouldering their brooms.

ANOTHER new American invention is of a humble but very useful kind, namely, an ingenious apparatus by which the month, the date, the hour and minute, A. M. or P. M. as the case may be, as also the year, are simultaneously stamped on letters, telegraph forms, or other documents, merely by pressing down a stamp. The apparatus usually employed is constructed to go for thirty days without manual change of any of its parts, but it can be made to run automatically for longer periods. There are five type-wheels which revolve on a single axis, and print in one line each. The minute-wheel is actuated by electricity transmitted through the medium of a circuit loser attached to any clock, and is moved by a spring once a minute. The other movements all depend upon the minute-wheel. In sixty minutes the hour changes, in twenty-four hours the day, and so on

THE Nawab of Rampore Mushtak Ali Khan Bahadur died on Monday, aged about 32 years. The all-knowing Pioneer blunders all round in noticing the event, and leads the other papers into the mistakes. We quote the Pioneer:—

"We regret to hear of the death on Monday last of Sir Katab Ali Khan, C.C.S.I., Nawab of Rampur. His Highness had been in a hopeless state for some time past, and indeed from the time of his installation has never been able to take any part in the public business of the State which has been carried on entirely by the Council of Regency. Though his rule has been so short, the Nawab was by no means a young man, having only succeeded to the title when he was well past fifty."

It was on the death of Nawab Kalbali Khan that Nawab Mushtak Ali Khan came to the musnad. This last was never knighted. He had not even the physical strength to undergo the ceremonial duties of the Nawab of Raupore. But perhaps we forget that he was pronounced completely cured and the attending European physician paid a lac of Rupees. That is now proved to be a blind, as it was designed to be. The Doctor retains the lac but the patient has died.

HERE is one of the ever-recurring anomalies of the precious British system! According to the mythology of English law, a corporation is a queer entity, almost intangible, at any rate dangerously slippery. But though it has neither a body to be kicked nor a soul to be damned, it may be hauled up in court. And now the Chief Magistrate of the town has accomplished the feat of sending it up to the sessions. It now remains for the High Court to give the finishing stroke by transporting it, bag and baggage, Chairman and Vice (there is no Virtue in the connection), rank and file and all, to the Andamans.

As previously arranged, Mr. Marsden, on Tuesday, committed the Calcutta Corporation. No charge was drawn up, nor were the other usual formalities in a sessions case gone through. Grown more wise after the event, and having allowed the case to go against it by default as it were, the Corporation applied to the Chief Magistrate, the next day, for review of his order—pointing out the omissions made and questioning the legality of the commitment of a Corporation like itself for a criminal offence under the Penal Code. The Magistrate proved a very Mede on the bench. Mr. Marsden would not disturb the order he had already made. If there were any omissions, there was the Clerk of the Crown to rectify them, or the High Court to make its own orders. We are afraid the case has been mismanaged on behalf of the Corporation. Whatever the merits of the case, we cannot admire the wisdom which allowed the un-cross-examined evidence as to the nuisance and danger created by the process of filling up of the tank, to go forth to the world, to the infinite anxiety of the citizens.

HAVING more leisure than work on their hands, the Judges of the High Court recently held a Full Bench of their full complement. It was a very trivial point the collective wisdom of the whole Court was called upon to discuss and decide. According to the report in the daily press, the question referred to was whether an ex parte decree could be held to be res judicata in any subsequent cause or not. The answer is plain, nor had the thirteen Judges a very complex problem to solve. The point was whether an ex parte simple decree for rent claimed could be res judicata in a case in which the rate of rent was disputed. There is a decision of the late Chief Justice Garth in which he is reported to have said that, under the circumstance, no second suit would lie, the ex parte decree being conclusive of the rate of rent as well. This could not be upheld, and the entire Court was summoned to over-rule this decision. This, no doubt, is a high compliment to a retired Chief Justice, but were not five Judges equally competent for the task? The ordinary strength of a Full Bench is five.

A GREATER outrage than any has been perpetrated in the Calcutta University. The reign of the lucky son-in-law commenced in jobbery keeps pace with the scandals accruing. Under the old rules, each Faculty returned a member to the Syndicate, the governing body of the academic corporation. He had practically the selection of examiners for his particular branch, the Syndicate always confirming his nomination. Now each of the important Faculties of Arts and Law returns two instead of one, but the practice about the choice of examiners remains unchanged. This lax custom of the academic happy family has just been taken advantage of by the senior of the Law representatives to select the examiners for the next D. L. examination, his son being the only candidate. The application was put off till the last moment, as if to have the whole matter settled by circulation of letters through the Registrar among the members concerned, without a discussion in committee. The other Law member, notwithstanding an offer of examinership to himself, has, in consequence, resigned. These incessant scandals require the interference of the Chancellor himself for the reputation of the University.

THE sensation of the week has been the abandonment of the "Parnell Letters" by the Times. "Parnellism and Crime" has been turned back on the Times. They were procured by the Times at a cost of six thousand pounds. Pigott, formerly of the Shamrock, had furnished the Times with these letters. He denied before the Commission that he had forged the letters but deposed he had purchased them from a Fenian, named Murphy, in Paris. In proof of his good faith, he also swore that Messrs. Labouchere, Parnell and Lewis had threatened and cajoled to induce him to avow that he had forged the letters and that Mr. Labouchere had offered him a thousand pounds. After retiring from the box he seems to have got a higher price. Next day (22nd February), at any rate, he admitted that he believed the letters to be forgeries. On the 26th, Pigott was non est. A warrant was ordered by the Commission for his arrest. Later in the day, his solicitor, Mr. Shannon, informed the Court that he had received a letter from Pigott declaring that he only forged two of the "Parnell Letters" and that the rest were genuine and were obtained from Patrick Casey. To complete the fiasco, Pigott has crossed over to Paris. Sir Richard Webster, the Attorney General, on behalf of the Times, on the 27th February, withdrew the letters which he regretted had ever been published. The Times in its issue next morning endorsed the regret of its counsel. The latest news on the subject is that Sir Richard Webster retains the confidence of the Government, and that Mr. Parnell talks of prosecuting Pigott for perjury and forgery. The Irish leader is scarcely likely to execute his threat, even with the advantage of shutting his fellow-Irish patriot's mouth. We cannot understand why the Attorney General should suffer at all for doing his professional duty. The good faith of even his client is above question.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1889.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

THE Local Self-Government Act, constituting District and Local Boards upon an elective basis, has now been in operation in 38 Districts of Bengal, and a report of its working, during the first 18 months ending 31st March 1888, has been submitted by the Government of Bengal to the India Government. The report shows that the Boards have been fairly successful in doing the work entrusted to them, and that the people evinced considerable interest in the elections.

The Bill originally contemplated the creation of three classes of authorities, viz., District Boards as the controlling authority, Local Boards as the administrative body under them, and Union Committees in the villages as the agents of the Local Boards. Owing to changes which the Bill underwent before it was sanctioned by the Government of India, this had to be modified, and the Union Committees were abandoned. Sir Steuart Bayley regrets this, nor has he any hope of being able, under the law as it stands, to do anything more in regard to these Union Committees than to make a limited experiment here and there. The elections for the Local Boards resulted in the return of 51 per cent. zemindars, about 25 per cent. pleaders, and the remainder, belonging to other professions. In the opinion of local officers, the successful candidates, on the whole, were well qualified by their intelligence, established local position, and business habits for election. The voters mustered strong, and although in some cases they might have attended under the impression that attendance was compulsory, the notice served on them being taken in the light of a summons, yet the report records, the people seem to have taken an intelligent interest in the choice of their representatives and to have appreciated the nature and value of the suffrage. The proportion of zemindars in the constitution of the District Boards is less than in the Local Boards, being about 30 per cent. that of pleaders nearly the same, the percentage being greater in Government servants and other professions. The members of District Boards showed satisfactory attendance and evinced keen interest in the questions which came before them for consideration.

The Local Boards generally availed themselves of the privilege of electing their Chairmen from among themselves, while, as regards the District Boards, the Magistrate of the district was in every case appointed by Government to be Chairman. It would have been impossible, adds the report, to have introduced the measure in its present form except under the guidance of the district officers.

Divisional Commissioners are more or less hesitating in their opinions as to the success and future promise of the system. The following embodies the cautious official attitude towards it:—

"The reports which have been received from local officers show that the introduction of the Act was accomplished successfully, and that the local bodies entered upon their duties with interest and intelligence. The Lieutenant-Governor, however, thinks that it would be unnecessary at present to pronounce any opinion on the success of the local self-government scheme, founded on the working of the District Boards, as sufficient time has not elapsed to admit of the scheme being thoroughly tried.

As regards the actual work accomplished, and the prospects which it offers for the future, this report must necessarily be meagre. The time that has elapsed has been too short either for much to be done or for a certain forecast to be made. It may be stated, however, that the tone of the Commissioners' reports is generally hopeful. The Presidency Commissioner says:—'On the whole, the Local Self-Government Act may be said to have worked well during the year.' The Commissioner of Dacca reports:—'It is almost too soon to criticise the work of the various Boards yet; but, as far as I am able to judge, there is every reason to hope that the experiment now being made will prove successful.' The Commissioner of Rajshahye says:—'The District and Local Boards worked fairly well during the period under review.' The Commissioner of Patna writes:—'The district officers say that the District Boards have worked well. The members of the Boards generally have shown sufficient interest in their work, and the attendance at meetings has on the whole been satisfactory.' The Commissioner of Bhagulpore, premising that the time has not yet arrived for forming an estimate of success or failure of the scheme of Local Self-Government, says that all must agree 'in desiring that the widest scope should be given to it.' The Commissioner of Chittagong says:—'Work has, on the whole, gone on very much as it did under the old Cess Committees.' Finally, the Commissioner of Burdwan reports:—'I think it would be premature to pronounce upon the general efficiency of District and Local Boards, and will only say now that they have still much to learn.' Sir Steuart Bayley's opinion is that when we have found in some instances considerable success, and in no instance failure; when we have to some extent awakened public interest and enlisted public spirit without impairing efficiency in administration; and when the great majority of district officers are working in cordial sympathy with the local bodies, it may fairly be said that the first experience of the measure gives good promise of its satisfactory establishment."

Certainly, it is too early to expect a more pronounced verdict. But for Sir Steuart Bayley's philosophical estimate, the country must feel more than ever grateful. The people are only just placed in positions of responsibility, and a period of training must intervene before the time for fair criticism can arrive. So far as indications may be found from the first report, they seem hopeful.

THE NEW SANITARY REGIME.

THE new Sanitary Commissioner of Bengal, Dr. Gregg, has made a fair beginning. Without merely writing inflammatory inspection reports and insisting on an ideal and impracticable standard of sanitation like his predecessor, he has already, during his short incumbency, seen a good deal, and brought his department en rapport with the municipalities of the country. His proceedings so far are also marked by moderation and practical good sense, and our municipalities may well look forward to a term of peace in which they will be saved hectoring requisitions to make bricks without straw.

Dr. Surgeon-Major Gregg has evidently thrown himself into his work with heart and soul. He has been reading up the past records of his office, and one of the points which has most forcibly impressed him in course of his studies, is the large proportion of deaths from malarial fever in Bengal. The proportion is found, from an examination of the statistics of the last five years, to be three-fourths of the entire death-rate in the province, or more than twice as much as the death-rate of all the other diseases put together. "These facts," says the Sanitary Commissioner, "are very startling, and when it is remembered that every death from fever probably represents 20 or more attacks, it will be seen what a very large proportion of the population must have suffered." He then proceeds to examine the nature of this malaria and its causes, and quotes a mass of sanitary authorities from ancient to the most recent times. The conclusion he comes to is that malarial fever is associated with the effluvia from marshes and low-lying and badly drained situations. He expressly adopts the theory of the late Raja Digambar Mitter, C. S. I., that "the type of fever met with in the epidemic districts is solely due to a something in the soil, and the condition most favourable to the development of that something is excessive or abnormal humidity of the subsoil. The cause which operates most powerfully to produce that condition is impeded drainage: it is the inordinate humidity of the subsoil of towns and villages, and not of the paddyfields and jullas, which contributes to the outbreak of the fever with epidemic intensity." Much light has been thrown on the subject by the researches of modern authorities. Professor Tommassi Crudeli in Rome and Professor Klebs in Prague, "have found a germ in cases of malarial or intermittent fever, which they assert is to be met with in the soil and air of malarial districts, and can be demonstrated in the blood of affected patients. Dr. Vandyke Carter of Bombay says that malarial infection can be acquired through both air and water."

After a discussion of the nature and causes of the malarial fever, Dr. Gregg proceeds to show how it is to be prevented by improvement of drainage. He cites a number of cases, from old and recent times, tending to establish the intimate connection between improved drainage and improved health. The most marked illustrations of this fact are furnished by the progress of reclamation and drainage works in parts of England, namely, Lincoln, Norfolk, Suffolk, Kent, Essex, Somerset, Cambridgeshire, Huntingdon, Nottingham and Yorkshire. In conclusion, he clenches the argument with pointing to the striking results which have ensued in Calcutta from its improved system.

Dr. Gregg concludes his circular with an earnest appeal to the municipalities of Bengal:—

"It is of course not to be expected that mofussil municipalities with their limited resources and many urgent needs can accomplish as much in the direction of drainage as the Calcutta Corporation and other wealthy municipalities have done in as short a time, but with steady perseverance there is no reason why, in the course of a few years, the surface and sub-soil water which now saturates the areas of mofussil towns and villages may not be drawn off, and damp habitations there are dry and an amount of salubrity obtained which these localities have never known. If surface and sub-soil drainage accomplished anything else, it would be worth all the money expended on it as marking a step in the history of Indian sanitation. But there can be no doubt whatever that improved health and better physique would follow introduction. Where now are to be seen wretched beings of emaciated and ghastly countenance, looking twice their real age, with attenuated frames, shrunken limbs, muscles thin and powerless, tongues of a leaden whiteness (certain index of deadly marsh fever), pulses feeble and irregular, spleens and livers enormously enlarged, and pitiable languid gait, would be found men well knit, with their muscles developed, and their vital organs sound—altogether powerful, vigorous, healthy and happy.

In many towns great difficulties, other than monetary, will no doubt be met with before the desired result can be attained, but these should not be allowed to overbalance the advantages to be derived from a thorough and systematic drainage system. Great difficulties were at first experienced in England, but they gradually disappeared as improvement advanced. Not many years ago drainage improvements were as little known in many parts of England as they are at present in India, and much controversy and opposition preceded their introduction; yet populous and now flourishing districts have been drained in the face of great difficulties. There is no reason why similar results should not be obtained in India; and in inviting the earnest attention of Municipal Commissioners to the matter, I would urge them to do all in their power, and devote as much of the municipal income as they possibly can towards improving the drainage of their municipalities,—the only means by which the present enormous death-rate and suffering from fever can be diminished, if not altogether prevented."

We hope our municipalities will give a cordial response to the appeal. Instead of year after year frittering away their funds upon what they call their surface drainage and other things of ephemeral importance, let them take up the reclamation of lowlying lands in right earnest, and act upon the principle of combination, where two or more municipalities have a common drainage which, in most cases, now is silted up, or otherwise blocked. From the earnest spirit in which the Sanitary Commissioner has dealt with the subject, much is to be hoped. Having addressed the municipalities as a whole, he will no doubt take up each case piecemeal. The Municipal Commissioners greatly need his counsel and guidance. Probably, they are not wanting in the will to improve their drainage, but cannot agree among themselves as to the methods. Above all, the insufficiency of funds is a great obstacle in not a few cases. For such improvements of a permanent value, however, the help of Government, in the way of loans, might well be looked for, and the influence and recommendation of the Sanitary Commissioner in that behalf might prove of incalculable service.

LORD DUFFERIN VINDICATED BY AN HONEST CONGRESSIST.

THE influence of one good and true soul was never so well illustrated as in the progress of a healthy opinion in the frontier Province of Sind. From that far off coast of the Arabian Sea, comes one of the very best representatives of the native, or for that matter Indian Press. And it is all due to one man, Mr. Gupta—one of the hated Baboo race. He is a real pioneer of civilization. In his hands the Sind Times rose to be a power. It was a calamity to the country when he was driven from it by an unworthy proprietary. But Mr. Gupta was equal to the occasion. He had already made himself felt, and his friends rallied round him. Soon he was able to startle the enemy by rising out of the ashes of his funeral pyre of a journalist as the Phoenix and singing as lustily as ever. We have been watching with great pleasure the course of this very able, fearless, and fair minded journal. It has evidently struck root. We consider the success of such papers of good omen to the country. Though bold, patriotic and progressive, it is a thoroughly respectable publication, above the frivolous cantankerousness and violence of typical patriotic journalism. Our praise is all the more disinterested because the Phoenix is perhaps not overjust to our own motives when we differ from it, as in these times of Congress paroxysm we happen not unfrequently to do. As a rule, it is characterised by earnest thoughtfulness and a regard for truth.

Here is a striking example.

As a rule, the treatment accorded by Congress orators and writers to Lord Dufferin's historic speech at the St. Andrew's dinner has been most discreditable to them and their cause. There have been noble exceptions, no doubt, and the Phoenix is one of the noblest. In the eyes of the exasperated patriots, the late Viceroy's sin culminates in the following words uttered by him:—

"The ideal authoritatively suggested, as I understand, is the creation of a representative body or bodies, in which the official element shall be a minority, who shall have what is called the power of the purse, and who, through this instrumentality, shall be able to bring the British Executives into subjection to their will. The organisation of battalions of native militia and volunteers for the internal and external defences of the country is the next arrangement, and the first practical result to be obtained would be the reduction of the British Army to one-half its present numbers."

For these months these orators and journalists have been breaking their heads against that heinous passage, in the vain attempt to show that if Lord Dufferin did not perpetrate a fib, he was utterly without authority for his statement. Here, at length, is a paper devoted to the Congress, edited by an ardent patriot who harbours the highest—but not visionary—aspirations for his countrymen, which vindicates the much-abused statesman who has done more for giving us a share in the government of the country than many a noisy friend who flatters us to the top of our bent.

The critics of Lord Dufferin, with the simplicity of sucking babes, indignantly ask, Where in the Resolutions of the Congress is there any warrant for the late Viceroy's assertions? In a masterly article, the Phoenix exposes the absurdity of this demand to confine those who would judge of the aims and tendencies of the Congress within the four corners of the cut and dried Resolutions passed by it, and then takes them at their own word:—

"Now is this authoritative ideal borne out by facts? It is very difficult to judge, for the public have been asked by Mr. Yule, as president, and Mr. Hume, as an individual, not to stir out of the oracular precincts of the Congress Resolutions. Even the speeches, within the very four walls of the Congress Hall in support of the Resolutions, are not to be taken as interpretations of their meaning and drift. Then the Resolutions must be either too vague or too abstruse to allow any explanation or interpretation. However, the standpoint taken up by Mr. Yule and Mr. Hume as regards the explanation of the Resolutions is utterly untenable. According to them every one can form a different idea about the Congress according to one's own light, and every one can call every other's false on the authority of the inexplicable Resolutions. Is this not absurd? There must be an explicit authoritative explanation of the Resolutions to fall back to in cases of difference. The speeches of the mover, seconder, and the supporter of a resolution in any meeting are generally taken as explanatory of the meaning and drift of it. So we will proceed from this rational standpoint to judge whether the statement of Lord Dufferin is borne out by facts.

The first point in the statement is the 'creation of a representative body or bodies in which the official element shall be in a minority.' In the Resolution itself there is only mention about the admission of a considerable proportion of elected members. A Resolution was also passed in the second Congress containing the following tentative suggestion: 'Not less than half the members of such enlarged Councils to be elected. Not more than one-fourth to be officials having seats ex officio in such Councils, and not more than one-fourth to be members, official or non-official, nominated by Government.' This tentative scheme was however dropped in the third Congress. Now let the readers judge for themselves whether the expression 'considerable proportion of elected members' taken side by side with 'not more than one-fourth to be officials' warranted Lord Dufferin to declare that the aim of the Congress was to throw the official element into minority. In our opinion it did warrant. It may be urged that when the tentative scheme of the second Congress had been dropped, Lord Dufferin had no warrant whatever to come to such a conclusion. If this argument be accepted then it will belie the recent utterances of Mr. Naoroji before the British public and even the inaugural speech of Mr. Yule within the four walls of the Castle of the last Congress. At the Liverpool Banquet Mr. Naoroji said that the Congress wanted 'to have one-half elected, one quarter officials, and one quarter nominated by the Government.' Mr. George Yule also said in his presidential address 'the utmost that we want is that half of the Councils be elected.' In the Resolution itself nothing definitely is mentioned but the expression 'considerable proportion.' Then does it not look that Mr. Naoroji and Mr. Yule have drawn upon their own imagination in defining the exact proportion? Then how much more was Lord Dufferin prudent than they as not to have committed himself to any definitude? He simply stated that the aim of the Congress was to throw the official element of the Councils into minority. Then it is clear that this assumption of official minority is not erroneous."

Again:—

"The next point is the power of the purse. Though nothing of the kind is mentioned in the Resolutions, there is ample testimony of it in the speeches of the delegates to lead the outside public that the Congress indirectly aims at that power. Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, and not an insignificant puny delegate, in supporting the third Resolution of the first Congress said, 'our first reform should be to have the power to tax ourselves. With that and another reform which I shall move hereafter, India will advance in material and moral prosperity, and bless and benefit England.' What are the outside public to conclude from such a declaration on the part of one who is looked upon as one of the leading authorities of the Congress? And this is not a solitary instance, the Congress speeches bristle with such numerous statements. We now ask, is not the attempt to have the power to tax ourselves a step sure and certain 'to have what is called the power of the purse?'"

Law.

A HINDU WILL.

Judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the Appeal of Sreemutty Kristoromoney Dossee v. Maharaja Norendra Krishna Bahadur and others, from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, delivered 24th November 1888.

Present :—Lord Fitzgerald, Lord Hobhouse, Sir Richard Couch. Delivered by Lord Hobhouse.

The question in this case arises from a rather obscure passage in the will of Raja Jadubindro Krishna, who disposed of the residue of his estate in the following terms :—

"I give devise and bequeath the residue of my real and personal estate both joint and self acquired unto my executors in trust to pay the rents issues profits and income thereof unto my said daughter during her life time, and after death in trust to pay assign and convey the residue of my estate real and personal to my half brothers Rajas Nreependro Krishna Bahadur and Norendra Krishna Bahadur in equal moieties and to the heir or heirs male of their or either of their body, in failure of which in trust to give the same to the son or sons of my said daughter."

The will is dated 25th March 1851. The testator died in 1852. His daughter, who was his only child, is the Plaintiff and Appellant in this suit. She has six sons, all born after the testator's death. His brothers both survived him. One of them Nreependro has died, leaving only two sons, both born after the testator's death. The other Norendro is living. He had three sons born in the lifetime of the testator, of whom one is dead and two are living, and four other sons born after the testator's death. The Defendants and Respondents in this suit are Norendro, the surviving brother; his six surviving sons, and the representative of the one who has died; the two sons of Nreependro, who are also his executors; and the six sons of the Plaintiff. Every person, therefore, who could possibly claim an interest under the residuary gift is a party to the suit.

The Plaintiff contends that the residuary gift is invalid, except so far as it confers life interests on herself and her uncles, and that on the death of Nreependro, the moiety of the estate designed for him or his heirs male became vested in her as her father's sole heir. The adverse contention is that the gift is made absolute to each of the testator's brothers, defeasible only in events which have not happened, viz., in each case, the death of the brother without leaving male heirs of his body then living. The High Court have adopted the latter view of the case, and have dismissed the suit. From their decree this appeal is brought.

The view of the High Court has been supported by the Counsel for the Respondents the brothers' families, who expressly stated that their argument, though endeavouring to amplify and illustrate the High Court's view, must be taken as not departing from it. The High Court considered that the true intention of the testator was "that in the event of his two-half brothers having at the time of their death male descendants, they, if alive, or their families, as representing them if dead, should take the fee of this property; but that in the event of their having no such descendants at the time of their death, the estate should be divested and go over to the son or sons of his daughter."

The conclusion is rested, first, on the direction to the trustees to "pay, assign, and convey," which, it is said, shows that the whole estate is to be dealt with; secondly, on the circumstance that no words of limitation or exclusion are attached to the expression "heir or heirs male of his or their body;" and thirdly, on a view of the law, which is stated thus :—

"It appears from the Tagore case, as I said just now that if that [the gift to the brothers] is a limited estate in the sense that it is an attempt to give anything to one then unborn, the devise to that person would be invalid. But it is established by the case of Bhoobun Mohini Debi v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhery, reported in L. R., 5 L. A., p. 138, and other cases besides, that although according to Hindu law it is illegal to attempt to give an estate to a person not in being, and that the estate which must be given to the first recipient must be the entire estate of the testator, it is competent to a Hindu in making his will to make a provision that the estate which he creates and gives to the recipient of his bounty may be divested or defeated by something which takes place after. That is established by this case, it is admitted by Mr. Evans and Mr. Kennedy, and may be taken as absolute law."

The rules of law thus stated do not bear directly on the decision of the High Court, because in their view the will does not, as events have turned out, purport to confer any interest on an unborn person, or any gift over on contingency, but it leaves gifts, made absolute in the first instance, undisturbed by subsequent events. But the whole construction of the will has been argued, quite properly, with reference to these rules. It is important to have them accurately stated. And their Lordships find that the statement of the High Court requires some qualifications.

The Tagore case decides not only that a devise to a person unborn is invalid, but that an attempt to establish a new rule of inheritance is invalid, which is more germane to the present case. There is no rule that the first recipient must take all the interest possessed by the testator, for limited interests are common enough.

The rule is that if a Hindu donor wishes to confer an estate of inheritance, it must be such a one as is known to the Hindu law, which an English estate tail is not. In stating the rule relating to the defeasance of a prior absolute interest by a subsequent event, it is important to add, first, that the event must happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being at the time of the gift, as was laid down in the Mullick case, 9 Moo. Ind. App., 123; and secondly, that a defeasance by way of gift over must be in favour of somebody in existence at the time of the gift, as laid down in the Tagore case.

The case of Bhoobun Mohini conforms to all these rules. There was no gift over in that case. The donor made a gift to his sister Kasiwari in vernacular terms, which, though peculiar and referring only to lineal heirs, this Committee held to be identical in effect with other terms well known, and often used by Hindu donors who intend to pass the whole inheritance, though they mention only children or issue. Then, he said, "No other heir shall be entitled." This was held to mean that, if Kasiwari died leaving no issue then living, her interest was to cease. In effect the construction was that, if Kasiwari left issue, the absolute interest given to her in the first instance was to remain unaffected, but if she left none it was cut down to a life interest. In the latter case nothing had passed from the donor but the life interest, and when that was spent he or his heir would lawfully re-enter.

Upon the construction of this will their Lordships are unable to find anything which points to the death of the brothers as the time for ascertaining in what way the property is to be disposed of. The life of the daughter is the period for which the trust continues; it is on her death that the trustees are to pay, assign, and convey; and the question is, to whom? The payment, &c., is contemplated as a single act to be performed at one moment of time, and that time is the death of the daughter. The expression "pay, assign, and convey" is important, to show as much as that, but their Lordships do not enter upon any discussion, such as has taken place in England, as to the effect of such words upon the nature of the gift over. They treat the will in the same way as if the testator had said that, on his daughter's death, the property was to be held in trust for, or that it should go over to, his brothers and the other donees.

To whom then is the conveyance to be made? None is directed, except to the brothers in equal moieties, and to the heir or heirs male of their or either of their bodies (or, in simpler words, to the brothers and their heirs male respectively in equal shares), on failure of which to the sons of the daughter. Their Lordships cannot see where the absolute gift of the property to the brothers comes in. It is given, not to them, but to them and their heirs male. Why should the words "heirs male" be introduced at all, if an estate descendible to heirs general has previously been given? The words must mean either that the estate of inheritance given to the brothers is a qualified one, or that the heirs male are to take somehow by way of direct gift from the testator.

The latter of these two alternatives can only be reached by reading the word "and" as if it was "or." Indeed one passage of the judgment looks as if this construction was in the minds of the learned Judges. They point out that no words of limitation are attached to the words "heirs, &c." And they add, "This shows that the intention was that whenever the estate was conveyed from his own trustees to his half brothers who might be alive, or to their or either of their male descendants, it was to be an absolute estate as soon as it became vested in them. This cannot refer merely to the circumstance that in making the conveyance after the daughter's death it might be necessary, if the brothers themselves were dead, to convey to their heirs, because, on the hypothesis of an absolute interest in the brothers, the conveyance would be to the heirs general, or it might be to the alienees, not to the male descendants."

The absence of words of limitation after the words "heirs, &c." does not appear to their Lordships to be of much significance; but, as far as it goes, it rather favours the Appellant's view in the Respondents' construction, because if "heirs, &c." are themselves words of limitation, words of limitation attached to them would be inappropriate, otherwise they would be appropriate, and they would tend to show that the "heirs" were objects of direct gift.

Holloway's Pills.—Important for the delicate.—It is difficult to determine which is the more trying to the human constitution, the damp, cold days of autumn and winter, or the keen, dry, easterly winds of spring. Throughout the seasons good health may be maintained by occasional doses of Holloway's Pills, which purify the blood and act as wholesome stimulants to the skin, stomach, liver, bowels, and kidneys. This celebrated medicine needs but a fair trial to convince the ailing and desponding that it will restore and cheer them without danger, pain, or inconvenience. No family should be without a supply of Holloway's Pills and Ointment, as by a timely recourse to them the first erring function may be reclaimed, suffering may be spared, and life saved.

But upon putting it to M. Rigby whether he claimed to read the word "and" in a disjunctive sense, he at once disclaimed any such contention, and indeed it is obvious that there are great difficulties in the way of such a construction, even if it would better the position of the Respondents.

Their Lordships, therefore, find that the first of the two alternative construction is the only possible one. The will is composed in English; the draftsman seems to have had a smattering of English real property law; he clearly knew there was a difference between a son and heir male of the body; and apparently he had English dispositions of property in his eye. This seems to be an attempt, of a kind not infrequent among Bengal zemindars of late years, to introduce English estates tail into Hindu property which the law will not allow. At all events their Lordships must construe the words in their plain and obvious sense; and finding no gift to the brothers, except that which orders a conveyance to them and their heirs male of their bodies, they hold that the intention was to confer on them an estate of inheritance resembling an English estate in tail male. That cannot take effect. But the testator intended to benefit his brothers personally, and his gift to them and their heirs male would, if valid, have carried with it the enjoyment by each of his share during his life. They think that this intention though it is mixed up with the intention to give an estate tail, may lawfully take effect, as was held in the case of Tarakeswar Roy, 10 Ind. App.

Whether the words which introduce the gift over, "in failure of which," import a general failure of the brothers' issue, is a point on which we need not speculate. It is possible that the draftsman, following English models, intended to give a remainder after an estate tail; it is also possible that he was only thinking of the contingency that at the daughter's death, when the trustees came to convey they might find neither brothers nor issue of brothers in existence. In the first case the gift fails with the estate tail after which it is limited; and in either case the gift fails because the daughter's sons, being unborn at the testator's death, are incapable of taking anything from him.

It is suggested that a Court of construction may hold, in favour of the intention, that a fee simple or absolute interest is conferred by inapt words or dispositions, just as in English law an estate tail is often held to be conferred by inapt words or dispositions, because it comes nearest to effecting the actual intention of the testator. But if this testator intended not to give an absolute interest, which their Lordships hold to be clear from his introduction of heirs male, it is impossible to say that his intention is more defeated by the law which cuts down his gift in tail to a life interest, than it would be by straining the will to give an absolute interest, in which case the property might pass away from the family to a mortgagee, or a general creditor, or a strange donee. Their Lordships would not be justified in taking any such liberty with the will.

The Plaintiff prays for a declaration of rights, for possession of a moiety of the property, for a partition, and for the appointment of a trustee. The decree, after declaring the rights, gives directions as to the appointment of a trustee and the continuance of a receiver. Except as aforesaid it dismisses the suit. Their Lordships are of opinion that the decree should be discharged so far as it declares the rights of the parties, and so far as it dismisses the suit. Instead of the portion discharged there should be declarations that, according to the true construction of the will, the gift of the residue, so far as it purports to confer an estate of inheritance on the testator's half brothers and the heirs male of their bodies, is contrary to law and is void; that in the events which have happened the gift to the sons of the Plaintiff, the testator's daughter, is incapable of taking effect; that each of the testator's half brothers took an estate for his life in one moiety of the residue in remainder expectant on the death of the Plaintiff; and that, on the death of Raja Nreependro Krishna Bahadur, the inheritance of his moiety devolved on the Plaintiff as her father's heir in remainder immediately expectant on her own life estate under the will, and she therefore became entitled in possession to one moiety of the residue. The High Court should place her in possession of that moiety, and should take steps to effect a partition if either of the parties desires it.

As regards costs, the High Court thought it just that the several parties should bear their own. Their Lordships think that the rights of all parties under this perplexing will could not have been settled, as by this decree they will be, without bringing before the Court all parties for whom the will expressly designed gifts, or who by a reasonable construction could claim them. The suit, or some like suit, was absolutely necessary, and it is not too extensively framed. The case is one in which it is just to pay the costs of all parties out of the residue in dispute. The decree, therefore, should be varied on this point also. In all other respects it should be affirmed. Their Lordships will deal in the same way with the costs of this appeal.

They will humbly advise her Majesty in accordance with this opinion.

POSTAL NOTICE.

With effect from the 1st April 1889, the sender of a value-payable article will be required to sign a certificate to the effect that the article is sent in execution of a bona fide order; and in the case of a value-payable unregistered packet, the sender will, in addition to signing the certificate referred to above, be required to prepay the usual money order commission on the amount specified for recovery from the addressee, by affixing postage stamps of the value of the commission to the form filled up by him.

2. In lieu of the forms at present filled up by the senders of value payable articles, two revised forms will be substituted from the 1st April 1889—one for use with all value-payable articles other than value-payable unregistered book packets, and the other for use with value-payable unregistered book packets. Each form will contain the certificate to be signed by the sender, and space is provided in the form for use with value-payable unregistered packets for the postage stamps to be affixed in payment of commission.

3. In case a value-payable unregistered packet is refused by the addressee or returned as unclaimed to the sender, no refund of the commission prepaid will be granted.

P. SHERIDAN,

Deputy Director-General of the Post Office of India.

CALCUTTA:

The 27th January 1888

Price by post 8½ annas.

ASRUKANA

A Collection of poems in Bengali by
SRIMATI GIRINDRAMOHINI DASSY
(Author of Kabitahar, Bharat Kusum.)

Asrukana is a collection of poetical pieces of singular pathos and beauty of expression * * It is a series of mournful songs that the reader is here presented with and they must touch a sympathetic cord in every heart that can feel. There is a singular appropriateness in the title of the work, and in its pious dedication to the memory of the husband of the fair writer. The Indian Nation.

The authoress is not unknown to Bengali readers. She has already published two or three poems by which she is favourably known, but between these poems and this is a difference that hardly admits of being measured.

This is poetry in life

We have read Srimati Girindra Mohini's poems in a reverential spirit. The poems are all of a lyrical description. The lyre is soft, sweet and tender, but awfully strong.

The tone of the poems is inexpressibly gentle, inexpressibly pure, and inexpressibly tender and affectionate. It is the tone of a world mother.

Bengal should be proud of this poem—The Calcutta Review.

Apply at the Bee Press,
1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Calcutta.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas

or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS
Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and
are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages.
For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT
Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,
Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

FOR SALE

Price Post free Rs. 6.
 Cloth Gilt Rs. 6.
 Cloth Bound Rs. 5-8.
 Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,

BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late
 NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
 (the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
 Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
 CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman. —The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course. —[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.] —The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

.....this interesting book. We are justified in so terming it, not on account of any romantic adventures that the author has to relate, nor of any very new discoveries in geography or natural history. There is something particular as regards ethnology; and a great deal of human nature in the book, shown to the reader with a simplicity and candour which bear testimony to its truth. Called from the busy haunts of men in the city to dwell for a time in Independent Tipperah as a judicious adviser to its chief, Doctor Mookerjee relates his adventures during the several journeys to and fro in that capacity, without revealing the secrets of the State, like a good diplomatist. He has adhered strictly to the advice which he offers to his brethren of the Native press, and has written what he saw and knows, without revealing all, considering what he might properly say and what withhold.....The above seems to be a curious passage to be found in a book of travels, and appears to have no connection with the subject. But it arises from a casual reference to a slaughter house, and a writer who "thundered weekly against the outrage of locating shambles in the immediate vicinity of a Hindoo temple"—where, in fact, no temple could be said to exist. Hence, the doctor advises his fellow-scribes not to be Pharisees, righteous overmuch, but to look and be sure of their facts. In the same spirit, he has written his book. He gives an account of his travels, which seem often to have been voyages, upon the widespread rivers of Eastern Bengal which in the rains become almost inland seas. On these he philosophises on the nature of the country and the people, making careful observation of his facts; and though he sometimes fancies he knows better than his boatmen, and more than suspects that they are getting the better of him, he submits with a grace that would have done credit to Socrates, and accepts the apparently inevitable in the interests of peace. The doctor is a close observer of nature, animate and inanimate, with an eye to the picturesque as well as to the sublime and beautiful. And although there is a vein of cynicism running through many of his observations, it is tempered by such evident good nature, that even a stranger would conceive him to be a laughter-loving rather than a stern philosopher. This is evident in his description of his boatmen and others, while he denounces the lawlessness which has made the poor fishermen suspicious even of honest intentions, because they have so long been the helpless victims of marauders stronger than themselves. Their only defence is flight or deceit, and the latter is then justification as a mode of self protection. We are shown not only the weakness of the people, but the shortcomings of the administration that leave these things possible.....The author is impartial in his censures.....There is much in the book to which space forbids us to refer. That it is not a prosy one may be gathered from the fact that, for its 300 pages, there are nearly as many index references. Many of the subjects are necessarily but lightly treated, but all sensibly and fairly. And Dr. Mookerjee is such a master of the English language that in the whole book we have scarcely found a phrase that might not have been written by an Englishman "to the manner born." There is nothing in it at which any one could reasonably take offence; and there is much from which both Englishmen and natives may learn greatly-needed lessons. —The Indian Daily News, Nov. 22, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree: "a naked Whiteman hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: 'she had such large languishing eyes!' But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the 'last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa' and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him.....Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course, some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

BEETHAM'S
GLYCERINE - AND -
CUCUMBER

For INDIA and all HOT CLIMATES. It is the most excellent SKIN PREPARATION.
 IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and PREVENTS the HOTTER WEATHER, Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, REDNESS, IRRITATION, and REFINES the SKIN by LIGHTLY SOFTENING IT.

It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY and CRACKED, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN, and WIND, far more than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BEES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that velvet feeling to the skin, this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers: M. BEETHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."

All who suffer find sure relief from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co., R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "PUNJAB" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Tuesday the 26th instant.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessel should be sent to the Company's Godown at Juggannauth Ghat the day previous to the vessel leaving Calcutta.

CACHAR LINE.

For particular of the sailings on this line please apply to the undersigned

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, and Thursdays, and Debrooghur on Mondays and Fridays.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,

Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)

THE CALCUTTA
HOMOEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMOEOPATHY ONLY,

WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE

TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMOEOPATHY

and maintains to this day

THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi. Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Locketts, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutla, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

OBTAINED

Thirty-three Prize Medals and First Class Certificates and were specially appointed by the Royal Commission for the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in 1886, where not a single case of illness occurred amongst the native artisans there employed.

Authorized by the Government of India; and largely used by the Calcutta and other Municipalities.

Sanctioned

by Her Majesty's Board of Trade.

Used in the Royal Households, by Her Majesty's Government Establishments, by the Corporation of London, Parochial Vestries, Smithfield and Billingsgate Markets, Peninsular and Oriental and other Steam Navigation Companies, the Railway Companies, Principal Hospitals, &c.

Agents:—DYCE, NICOL & CO.,

3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press

THE
FALL OF Mandalay,
BY
ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery in April next; meantime Subscribers may register their names with the Publishers

Messrs. PETTIT & Co.,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

11, Old Court House Street;

or Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

198A, Upper Circular Road,

CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION

CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,—

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly	... "	... " 7
Quarterly	... "	... " 4
Monthly	... "	... Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy,	... "	... " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month of Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. }

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1889.

} No. 364

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

[From the Spectator.]

OUR CHILDREN.

I LOOKED at the happy children
Who gathered around the hearth ;
So blithe they were, no children
Could happier be on earth ;
With their merry plays, and their winsome ways,
And the sound of their silvery mirth !

Then I thought of those other children,
So wizened, and hard, and bold,
Who huddle in slum and cellar,
And shiver with want and cold :
Not fresh as the dew, or the morning's hue,
But haggard, and lean, and old.

But yet may they still, those children,
Be taught to forget their pain ;
And gathered in arms that love them,
Their laughter may come again ;
And the stare of woe and the craft may go,
And the spirit be washed of stain.

But it is not in cold book-learning
Those children's hearts to move ;
And the stony eye of the serpent
Is death to the stricken dove ;
'Tis an angel alone can touch them,
And that angel's name is Love.

For whatever the world may fancy,
And whatever the wise men say
Of our nineteenth-century progress,
Of a new and a better way :
Still it takes a soul to make a soul
Now, as in the olden day.

A. G. B.

THE NIGHTINGALE.

THOUGH age to age has handed down the tale,
Since first the Grecian shaped it into song,
Of Itys slain and Philomela's wrong,
I, listening to thy music, Nightingale,
Hear not the tortured heart's despairing wail,
But love's triumphant pean loud and long,
Love forcing utterance for thoughts that throng
The soul of fire lodged in a form so frail.
Or if I catch a saddening undertone,
'Tis but the old-world note that joy is brief,
Summer treads all too quickly upon Spring,
Autumn on Summer, and the woods make moan,
As white-haired Winter comes, when no birds sing,
Ushered by sobbing stream and withered leaf.

H. T. R.

THE POET.*

What do poets want with gold,
Cringing slaves and cushioned ease,
Are not crusts and garments old
Better for their souls than these ?

Gold is but the juggling rod
Of a false usurping god,
Graven long ago in hell
With a sombre stony spell,
Working in the world forever.
Hate is not so strong to sever
Beating human heart from heart.
Soul from soul we shrink and part,
And no longer hail each other
With the ancient name of brother.
Give the simple poet gold,
And his song will die of cold.
He must walk with men that reel
On the rugged path, and feel
Every sacred soul that is Beating very near to his.
Simple, human, careless, free,
As God made him, he must be
For the sweetest song of bird
Is the hidden tenor heard
In the dusk, at even-flush,
From the forest's inner hush,
Of the simple hermit thrush.

What do poets want with love ?
Flowers that shiver out of hand,
And the fervid fruits that prove
Only bitter broken sand ?

Poets speak of passion best,
When their dreams are undistressed,
And the sweetest songs are sung,
E'er the inner heart is stung.
Let them dream ; 'tis better so ;
Ever dream, but never know.
If their spirits once have drained
All that goblet crimson-stained,
Finding what they dreamed divine,
Only earthly sluggish wine,
Sooner will the warm lips pale,
And the flawless voices fail,
Sooner come the drooping wing,
And the afterdays that bring,
No such songs as did the spring.

* From Among the Millet, and other Poems. By Archibald Lampman. Ottawa.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE World mentions Lord Harris as the likely successor of Lord Reay as Governor of Bombay.

POROUS glass for windows is one of the latest invention announced at Paris. It is too fine to permit of draught yet admitting air enough for a pleasant and healthy ventilation in a room. A mere advertisement to sell, we suspect.

COCOANUT butter is a bewildering phrase, but it is now a reality in ingenious France. It is made from the oil of the coconut. According to a Paris correspondent, it is one-third cheaper than margarine, it is appetising, nutritious, free from acidity, and excellent for kitchen purposes, and what not. Will it stand this climate? In Europe, in winter, coconut oil itself must be indistinguishable from butter.

THE following anecdote started by an enterprising native contemporary of Calcutta is going the round of the native press:

"A member of the first families in Calcutta, the founder of which house was honored by the Emperor of Delhi with the title of Raja Bahadur and the gift of a frigo for meritorious services as one of the Ministers of State, is reported to have complained to his guardian that his class mates who are all Eurasians and East Indians were permitted to join the corps as volunteers, he being left alone in the class. What was the feeling of his guardian on hearing this report can be more imagined than described."

What, we wonder, was the feeling of the political lad's father when he read this paragraph, in which his ancestor is converted into a Viceroy of Delhi?

As for the point our contemporary desires to make, it is no doubt an invidious and lamentable distinction that Eurasian and East Indian boys may be volunteers but not Baboolings. But do our boys seriously want to be soldiers, or even to play at soldiering as Calcutta volunteers? Are you sure that the parents would not set up a howling, supported by our contemporary and the rest of the native press, with perhaps the exception of such old fogeys as Hope and Reis and Rayet, against the tyranny of the British Government, were there a movement for enrolling native schoolboys in feeder volunteer regiments? This sort of reckless agitation will do more harm to the native press, as showing how little they are representative of their community, than any hostile criticism from the outside.

THE Bengal Government will grant no fresh scholarships to selected native graduates of the Calcutta University proceeding to study agriculture at Gloucester.

WE are glad to note that, at the late examination in London of students studying for the bar, Mirh Mahomed Shah Din, B.A., of the well known family of Bughbapora, in the Punjab, has won a prize of ten pounds by his success in Roman Law, Jurisprudence, International and Constitutional Law, and Legal History.

HURKE SONDAS NURROHMEDAS presents Rs. 6,000 for the encouragement of the medical education of the women of Western India, one-half for endowing a Lady Reay medical scholarship, and the remainder for a Lady Reay gold medal to be annually competed for by Lady candidates for the I. M. and S. examination.

THESE are the luckiest dogs going.

"The millionaires of the world amount to some 700 persons, England boasts of 200 millionaires; the United States of 100; France has 75. Jay Gould is the millionaire of millionaires, owning capital to the extent of fifty five millions of money. His annual income is three millions. Muckay, the Bonanza King, comes next in the list, and the Rothschilds figure in the third place. These three own 150 millions of money between them."

THE progress made in the matter of the North-West Frontier Defence in Rajputana is thus summarised. Bhimpore and Jodhpore will select cavalry and infantry for special training from among their existing forces. Ulwar proposes to create a cavalry and 1,000 infantry, and Kotah a regiment of infantry only. The Maharaja of Jypore will maintain 1,000 ponies fully equipped for transport service. Bikaner will raise and maintain an armed camel corps, 500 strong.

MAJOR Drummond and Captain Hogg, on special duty in connection with the forces of the Native States, are now gone to Cashmere to assist in the reorganisation of the Maharajah's troops.

ACCORDING to the Indian Union, the Hon'ble Rana Sir Shankar Baksh Singh, K. C. I. E., Taluqdar of Khajurgaon, has established a Sivala at Benares, at a cost of Rs. 60,000, and has endowed it handsomely. This Taluqdar is said to have paid, in the year 1888-89, more than Rs. 80,000 to benevolent purposes in Oudh. What says the Advocate to that record?

"ENQUIRER" having sought the history of the old French graveyard in Park street, and asked whether the Huguenots were buried there, "Brown Clerk," another correspondent, in the Indian Daily News of the 5th, quotes from the Bengal Obituary a Latin tombstone inscription on "Angelica de Carrion Edwardi Turretta Tarvisini, Uxor Delectissima, Mors eclipuit XV. Junii, A. D., MDCCXCVI. Et Aetatis Suae XVIII." &c., and exhumes a Notice in the Calcutta Gazette of 28th March 1793 by her surviving husband evidently, to wit:-

"Some disagreeable circumstances, too painful to relate, having imposed on Mr. Turretta the melancholy necessity of removing the remains of his beloved wife, the late Mrs. Turretta, from the Portuguese burying-ground to a cemetery of his own, near the English burying ground, he begs leave to inform the public that all Roman Catholic Europeans, or their immediate descendants, dying in this settlement, and preferring this cemetery, may have their remains deposited there, with permission to erect a monument over them, free of all charges, on application to the Reverend Vicar of the Portuguese Church in Calcutta, by which they will not only avoid the sorrowful predicament in which he was placed, but enjoy the comfortable assurance that their remains shall rest in peace."

"Brown Clerk" adds:-

"The French (or Turretta's) burial ground was originally the property of Monsier Turretta, a French (?) merchant, who held a lucrative appointment in the local conservancy department a century ago, and after whom Turretta Bazar has also been named. The ground was subsequently his gift to his co-religionists."

AN English paper says:-

"Hakluyt tells us of a certain Master Killingworth, of the Court of Ivan the Terrible, whose beard was five feet two inches long. It is also on record that John Maye, the German painter, had a beard which swept the ground as he walked. These hirsute growths have hitherto been univided of their kind but they are now put altogether in the shade by a beard which has reached the extraordinary length of ten feet, and, we are assured, is still growing. The owner, a certain Louis Goulon, is a forger of iron-works at Montlucon in the French department of the Allier. He was born in the Nièvre, and at the early age of twelve was obliged to shave. No sooner was the razor used, however, than whiskers, moustaches, and beard became quite unmanageable, and, notwithstanding the activity of all the barbers and the no-trims of all the quacks in the department, soon quite covered the waistcoat of the youthful patriarch. Goulon is now well advanced in years, and his beard, which was originally brown, is almost white. The silvery hairs are, however, as vigorous as their chestnut predecessors, and daily increase in length. Goulon has learned to turn his monstrous appendage to practical account, and he uses it as a comb and chest-preserver, and sometimes even as a belt."

It is said that that irrepressible showman who would have purchased the white elephant of Burma or Siam, offered most tempting terms to the owner of the ten feet beard to allow him the chance of exhibiting him. But the proud Frenchman respected himself on his beard too much to bring it down to such a degradation on any terms.

IT has now been arranged that, during the continuance of the experimental accelerated mail service from Calcutta, and beginning from Monday the 4th March when the outward P. and O. Steamer is signalled in Bombay after midnight on Sunday, a special mail train will leave Bombay on Monday at eleven A. M., timed to arrive at Howrah early on Wednesday morning.

Unless, therefore, the mail from home is later than Monday morning in Bombay, it will be delivered in Calcutta on Wednesday, in time to answer correspondence by the accelerated train which leaves Howrah the same evening.

Holway's Ointment and Pills Travellers and Emigrants. Those who cross the seas change the climate, but they do not change the constitution. The altered conditions of life, the exigencies of travel and other causes render the traveller and emigrant peculiarly liable to diseases and accidents when far from efficient medical aid. With these associated remedies at hand they may be said to have a physician always at their call, and they may be certain that situations will be constantly arising in which they will require a ready resource in time of need. The directions for use which accompany each box and pot of Holway's Pills and Ointment are written in plain and simple language and are applicable in all cases.

BABOO Raj Kumar Surbadhikari has been appointed an Honorary Presidency Magistrate.

THE Commissioner of Chota Nagpore has appointed the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhoom, under Act VI of 1876 as amended by Act V of 1884, "to be the Manager and the management is vested in him, of the whole of the immoveable property of Rajah Biyo Kissors Singh, Zemindar of pergunnah Buttabhoom, and of any other property to which the said Rajah is possessed or entitled in his own right or which he is entitled to redeem, or which may be acquired by or devolve on him or his heirs during the continuance of such management." What may this announcement mean?

THE Governor-General gave his assent on the 1st March to the Act to amend the Law relating to Fraudulent Marks on Merchandise. It comes into operation as Act IV of 1889 from the first day of April, 1889, and extends to the whole of British India. But such piece-goods as are described in clause (f) of section 18 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, as amended by this Act, shall not be affected by this Act, till the first day of August 1889, nor shall the provisions of Sec. 12—regarding the stamping of lengths of piece-goods manufactured in British India—apply till the first day of July 1889 to piece-goods made up in bales in a factory before the first day of April, 1889.

THE Melbourne Exhibition closed on the 31st January, after some ceremony, presided over by the Governor:—

"A procession was formed up the Avenue of Nations to a dais erected under the north end of the dome, and consisted of the leading naval and military officers, Colonial Committee, Mayor of Melbourne, Executive Commissioners of Exhibition, members of Ministry, Speaker of Assembly, the President of the Legislative Council and of the Exhibition, His Excellency, Lady Loch and family. As the procession passed up the Grand Avenue, the National airs of France, Austria, Germany, and America were played. Upon the procession reaching the dais, the Exhibition orchestra gave the National Anthem, and the speeches were then proceeded with. Sir James McBain, President of the Exhibition Commissioners, offered up prayer, after which the overture to 'Leonora' was performed by the orchestra. The President, accompanied by the Executive Vice-President, Vice-Presidents, and Secretary, then ascended the dais, and the former read a lengthy address. It was for the most part a résumé of the career of the Exhibition. After expressing cordial appreciation of the assistance of the exhibiting countries and colonies, the address went on to state that the attendance from the date of opening numbered 1,900,000, which, in proportion to population, compared most favourably with the records of previous exhibitions throughout the world. His Excellency, after a few complimentary remarks in reference to the undertaking, declared the Exhibition closed. The Union Jack was then hoisted on top of the dome, and after the roll of awards had been handed to representatives from the different countries, the ceremony ended."

HEALY alias Merton, who caused some sensation by his somewhat ingenious depredations in British Indian Street and was provided with free quarters and fed at Her Majesty's expense in the Presidency Jail, and Warner, who escaped with his master the Singer Sewing-Machine Company's money—Rs. 4,000—and was, like him, after conviction and sentence, lodged in the same premises with Merton, have, long before the expiry of their respective terms of 3 and 5 years, taken farewell of the place. The house has not proved to them one of correction. Their genius was not to be confined to the enclosed compound. They have left for fresh fields and pastures new. On Tuesday night, they made their escape. Merton was in irons in a strong cell specially guarded. It is said he had procured a pick-axe. By this he loosened his irons and got himself free of them. He next found himself out of the cell and released Warner, the same pick-axe helping him in opening Warner's cell. With the aid of tables, chairs and blankets of the two cells piled up one over the other and made into rope, they scaled the wall and landed themselves safe on the other side. The sentries on guard could only "raise an alarm and one of them flung his baton at one of the retreating figures, knocking off a sola helmet, which he left behind." The night was dark and the two friends eluded pursuit. The Police were informed and they have in return offered a reward of Rs. 400 for the capture of the two escaped.

Another version is that the two prisoners were lodged in the same corridor, Merton upstairs, Warner on the groundfloor. The warder in his round had seen the door of Warner's cell open at one in the morning when he raised the alarm. The two escaped were further seen by the warder and jail sentry crawling along the wall running between the corridor wall and the outer jail wall. But the sentry being shut in between two walls, could be of no use in arresting the march of the two friends and they reached the outer wall and dropped down on the Cathedral side. The padlocks of the cells were found picked open.

THE Melbournian says:—

"Mr. Malabar has been examined by a practical phrenologist who has found out that Mr. Malabar's appreciation of woman is chivalrous but intellectual rather than passionate; that he has rather poor arithmetical talent; that his memory of trifling incidents is unreliable; that he loves the cause of human improvement; that he has great executive capacity, efficiency, thoroughness like Mr. Gladstone, but that he lacks the power given by muscular exertion; that he possesses what is called the prudent courage, that he is fond of the praise of men themselves deriving of praise, &c., &c. The sketch does not appear to have given to Mr. Malabar entire satisfaction, because he protests against being considered to possess intellectual faculties predominating over the spiritual."

Fiddlesticks! Chivalry that is purely intellectual has no meaning. We only wonder Mr. Malabar encouraged the mountebank.

HER Majesty has gone to Biarritz.

NONE of the Judges objecting, Mr. Eardley Norton has been admitted an advocate of the High Court here. Mr. Norton has found it profitable to transfer his allegiance from Madras to Calcutta. Signs of the contemplated desertion were evident enough for some time, until the officious vindication of Sir Comer by the great Congress Orator made it a dead certainty. Blessed be the Congress!

A NEW planet has been discovered by the Nice Observatory. It has not been named but numbered. It is of the thirteenth magnitude.

THE wife of President Diaz, of Mexico, is sending Madame Adeline Patti a diminutive dog weighing under a pound avoirdupois, but with a loud piercing bark.

THE Morning Post hears that the custom of using eau-de-colonge as an intoxicant has found its way into the Bengali zenanas, not only in Calcutta, but in several places in the mofussil, such as Burrisal, Dacca, &c.

SIR Stewart Bayley visits Uttarpara this afternoon. Raja Pearymohan Mukharji has issued invitations to meet His Honor the Lieutenant Governor at a Garden Party at the local Public Library, where there is not much of a garden at all. The invitations to the native gentlemen are not to the ceremonies for which the Lieutenant-Governor has been invoked. At any rate, we hope the accidents at landing and boarding for which, in consequence of defective arrangements, Uttarpara is famous, will be avoided this time.

BABOO Bejoy Kissen Mookerjee has ceased to be the Chairman of the Uttarpara Municipality, and also ceases to be the Honorary Magistrate of the Uttarpara Municipal Bench. Has he been shut up altogether?

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

ON Monday, the new President of the United States was inaugurated. He commenced with a bold bid for popularity all round. His Message to Congress flatters all the predilections and aggressive views and aspirations of his countrymen. It is at once Protectionist, anti-emigrationist, anti-Chinese, and Munroite. He would have no imports and firebrands from other lands—no swamping of native citizens by swarms of paupers from Europe and Asia. The United States seen as foolish over the Panama Canal as the British were over the Suez Canal. The President protests against any foreign domination in the Panama business. American rights and privileges must be sustained in Samoa. The Presidential fiscal policy is, by adjustment of revenue, to leave a surplus without abandoning Protection. The Message winds up with the rage of the hour—a recommendation to increase the Navy.

PARLIAMENT reassembled on the 21st February. The Speech from the Throne was read by the Lord Chancellor. According to it, the negotiations with the Tibetans for preservation of our rights in Sikkim are not yet concluded, but no further military action is considered necessary. In India, however, the Government views the situation somewhat differently. They evidently mean to be better prepared either for aggression or for threat. The Englishman says:—"More troops are likely to be moved up to Sikkim before long. 200 of the Buffs, and 600 of the 3rd Native Infantry are under orders to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Gnatong at the shortest notice, should occasion require their services." With regard to affairs in Africa, Her Majesty's Speech assures both Houses that there is no ground for apprehending any renewal of troubles in the neighbourhood of Suakim. The increasing military preparations by other European nations render it necessary for England to take more military precaution for the safety of her shores and commerce. The other Powers, however, are all friendly to her, but there is no guarantee that the present state will continue. The Speech concludes with the assurance that Government will soon take measures "to amend the tribunals dealing with real property in Ireland, to execute the Sugar Bounties Convention, to complete the conversion of Consols, and to restore the condition of gold coinage." The House of Lords voted the Address in reply. In the Lower House, Mr. Morley moved an amendment, attacking the treatment by Government of the members of Parliament now in prison, for offences under the Irish Crimes Act, and for the assistance given by the Police to the Times in connection with the Parnell Commission. Mr. Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland, of course, defended the policy of Government and announced its intention of strict adherence to it. The debate on Mr. Morley's amendment continued till the 6th March, when the closure was adopted and the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne voted.

The same night, Lord George Hamilton announced in the Lower House that the Government proposed to build seventy ships, namely, ten iron clads, forty-two cruisers and eighteen gun-boats. The cost has been estimated at twenty-one and a half millions sterling. Of these, ten will be spread equally over seven years and the rest added to naval estimates. The construction of the fifty-two of this fleet will be taken in hand immediately, and the whole seventy completed in six years. The Army estimates for the year come up to £17,330,000. This includes the cost of the new magazine rifle which is to replace the weapon now in use and that of the addition of 2,600 men for Colonial garrisons.

THE House of Commons has rejected by a majority of eighty votes Mr. Pickersgill's amendment claiming the right of the public to hold meetings in Trafalgar Square.

M. MELINE having failed to complete one, the new French Ministry has been formed with M. Tirard as Premier, M. Constans Minister of the Interior, and M. de Freycinet Minister of War.

KING Milan was reported to be ill and about to leave Serbia. He has since abdicated in favor of his son Prince Alexander, only twelve years old. M. Ristic, the leader of the Liberal Party, and two Generals act as Regents. Austria has been assured that this means no change of policy of Serbia. There is uneasiness, as a matter of course, in the European capitals.

THE latest news from Samoa is that Mataafa still resists the German demand for surrender. He is, however, agreeable to a truce and to stop raiding on German settlers.

PRESIDENT Harrison has completed his cabinet, Mr. Windon being Secretary to the Treasury.

LORD CROSS is convinced that the earliest occasion should be taken to abrogate the increase in the Salt Tax.

THE Report of the Public Service Commission is under consideration by a Special Committee of the India Council. Lord Cross has given his word that he would lose no time in deciding how far he is prepared to give effect to the recommendations of the Commission.

THE municipal elections come off on Friday the 15th. 50 members or two from each of the 25 Wards will be elected. Except in Wards 7, 16 and 18, there are more than two candidates in each Ward. The candidates of the three uncontested Wards are deemed elected by the Act without any polling. The votes being personal this time, we may expect excitement at the polling stations. The European interests are well secured by the new Act, and pushed beyond it by the Chairman who has been constituted a sort of fetish by the legislature. But as usual the Christian community of Calcutta has been thoroughly apathetic. The spirit of Magna Charta had been up in certain Poor Whites in our Ward who reckoned without their host, but Mr. Moore's tranchant epistles seem to have caused its collapse. Our Christian fellow citizens, however, have no cause for anxiety. The Chamber of Commerce and the Trades Association are empowered by law to return 4 members each. The Port Trust gives two, and the Government nominates fifteen. The total strength of the new Corporation is fixed at 75 members.

Voters exercising their right of election are required to attend the polling stations and record their votes before the presiding officers. We hope the arrangements at the booths will be such as not to detain voters long, and that both the India and the Bengal Governments will observe the day as a holiday, and the private offices will allow facilities to their servants to be present at the polling.

His son having failed at the Civil Service Examination, Mr. F. B. Peacock comes out to India with his hopeful to see him set up as a Barrister-at-law.

SIR Henry Harrison does not move from his place in the Calcutta Corporation, although the 1st of April sees him shorn of his Police baton. His present pay and allowance are Rs. 3,500 a month. As Commissioner of Police he draws only Rs. 1,000. His services to the Corporation have been valued at Rs. 2,000 pay and Rs. 500 house allowance. The lowest pay fixed by the new Act for the Chairman is Rs. 2,500, the highest being limited to Rs. 3,000, exclusive of house rent. The new Corporation must bear the additional Rs. 500, if not more, for the satisfaction of seeing the author introduce his own measures of taxation and sanitation.

THE local Government has recorded a favorable verdict on the Engelbrecht accident in the Medical College Hospital, namely, -

"The medical officers who were concerned in the treatment of the case of Mr. Engelbrecht dealt with it with all due caution; that the chloroform was only administered after every precaution had been taken to safeguard its employment; and that the Assistant Surgeon (Ashoke Krishna Saha, House Surgeon) and Dr. Jameson (the Resident Surgeon) are in no way to blame for the unfortunate accident that occurred."

The case is stated in the Resolution to have been -

"Mr. Engelbrecht entered the Medical College Hospital on the 7th September last, having been advised to submit himself to an operation for hemorrhoids on the following morning. On his admission into the hospital he was carefully examined by the House Surgeon, Assistant Surgeon Ashoke Krishna Saha, who reported that his heart and lungs were sound. On the following morning he was brought into the operating room at 9-30, and told that as the operation would be extremely painful it would be well to administer chloroform to him. He at first demurred slightly, expressing a general dislike of chloroform, but subsequently agreed to take it. His heart was then carefully examined with a stethoscope by Assistant Surgeon Ashoke Krishna Saha and also by Dr. Jameson, the Resident Surgeon who was to conduct the operation, and the result of the examination being satisfactory, the chloroform was administered by means of a cloth cone by the Assistant Surgeon, while Dr. Jameson prepared his instruments. The operation had just been commenced when it was discovered that the patient had ceased to breathe, and all attempts to revive him by artificial respiration or by galvanism proved ineffectual."

The whole business is a disgrace to the Government. The medical department had never much of a character anywhere. O for an hour of Sir Ashley Eden and Sir George Campbell—to deal with the doctors as they deserve! The cue of the present Administration seems to be—to be all things to all interests.

THE Madras High Court lately received an anonymous petition against one Rangamannar Iyengar, Munsiff of Kalletan, in the Trichonopoly district. It was referred to Mr. Austin, Judge of the District, for inquiry. The Munsiff's explanation was taken and the officers and messengers of the Munsiff's court were examined by the Judge, who has sent up his report to the High Court. The Munsiff is accused of having raised subscriptions to celebrate the Ayudha Poojah in his Court and of having appropriated most of the money to himself as also the feeding fees paid by parties on account of animals under attachment, and besides of having obtained help of the peons of his court in the construction of his house, &c.

BEFORE Messrs. Justices Mitter and Macpherson sitting in Criminal Revisional Jurisdiction, a case came on, on Tuesday, which affords a good illustration of the happy go lucky style of administering the country of the great Bureaucracy which never misses an opportunity of singing its praises. Baboo Joygobind Shome, an experienced pleader, and a wise good native Christian, and himself, to his misfortune, belonging to the same Local Government, moved for a rule against the Nowgong Treasury in Assam. The petitioners for whom Mr. Shome appeared, were Holman and Lumbardar, both surnamed Mandal. The head-man of the village of Mikubhulta in which they lived sent them with Rs. 10,120 to pay the sum into the Government Treasury for Government demand on that village. The money was received by the treasurer (Khazanchee) under the Treasury Officer. He said after counting that the amount was correct and told the poor villagers to wait for their receipt. As no receipt was granted after sometime, they inquired and were told that they had deposited Rs. 1,000 less than the sum specified in the memorandum accompanying the money. They complained to the Treasury Officer, who ordered the Police to inquire. The Police naturally wanted to count the cash, but the Treasury Officer would not permit that. The Collector too, instead of granting any investigation, ordered the petitioners to make good the Rs. 1,000 at once. The Commissioner upheld the vagaries of his subordinate and referred the aggrieved to the Criminal Court for remedy against the treasurer (Khazanchee). They then applied to the Deputy Commissioner for permission to sue both the Treasury Officer and his Khazanchee; but the Deputy Commissioner ordered a preliminary investigation by the Extra Assistant Commissioner before issuing a process. These extraordinary proceedings were brought before the High Court and severely commented upon by Mr. Shome. The Court granted a rule on the Treasury Officer and his Khazanchee to show cause why criminal proceedings should not be instituted against them, and has called for the papers in the case.

Last Saturday all Calcutta, including the Viceroy, was out at Ballygunge, to witness the Spencerian ascension. But there was neither the balloon ascent nor the parachute descent. The crowd was immense and the disappointment high. After keeping the visitor expectant for several hours, Mr. Percival Spencer announced there would be no ascent as the gas had fueled him. The Oriental Gas Company and not he was to be blamed for the mishap. The people, as might be expected, were in a rage. They spoke hard things of the entertainer and demanded back the price they had paid. Mr. Spencer must have bagged a large sum as did the hackney carriage owners. Mr. Spencer afterwards offered a free entertainment and Mr. Niven of the Oriental Gas Works, not to be outdone in liberality, offered Mr. Spencer Rs. 2,000 on certain conditions. But they seem not to be agreed as to these terms and the next explanation of there is to be any—is not yet announced, nor how Mr. Spencer means to dispose of the collection of last Saturday. As it is not possible to know all the parties who purchased tickets, there is a suggestion that Mr. Spencer, after deducting the actual expenses, should make over the collection to some public charity. Mr. Spencer has had a full week to mullify his mind, and yet he seems undecided.

Everything said, we are bound to say that no case has been made out for Mr. Spencer's obligation to return the money he got in the usual way. He acted bona fide. Do you get back your money after a bad performance in the theatre?

We have given the names and confounding designations and offices of the several Hyderabad magnates, who had just been to Calcutta, and tried to gauge their respective positions and influence at the Durbar. One of the leading men who did not come, is Moulvi Mehdi Hasan, otherwise called Nawab Futteh Nawaz Jung, the ubiquitous courtier who is titular Chief Justice of Hyderabad, who, during his late visit to England on private affairs, was so lionised as if he were the Nizam himself. While enjoying in Europe, he, with true Hyderabad luck, not only found himself left, by the sudden illness of Nawab Mehdi Ali Khan, in charge of the mining negotiations, but also obtained the promise of promotion, on return home, to the high office of Home Secretary, which this intrepid Kadi coveted more than he cared for the dignity of Chief Justice. He was disappointed, however. It was said that his transfer to the Home Office required the sanction of the Government of India—his services having been lent by our Government to His Highness the Nizam, some 5 or 6 years ago, while he was holding the post of Munsiff in the North West—and such sanction was not granted. Never mind, the man is as lucky as ever. For, it is given out in some of the newspapers, that he has been allowed an increase of Rs. 1,000 to his salary—thereby raising it to Rs. 3,000 a month, as a sop to him for his disappointment in getting Abdul Huj's post.

If this piece of news is correct, how came our Government to permit this extraordinary increase to the nominal Chief Justice's pay, after disallowing his promotion to the Home Secretaryship? Here is a petty Munsiff of British India, who, within 3 years of his transfer to a Native State, manages to become Chief Justice on Rs. 2,000 a month, and gives so much satisfaction in that venerable and venerated office that he is told off to make arrangements for the reception of Lord Dufferin, on his visit to the Deccan—leaving the High Court to take care of itself. Thereafter, he goes on his travels to England, evidently at the expense of the State, and, while there, is entrusted with the conduct of negotiations connected with the mining scandal. It is worth mention that the "good Templars" of the Inns of Court became so enamoured with his extraordinary good luck, that they called to the Bar a man who had never studied English Law, nor passed any examination, nor even eaten the proverbial dinners, though he doubtless gorged a good many influential gourmands with true Oriental pillais and kabobs and the Nizam's Own Chutnies.

And now, to crown all, on his return from England, a thousand Rupies are added to his pay, for doing nothing in the discharge of his duties as Chief Justice, to entitle him to such increase.

Queer things these, to be sure, if not for Hyderabad, at least for the Government of India to sanction. We hope, however, that the report of the increase of pay is not correct.

DURING this week, the eldest daughter of Prince Mirza Jahan Kadir Bahadur was married to Prince Mirza Mahomed Jah Ali Bahadur, the eldest surviving son of His Highness the late Prince Mirza Mahomed Hamid Ali Bahadur, the eldest son and heir apparent of the late King of Oudh. The ceremonies attendant upon the wedding were performed with clat. We may take this opportunity of mentioning that the Government of India have, after all, done some justice to Prince Jahan Kadir, by raising his pension from Rs. 1,500 to Rs. 2,000.

WHEN we saw Nawab Sir Khurshed Jah Bahadur, the premier nobleman of Hyderabad, at the last Garden Party at Government House, given by the Muchness of Dufferin and Ava, wearing a bunch of golden thread on the top of his Hyderabad turban, similar to the one His Highness the Nizam was seen wearing while he was here during the Exhibition, we were surprised with the idea that, being a member of the great Shamsool Omra Family of Hyderabad, he was privileged to wear such a turban, as the turban worn by Sir Salar Jung or his father was a plain one without the golden tassel. But finding Sir Asman Jah, also a member of the Shamsool Omra Family, wearing a plain turban without the golden top, at the recent Investiture, we felt that our theory was not correct. And therefore we have made some enquiries, and are glad that we have solved the mystery. The peculiar golden head dress is only allowed to be worn by the members of the Nizam's Family; and as Sir Khurshed Jah's mother was a daughter of a former Nizam, he, being thus a royal grandson, is considered a member of the Nizam's Family, and as such is entitled to wear that sort of turban. Sir Asman Jah's mother not being a daughter of any Nizam, he is not permitted, although a member of the Shamsool Omra Family, to adopt that honorable head dress.

THE Amban is a grand Pangursham doubtless, when his slightest nods and becks and the most trifling incidents in his personal life, are found important enough for careful record by leading journals. They have discovered that he had last week sent his servant down to market at Calcutta. The principal purchase made is, of course, opium—the condition sine qua non of Celestial existence—but the next makes a great descent from the sublime heights of Olympus to—say, Brummagem. The great Plenipotentiary of the Celestials sent to procure 320 two anna pieces.

Opium may well be supposed to grease the wheels of negotiation. In Bengal, we have a proverb which predicates profound understanding of Tobacco. How much more intellectualising must be the more powerful drug! We have reason to know that many great men in Europe, besides the Sultan of Turkey—authors, journalists, professors, lawyers, merchant princes, diplomats, ministers of Church and State—show their appreciation of it by more or less habitual use. By the bye, was it this agent which was at the bottom of that unexplained passage in the history of the times related by Mr. Kinglake of the Cabinet Council, for the consideration of the final despatch of the British Government to Russia which led to the Crimean War—a conference at which all the ministers of Her Britannic Majesty fell into a profound slumber, in which the important document was adopted? What wonder that opium should play a part in Chinese diplomacy! Probably, it was the want of it that has caused the fate of the late negotiations about Tibet. It is most discreditable to the tact of our Government that the Amban should, in our territory or near it, be pressed for opium. How is a Celestial Envoy to preserve the even serenity of his temper and the balance of his understanding, under such a miserable situation? It is positively inhospitable in us that he should be compelled to send all the way to Calcutta for the necessary article. The Lieutenant-Governor should have, as his first act of courtesy, made his Ambanship a present of some chests of his best Patna. He would have therein found his advantage in the negotiation with the stranger.

We should not be surprised to hear that the Amban's servant found considerable difficulty in making his purchase. He might even get into a scrape into the bargain. Our excise law on the subject of opium is a disgrace. It entails trouble on many a subject of the Crown, specially in Assam and Central India, who are habituated to take it in large quantities, and need to keep a sufficient store as the grosser patrons of inebriating fluids keep cellars—but are not permitted by law to do so. A Mandarin must consume the drug by pounds per week. That is probably why the Amban could not procure it in sufficient quantities at Darjeeling.

But why so many 2 anna pieces? Three hundred and twenty are not enough for charity. The Englishman knows all about it. They are for buttons.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1889.

THE LATEST HYDERABAD INTRIGUE.

SIR ASMAN JAH has come and gone. The public naturally enquire, why he came, what he has done whilst here, and why has he gone away so quickly? Quickly, we say—as it does not seem that his presence is urgently required at Hyderabad; for, had it been so, he would not have arranged to visit various cities in the North West on his way home, and timed his return to Hyderabad on the 20th instant, as given out by some of the dailies. He left Calcutta by the morning train of the 4th, after a stay of 11 days; and were he so inclined, he could have easily stopped here for another 11 days. The Hyderabad people and Hyderabad politics are both very mysterious. All we can do is to try to satisfy the curiosity of the public with the scanty materials in our possession, to the best of our power. The Hyderabad mining scandal is the burning question of the day, and the Supreme Government has now to pass the final orders for its settlement. The Nizam has been well plundered by the notorious Abdool Huq and the Watson fraternity, with the help or connivance of some of the highest Anglo-Indians, both in India and in England; the amount of money acquired by these men seems to be fabulous. The Commission appointed in London to investigate the origin and progress of this gigantic swindle, have come to a most unsatisfactory conclusion; and we are told that the Nizam's Government have agreed to come to a settlement with the concessionaires and the numerous body of English shareholders, which may be fair to all parties interested in the mining business. Two schemes, we hear, have been prepared for the purpose, both with the help of some of the most accomplished lawyers. One is by Moulvi Mehdi Ali (Nawab Mohsinool Moolk) and the other by Moulvi Mehdi Hasan (Nawab Futteh Nawaz Jung). The former is the Financial and Political Secretary of the Hyderabad Government, and acknowledged to be the ablest man in the Deccan. He was the right hand man of the late Sir Salar Jung, and having held the most important posts at Hyderabad, for more than than 15 years, has managed, by his singular ability, to keep up his position, during the various changes that have taken place in the Administration of that State, since the death of his late chief, and in the midst of intrigues of the most formidable character. The latter, who was a petty Moonsiff in Oudh, on Rs. 200 a month, was brought into the service of the Nizam by the former (Mehdi Ali) only 5 or 6 years ago, and was provided with a post in the Judicial Department. As he proved of great personal service to the young Salar Jung, he was, within a short time, promoted by that boy minister to the office of Chief Justice, on a monthly salary of Rs. 2,000. Whilst holding this post, he was deputed to make arrangements for the reception of Lord Dufferin, when that Viceroy paid a visit to the capital of the Nizam. This man has an English or Eurasian wife, and with her he went to England on a pleasure trip. About this time, Moulvi Mehdi Ali was sent to England by the Nizam's Government to look after its interests and to represent it at the meetings of the Parliamentary Commission. Whilst the mining question was still being discussed at London, he (Mehdi Ali) got seriously indisposed, and was ordered by his medical advisers to return to India quickly. Mehdi Hasan, who was still on leave, and enjoying the sweets of London society, was, in the absence of Mehdi Ali, pitchforked into his place, by easygoing Sir Asman Jah, on the recommendation of his protégé and "chum," Moulvi Mushtak Hosein (Nawab Intisar Jung), the Revenue Secretary, although he had had no previous knowledge whatever of the intricacies of the mining business. This Mushtak Hosein, by the way, is, at the present moment, the most powerful, certainly the most influential, man in the Deccan, being the only individual in whom Sir Asman Jah reposes entire confidence, and under whose advice alone he acts. He is another of Mehdi Ali's protégés. Whilst holding the post of an Amlah in some Court in the North West, he was brought over by Mehdi Ali to Hyderabad, and there, after filling some subordinate post, he entered the service of Sir Asman Jah (then Nawab Basheerood Dowlah). Once, we believe, he was sent away from Hyderabad under the orders of the Resident, for going to Simla, without the knowledge and permission of that authority; but managed, after a year or two, to return to his master at Hyderabad. Since Sir Asman Jah's elevation to the Prime Ministership, Mushtak Hosein has been gradually rising in importance, and is now not only the guide, philosopher and friend of the Prime Minister, but the virtual ruler of the Government of the Nizam. Mehdi Hasan is a friend of Mushtak Hosein, and through his influence bids fair to prove another Abdool Huq.

After Abdool Huq's dismissal from the post of Home Secretary, Moulvi Syud Ali Belgrami B.A.—the younger brother of Moulvi Syud Hosein Belgrami (Nawab Imadood Dowlah) Director of Public Instruction—was put in to officiate as the Home Secretary. Whilst Mehdi Ali was on his way back to India, and Mehdi Hasan was in England, the latter's patron, Mushtak Hosein, managed to get him appointed to the post of Home Secretary in Abdool Huq's place. When Mehdi Ali returned to India, and found that this extraordinary appointment had been made, during his absence, he represented the matter to higher authorities, and the result is, that the portfolio of the Home Office has not been made over to Mehdi Hasan on his return from England.

With respect to the rival projects in the field, without hazarding ourself into details, it may be roundly stated that by Mehdi Ali's scheme, the Nizam's loss in this mining business will be much less than by Mehdi Hasan's scheme, the latter having been framed, we are told, in such a shape, that Watson, Huq & Co. will be enabled to retain a substantial share of the booty. The Resident too thinks that the former will be safer and more economical for the State.

Both these schemes were placed in Sir Asman Jah's hands, and he made them over to his factotum, Mushtak Hosein for report. The latter has supported his friend Mehdi Hasan's scheme, and the Prime Minister has accordingly approved of it, throwing over the one prepared by Mehdi Ali. The Resident, Mr. Howell, has, on the other hand, approved of Mehdi Ali's scheme, and hence the disagreement between the Minister and the Resident, on this most important question of the day for the Hyderabad State. And hence it is that the question having been referred to the Government of India for final settlement, both the Minister and the Resident came all the way to Calcutta, personally to represent their respective views to the Foreign Secretary and the Viceroy. Mehdi Ali, Mushtak Hosein and Syud Ali Belgrami accompanied them.

Most important issues are involved in the decision of the Government of India. In the event of the Viceroy deciding in favor of Mehdi Hasan's scheme, the Resident goes out. For it will shew that His Excellency has no confidence in his own representative, or that the latter is incapable of grasping the difficulties of the question and arriving at a correct conclusion. As a result, Mr. Howell must vacate his post, as it would not be honorable for him to continue there after such a signal defeat. While, on the other hand, if His Excellency favours the scheme prepared by Mehdi Ali, and supported by Mr. Howell, Sir Asman Jah is sure to resign, as he cannot continue in his post any longer with dignity. We may observe in passing, that the chief party interested in this gigantic financial arrangement, viz., the Nizam, has no share whatever in this controversy. The question before the Government is one of extreme difficulty and importance, and is sure to be dealt with by the Foreign Office with the greatest possible delicacy, care and consideration. The world, both here and in Europe, is watching the struggle of parties and interests over it, with intense curiosity, and Lord Lansdowne's reputation as a distinguished statesman will be firmly established if he can deliver a just judgment, without fear or favour.

The above will give some idea of the reasons why Sir Asman Jah came to Calcutta. What he has done during his stay here, is not easy to say. He has certainly had interviews with His Excellency the Viceroy and Sir Mortimer Durand, but from his short stay here, we do not think he has exchanged visits with all the members of the Supreme Council and other high European officials, as the late Sir Salar Jung, or his son or even Sir Khurshed Jah had been in the habit of doing. He did not give the leaders of native society an opportunity of seeing him and forming an estimate of his character and ability, and by keeping away from the Evening Party at Government House, he disappointed the élite of Calcutta society, both Native and European, who were legitimately curious to know what metal he is made of. Our information is, that he has left behind a rather unfavorable impression upon Calcutta society.

Why he has left Calcutta so soon, passes us. Although he left Calcutta on the morning of the 4th, he will not reach Hyderabad before the 20th instant. He will be visiting Bardwan, Benares, Lucknow, Ajmere, Burhanpore and Bombay on the way. He had ample time to see and be seen at Calcutta. Probably, he was not pleased with his reception at the metropolis. The Viceroy did not pay him a return visit. He was not received at the railway station by any European official, not even by an Under-Secretary or an Assistant Magistrate. We were surprised to learn that even the leaders of his own community did not do him the honor of receiving him and seeing him off at Howrah. So far as we are able to gather, the only courtesy shewn him from the Mahomedan community, consisted of a couple of dinners given him by Nawab Abdool Lutef Bahadoor and Mr. Ameer Ali, the one in the Indian and the other in the English style.

As for the heads of the Hindoo community of the metropolis, we have not heard of a single individual having waited on him, or received a visit from him. The actual ruler of the largest Native State in India, to be thus treated, in the capital of India, may well cause him disappointment, and have hurried his departure. But whose fault was it? Perhaps, his own. His fame apparently preceded him, and he himself did not care to qualify it. Mr. Howell, we believe, is still in Calcutta.

THE SQUABBLE OVER THE FLYING MAN

IN that no very brilliant scrap of lampoon extant in British literature, in which the boy Shakespeare, before he had become father of the man—in the Wordsworthian sense—revenge himself upon a rural Honorary Magistrate, Sir Thomas Lucy, for punishing him for poaching in a deer preserve, the lispng poet sings—almost as the burden of his verse—

If low as is Lucy, as some folks mis-calle it,
Then Lucy is low as, whatever befall it.

Be that as it may, or may have been, Spencer is not Spenser, nor Percival, Edmond any more than Herbert. Indeed, closely examined, Percival is not Perceval. Notwithstanding, Percival Spencer is a fine adroit combination, which proves that, whether its owner is an aeronaut or not, he is an adept in the mysteries of the profound science of Nomenclology. Without an absolutely false pretence, there is all the advantage of an illustrious odour. Percival Spencer is an exceedingly good name, carrying associations at once noble and literary; it is cumulatively aristocratic. The Spencers are well known in the British Peerage, and a Perceval was a Premier in this century. Its literary suggestion is of the highest, recalling England's quadret of Poets of the first rank as well as her greatest philosopher. Although the composition of poetry is obviously a different business from the occupation of amusing a gaping world, or a society eaten up with emma (whiskey pegs, endless lawn-tennis and the Columbian Rink notwithstanding) with breakneck ascents and jumps, yet the Faery Queen may not disdain to look with kindly interest on the efforts of one of human kind to float in the empyrean. So far so good. But what's in a name, if the thing is not good? What is the good of Percival or Spencer, or even of the joint force and full result of all—what is the cumulative importance of Christian name and surname—if the bearer proves more incapable than your every-day Brown or Jones? If a rocket does not go off and mount straight and high, there is no consolation in the thought that it is of Armstrong manufacture. If the Flying Dutchman does not take wing for your behoof, Myndeer may be the Prince of Orange himself, but cannot escape ridicule and contempt and mobbing. If a balloon evinces an unconquerable disposition to cling to the earth, not all the blood of all the Howards will save it from popular vengeance.

Percival.....Spencer, indeed! Fiddlesticks! We were among the seven wise men of the East (including, if we are correctly informed, the Honble Law Member) who were left on Saturday last in this deserted metropolis on the occasion of the Exodus of all Calcutta and the suburbs to the plain of Bullygunge to witness the flight of Elijah and the fall of Lucifer! So being without a sense of personal grievance, on the contrary having profited in the way of strengthening our wisdom and virtue by the fate of those who ought to have known better, and indeed having, on the principle of Rochefoucauld, rather enjoyed the disappointment and distresses of friends, who waited the whole afternoon sweltering in the sun and then—thanks to our blessed Calcutta arrangements, whether at Government House or out of it—not finding their carriages notwithstanding a tedious search in the dark, we have no occasion to swear. But on the night of the 2nd instant, there was a discharge of profane language that in England would have made old Thurlow turn in his cold grave. Mr. Spencer if he were stone-deaf, could not fail to hear it or to understand its objective. The newspapers have since Monday kept up the parable. It were well for the poor aeronaut that, instead of Percival Spencer, he had been Spencer Percival. "At Home," he would have stood a good chance of meeting with the fate of his namesake by transposition. But, there was no Bellingham at Bullygunge. Having escaped with life and limb, he is now master of the situation. The disappointed legion are now trying to bully him into surrender of the cash he has bagged at their expense, but it is only a case of "Don't ye wish ye may get it?" He no doubt was in downright mortal danger for an hour or so about nightfall on the 2nd instant. He might have been mobbed, ducked in the nearest pond, or slated or chaired or hung on the nearest tree, say in Judge Beveridge's garden, and his earning might have been looted, but he escaped with only a furious slanging and the loss of some chairs. And now he can defy the world. A man who habitually risks his life is not to be terrified by letters in the Indo Daily News or the Statesman, or for that matter by any editorial thunders. Nor, we think, is it fair to one who undertakes such a hazard for your sickly crave for "sensation," to expect him to put with what has come to him in a legitimate way. There seems to us to lurk an element of envy, unconscious in the case of many doubters, in the public indignation against the poor man. If there were any fraud in the business, our opinion would be different. We certainly do not pity those who have lost their money. They did not pay for a legitimate purpose. Their disappointment has probably been the saving of one human being.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

VII.

The beginning of the end: The European Workers.

I have fairly come to the beginning of the end, and rejoice in anticipation. Not that writing for the press is a task soirk one that the prospect of the completion of the survey whereon I am engaged, hasty and necessarily imperfect as it is, relieves me of pressing dead-weight. By no means so. This history of the Congress is a labour of love with me. And yet like a weary way-worn traveller, who, after many wanderings and meanderings and digressions, is at last in view of the promised land of destination, my heart leaps with joy even to contemplate the approaching end of a modest beginning. The subject to which I have given the lion's share of my thought, required a peculiarly delicate handling, of which before this I thought I was not capable. To provoke the ire of one, to excite the envy of another, to rouse a third's jealousy—with such a hideous prospect I started. Every syllable, I had to utter with bated breath! I had to break through a prevailing fetishism, to remove deep-seated and widespread prejudices, to clear misapprehensions and to cleanse the dirty linen. I would not say I have been able altogether to avoid angry comments, but I shall certainly say that, if there have been comments made, angry or otherwise, they have been mostly of a character which can never be avoided, though they can safely be ignored. The tongue of calumny can never be silenced, and the pen of wronged prejudices and exploded devices and clever subterfuges that dips itself deep into the venom of misguided ambition or mischanced patriotism, into the vitriol ink of narrow and mean bigotry, can never be made to lie at rest. I shall not address myself to the defence of self from such tongues and such pens; for defence against these is generally a signal for fresh offence on their part. I shall therefore baffle them by taking no notice of them—leaving them to die a natural death so to speak in the cold shade of neglect. But I feel I must refer in a few words to the criticism of a wholly different kind to these. The friendly remonstrances I have always welcomed, nay for want of them I have actually courted even unfriendly ones. A morbid anxiety to avoid them is generally an evidence of weakness, a proof of want of vitality in the man and want of confidence in the faith of his professions. Well, one of these accuses me of being unnecessarily hard upon Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee. What do you think I wrote to him in reply? Why this: but can you say I have been unjustly so? How, he went on remonstrating, how could I be so oblivious of his past services to the country? I could only ask him to quote chapter and verse to prove that I have really ignored his single past work—name, as they say in Parliament. I fully appreciate his wonderful power and "Boulanger" influence. By his many qualities of head and heart, he is capable of better things than the tinkling harmony of "wordy nonsense" (I have quoted Mr. Telang). If ever Mr. Caine writes a review of the Congress speeches, I am sure his remarks on Mr. Surendra Nath's oratory will be found to support those of mine. In fact, of the dozen eminent men I have consulted on the subject, I could find only one who could be accused of "Boswellism" and blind hero-worship to Surendra Babu, and he is the Hindustani Vice-President of a first class Municipality of these Provinces. Am I then to be blamed for error of judgment? Even my worst critics must concede in that case that I have erred in good company. Maturer consideration of the subject has taught me that it may be that "Orator Surendra Babu's" line is agitation and not deliberation. Ever since the great contempt of Court case, his writings have been tamely and monotonously inoffensive. But in his speeches, there is the same fire and the same fury observable—he is the same stump-orator, the American equivalent for the English tub-orator. For what he has done in the past, in the way of preparing the field for political reforms, the country is "under a debt immense of endless gratitude" to him; but in the economy of Providence, there is time and season, place and circumstances for everything. What was useful in the past, may not be so in the present, much less in the future. The world is progressing, and we ought to move along with it.

The old order chngeth, yielding place to new.

This is his own watch word, borrowed from Tennyson. His mission and his work lay in the past. This compliment ought to satisfy him, he should not aspire for more, for he deserves no more. Let it not be supposed that I depreciate him because I do not propitiate him by false praises, by burying him, as Carlyle puts it in his famous work Heroes and Hero-worship, under the primrose bed of praises. Believe me, there is nothing so demoralising as eulogy, and undue eulogium does wrong to the bestower as well as the receiver. The object of praise is full of exaggerated notions of his over-weening self importance and self worth in the one hand, and the eulogist's heart is more and more depraved on the other hand. The one lives upon it, and the other feeds upon it. It is only the fools that praise, and he who is praised is only fooled to the top of his bent! I wish him to see improved, because I wish to see him better admired. In short, I have criticised him adversely, because I do not like to see him fall from the high pedestal of popular favour which he hitherto occupied. I have warned him as a friend and an admirer of many things that are good and great in him, and do not "judge it" as the slang expression of sailor's puts it; and if he is wise in his generation, he will doubtless have to exclaim before long:

Faithful are the wounds of a friend.

Another well-meaning critic has severely rated me for having a hard and home-thrust, though insidious, hit at "poor and patriotic Norendra." Now, with regard to him, I was compelled to say that "ev'n his failings lean'd to virtue's side;" but they are failings all the same. He is an alarmist of the worst kind, a writing editor with a good deal of fire of a fighting editor in him, he is hasty in his judgment and therefore very often wrong in his conclusions. I know even his worst detractors will have to concede that

Unpractised he to fawn, or seek for power;
By doctrines fashion'd to the varying hour;
Far other aims his heart had learn'd to prize,
More bent to raise the wretched than to rise.*

I happen to know as a fact that, for his "bold," though honest, independence, he was highly respected even by Lord Dufferin.† I myself belong to the forward school; so I cannot be charged with depreciating his worth. I only say, that as the editor of the only daily native paper, he has a serious and solemn responsibility resting upon his shoulders. He will be held responsible before God and man as to how he discharges his trust. By his position, he ought to lead. The duties of a leader, as I understand them, are not indeed to go deliberately against the current, but to be prepared very often to forfeit popular favour by having to sail against the prevailing current. He has to lead, not to follow. The essentials of a leader are sobriety of thought and action, originality of ideas and principles, and the tact to make his speculations adopted by the world at large. I have spoken out my mind because I expect that, outspoken as he himself is, he will appreciate my remarks. Leadership does not imply that the leader should be above and beyond the canons of criticism. He ought to hear everything patiently and attentively, but he need not be guided by whatever he hears. He should, above all, never put his unquestioning trust on hearsay evidence, that turns out to be at least as often false as true. Other criticisms that have been made upon me are not worth the name of criticisms. So I need not notice them. This you will say is an elaborate defence by itself. I say, this is not so much a defence as the avoiding of offence. I have not been so much "exercised" by them, as amused and instructed. They are indicative of the interest my letters have excited, and, more than that, are evidence unmistakable of the popular appreciation of the general tone and spirit in which they were conceived. As such I accept them thankfully.

I have advisedly spoken of European workers and not speakers; for now they do not only speak, they also work. They have outlived the talking stage. This is one most noticeable feature in them. From their very position, they could not do otherwise. They are regarded by the members of their own community as little better than "Adullanites," though really they are so many "Abdiels." We, the children of the soil, can affect enthusiasm and love for our country without being really enthusiastic and patriotic at heart. With many of us this may be a means to a desired end. With the European members of the Congress, however, this is not possible. From the moment they join the ranks of the Congresswallahs, they are regarded as "Bibishian" the traitor was regarded in the camp of the Rakhshases. They have to suffer contumely and taunts and jeers, and, being an insignificant minority, have to submit tamely to social ostracisms. None would care to

* Nonsense! What a base use of such a fine passage in English literature to apply it to such a man. We suppose we may be allowed to be among the worst detractors, and we do not concede even honesty of purpose, any more than dignity of conduct or wisdom, to these selfish firebrands. We might go further because we know. The enthusiasm for the particular party in question is one of the strangest delusions current, showing a decline among us in penetration into character and proving how we are apt to be misled by sound and fury. These are not matters for public discussion, or else the truth might be made clear to ordinary capacity.—ED. R. & R.

† Another of the numerous myths started by designing folk, and seized with avidity by a certain class of politicians. Herein Lord Dufferin's fate is almost unique, or he shares it only with Mr. Parnell. He is always being characterised as a typical diplomat, his policy is deep and secret unfathomable. And yet it would seem as if he always wore his heart upon his sleeve for every passing daw to peck at! It needs no ghost of a—to tell anyone with a modicum of intelligence, what the late Viceroy thought of the valiant Norender.—ED. R. & R.

elect such a lot so uninviting and disagreeable, unless profoundly impressed with the importance of the cause, the moral force of its basal principles, and the righteousness of its demands. Such a three-fold consciousness of one's duties and one's moral responsibilities presupposes a high order of moral rectitude and a strong moral backbone. He is prepared from the outset to endure no end of blunt satire.

This high appreciation of the duties of citizenship and consequent firmness of soul, constitute a no mean superiority, and this superiority is the secret of the remarkable difference observable between the general level of the two sections of Congressists—European and Native. This also explains for the enthusiastic love with which they applied themselves to the discussion of the several problems before the Congress. They were not half-hearted or lukewarm, for if it were possible for them to be so, they would not at all be in the Congress camp. We are self-regarding Indians, they are cosmopolitan foreigners. Their speeches as a whole exhibit a wider knowledge, a deeper study of the subject, and betoken a careful preparation of the case on the part of the speakers. They were therefore generally brief and to the point. Not only was the general level of knowledge higher, but also the method of treatment better. Everyone had not only something to say, but said that something briefly and pointedly. Perhaps, our European colleagues were less courteous and cautious in the use of their words and more rudely outspoken, than their Native conferees. Nor, if we except perhaps one, was there any offensiveness in their delivery. There was an entire absence of violent gestures or animated emptiness and vacuity of thought. Their adhesion to the Congress cause, is not only a source of strength to us, but is an earnest of the moral triumph that inevitably awaits us in the near future, the crown of olive which, as the crown of glory, will be ours before long. Our obligations to them are great, and their heroic self-sacrifice ought to excite our love and respect for them. Here the harvest is great, but the labourers are few. May their number increase!

B.

MONGHYR.

Jamulpur, 27th February, 1889.

The Consulting Engineer to Government for Guaranteed Railways, accompanied by the Chief Engineer of the E. I. Railways and other officers of the Co., was out from head-quarters Calcutta by special train for inspection of way and works on the line, and arrived at this station on Saturday evening, the 23rd instant. During their stay here, they paid a visit to Monghyr. Whilst at Loco. Works on Monday last the 25th, a number of cast iron sleepers manufactured in the Loco. Foundry were placed before them for test with a view to compare their durability and quality with those of English make. This being an important item of castings, of which a large number are turned out annually and used both on single and double lines, now in lieu of the wooden ones in use heretofore, it is creditable to remark that the test stood to the entire satisfaction of those present on the occasion, the Jamalpur sleepers standing the test by the falling weight of 3½ cwt from a height of 14 feet. The long tailed of and anticipated reduction in the clerical staff of the various offices attached to the Loco. Department, has at last fall a on the shoulders of poor Karams. No less than 50 clerks, the major portion of them being Bengalees, have been served with a month's notice, owing to the reduction of the establishment, and more I hear are to share the same fate later on, their salaries ranging from Rs. 20 to Rs. 150 and services from 2 to 30 years. It is needless to over-rate the critical position and circumstances in which they have just been placed by being thrown out of employ. Suffice it to say that the blow all of a sudden received by them, is too severe, especially in the present hard times. Besides, many of these have now become grey-headed in the service of the company. Had it been the Government Office, the poor souls, most of them, would have been fairly entitled to half pension by this time. I understand that the said reduction has been made under Government pressure, with a view to the introduction of State Railway system of accounts. The E. I. Railways daily earn, if I mistake not, over a lac of Rupees (both from coaching and goods traffic) and the amount thus saved by discharging a few poor clerks, would come to a few thousands only annually, which is like a drop in the ocean. A reduction is all that is requisite, is there no means by which the company can gain materially instead of dispensing with the services of a few ill paid clerks? I hope the company will not be wanting in their usual kindness to grant the men some substantial bonus or gratuity for the services rendered.

CORPORATION OF THE TOWN OF CALCUTTA.

1. Notice is hereby given that the lease and occupation for the term of three years, beginning from the 1st April 1889, of a plot of Land for carrying on the business of skinning the carcasses, boning the carcasses, and drying and crushing bones of animals collected from the town of Calcutta, and such like process, will be put up to public auction at the Municipal Office, at noon of Friday, the 22nd March 1889.

2. The purchaser will be required to sign an agreement and to deposit as security a sum equivalent to two months' rent as soon as his bid is accepted and thereafter the rent must be paid on the 5th day of each and every month following that in respect of which the rent is due.

3. The plot of Land may be of any dimensions that may be agreed upon as necessary for the intended business and will be situated at the east end of what is called the "Central Channel" running through the square mile, the property of the Corporation at the Salt Water Lakes.

4. The arrangements and plot proposed by the lessee for carrying on his business would be subject to the approval of the Municipal Commissioners.

5. The contract will include the cattle and carcasses brought to the platform from the portion of the suburbs to be amalgamated with the town as well as from the town.

JOHN COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.

5th March, 1889.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Sealed Tenders for the supply of 3½ laes cubic feet of Indigenous Stone, during the official year 1889-90, will be received by the Vice Chairman, and will be opened by him in the presence of Tenderers who may wish to attend, at 2 P. M. on the 13th instant.

2. The Stone is to be obtained from Rajmehal hills, broken so as to pass freely in all directions through a ring 2 inches in diameter, and to be delivered and stacked in the Municipal Depôts at Bagbazar or Nuntoldh. The quality of the Stone must not be inferior to that now being supplied, sample of which can be seen at the Municipal Depôts. Tenderers for supplying Stone of this quality from any other place than Rajmehal may be considered.

3. Each Tender may be for 10,000 cft. or in multiples of this quantity, and to be accompanied by sample of Stone in a sealed bag, and earnest money Rs. 120 per every 10,000 cft. of Stone to be tendered for, to be enclosed with each Tender.

4. The successful Tenderer must sign a deed of contract, duly stamped and registered at his own expense.

5. The Commissioners do not bind themselves to accept the lowest or any Tender.

6. Any other information required can be had on application.

UDOY NARAIN SINGHA,
Superintendent of Stores.

8th March, 1889.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Supply of Straw and Hay for Govdhar mis.

Tenders for the supply of Hay and Straw for one year, from the 1st April 1889 to 31st March 1890, are invited and will be received by the Vice-Chairman up to noon of the 15th March. Covers to be superscribed "Tender for Hay and Straw."

Specification and Form of Tender to be had on application at the office of the Health Officer.

Rupees 200 to be deposited as earnest money with each Tender.

The Commissioners do not bind themselves to accept the lowest or any Tender.

JONH COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Supply of Crushed Food for Cattle.

Tenders for the supply of Crushed Food for Cattle for one year, from 1st April 1889 to 31st March 1890, are invited and will be received by the Vice-Chairman up to noon of the 15th March. Covers to be superscribed "Tender for Crushed Food."

Specification and Form of Tender to be had on application at the office of the Health Officer.

Rupees 500 to be deposited as earnest money with each Tender.

The Commissioners do not bind themselves to accept the lowest or any Tender.

JOHN COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.
7th March, 1889.

Price by post 8½ annas.

ASRUKANA

A Collection of poems in Bengali by SRIMATI GIRINDRAMOHINI DASSY (Author of Kabutar, Bharat Kusum.)

Asrukana is a collection of poetical pieces of singular pathos and beauty of expression * * It is a series of mournful songs that the reader is here presented with and they must touch a sympathetic cord in every heart that can feel. There is a singular appropriateness in the title of the work, and in its pious dedication to the memory of the husband of the fair writer. The Indian Nation.

The authoress is not unknown to Bengali readers. She has already published two or three poems by which she is favourably known, but between these poems and this is a difference that hardly admits of being measured.

This is poetry in life

We have read Srimati Girindra Mohini's poems in a reverential spirit. The poems are all of a lyrical description. The lyre is soft, sweet and tender, but awfully strong.

The tone of the poems is inexpressibly gentle, inexpressibly pure, and inexpressibly tender and affectionate. It is the tone of a world mother.

Bengal should be proud of this poem—The Calcutta Review.

Apply at the Bee Press,

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Calcutta.

ARMY CLOTHING DEPARTMENT.

Alipur, March 1889.

Sealed tenders are invited for the supply of stores and embroidery more or less as may be required, viz., stores for the year 1889-90 and embroidery for the triennial period commencing from 1st April 1889.

2. Tenders will only be received in the printed forms which are obtainable at this office. Blanks in the printed form must be filled up correctly.

3. Each tender must be accompanied by a Bank of Bengal or Government Treasury deposit receipt in the name of the Superintendent for Rs. 100 as earnest money. Cash or notes cannot be accepted in lieu.

4. The lowest tender will not necessarily be accepted, any tender may be accepted in whole or in part.

5. Any person whose tender may be accepted will be required to execute a bond and to give security in Government Promissory notes or cash for the due fulfilment of his contract, within one week from the date of acceptance of his tender, in default of which his earnest money will be forfeited. The security will be calculated at 10% on the contract.

6. Any further information required may be obtained, and sealed patterns inspected at the Clothing Agency.

7. Tenders will be opened by undersigned at noon on Monday the 25th March 1889 in the presence of such persons as may desire to attend.

W. H. MACKESY, Colonel,
Superintendent, Army Clothing.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas
or 6 copies for a Rupee.

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS, They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT THOMPSON & CO

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

LITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout.

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co., R Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamers will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 15th inst. inst.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessel should be sent to the Company's Godown at Juggannauth Ghat not later than Thursday the 14th inst.

CACHAR LINE

For particulars of the sailings of this line please apply to the undersigned.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.
The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the F. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the Steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, and Debrooghur on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A tri-weekly service is maintained between Naraingunge and Fenchougunge for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,

Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)

THE CALCUTTA
HOMOEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMOEOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMOEOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THE
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, showing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7.8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7.8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7.8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi Regt, Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7.8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lockets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Velsmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutta, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' DISINFECTANTS:

The best and cheapest Antiseptics, Deodorizers and Cleansers.

Jejes' Perfect Purifier

supersedes Carbolic and other Disinfectants, being much more efficacious, non-poisonous, non corrosive, stainless in use, and cheaper. Prevents contagion by destroying its cause. Instantly removes bad smells. It is an almost unfailing cure for Eczema and other Skin Diseases; and is the best known Insecticide.

Can be had in the various forms of Liquid, Powder, Soap and Ointment.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

prevents infection by destroying its cause, killing the very germs of contagious diseases. It removes instantly all noxious smells, not by temporarily disguising them (as is often the case), but by chemical combination, substituting instantaneously for a poisonous a pure and healthy atmosphere, and thoroughly eradicating the evil.

Agents: -DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press

THE

FALL OF MANDALAY,

BY

ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime Subscribers may register their names with the Publishers

Messrs. PETTIT & Co.,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

11, Old Court House Street;

or Messrs. DIPPIC & Co.,

298A, Upper Circular Road,

CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,

Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION

CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,——

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	in advance	Rs. 12
Half-yearly	"	" 7
Quarterly	"	" 4
Monthly	"	Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy	"	" 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 5 a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager." and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. }

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1889.

} No. 365

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE AMPHITRITE, MAY, 1832.

[From Freilgrath.]

YONDER at anchor see
The Amphitrite lying,
With gaily painted sides,
And crimson streamers flying

Her snowy wings are furled,
The seagod on his breast
Lulls her with kisses soft,
And whispers her to rest.

From eastern coasts afar
The good ship is returned;
She hath braved the storm that blew,
And the tropic sun that burned.

In girdle red, against
The mast the skipper leaneth;
And what a guest doth grace
His craft he little weeneth.

A southern wight that guest,
The young and lusty May;
He hath crossed the deep blue waves,
He is here with us this day

On Indian verdure lapped,
Beneath the odorous shade
Of the banyan thicket's verge,
He saw the anchor weighed

Up leaping then he bound
His sandals on in haste,
Closer his mantle drew,
And the rich shawl round his waist

Into the sea he dashed,
Bravely the surge he breasted,
And till a rope he clutched
Ne'er faltered he or rested.

He swung him light on deck,
Unseen by all the crew;
Straightway at his behest
A pleasant landwind blew.

And now arrived in port,
Quickly the shore he sought.
Marvellous goodly things
This new comer hath brought.

The storks, his heralds, fly,
Proclaiming through the land,
"A wondrous guest is ours,
A wizard treads our strand!"

Bare trees, he clothes in green,
Bare spots with blossoms fills,
Bright tulips, violets dim,
Hambells and daffodils.

The earth arrayed most fair
With thousand hues doth glimmer.
Thanks blithe and hale Lascar!
Right welcome, lusty swimmer!

Yonder at anchor, see
The Amphitrite lying,
With gaily painted sides,
And crimson streamers flying

BETWEEN THE RAPIDS.*

THE shore, the fields, the cottage just the same,
But how with them whose memory makes them sweet?
Oh if I called them, hailing name by name,
Would the same lips the same old shouts repeat?
Have the tough years, so big with death and ill,
Gone lightly by and left them smiling yet?
Wild black-eyed Jeanne whose tongue was never still,
Old wrinkled Picard, Pierre and pale Lisette,
The homely hearts that never cued to change,
While life's wide fields were filled with rush and change.

And where is Jacques, and where is Verginie?
I cannot tell; the fields are all a blur,
The lowing cows whose shapes I scarcely see,
Oh do they wait and do they call for her?
And is she changed, or is her heart still clear
As wind on morning, light as river foam?
Or have life's changes borne her far from here,
And far from rest, and far from help and home?
Ah comrades, soft, and let us rest awhile,
For arms grow tired with paddling many a mile

The woods grow wild, and from the rising shore
The cool wind creeps, the faint wood odours steal,
Like ghosts adown the river's blackening floor
The misty fumes begin to creep and reel.
Once more I leave you, wandering toward the night,
Sweet home, sweet heart, that would have held me in,
Whither I go I know not, and the light
Is faint before, and rest is hard to win
Ah sweet ye were and near to Heaven's gate;
But youth is blind and wisdom comes too late.

* From Among the Millet, and other Poems. By Archibald Lampman. Ottawa.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

Blacker and lofter grow the woods, and bark !
 The freshening roar ! The chute is near us now,
 And dim the canyon grows, and inky dark
 The water whispering from the birchen prow.
 One long last look, and many a sad adieu,
 While eyes can see and heart can feel you yet,
 I leave sweet home and sweeter hearts to you,
 A prayer for Pierre, one for pale Lurette,
 A kiss for Pierre, my little Jacques, and thee,
 A sigh for Jeanne, a sob for Vergine

Oh, does she still remember ? Is the dream
 Now dead, or has she found another mate ?
 So near, so dear ; and ah, so swift the stream :
 Even now perhaps it were not yet too late.
 But oh, what matter ! for before the night
 Has reached its middle, we have far to go :
 Bend to your paddles, comrades ; see, the light
 Ebbs off apace ; we must not linger so
 Aye thus it is ! Heaven gleams and then is gone
 Once, twice, it smiles, and still we wander on.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE Viceroy leaves Calcutta for Simla on the 2nd April. Allahabad and Lucknow have been put down in the programme of tour.

LORD CONNEMARA has received the freedom of Government House. His formidable lady has left for England. His Excellency the Governor was not present on the pier to see her off. It was not polite perhaps—there was no love lost—but a scene was avoided.

COLONEL Nassau Lees—an old “Qui Hye,” latterly an influential “Duck,” and finally a retired Indian at Home—is dead.

SIR DONALD MACKENZIE WALLACE left Calcutta by the accelerated mail train of Wednesday. There were very few to bid him farewell at the railway station. We congratulate the Mirror on the removal of the incubus on its breast.

LAST Saturday there was a free fight in the Wellington Square between one of the Buffs and a student of the Ripon College, in which the Bengali shewed much pluck and courage. If it is due to the training in the College and if the other students can act with equal spirit and resource, it is a good sign. But care should be taken to prevent the boys imbibing a rowdy disposition. That will never do—either for Bengalis, or in British India.

MR. Justice Chunder Madhub Ghose is, ailing from fistula-in-ano. He had suffered much from piles. He has been absenting himself from Court since Wednesday week.

THE East announces twice over, in two consecutive paragraphs, couched in identical terms, verbatim et literatim, the admission of Mr. Eardley Norton into the Calcutta High Court. Is this paragraphical reduplication a tribute to the great tongue of the Congress, just as in Indian usage more than one Shree are prefixed to the name, according to the rank and importance of the parties ? At this rate, Hume the Soul, if he is mentioned once, ought to be named three times three.

MR. BEAUMONT is leaving no stone unturned to get back to the Board of Revenue. If Sir Stewart Baley must be weak, Mr. Smith loses his chance of translation to the Board. Baboo Annada Prasad Ghose from Burdwan comes to the Presidency Commissioner's office as the 1st Personal Assistant, Baboo Amarnath Bhattachajee not being deemed worthy of the responsibilities of the place. Baboo Prankumar Das replaces Baboo Annada in Burdwan, unless the Secretary of State sanctions the appointment of the Excise Commissioner, in which case Baboo Prankumar hopes to continue in the Excise Department.

THE Madras Correspondent of the Southern Star writes :—

“Here is a very startling news for orthodox Tarjore ! Dewan Bahadur Regunatha Row, and Simivasa Row and some other learned men quietly met in Triplicane and resolved upon bringing a Brahmin convert to Christianity back again to his old faith. Such a proceeding cannot but rouse opposition in the mofussil though it has not apparently attracted any attention here.”

The same thing has been done before, in Bengal. A notable instance was that of one Shannaprasad Chatterjea of Bhowanipore, in 1856.

THE veteran Vishwanath Mandlik Sahib Bahadoor has been elected Dean of the Faculty of Law in Bombay. A good choice. Thereupon this foolish paragraph or something to the same purport is going the round of our intelligent Native Press :—

“We are glad to learn that the Bombay University has set a very noble example by conferring on a native of the soil, Rai Sahib Mandlik, the high academic distinction of a Dean. This honor was hitherto exclusively reserved for the English. It is the first time that the Bombay University has chosen a native gentleman for this distinction in consideration of his ability, experience and learning.”

And they are all crying up Bombay at the expense of other academic centres. But it is all wasted breath. These writers confound the office of Dean with the true Doyenship. To reproach Calcutta in this connection for not appointing a native Vice-Chancellor, is beside the point. What Bombay has now done, has often enough been done here.

We read :

“The richest individual is the Czar of Russia, observes a foreign paper, who derives a revenue from his private personal estates of £2,000,000 per annum. Next to him also in Russia, are two noble brothers, who are of a Swiss origin. It was these brothers who saw thousands of acres of land aglow with the light of oil-gas, and at once purchased entire districts of the apparently worthless fields, sunk oil wells, and have now a larger trade of petroleum than any other concern in the world. In Germany, Paris and Vienna, the great banking firm of the Rothschilds tops every other a great deal ahead. The London portion of the firm has the post of precedence contested in London by the Baring brothers, who have ‘at instantaneous command’ £60,000,000, an enormous sum truly to so ‘command.’ The Barings owe their commercial rise to an American Mr. William Bingham, of Philadelphia, who many years ago, had the firm appointed the American Agency in the London business. The united Rothschilds of England and the Continent have loaned to Europe on Governments upwards of £20,000,000 within the last quarter of a century. Their power is shown in a very recent instance. In 1886, the Prussian Government demanded an indemnity of £5,000,000 from the City of Frankfurt. The head of the Rothschild house in that city sent word to Bismarck that if an attempt was made to force the levy he would break every bank in Berlin, and Bismarck was compelled to give way. Among the richest noblemen in Great Britain, the Duke of Westminster stands at the head, with an income variously estimated at from £800,000 per annum to even double that amount. Those next to him are the Dukes of Buccleuch, Devonshire, and Norfolk, and the Marquis of Bute, each of them with a rent roll of from £400,000 per annum to half a million. Finally, we may name Claus Spiceler, ‘the Sugar King of the New World,’ as he calls himself. He is said to derive an income of £1,000,000 a year from his sugar plantations in the Sandwich Islands. His home at Honolulu is like the dreams of a sybarite and his wars are served by an army of negroes. His trade, too, dominates in the islands of the Pacific, and his ships, firms, and assistants may be found everywhere. It is owing to him that Germany has become a power in the Pacific of recent years.”

THE Emperor of Russia, as the richest owner of private wealth in the world, is not, however, neglectful of his responsibility for such possession. He has just distinguished himself by an act of Imperial beneficence. He has given away, to perpetuate the memory of his parents, a million roubles and an estate worth 300,000 roubles a year, to the foundation and maintenance of a blind asylum in St. Petersburg to be called the Alexander-Marian Institute.

What is Her Majesty about ?

THE cashier of the Bombay Small Cause Court has been committed for criminal breach of trust and misappropriation of Rs. 15,000.

THE Bombay Government have, it is said, taken magisterial power from Bhegwant, Balwant, Pradham, Bhankar, Bhalchander, Bapat, and Venkatesh Krishna David, Mamlatdars in the Ahmednuggur District, and five other Mamlatdars of the Poona District, whose names have not transpired.

THE Maharajah of Travancore has given Rs. 4,000 for the improvement of the Library attached to the Patcheappah's College.

MR. J. W. Maclellan, the lucky editor of the North China Daily News, has won 20,000 dollars in the Manila Lottery.

A NEW Polar Expedition from Norway will be despatched, in the summer of 1890, to the North Pole, under the lead of Dr. Nansen.

AN Italian man of science, named Galilæi, in a paper presented to the French Academy of Sciences, claims for Galileo the discovery of the microscope, as well as the telescope. He has stumbled upon a very rare book printed in 1610, according to which Galileo had already directed his tube, fitted with lenses, to the observation of small near objects.

THE Bengal Government proposes to amend 33 and 34 of the rules under the Bengal Tenancy Act, thus :

"33. When the record of rights has been prepared in the manner described in Rules 20 to 32, the Revenue Officer shall cause a draft of the khewat and khattan, or, when more convenient, of each separately, to be published in the following manner :

Notice shall be posted up at the landlord's village office, if there be one, and if there be none, then, in the presence of not less than two persons, on some conspicuous place in the village, stating that the records will be published in the village at a place and time to be specified not less than one week from the date of such notice, and calling on all persons interested to attend on the date so specified. The Revenue Officer shall either proceed to the place so specified himself, and read the contents of the record in the presence of parties who attend, or he shall depute an officer not below the rank of canoongoe, who shall read out the contents of the record in the presence of so many of the parties as attend, and the Revenue Officer or officer deputed by him, as the case may be, shall at the same time inform the parties who attend that the draft record will be open for inspection in the office of the Revenue Officer for one month. The Revenue Officer shall receive and consider any objection which may be made to any entry during this period.

34. When all applications for settling a fair rent have been disposed of, and all disputes of the nature mentioned in Rule 32 have been decided, and all objections of the nature mentioned in Rule 33 have been considered by the Revenue Officer, he shall note in the khewat and the appropriate columns of the khattan in regard to each entry what entries have been, and what entries have not been, the subject of dispute. He shall then finally frame the record and cause it to be published by notifying that its contents will be read out in the village at a time and place to be specified, not less than a week from the date of such notice, and by reading it out himself or causing it to be read in the village on the date so specified, in the manner prescribed in Rule 33 in the presence of the parties, or of so many of them as attend."

Any objection or suggestion from any person to the draft must be submitted to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the Revenue Department, before the 15th April next.

By order of the Lieutenant Governor, the Births, Deaths, and Marriages Registration Act VI of 1880, has been extended to the Sonthal Pergunnahs.

THE first Half yearly Departmental Examination of 1889 of Assistants and Deputy Magistrates and of officers of the Police, Jail, Medical and Forest Departments in the Chota Nagpore Division, will begin at Ranchhee on Monday the 6th May.

THE introduction or sale, without a pass from the Collector, in the District of the 24 Pergunnahs, of country spirit, unless manufactured at the suddi distilleries of Russa and Manicktoila, has been prohibited from the 1st April next, as also the construction or working of any still or the manufacture of spirituous liquor, except at the said distilleries. The same order applies equally to Howrah. There the pass must be obtained from an officer authorized to issue it. The area in the Hooghly District to be supplied from the Hooghly and Serampore Distilleries, under similar conditions, has been defined.

THE Gazette of India of the 9th declares the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon, as the High Court for Upper Burma, in reference to proceedings against European British subjects, for the purposes of Chapter XXIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882. This Chapter treats of Trials before High Courts and Courts of Session and enjoins trial by jury.

THE same Gazette publishes the regulations which have been issued by order of His Majesty the Shah of Persia, regarding the opening up of the River Karun and navigation from Muhammerah to Ahwaz to the mercantile marine of all nations. "The vessels navigating the Karun will carry out the regulations of the Government, which regulations shall hold good for ten years without fail, after which they will be altered according to the exigencies of circumstances." For a steam vessel—for the going and coming—a tonnage of one kran per ton, and, if a sailing vessel, ten shahis as toll and right of way will be levied. Unladen vessels will be charged half tolls. For breach of the regulations, if a steamer 600 Tomans and if a sailing vessel 300 Tomans fine will be inflicted, and the vessel prohibited from the navigation for two years. The transport of arms is absolutely forbidden under the penalty of seizure. "Under no pretext whatever will any vessel have the right to protect any Persian subject in any way." "Persons whose presence is detrimental to order and who would cause difficulties by their presence, should not be in the vessels." Every comer must be provided with a pass from his own Government. Shipowners will not be allowed to erect any coal depôt, warehouse, shop, caravanserai or manufactory on the banks, but they will be built on the part of the Persian Government or Persian merchants. The navigation being "solely for the purpose of facilitating and stimulating trade and nothing else, on this pretext no political discussion, &c., will be allowed." Is His Majesty the Shah competent, alone, to enforce these regulations? His Majesty had to yield to the demand of the friendly Powers, and this is only the beginning of the end.

THE Secretary of State for India has expressed to the Governor-General of India in Council, his "cordial concurrence in the sentiments expressed by you in respect to the skilful manner in which the operations [Field Operations, Hazara] have been conducted, and the satisfactory results that have been achieved, which reflect great credit on General McQueen and the officers and troops under his command." Deploing the loss of "two such excellent officers as Colonel Crookshank and Captain Beley, Lord Cross expresses his satisfaction that "the operations generally have been attended with a comparatively small number of casualties amongst our troops."

IT is said that light clothing will become non-inflammable, by soaking them occasionally in a watery solution of tungstate of soda. Will colour stand the operation? At any rate, this recipe ought to be seriously tried. Modern civilization, with the abundance of clothing it is introducing among us, even in the remotest parts of the country, is not without its peculiar risks. Accidents from fire to women and children are not uncommon, caused usually by an end of the loose light robe or other garment coming in momentary contact with the element. A cheap handy protection from fire would be a great boon to the people.

THE two escaped convicts, Charles Edward Warner and John Healy alias Merton have been arrested and placed before Mr. Musden—thanks to the genius, patience and daring of a Bengal Police officer. They will be committed for their escape. They were arrested by the Sub-Inspector Preonath Mookerjee of the Detective Police. After a long and wearisome tracking from place to place, along the E. I. Railway line from Calcutta towards Rameeungee, he found them in a lane in the village of Jankoon, about 100 paces from the great jungle near the Soosoom hill. How he secured them, we give in his own words to the Magistrate :

"Two Bengal Police constables and 3 or 4 chowkidars were with me. As soon as I saw Warner, I recognized him. I told the constables to remain where they were, while I went round from the back, and arrested Healy. I opened my umbrella to conceal my face, and going from behind threw my arms round Healy, who had a bamboo in his hand. At the same time, I called out to give me my revolver, and I would shoot them if they tried to escape. I had no revolver, but I said this to frighten them. Healy struggled to get away, and we both fell, when I got on the top of him. Healy was eventually secured. The village chowkidars got hold of Warner, and secured him without any trouble. I found on the person of Warner a Bible and an envelope containing a currency note (much soiled) for Rs. 10, Rs. 12 in silver, and Re. 18 in small coin; also a few buttons and some other things. Nothing was found on Healy. The silver I turned in for food, etc., as I had fallen short of money.

Healy himself, who is a daring villain, testifies to the merit of his captor. No European officer, he said in Court, could have succeeded in seizing him as did Baboo Preo Nath Mookerjee.

MRS. PERCIVAL SPENCER has announced his second flight. The place chosen is the Race course, time next Tuesday. This time he will make his own gas.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Rheumatism and Gout.—These purifying and soothing remedies deserve the earnest attention of all persons liable to gout, sciatica, or other painful affections of the muscles, nerves, or joints. The Ointment should be applied after the affected parts have been patiently fomented with warm water, when the Ointment should be diligently rubbed upon the adjacent skin, unless the friction causes pain. Holloway's Pills should be simultaneously taken to diminish pain, reduce inflammation, and purify the blood. This treatment abates the violence, and lessens the frequency of gout, rheumatism, and all spasmodic diseases which spring from hereditary predisposition, or from any accidental weakness of constitution. The Ointment checks the local malady, while the Pills restore vital power.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE sensational news of the week is that Colonel Nisbet, the Resident, has been put in possession of certain letters incriminating the Maharaja of Cashmere in a series of treasonable practices and a plot to poison the late Resident, Mr. Plowden. Colonel Nisbet has come down to Calcutta with the letters. It is all bosh, of course. Sir John Gorst, in the House of Commons, on the 14th, announced that the Government of India attach very little importance to the letters. These letters, it is said, were among the papers made over by the dismissed Dewan Luchman Das to Mr. Spitta, the Lahore barrister, who was employed to clear his conduct and to have him reinstated. Mr. Spitta dying, his widow, knowing no better use of them, disposed of these letters to a native, who, in his turn, revealed them to the Resident. Here, then, is a touch of romance in this bold intrigue to upset the administration, even at the risk of sacrificing the State. The word being passed, the claqueurs keep up the chorus of applause. Once the Pioneer introduced to the world the first crude story, they all (the Allahabad journal included) set to lick it into decent shape and proportions. Much skill has been exercised to give it vraisemblance. It is even said that the Maharaja "did not attempt to deny the charges thus laid against him, but himself proposed a plan under which he should abdicate the gaddi." The said complicity of the Maharaja is now attributed to his feebleness and his absolute resignation to opium and astrologists. Maharaja Pertap Sing is not responsible for what he has done. It matters little whether he is or not. Anything is good enough for a plea to shunt a native Prince out of the way. It is proposed not to depose the Ruler of Cashmere, on proof of guilt, but to deprive him of his sovereign powers as a lunatic, and appoint a Council of Regency over the State.

It is evident enough that many ingenious if not ingenuous people would be glad to get high and lucrative appointments.

IN appreciation of the Fund started in India by the Marchioness of Dufferin and Ava, Her Majesty has presented her Ladyship the Order of Victoria and Albert. The decoration is enhanced by an autograph letter.

THE Parnell Commission has closed, as regards the evidence on behalf of the Times. The perjurer and forger of the Parnell Letters, Pigott, has committed suicide. Another important witness, Coffey, an Irish journalist, deposed to the Commission that the statement he had made to the Times' solicitor and signed, connecting the Land League and Irish Members of Parliament with crime, was a fabrication, intended to deceive the Times and mislead the Government. For the breakdown of the evidence regarding the Parnell Letters, the Eighty Club gave a banquet at which Earl Spencer and Mr. Parnell were the chief guests. The Earl complimented the Irish leader on the vindication of his character. Mr. Parnell, who was received with an "ovation," reiterated that England and Ireland were indissolubly linked. Lord Rosebery characterized the occasion as historic and said that it signalled the burying of ancient national animosity.

THE order for the exile of Duc D'Aumale has been withdrawn by the French Cabinet, the Chamber of Deputies by a large majority upholding the action.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL Sir Charles Warren has been drafted to the Straits Settlements Command.

SOME names are unfortunate as easily liable to corruption, and if appropriate the corruption sticks. The legal profession abounds in examples. What an ungracious name to begin with was Dunning, suggestive of pettifoggery, of importunate boring of clients and solicitors and friends. The evil Fates of Nomenclology pursue the man even after success, so that when he is raised to the peerage, he assumes the no very promising name of Wedderburne, as if one heard Order(to)burn. Sir Vicary Gibbs, the terrible Attorney-General, acquired the pat but far from pet name of Sir Vinegar Gibbs. To take a contemporary instance, Huddleston is bad enough for any one, without pointed manipulation by suffering wit. It is a formidable name for a judicial dignitary in especial. It must have been simply galling to one presiding with prudence and temper. It would seem that, in course of time, there has sprung up an accommodation between the individual and this label. By dint of practice, doubtless, the old Baron has brought himself down to the level of his name. Of late, he is indeed gone to Hurl-stoning from the bench at the head of luckless juniors appearing before it.

THE Home Correspondent of the Indian Planters' Gazette relates:—

"In a case before the Divisional Court last week a junior barrister, whose practice is not so great as he may desire and deserve, was arguing that a 'commercial clerk' when out of employment should not be described as a 'commercial clerk' in a bill of sale. Said Baron Huddleston shortly: 'A barrister is a barrister whether he has any practice or not' (laughter), and upon the counsel mildly observing that he did not think that comparison applied, retorted, 'Then take the case of a scavenger' (more laughter, of course). The kid gloves were not very visible here, and in another case, a few days before, the Baron, commenting on an argument which had been suggested, said that he was 'astonished that any one should be so obtuse as to put it forward' There was certainly some excuse for his impatience here, as, if I remember, the argument was that the conductor of a tramcar might have 'implied authority from his employers to hit people in the eye,' but it has always been one of the traditions of the judicial bench to err on the side of politeness, especially towards the members of that noble army of martyrs, the junior bar."

Well said, Mr. London Correspondent! Well may the camp of the briefless be called the noble army of martyrs! But has it always been the tradition of the judicial bench in Great Britain to err on the side of politeness, especially towards the junior bar? We thought the tradition was the other way. We understood it to be one of the privileges of ermine to tear to tatters and insult all stuffs below silk, unless protected by the prestige of age or what is better than all—eminent success. The juniors were the special butt of ridicule. The Indian practice, at any rate, contradicts the writer. It is the favourite pastime of the Judges to try the patience of unfledged advocates and stuttering forensic orators. Baboo lawyers are, of course, the most welcome victims. Even smart young Civil Servants do not scruple to lay bold hands on them.

THE Indian Press has caught a "lion" or rather lioness and is exhibiting it in the Lady of Gondal in the Bombay Presidency. At the last annual distribution of prizes to the pupils of the girls' school at Gondal patronised by her, she made a speech exhorting the girls to imitate the example of Maitri, Gargi, Lila and other Aryan women of distinction of old in which, she said, it was better to be virtuous without earning than to become learned and vicious. Upon the strength of this respectable if not very novel sentiment, the Indian Mirror makes her out a prodigy scarcely recognizable by her good lord. "The Thakore of Gondal has in his spouse a remarkable lady of culture and refinement." It were a great satisfaction to know that we had among us at least one such superior representative of the gentle sex. Unfortunately, our contemporary, even with the help of the Wandering Parsee, is no judge of the matter. The same paper proceeds—"She is well versed in English and Sanskrit, and intends 'mastering' the French language" as if it were all a joke. Well-versed in English and Sanskrit, besides her own vernacular. If the lady has any feminine vanity, she will hardly be thankful for a compliment which presupposes a considerable length of years. At any rate, taking him at his own word, the editor has made out a case for vacating his seat in favour of the object of his adulation. He ventures into detail about the Sanskrit learning of the lady, with what success the intelligent reader may see. "She has already made considerable progress in the study of the Vedanta and the Puranas." Has she? Then she is indeed a philosopher in petticoat! Perhaps, we may expect her to come to Benares for the Sankhya, and to Nuddea for the Nyaya. The Vedanta and the Puranas do not well consist. But the poor Mirror cannot be expected to know the difference. We will only quote the concluding remark—"We earnestly wish to see the wife of every Native Prince following in the footsteps of the Rani of Gondal." May Vishnu and Indra save our poor Princes! Considering the education of the typical Indian Chief, Hindu or Mussulman, the question will occur to every man of experience—what will he do with a blue-stocking for wife?

A MADRAS District Judge is forcing himself to notice. A party having applied for and obtained a copy of a decree passed by Judge Thorburn (for instituting an appeal in the High Court) lost it and applied for another copy, paying the necessary stamps and copying fees. The Registrar (sheristadar), in due course of business, granted the application and the decree was copied and the document was about to be handed over, when the Judge heard of the matter. All at once he flew into a rage. He suspected the ministerial agency of collusion. He certainly ruled it illegal to grant a second copy. He would not allow it. To relieve himself of all anxiety on that head, with the promptitude of an Inquisitor, he had the document burnt to ashes—by the common hangman, notwithstanding the crying protests of the applicant and his counsel. That may not be law or sense, but it looks like zeal. He did not, however, pass any orders on the fees received. Are they to be received for a Fund for supplying men to coach Indian Judges in their duties? The High Court has called upon Mr. Thorburn to report on the facts stated in the affidavit of the petitioner.

THE public offices under the Government of Bengal, within the new municipal Calcutta, with the exception of the offices of the Collector of Customs, the Collector of Stamp Revenue, the Shipping Master, the Registrar of Assurances, and the Salt Rowannah Department of the Board of Revenue, were closed yesterday on account of the elections. The Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court was applied to to close the Court, but he would not accede to the request. The Lieutenant-Governor was next moved—in vain. The great Mahadeo of the Administration would not move. Sir Stuart Bayley declined to interfere with the discretion of Mr. Millet. Weak! Here was just the occasion on which the Judge's discretion was not worth anything in particular, and on which the Executive Government might well interfere with the Court, to good purpose, but, nevertheless, the Lieutenant-Governor shrinks from exercising his discretion for fear of giving offence to officialdom—the fortunate men who divide the loaves and fishes between themselves. Yesterday was an epochal day in Calcutta, when not only the new Act which annexes to it the Suburbs and changes the municipal constitution, was first tried, but the experiment of voting in propria persona at the polling station was introduced. No sympathetic ruler who knows the people and cares for the great experiment, would think of grudging the trifling indulgence for facilitating it. The Chief Justice of the High Court was more complaisant, if not absolutely sympathetic, but he could not rise to the height of the argument. He gave one hour's leave, holding Court from 12 O'clock in the day.

THE elections yesterday went off quietly. There were no street fights and the appearance of thoroughfares was such as to preclude all idea that a new Corporation was being ushered into existence by the suffrages of the people. At the polling stations, however, there was more excitement than on previous occasions, for this time the voters had to attend personally to elect their representatives. But for the arrangements made, greater enthusiasm would have been visible. These prevented any gathering of voters or lookers on. The list of voters published does not give a true idea of the electoral strength of the town. It was carelessly and hastily done up. The dead were not eliminated. The living have been ignored. The corrections were made at haphazard. It is a real grievance that timely notice was not issued from the Municipal office. Everything was reserved, as if of purpose, till the last moment. The numerous and important class of owners of the soil and fixtures thereon—the only class having a permanent state in the town—has been disfranchised wholesale. House owners, as such, have been deprived of their power of voting. Every application for registration of name for the list was disallowed, because the name given was not in the assessment books of the Corporation; in other words, because no application for change of name had been made in time—in times past. The Chairman, it seems, was bent on economy and left it to the candidates to rouse the town for the election. In ordinary times, this extraordinary indifference would have been embarrassing enough. There being a change in the law, the candidates were at a loss how to proceed for want of necessary knowledge. The arrangements, however, for the polling were not in keeping with the previous action of the Chairman. Here Sir Henry Harrison was more awake to the convenience of the public. Each Ward had its own station and each candidate his own table, and instructions were issued to the polling officers not to allow any crowd round the tables to interrupt the business of the day. The schools of the town were chiefly utilised for the polling stations. Three of the Wards had no polling stations, for there was no contest. At the commencement of the polling, as soon as it was observable how the contest would lie, in 3 or 4 Wards the superfluous candidates announced their withdrawal—a prudent step in their own interests and to the relief of the other candidates and the polling officers. In the other Wards—notably in our own Eleven—the contest was kept up till 6 in the evening when the polling closed. Two of the native candidates had employed European agents to canvass for them. One of them attempted the European style, and would have perhaps gone the whole hog, if he had to deal with European electors. The Chairman will scrutinize the votes, and dispose of objections recorded, before he would be prepared to announce the result in the Gazette.

WE are glad to learn that Mysore will not part with its indigenous post office without a struggle. A memorial from the inhabitants, in course of preparation for submission to the Viceroy, protests against the abolition of the Anche, as the Mysore postal system is locally called. Established in the middle of the 17th century, by the sovereign of the time Devaraj Oors, in 1659, it has stood the revolutions of ages, and continue to this day to give satisfaction. It is venerable from time and level to the means of a simple agricultural community. It is probably the cheapest post in the world. Mysore may well be proud of it. It would be a pity if such a fine relic of the past were ruthlessly destroyed.

WE heard from our Hyderabad correspondent that Moulvi Mehdi Hasan's friends have given out, that as a consequence of Mr. Howell's opposition to, and defeat on, Mehdi Hasan's scheme for the settlement of the Deccan Mining business, he is to be removed. There is a general anxiety in consequence. If Mr. Howell is transferred at this moment, it will be the greatest possible triumph for Mehdi Hasan, and the entire administration of the Deccan will, as a matter of course, pass into his hands. This surely will not be a desirable result. Whatever may be the decision of the Supreme Government in the Mining business, it will, in our opinion, be highly unwise to make a change in the Office of Resident, at the present critical moment.

THE Madras Mail, in a recent issue, recommends, that the post of Prime Minister of the Hyderabad State, which can only be filled by one of the leading noblemen, should be abolished. Our contemporary's idea is that the Nizam should himself assume his own administration and carry it out through one or more secretaries, selected from the ablest of his officers, and with the help and advice of a Council, to which all the chief noblemen should be appointed.

Such an arrangement will lead to only one result. From what we know of the Nizam's capacity and inclination to work, we cannot believe that it will conduce to the good government of his state, if the chief executive authority is reposed in his hands and taken out of those of a nobleman of high rank, who is responsible for the same and in reality transferred to men like the Mehdis and Hasans who are quite irresponsible and unfit for being placed in such an important position. We have reason to believe that neither the Nizam, nor the leading noblemen of Hyderabad, are in favor of the scheme put forward by the Madras Mail. All that is required is, that the Government, through the Resident, exercise a healthy influence and supervision over the doings of the Prime Minister, and hold the latter responsible for the proper administration of the State, compelling him to vacate the high office, in case he is found wanting in satisfactorily discharging his important duties. Such an attitude on the part of the Supreme Government would surely urge the Prime Minister to work hard and fulfil the duties he is bound to perform; and in case he found himself incapable of doing justice to his important post, he would himself willingly resign, and save farther injury to his reputation and position. It would then be the duty of the Supreme Government to select another nobleman who might be found to be the ablest among the leaders of Hyderabad society, and recommend him to the Nizam to fill the high office.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1889.

OFFICIAL DACOITY.

BEFORE time is given to regain our character from earth-grabbing and looting propensities as shown in the uncalled for annexation of Upper Burma, and the more recent scandals of our relations with the Hyderabad Court, we are startled with the impudent and malicious reports from Cashmere of an attempt to poison Mr. Plowden, late Resident at the Court of the Maharajah, promising us another Coup d'état equal to that of Baroda in 1875, under the régime of Lord Northbrook, which resulted in the deposition of Mulhar Rao.

It would be premature, in the meantime, to express any opinion in the matter, and a piece of monstrous injustice to the Chief whose name is sought to be attainted with such a crime, to do other than receive the reports now in circulation, with the utmost reserve and caution. It can scarcely be believed that Lord Lansdowne, who must have before him the judicial farce played by Lord Northbrook in 1875 at Baroda, will commit himself to another act of such infamous magnitude, which called forth at that time the unanimous condemnation of all right-thinking men.

The particulars of the deposition of Mulhar Rao, are probably still fresh in the memory of many of our readers. The writer never entertained any doubt, that Mulhar Rao's fall was due to a conspiracy to oust him by ambitious rivals, and it is by means of a similar conspiracy the Chief of Cashmere is now sought to be made a victim of. Whether Lord Lansdowne, like Lord Northbrook, will be so self-willed and prematurely infer a crime had been premeditated, is not easy to say. In the case now before us, there is however no analogy. Colonel Phayre, then Resident at Baroda, was, at the time the conspiracy was hatched and worked to an issue, still an occupant of the Residency, who conceived his life to be in danger. Whereas in the present case, the discovery to poison Mr. Plowden is not made until he has left Cashmere, the task to do so falling to Colonel Nisbet, his successor. The outcome of this tardy and fishy discovery, and the Colonel's flight to Calcutta can only be set down to Colonel Nisbet's timidity—a proof positive, if need be for any, of his inefficiency to hold so highly important a post.

Like Colonel Phayre, Colonel Nisbet imagined himself surrounded by murderers and assassins. If medically examined, he might be found to be a victim of monomania, and as such has conceived, too, the idea that his life is in danger, and has fled to Calcutta. Can there be anything more cowardly than the act Colonel Nisbet has been guilty of, of abandoning his post to subordinates and seeking his own safety in flight from what at most can only be an imaginary evil? It is not an attempt to poison Colonel Nisbet that has come to light, but Mr. Plowden. What better proof is required that the man is quite unfit for any post, requiring the greatest amount of political tact at the court he is accredited to?

That the difficulties Government meet with, in satisfying all parties, is great, the writer does not deny. At the same time the writer does deny that the best methods are adopted by Government to secure this end. The sending of Colonel Nisbet to so high and important a post, is another of the endless scandals, daily bringing the Government into contempt; and as surely as any attempt is made, to make stock out of silly instincts of an incapacitated political officer, so surely will the world say, the Indian Government is wilfully blind to the loyalty of another of its native Chiefs, seeking only to crush and plunder.

Where our lust for lucre and clamour for annexation will stop, the man is not yet born who would dare say. Our latest dacoity, the annexation of Upper Burma, has not by any means proved a bed of roses, and to any one knowing anything of that country, the continued unsettled state of the districts, in and around Mandalay, will not be wondered at, when the writer makes known the colossal dacoity perpetrated by officials of all classes on the annexation of the country, from the Viceroy down to the lowest Tommy Atkins.

It may not be generally known, our latest dacoity move was made but a few days ago by Sir Charles Crosthwaite, Chief Commissioner of Burma. It consisted of the Tsawba of Theebaw being asked to make over his ruby mines and forest districts to the British Government, which he very manfully declined to do.

The whole business from first to last in the annexation of Upper Burma, was one gigantic dacoity accompanied by endless murders condoned by the Indian Government, largely in the interests of a corporate body of merchants known as the Bombay Burma Trading Corporation, but who, happily for the body corporate, number not a few officials. Poison was not the scare that brought about annexation, but something very much less insensitive: Mons. Haas, the hairbrained Frenchman and his tall talk of French Banks, Railway shams, imaginary steamers and customs collections to recoup Theebaw and his Government!

Never was there a more elaborate budget of nonsense combined, than in the causes assigned for the Burmese War. It is a false pretence, as the writer will yet prove, that the war was declared to checkmate French intrigues. The simple truth, which will yet be universally recognised, is that the war was declared, to a great extent, in the interests of the corporate body known as the Bombay Burma Trading Corporation Limited, who had done Theebaw out of some twenty or thirty lacs of rupees, and who could keep their Rupees and their character only by involving the king in ruin.

ZITO.

THE NATIVE DAILY JOURNALISM.

We see the Hindu is about to realise the ambition of years. Started a weekly ten years ago, it, after the experience and success of six years, advanced itself to a thrice-a-week concern, and now, after four years of that chrysalis state, it confidently offers to make a daily appearance. We are not of the amiable folk who are always ready to take optimist views of every sounding project or worthy undertaking. This kind of newspaper progress in especial, we are apt to regard with some distrust. Our habitual readers must be aware of a neat theory of our own of the biological evolution in the native Press. But that has nothing to do in this connection. It is a true development this of the Hindu. There is no humbug about our Madras brother's professions. It means what it says, and will do what it offers to do. Its success is real and thoroughly merited. The expression of the best mind of the South, it is a solid paper which would be appreciated in Great Britain, specially in Scotland. We only hope it will, in the new shape, maintain its status. That is not a joke, we can tell our colleagues. It is one thing to be a weekly, or any other more quickly, paper, and another to be a daily. The editorial writing may be somewhat hasty and the observations insufficiently considered, but the news must be copious and fresh from all the important centres in the country—in India, Ceylon, Burma, and from the frontiers and beyond them and from the chief places abroad. The present

Hindu does not show many connections in that respect, though, as it is, it is a semi-daily paper, there being an issue every other day, Sunday excepted. It is better to have no correspondence than such as obtains in our native press, including our own paper, supplied by striplings who force their services on you in exchange for a copy of your paper free, and doubtless also for the opportunity of advertising themselves in their little local circles, and bullying any weakly native officials in their neighbourhood. It shows the miserable condition of the native Press that it should depend on such a frail reed in such an important particular. Above all, there should be a free use of the telegraph. All this means a great outlay. We dare say the proprietors have made up their minds for it. If they go in for it with spirit and enterprise as well as capital, their success is certain—even in a financial sense. For, there will then soon be one European morning journal the less. We dwell on the subject at this rate, because it is just possible that our friends are being urged to this venture in view of an unfortunate model in the North with an unhappy motto veluti in speculum—apparently adopted, or at least made good, on the lucus a non lucendo principle. The Hindu is far better as it is. There is no comparison between the two in thought or expression—between the weighty well-reasoned comments of the Madras paper and the wordy inanity of the Calcutta print. Even in news, this queer product of daily journalism had not, because it cares not to take, the start of the every other day paper. In this comparison, the Hindu is, to its own surprise, doubtless, lifted up to the position of a Fabian of journalism winning by delay. So disgusted indeed are the Calcutta paper's own supporters, that there is a serious proposition in town to start a well written respectable paper that should be a true morning journal with its own telegrams and special correspondents. It is better to have a good fortnightly paper like, say, the Indian Express, than a regular breakfast of cold meat and réchauffé all the year round. To our discredit no doubt, that is the only native daily. But this is nothing to the disgrace of multiplication of such journalism. A single example may be explained away, and may be accepted, as an accident. Another will tend to fix the character of our diurnal journalism. We trust Madras will save us such a calamity. Let it not be supposed that we throw cold water on our contemporary's project. It is a worthy ambition, and we only wish it to be worthily executed. We will hail with sincere joy the Hindu appearing in the glory of a daily broadsheet. All the more, because we are sick of its present chronological arrangements. This thrice-a-week business is an anomaly and a nuisance. It is a disagreeable halt between two termini. It is neither one thing nor another. Unquestionably, the timing does influence the conduct, and we often see characteristics which are not reducible to classification. There is neither the direct hammering of the morning leader, nor always the sober calculation of the Saturday. Twice a week is bad enough, but the perfection of irrationality is reached by the thrice-a-week appearance. Everything is against it, and there is not a single point in its favour. As it cannot go back, we shall be glad to see our contemporary well out of its hole.

The Hindu venture in daily journalism in the South is, we believe, opportune. The soil has been prepared by years of education of the people. Even more than the schoolmaster, has the journalist provoked that thirst for knowledge of every-day facts about ourselves and other peoples, which is the great supporter of the Press. The Congress and, above all, the agitation about it have done the rest. Even realising the high ideal, on which in all friendliness we insist, the new daily comes into the field at a propitious hour. Every body is able to advise the beauty of the ideal—the difficulty is to find the means. Sterling special correspondence and occasional secret information require money. Telegrams, long and frequent, are a most costly affair. It requires, therefore, a mint of money in these days to launch with complaisance a diurnal broadsheet. Fortunes are every year sunk in England on new daily journals, which required even larger fortunes to succeed. That too is the experience of existing flourishing journals like the Daily Telegraph. The Times is just now going through a fortune in this Parnell business. Roundly speaking, the forged letters were got for a lac of rupees, while the expenses of Commission and all must amount to some four lacs. That may be exceptional, but the normal disbursements on the daily press are on a magnificent scale. Dr. Russell and Mr. Forbes received for their work as correspondents the wages of ambassadors. There too it may be urged that the thing is in every sense special. Well, even so that speciality is an every day phenomenon, and the proprietary must always be ready for the contingency. But, over and above the occasional heavy drain caused by war or other very exciting events, there is a regular expenditure on a large scale on the ordinary suppliers of news called "specials," and on telegrams. Thus the Times maintains Blowitz on a fat stipend. In fact, the difficulty of new ventures has always been to compete with these standing Pioneers of the Press. Ingenuity has however tried to conquer the stumbling block.

We have only one suggestion to offer. Is it not possible to change the name? It is too denominational. The days of sectarianism and clan feeling are passed for the English-speaking natives. The particular banners serve to keep up the civil feud.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

VIII.

The beginning of the end: The European Workers

Mr. Eardley Norton.—Tall and slim, with prominent, floating eyes and a remarkably intellectual countenance, a well-shaved visage and affable manners, you will do him wrong to judge him by his years. The worthy son of a worthy father, from whom he seems to have inherited both his principles and his passions, a noble and a precious legacy by the way, he likes the people without ignoring their failings and, what is more, he is distinguished by an eminent desire to serve them. What his father taught by his utterances and, above all, by the example of a lifelong career of usefulness, he sedulously continues to teach from the public platform. He never speaks but has some revelation to make, and in the art of keeping his audience spell-bound, he is an adept. Master of an inimitably racy and graceful style, he has few equals in India as a first rate party speaker. Few knew this before his famous letters to the Hindu appeared. As he spoke on the Public Service Resolution, he seemed to possess no art and no address; but the effect of his able speech was there—deep and profound. He delivered his speech, as a lawyer, who has carefully studied his brief, speaks before the Court. But as he speaks he goes on inflicting wounds of bitter satire on the enemy. He has, however, very little of Mr. Legality in him. He is bluntly outspoken, and he would not let prudence dictate where honesty and honourable conduct is in jeopardy. His heart is ever on his lips. His outspokenness sometimes lapses into rudeness; but it is rudeness of a kind which awakens sympathy for him in our breast, rather than excites our anger. And although Mr. Digby said Mr. Norton would have done well to have left unsaid what he said about Raja Siva Prasad, none can gainsay that he echoed a universal feeling when he asked Siva Prasad to settle with his conscience to do what he should! At one time it was feared that it might be imitated and prove "the little rift within the lute." He did not even spare Mr. Mudaliar and Mr. Justice Mitter. You must be, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion, or there is no escape from him. But he does not, like Don Quixote, tilt at every windmill he comes across:

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
To run amuck, and tilt at all I meet.

When somebody pointed out to Mr. Norton that the Pioneer had found fault with his tall hat, he is reported to have said that he did not grudge the writer the pastime. It was hardly a compliment he paid to the writer when he, alluding to him, said that he pitied him that he had nothing better to write upon than to criticise the form of his hat. It proved that there was no flaw in his arguments! But, whatever the youngsters may say, it can hardly be denied that cold, calculating, cautious, crafty old men of the stamp of Sir T. Madhava Rao, our Nestor, would not like to see his rough plain-speaking imitated by those that do not belong to the governing class. And there is good reason for it. Lacking Mr. Norton's abilities and tact, any other man would make a mess of it were he to imitate his uncompromising bluntness of speech.

Mr. J. E. Howard. I think I am not exaggerating when I say that this mellifluous speaker had no equal in mere oily eloquence. Considering that only a week before he had lost his wife, we are filled with admiration for the warmth and sincerity of the man. When he was himself the object of sympathy of people, he came and practically sympathised with us. He had had entrusted to him the resolution for the separation of the executive and judicial functions, and such consummate ability did he shew in discharging his trust, that I do not know if people were charmed more by his eloquence than by the inexorable logic of facts with which his speech teemed. His long experience of thirty years challenged people's attention to what he said; and when I say that people envied his extraordinary and ready powers, and the flowing facility of his speech, I only mean to quote Gay who said, "envy is a kind of praise." At least, in Mr. Howard's case, our poet Laureate is not true when he says that

He makes no friend who never made a foe;

for, if I know him rightly, he has no foe. Kind and courteous alike to all, he at once disarms anger and dissipates misapprehension. He is also a deep-read scholar. His knowledge of English literature has elicited many complimentary remarks even from high quarters which, as we know, are very loath to praise. That his ideas and notions are lofty, his instincts generous, his motives unquestionably high and his advice safe and sound, will be evident from the following extract from his speech:—

"This triumph of the moral force is the proof that right must win in the end. I would ask you to find no fault with your enemies, to resort to no angry declamation and no heated remonstrance, but to be patient, persistent and true to yourselves. Not by violence or noise have the great things of the earth been achieved; not by ambition or self-seeking can a nation's life be regenerated; but by calm undomitable adherence to that moral force which is the supreme reason, by implanting in all with whom you may have contact, that you look for eventual triumph to these means, and these only: and the moral power which has made the English nation glorious throughout an empire on which it has been well and truly said the sun never sets, is the power to which you trust for the triumph of the great principles of moral freedom. (Cheers, prolonged and loud)."

Mr. John Adam.—Earnest and forcible, this Madras educationist is a very effective speaker. He spoke on the resolution regarding education. His was one of the most literary speeches. He vehemently criticised the Government's retrograde policy of squeamish penny-wise and pound-foolish economy. "What we desire is, to extend primary education, to broaden secondary education, and maintain, to its fullest extent, higher education." I shall make no apology to make a lengthened excerpt from his speech. Hear then the defence of education, of this veteran educationist:

"We are continually told that we Congress-wallahs are only educated men and represent only an educated minority. 'Reproach it is intended to be, though I consider it of the highest honour—but such it is remove all grounds for the accusation by striving to turn that minority into a majority. But you have a higher reason for desiring the spread of education—look back and what but education has given you all that amount, and it is no small amount—of liberty which you now possess. Education has brought you here, education has taught you the value of representation, and education has given you men fit to act as your representatives (hear, hear). And why should Government recognise it as their duty to foster education? Why because education if it has taught you to value liberty has also taught you the midgulf between liberty and licence; if it has taught you to know your rights and knowing, dare maintain, it has taught you how to use and not abuse them; if it has taught you to pray for privileges, it has taught you their value, and inspired you with gratitude and loyalty to the giver (applause). It is owing to education that the old India is being rung out and the new India is being rung in (applause), not as in France, in America, aye, in England herself, by the tocsin clang heralding revolution and rebellion, but by the silver chimes proclaiming liberty and law. (Cheers).—Education is the fairy prince of the beautiful allegory, written as with prophetic prescience of to-day by the greatest poets of our time. Education is the fairy prince who with his magic touch has awakened the sleeping liberty of India, and the sleeper awakening, has found with her deliverer that union which we have to strengthen more and more with the perfect day. How does the poet express it:—

And on her lover's arm she lent
And round her waist she felt its fold,
And far across the hills they went,
In that new world which is the old.
And o'er them many a shining star
And many a merry wind was born,
And steamed through many a golden bar
The twilight brightened into morn."

To add anything more of my own, would be to mar its effect, and disturb its pleasing harmony.

Mr. Pringle Kennedy.—This meritorious Mozufferpore pleader produced the most pleasing impression upon his auditors. He does not glory in the possession of a strong or a sweet voice, but he has something which amply compensates for them both. It has seldom been my lot to hear a more powerful debater. His satire, his epigrammatic turn of expression, his quaint thought and hardly less quaint humour, were fully appreciated by the delegates. His likening the Police to ever-hungry watch-dogs elicited cheers, and his reference to it as the department which does whatever it is forbidden to do and does not do whatever it is required to do, also prompted several rounds of applause. He was one of those who most strongly opposed the resolution on the Arms Act. He believed the third clause was a purely sentimental request. "To ask the Government to repeal the Arms Act because it is a slur on our loyalty is about as reasonable as to ask to have the section of the Penal Code relating to theft repealed because it is a slur on the honesty of the thriving classes—(Laughter). The whole course of civilisation was to debar man from wearing arms except when it is absolutely necessary. I think that the Europeans should be compelled to take out a license equally with natives of India." He concluded by pointing out that, although Lord Ripon was a great friend to the people, he never took any steps towards the repeal of the Arms Act, which showed that it was no slur. To the merciless satire of Mr. Kennedy on Mr. S. N. Banerjee's "casting an unmerited slur upon our devoted loyalty," I may be permitted to add: it is also an unmerited slur upon the chastity of our women to keep them confined within the four-walls of an air-tight zenana. Will Mr. Banerjee consent in a day to emancipate the female members of his family and let them see the broad light of day? I think, not.† Mr. Kennedy is one of those promising young men of whom India expects much, and expects not to be disappointed.

Mr. F. T. Atkins.—Knowing as people did the antecedents of this gentleman, they were in fear lest he should play fast and loose again. He had been as inconstant as a shadow, and as fleeting and flimsy as well as anything. But by his conduct he proved himself better than his antecedents. It amused me considerably to see him shake his head and shrug his shoulders in doubt that, after all, Siva Prasad may not prove as true as his professions. This threw me into a thoughtful mood of mind, and made me draw an analogy between these two. I was at last persuaded to exonerate Mr. Atkins from all blame and set his conduct during the Ilbert Bill Agitation days down to misguided enthusiasm and error of judgment. In any case, the late Mr. White (may his ashes rest in peace!) saw before his death that he was in the right and his rival of Allahabad was wrong. There is naturally joy over one erring brother that repenteth. So his last days must have passed a little more pleasantly than it would otherwise do. None but those who have lived and fought for a long-cherished principle, know what inexpressible joy it gives to find their rivals coming round. Well, he brought with him to the Congress a reputation (sic) for being a powerful demagoguish speaker. And although he gave what seemed to many an artificial nasal tone and flourish to his words, and brought into requisition his swinging hands and violent gestures, yet he showed, by his sensible speech, that he could also prove himself to be as sensible a speaker as any body could be. The history of this self-made man is remarkable. From a humble myrmidon in the service of the E. I. Railway Company, he has lived to produce the most pronounced influence upon his community. With a certain section of the people, his words carry great weight. He was received with open arms, and at the railway station Babus Norendra and Surendra Nath spoke to him long and very courteously.

* Why not?—ED. R. & R.

† "B" does not know his man.—ED. R. & R.

On life's vast ocean diversely we sail,

Reason the card, but passion is the gale.

Mr. Atkin's adhesion teaches us that we should take great care of this passion-gale, that it may not sweep away our reason-card.

Captain Hearsey—will be known not so much for his words as for his deeds. He appropriately quoted the well-known and oft-quoted lines of Byron with great effect. It is to be pitied that he who advised us to adopt "perfectly legal and constitutional methods," should, within little more than a month, be vegetating within a prison-cell for a conduct contrary to his advice. I once met him at the railway station with another distinguished friend, when he bitterly complained to us of our indifference to him. He once suffered in his pocket, he said, for us, and he would again go to prison for us. He was then yet in high hopes of getting the whole proceedings quashed as being irregular; but his cheering hopes proved to be more delusive than real. We should deeply sympathise with him in his incarceration and period of trial. He was another of those who opposed the Arms Act resolution.

Captain Banon. His heartwhole devotion to his duty, self-imposed though it was and perhaps for the reason all the more dear, was truly heroic and soldier-like. He spared neither time, nor talents, nor energy, to work for the Congress for the last month and more. And considering that his speech on the Congress was, as I happen to know, his debut before the public, he ought to be congratulated upon his success. Having long and tangled locks of hair, and leading a retired yog life, he, bustling about here and there, became the "observed of all observers." I would not say, "a curiosity." He spoke with great physical effort, loudly straining his lungs. Like Captain Hearsey, he is an able, though rather violent, writer.

B.

THE MAHOMEDAN EDUCATIONAL CONGRESS.

SIR AHMED AND MR. CHISTI.

There appears to be some sensation in the up-country Urdu papers regarding a petty quarrel (if it can be so-called) between the Guru of the Necharis and his Punjabi Chela. This latter is the same individual who was allowed to create a fuss last year among the Mahomedan schoolboys in Calcutta to serve party purposes, and who was declared by the leader of the Nationalist Mahomedans to be an orator, a profound scholar and consummate journalist. No one could guess at the time why he was so much pushed on and imposed upon the public, as the real worth and the qualities of the man at whose lionising an unsuccessful attempt was made, were known to many who had any information about the press and the politics of the upcountry, and especially that of the Punjab and the N.-W. P. It was known in every quarter, that Mr. Chisti was wholly devoted in supporting and advocating the cause of the great Sir Syud, and that he was one of his protégés and very loyal adherents. His own paper and public and private utterances were in themselves reliable evidence of the above facts. Not one even of the Necharis did know or could see what mysterious changes his opinions and tenets had undergone after his visit to the metropolis of India. He was treated all this time with the confidence and tender regard which a loyal disciple always commands from his Guru and the brethren of his faith. Things went on smoothly, until the unfortunate hour for disastrous explosion came.

Grand preparations were made to hold an Educational Congress at Lahore, and the Mahomedans who do not look upon the great Syud as an infidel (Kufur) were invited from every part of the Punjab and N.-W. P. Some attended the Congress while others could not or did not purposely go to Lahore to hear the words of wisdom and experience from the lips of the old and venerable Syud. About the time that Sir Syud was preparing to go, or whereabouts, it is alleged, he received a most impertinent and offensive letter from the Punjab threatening him. This letter was not only a very suspicious summons but a signal of alarm or a challenge for a mean sort of duel. Sir Syud mustered courage (as he was not a Babu) and went to the battle field, armed with all his arms, offensive and defensive. The remarkably cowardly and mischievous letter was critically and carefully examined by the experts of the E. C., some of whom came to the conclusion that it was in the handwriting of Mr. Chisti. He certainly disclaimed its authorship and did everything in his power to make the experts and Sir Syud change their opinion, but it is believed they could not change it. This brought about the explosion and served as a lighted candle for the fire of discussion and division. Sir Syud (as is reported) got indignant at this unexpected treatment from his loyal Punjabi disciple, and then there was an open warfare. The party divided into two, and the Congress lost its representative character even in that limited sense. The Chistis then quietly gave it out that they had abandoned the leadership of the great Syud and enlisted themselves in the ranks of the little Syud at Calcutta who had done so much for Mr. Chisti, during his last visit there, and who was an advocate of political freedom for his co-religionists. Great was the disappointment and indignation of the Syud's party at finding out that the string was being skilfully pulled from other friendly quarters outside the Punjab. It was then discussed that Sir Syud was only an educationist and opponent of the Congress and all political aspirations of the Mussalmans in their present state of education, which was lamentably backward. The Chistis, although very limited in number, declared that they had thrown in their lot with the little Syud who was a most zealous and active exponent of their political rights and privileges and who had power to coerce and force Government by his political tactics to give the Mussalmans all the butter and bread at their disposal in preference to the Hindus. The upshot of all this warm discussion was that papers (as it is now alleged) wrongly declared that there was an open rupture between the two Syuds who used to shew themselves very friendly. This was too much for either of them to hear any longer with silence, and it was found necessary to check the scandal. Disclaimers appeared in quick succession from both sides, in their special organs, and now both are profuse (to the great amusement of all Indian Mussalmans) in their expressions of good will, sincerity, and friendship towards each other and in praising each other in most complimentary terms.

It is whispered in some well informed circles that the historical interview between the two Syuds some time last year, which took place at the Great Eastern Hotel, Calcutta, had much to do with all this quarrel, which is the current topic in most of the vernacular papers in the upcountry. It is said that in that visit the younger went to the older to ask advice about his Congress, when the latter opposed the other's plan most strongly, so much so that the Syud Junior could not muster courage against the declared opposition of the Syud Senior to call the Congress, but he took some other step to make the old man feel keenly for his unwise opposition.

A. PUNJABI.

DACCA.

Dacca, 11th March, 1889.

The friends and admirers of Mr. Luminie, the Divisional Commissioner, entertained him to an evening party on the 4th instant. The Northbrook Hall was splendidly decorated with flags, arches, &c., and the illumination was grand and imposing. Babu Sri Nath Roy, of Bhaggakul, as a local paper announces, bore the expense. The attitude of Mr. Luminie towards the educated natives of this country has always been unfriendly and hostile. Only the other day, at the opening of the Town Hall, at Mymensingh, he told his audience, that the hall had not been intended for "sentimental sedition." Mr. Roy could surely make a better use of his money, than to burn incense in the worship of a setting sun that shone but did no good to any one.

Mr. Castle, the Assistant District Superintendent of Dacca, has been transferred to Patna. The mournful tale of his official high-handedness laid bare, week after week, in the columns of the "Garib," must have touched a sympathetic cord in every heart that can feel. But, after all, these performances of the boy Assistant do not go unrecognised by our paternal Government; for he goes on promotion. The Dacca public, however, may thank their stars for his removal from the town.

Babus Rup Lal Das and Raghu Nath Das have filed criminal information against the editors, printers and proprietors of the "Garib" and the "Dacca Prokash" newspapers, for certain alleged libellous statements contained in certain articles which appeared in those two papers. They are in connection with the visit of Lord Sole M^{rs} & M^{rs} B. F. F. & S. G. Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. }

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1880.

} No. 390

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

LICENSED TO DO WHAT?

LICENSED to make the strong man weak ;
Licensed to lay the wise man low ;
Licensed a wife's fond heart to break,
And make her children's tears to flow.

Licensed to do thy neighbour harm ;
Licensed to kindle hate and strife ;
Licensed to nerve the robber's arm ;
Licensed to whet the murderer's knife.

Licensed thy neighbour's purse to drain ;
And rob him of his very last ;
Licensed to heat his feverish brain,
Full madness crown thy work at last.

Licensed, like spider for a fly,
To spread thy nets for man, thy prey ;
To mock his struggles—suck him dry—
Then cast the worthless hulk away.

Licensed, where peace and quiet dwell,
To bring disease and want and woe ;
Licensed to make this world a hell,
And fit man for a hell below.

YOUTH AND AGE.

I OFTEN think each tottering form
That limps along in life's decline,
Once bore a heart as young, as warm,
As full of idle thought; as mine.
And each has had its dream of joy,
His own unequalled pure romance
Commencing when the blushing boy
First thrills at lovely woman's glance.

And each could tell his tale of youth,
Would think its scenes of love evince
More passions, more unearthly truth,
Than any tale before or since.
Yes! they could tell of tender lays
At midnight penned in classic shades,
Of days more bright than modern days—
And maids more fair than modern maid.

Of whispers in a willing ear,
Of kisses on a blushing cheek!
Each kiss, each whisper, far too dear
Our modern lips to speak,
Of passions too untimely crossed ;
Of passions slighted or betrayed—
Of kindred spirits early lost,
And buds that blossom but to fade.

Of beaming eyes and tresses gay,
Elastic form and noble brow,
And forms that have all passed away,
And left them what we see them now ;
And is it thus— is him in love
So very light and frail a thing ?
And must youth's brightest visions move
Forever on Time's restless wing ?

Must all the eyes that still are bright,
And all the lips that talk of bliss,
And all the form, so fair to sight,
Hereafter only come to this ?
Then what are earth's best visions worth,
If we at length must lose them thus ?
If all we value most on earth
Ere long must fade away from us ?

BETTER THAN BEAUTY.

My love is not a beauty
To other eyes than mine
Her curls are not the fairest,
Her eyes are not divine ;
Nor yet like rose buds parted,
Her lips of love may be ;
But though she's not a beauty,
She's dear as one to me.

Her neck is far from swan-like,
Her bosom unlike now ;
Nor walks she like a deity
Thus bright thing could below ;
Yet there's a light of happiness
Within, which all may see ;
And though she is not a beauty,
She's dear as one to me.

I would not give the kindness,
The grace that dwells in her ;
For all that Cupid's kindliness
In others might prefer !
I would not change her sweetness,
For pearls of any sea ;
For better far than beauty
Is one kind heart to me.

Holloway's Pills.—Weakening weather. The sultry summer days strain the nerves of the feeble and decrepit, and disease may eventuate unless some remedy, such as the purifying Pills, be found to correct the disordering tendency. Holloway's medicine gives potency to the nervous system, which is the source of all vital movements, and presides over every action which maintains the growth and well-being of the body. No one can over-estimate the necessity of keeping the nerves well strung, or the ease with which these Pills accomplish that end. They are the most unfailing antidotes to indigestion, irregular circulation, palpitation, sick headache, and costiveness, and have therefore attained the largest sale and highest reputation.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THINGS must have come to a pretty pass in Southern India, when undergraduates in the country do not receive quite the wages of porters and coolies in the Presidency towns. The Cochin Daily notices that the Deputy Commissioner of Tanjore advertises for an Assistant Master, a matriculate for the English School at Madhavur, on the magnificent salary of seven rupees a month. It seems time enough to withdraw the schoolmaster back home.

It is some time that the Bombay Corporation voted two lacs of rupees for its building. In 1886, the grant was raised to five lacs. In the present month, the resolution is for Rs. 975,500. We begin to be seriously afraid whether the Corporation will ever get its local habitation. The building Dicks are not donkeys that they will ever think of kuling their gold eggs goose.

We read in the Bangalore Spectator :

"A gentleman residing in Infantry Road, filed a charge against his chokra boy for assaulting him in his own premises, by hitting him with a stone, giving him several blows and a kick."

These cases are now cropping up from time to time in different parts of India to the discredit of our officers and gentlemen. They tend to show not that the native servant class is getting impudent and rude and dangerous, but rather that the master class is becoming intolerably cruel.

MR. MARSDEN would not commit Warner and Healy for their escape from the Presidency Jail, as he at first led people to expect. But to mark his indignation at the laxity in the Jail, he sentenced the two friends to an additional one week's imprisonment each. We hope this will draw the attention of Government to what is being done in that House of Correction.

THE Chief Justice of the Police Bench is unquestionably a great magnate. But he is a Haoual Rashid rather than a Washington, more of a Sultan than a constitutional ruler. There are not times favourable to Sultanizing, yet he manages through all the meshes of manifold laws and regulations to indulge his proclivities and peculiarities. In these days of hindoo prebend and subervency to routine, it required no little courage in a Magistrate to show et cathedra sympathy for accomplished jail birds neatly flipping out of their cages. He was evidently charmed by Warner and Healy's recent exploit. We do not know if he has ever been tried by the invasion of pretty equestriennes and languishing lasses in his court. It is lucky that he is protected by stern Christian Law of matrimony, or else the appearance from time to time of a fascinating disreputable courtier, such as conquered the stern heart of Lord Stowell, might make him a veritable Caliph with a seraglio.

MR. GRATTAN GEARY, the popular Editor of the Bombay Mail, has early been put forward as a candidate for the Chair of the Bombay Corporation. The well known and popular Dr. Finlay, who had before, for two different terms, filled the office, declines it again, but this time he has come late in the field, and he is being overtaken by the Rast Goffar to retire gracefully in favour of the proconsul. We do not know whether the good Doctor will thank our contemporary for the suggestion. The two candidates are notoriously at war, and such an act will, we are told,

"show that an opposition of ideas, however vehement, and bitter between the two, has not rendered him unmindful of the interests of his opponent."

Does the Rast Goffar really fancy that that consideration will be any temptation to Dr. Finlay to act up to its suggestion? Is it any part of the Doctor's duty in this contest to prove to the world his great regard for Mr. Geary?

THE agitation against the Crawford Commission has begun to take effect. About half a dozen Mansfield witnesses who had been indemnified by the Bombay Government, have been deprived of their criminal powers.

ACCORDING to the Newspaper Press Directory for 1889, there are now published in the United Kingdom 2,176 newspapers, distributed as follows:—England, London, 463; Provinces, 1,277—1,740; Wales, 87; Scotland, 190; Ireland, 146; Isles, 23. Of these, there are 133 daily papers published in England; six daily papers published in Wales; 19 daily papers published in Scotland; 15 daily papers published in Ireland; one daily paper published in British Isles. In 1846, there were published in the United Kingdom 551 journals; of these 14 were issued daily, 12 in England and 2 in Ireland; but in 1889 there are now established and circulated 2,176 papers, of which no less than 174 are issued daily, against 14 in 1846. The magazines now in course of publication, including the quarterly reviews, number 1,593, of which more than 400 are of a decidedly religious character, representing the Church of England, Wesleyans, Methodists, Baptists, Independents, Roman Catholics, and other Christian communities.

A Race Club has been proposed for Hyderabad.

THE widow of Astronomer Proctor will draw a pension of £100 per annum. There has been a handsome private collection for the widow of Matvey Arnold.

THE Northern Division Magistrate has sentenced to four months' hard labour one Satvory Dey for burning three women with sulphuric acid.

THE United Service Club has doubled its annual subscriptions and invited donations from its existing members, to balance the finances. The proposition to extend the scope of membership was not accepted.

It is reported from Bangalore that fair samples of rough diamond have been found in the Arskeri Taluk. Prospecting is being attempted there, and applications made for leases of land.

LORD CONNEMARA has appointed Mr. Claude Vincent his Private Secretary, Mr. J. D. Rees having made over charge on the 12th and gone on six months' furlough.

THE Government has struck at the root of one of the frauds in connection with the Simla Exodus. Orders have been issued disallowing the education grants for children of the clerks moving up to Simla this season.

THEY have started a Music Society at Allahabad with Mrs. Douglas Strachan as Secretary. Already 95 ladies and gentlemen have been enrolled as ordinary and honorary members. What of the Indian Scientific Institute of that city? Is it still in existence?

THE Allahabad Municipality have agreed to apply to Government for a loan of Rs. 1,50,000 at 4½ per cent for Water Works for that city.

MR. E. R. LEWIS, Commissioner of the Rajshahiye Division, goes on six months' furlough from the 1st May next. Mr. N. S. Alexander, Commissioner of the Burdwan Division, acting for Mr. Lewis.

THE Bengal Regulation III of 1878 for the confinement of state prisoners, which came into such significant prominence during the trial of Amer Khan and Hameed ul Khan, and Acts XXXIV of 1850—for the better custody of state prisoners—and III of 1857 to amend the law relating to the arrest and detention of state prisoners, have been extended to the Dacca district and the Mahal of Angul. The Regulation also comes into operation in Kollan, in the district of Sanchal in the Chota Nagpore Division.

FOR a brief field for the Assam-Pohar State Railway, in mouza Gurhea of Hahli pergunah, zilla Bhaugpur, 10 acres 3 roods and 32·65 poles of land of standard dimensions has been declared.

THE Public Works cess for the year commencing on the 1st April 1889, has been fixed by the Lieutenant Governor at one-half of an anna in the rupee on the annual value of lands and on the annual net profits from mines, quarries, railways, and other immovable property, excepting such as may have been exempted under section 2 of the Cess Act, IX (B. C.) of 1880.

THE Viceroy, accompanied by the Private Secretary Colonel J. C. Ardagh, C.B., the Military Secretary Lieutenant-Colonel Lord William Beresford, V.C., C.I.E., Surgeon-Major E. H. Fenn, Surgeon to the Viceroy, and two Aides-de-Camp Captain the Hon'ble C. Harbord and Captain H. R. Pakenham, leaves Calcutta for Simla on Tuesday, the 2nd April, at 6-15 P.M., and arrives at Simla via Allahabad, Lucknow, Hurdwar and Umballa, on or about the 15th April.

TODAY'S Gazette of India publishes the translation of the special Regulations of the Ottoman Board of Health applicable to the Mecca pilgrimage of 1889.

MR. B. H. BADEN-POWELL, C. I. E., C. S., has been confirmed a Judge of the Punjab Chief Court, vice Mr. J. D. Tremlett retired, Mr. J. Fizzle, C. S., Officiating Judge, will continue to be a temporary Judge, and Mr. A. H. Benton, C. S., Divisional and Sessions Judge, Peshwar, officiates as a Judge of the Chief Court.

THE Rajas of Dewas, of both Branches, having coined copper pieces of quarter anna and pie values at the mints of the Government of India, the said coins being identical in weight with the coins of the Government of India of the same metal, and the value being inscribed in the English language, they have been declared to be legal tender in British India.

THE Resident in the Eastern States of Rajputana will henceforth be known as Resident in Jaipur, and the Political Agent in Bhartpur and Kerowlee will be described as Political Agent in the Eastern States of Rajputana.

SIR F. R. Hogg, C. S. I., K. C. I. E., having been granted furlough for 3 months and 7 days, from the 7th April next, Mr. A. U. Fanshawe officiates as Director-General of the Post-Office of India during that period.

THE Governor-General in Council has remitted the stamp duty payable, under the Indian Stamp Act, 1879, on all instruments of the nature of a memorandum or agreement furnished to, or made or entered into with, the Public Works Department by contractors for the due performance of their contracts.

FROM the commencement of the next official year, duty at the rate of Rs. 210 will be levied on each chest of Malwa opium of 140½ lb avoirdupois, net weight, imported into the Punjab through Ajmere.

FROM the 1st April, the Military Accounts Department, Bengal, will be divided into two circles—to be respectively called the Eastern and Western Circles of Military Accounts, Bengal.

KHAN BAHADUR SERAJ-UL-ISLAM has been appointed a visitor of the Presidency Jail.

FROM the next month, April, the troops in Upper Burma come under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, Madras Army. They will also form a District Command of the 1st class, with Head Quarters at Rangoon. There will be two 2nd class Districts, with Head-Quarters at Mandalay and Myingyan respectively, the Lower Burma Division being temporarily constituted a 2nd class District extending to and including Meiktila. In other words, the whole Burma Command will form one 1st class District and three sub-Districts.

GASPODIN PASHINO, the Russian secret agent, of whose previous visit to India a good deal has been heard at times, was recently seen marketing in Peshawur city, preparatory to proceeding to Afghanistan to visit the Amir.

IT appears that in commemoration of the visit to London of Indian Princes and notabilities to England during the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, the Corporation of the City has struck coins.

KATMANDOO, like all hill sites with a congested population, suffers much from dearth of pure water. Hence the epidemics to which the town is exposed. It is gratifying indeed that the Durbar is seriously bent on providing an artificial supply. A scheme has been prepared by a Mr. Fimmimore, for drawing water from springs four miles above, in cast iron pipes. The cost has been laid at 4 lacs.

THIS is the preamble of the Imperial Decree promulgating the new Japanese Constitution :—

"Having, by virtue of the glories of Our Ancestors, ascended the throne of a lineal succession unbroken for ages eternal; desiring to promote the welfare of, and to give development to, the moral and intellectual faculties of Our beloved subjects, the very same that have been favoured with the benevolent care and affectionate vigilance of Our Ancestors; and hoping to maintain the prosperity of the State, in concert with Our people and with their support, We hereby promulgate, in pursuance of Our Imperial Rescript of the 14th day of the 10th month of the 14th year of Meiji, a fundamental law of State, to exhibit the principles by which We are to be guided in Our conduct, and to point out to what Our descendants and Our subjects and their descendants are for ever to conform.

The rights of sovereignty of the State, We have inherited from our Ancestors, and We shall bequeath them to Our descendants. Neither We nor they shall in future fail to wield them in accordance with the provision of the Constitution hereby granted.

We declare to respect and protect the security of the rights and of the property of Our people, and to secure to them the complete enjoyment of the same, within the extent of the provisions of the present Constitution and of the law.

The Imperial Diet shall first be convoked for the 23rd year of Meiji, and the time of its opening shall be the date when the present Constitution comes into force.

When in the future it may become necessary to amend any of the provisions of the present Constitution, We or Our successors shall assume the initiative right, and submit a project for the same to the Imperial Diet. The Imperial Diet shall pass its vote upon it, according to the conditions imposed by the present Constitution, and in no otherwise shall Our descendants or Our subjects be permitted to attempt any alteration thereof.

Our Ministers of State, on Our behalf, shall be held responsible for the carrying out of the present Constitution, and Our present and future subjects shall for ever assume the duty of allegiance to the present Constitution."

A RUSSIAN physician -Portugaloff prescribes the following as an infallible cure for drunkenness:—Dissolve one grain of strychnine in two hundred drops of water, and inject five drops of the solution every 24 hours. It has an immediate effect. In a day, the craving is turned into aversion. If the desire return, repeat the treatment. After a continuous injection for eight or ten days, a patient may be discharged cured.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

ON Tuesday the 9th April at 1-30 P.M., the Lieutenant-Governor will hold a Durbar at Belvedere for receiving the new recipients of titles and decorations. The timing is unfortunate, that being the mud day, proving the provinciality of Bengal. Neither Durbar nor Durbarees have any connections in the civilized world.

CERTAIN of the people of the frontier Nawab of Amb are in custody, on a charge of having joined the enemy during the Black Mountain expedition. After the trial of the British subjects, those of the frontier chiefs will be either made over for trial to their respective Lords, or detained as prisoners of war.

A BOUNDARY dispute, which might have led to unpleasant consequences to friends and neighbours, had divided Nawab Inam Baksh Khan, K.C.S.I., of the Mazari tribe, and Sudar Muan Khan, of the Drishack. We are glad that the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazi Khan, Mr. M. L. Dames, has been able to bring the two chiefs to terms. The Nawab takes three-fourths and the Sudar one-fourth of the disputed territory. They have executed an agreement to the effect before the District Judge.

IT appears that a retired Indian Civil Servant addressed the Government with a view to inquire whether as such retired servant his wife could, without offence, accept any presents from, say, a Ranee with whom she and he—in fact they—were intimate. The correspondence went up to the Secretary of State who in due course deliberated on it in solemn conclave of his whole Council. The result was the rather obvious decision that it would be highly objectionable if civil officers on the retired list received presents from natives. The letter embodying this opinion was in December circulated by the Government of India to all subordinate administrations and departments.

WE find from the papers that Sir Asman Jah was at Lucknow the guest of the well-known printer Muashī Nisāl Kishore. We think this was arranged by the Master of Quarters and Receptions of the Durbar, Moulvi Mehdi Hasan, who had preceded him there, having gone thither direct from Hyderabad.

We cannot understand why Sir Asman Jah did not engage his own quarters. At any rate, if Sir Asman Jah must do his tour on the cheap, could not Mehdi Hasan or Mashtuk Husain persuade some Mahomedan nobleman of Lucknow to ask the Hyderabad Minister, one of the foremost and wealthiest Mahomedan noblemen in India, to his house? It seems that none of the ministers cringes has any influence with the Mahomedan nobility of Oudh.

The arrangement has startled the native community, and will, we have no doubt, be heard of with alarm and distress in the Deccan. It is a positive humiliation to the Nazim, and, knowing as we do the feelings in such matters of our people and our princes, we shall not be surprised to learn that His Highness will treat this legitimacy Viceroy on this ground.

THE manner in which Moulvi Mehdi Hasan of Hyderabad has been called to the Bar in England, raises the question as to the intrinsic value of such legal certificates. As far as we have been able to ascertain, this lucky gentleman is not the minutely learned qualification to begin with. He is not even an indifferent English scholar, having had no education whatever in any English school. He has only a smattering of English, which he has picked up promiscuously from his English partner in life, and has acquired a facility in speaking from his visit to England. We are told he is unable to write two lines in decent English. His knowledge of Indian Law is naturally confined to what he acquired while he was Munsiff in Oudh. As for Mahomedan Law, whatever he knows he must have learnt in Persian or Urdu, for we hear he is perfectly innocent of Arabic.

We have gone to this length in describing the Moulvi's qualifications, simply to enquire of the commentators of India and England, whether in their opinion the authorities of the Temple were justified in calling an individual with such qualifications to the Bar.

Of late, many of our young men go to England to qualify themselves for the Bar, and come out as Barristers. Are we, from Mehdi Hasan's example, to believe that any of our young Indian Barristers have succeeded in being called to the Bar in as equally easy manner? If so, how is it, that Baba Durga Mohan Das, one of our senior Pleaders of the High Court, who recently went to England to qualify himself for a Barristership, was unable to succeed in his wish, because illness prevented him from fulfilling the requirements of the Temple and compelled him to return to India much earlier than he intended?

WE quote from the Indian Daily News :

"Mr. G. M. Currie, C. S., Magistrate of Howrah, has issued the following rule, for the conduct of business by the Honorary Magistrates at Howrah, dated February 27—

1. It is to be regretted that some Honorary Magistrates of the Howrah Bench find difficulty in nominating a Chairman; that they absent themselves without notice, which causes great inconvenience in work; that their hours of attendance are very irregular; that they at times cannot maintain order in the Court, and that cases are tried very irregularly. It is also reported that Magistrate officers are allowed to fix dates of cases, and write out the orders, which the distributing officers (if only sign) this is bad procedure. Cases are once or twice kept pending from day to day, and such arrangements cause great trouble to the parties concerned. Also the Magistrate appointed to receive complaints is said to receive them at his house.

2. Under the circumstances, I have appointed a Chairman for each day in the Rotation List. In his absence the second officer will take the chair.

3. Unless a Magistrate takes formal leave to absent himself from the Bench one week previously to his absence, he will be reported to Government for his irregularity.

4. Every Honorary Magistrate should attend the Bench exactly at 12 noon. An attendance register will be kept in which the hour of arrival and departure of each Honorary Magistrate will be entered.

5. All petitions must be filed in the open Court, and orders written by the Bench clerk. No one else should be allowed to interfere with them when once filed.

6. No Magistrate will sit on the Bench when his name is not in the list. This does not preclude Magistrates trying part-heard cases separately.

7. The records of all cases must remain in charge of the Bench Clerk, and not in charge of the Municipal officers (who are generally complainants in the cases).

This discloses a discreditable state of affairs. But the confusion is not confined to Howrah. In Calcutta, a similar laxity prevails. Both in the municipal and criminal Benches, it is not the Magistrates but the clerks attached to the court who have the upper hand. Subpœnas are issued by them without any order of the Magistrates; the dates in municipal summonses are put in at leisure by the office after they have been signed by the Magistrates. Formerly, no order would be taken of any Magistrate for the issue of the municipal summonses, but for the past few years, at the instance of one of the Magistrates, the practice has been discontinued. The other irregularity, however, still obtains, and Mr. Marsden, who is supposed to be responsible for the proper working of the offices, seems to be left in blissful ignorance of either omission or commission, depending too much on the officers for the proper working of the office. He has taken upon himself to nominate chairmen for the satisfactory conduct of the Benches. Practically, while the officers and the Magistrates are allowed to rule them, the officers are left to take care of themselves.

THE death in Europe is reported at Madras of Mr. John Bradshaw, long connected with the Education Department and the Press of that Presidency. A brilliant mathematician, he was popular as a Professor in the Engineering College. Afterwards, he held with credit the office of Inspector of schools. He was chiefly and most famous in journalism. For a long series of years, he maintained with his graceful pen the Madras Journal of Education. He achieved the highest distinction as editor of the once famous morning paper now alas! no more, the Madras Mail. He brought it back to its old popularity and prestige, during the pining days of the lamented John Bruce Norton. Such at least is the appreciation of the living. The felicity of his style is much admired. Was Mr. Bradshaw superior as a writer to Dr. Austin? Anyhow, he was a good man, straightforward, kind, capable of friendship, benevolent to the poor, and, above all, just between natives and Europeans.

At the Vizagapatam Sessions, Akula Rajamma, a delicate girl of 18, was sentenced to transportation for life for murder of her infant child 6 months old, and for attempt at suicide. She was married to a man who ill-treated her, and she left his protection and lived with her parents. They not being able to support her, she then to go back to her husband. This she took to heart, and meditated mischief on herself and her infant. She repaired to a well and went down it with the child. Her resolution, however, gave way when she came in contact with the water. But it was then too late to save the child, she escaping death by clinging to a protruding stone step. She came out of the well, returned home and gave out what she had done. The law had now its course, and she was charged with and convicted of murder and sentenced. Her fate now causes sympathy, the absence of which had forced her to the rash step. There was an appeal to the High Court from the sentence of the Sessions Judge. Their Lordships found nothing in the case to mitigate the punishment, but had the heart to recommend it for the merited consideration of the Governor. Lord Curzon, more humane than the stern Judges or rather the law, has commuted the sentence of transportation to six months' simple imprisonment.

Mr. Joseph Dodds, an ex-M.P., has been struck off the roll of solicitors for embezzling £15,000, the property of his client Mrs. Meynell. There was an application for stay of order, on account of the dangerous character of the solicitor. Baron Huddleston remarked that there were few felonies to the extent of £11,500 and a fraud in the shape of forgery in connection with a cheque for £7000, and that the man who could defraud an old lady of 76 as Mr. Dodds had done, deserved no consideration. Mr. Dodds was held in high esteem in Stockton. He was the leader in every public movement and there was not a public body with which he was not connected. He could afford to be generous with other people's money.

THERE has scarcely been a patriotic military demonstration in which the gentle sex has been wholly unrepresented. Without going to the long past, women have been found in Spain, during the Peninsular War, associated with members of the sterner sex in resisting the invaders. So in the Hungarian struggle of 1848. Perhaps, the most remarkable example is furnished from that East, in which woman is usually immured in seclusion and inaction. During the Crimean War, an opulent and influential Amazon, known as the Black Virgin, fired with patriotic and religious zeal, came all the way from the wilds of Kurdistan to Constantinople with a thousand troopers, equipped and armed by herself and at her cost, for service in the field, in defence of the Caliph and against the Nazirine. In the American Civil War, woman played a recognised part in keeping up the spirit of patriotism or party, while occasionally a stray woman has been discovered actually engaged in the masculine work of warfare disguised as a male. In the last Polish rising against Russia, a noble lady in male attire was killed in the act of leading her men in battle. Such cases were not unknown in the Danish War or the Franco-German War, or the Russo-Turkish. And now the rule holds good even farther East a woman warrior has been discovered sharing in the Burman patriotic movement to resist the British usurpers. A lady knight attended to Boh Tok's band, well armed and mounted on a nag, acted as a scout, and must have been of great help in procuring intelligence. She has been caught and will be tried doubtless. We have no idea of what explanation Mee Oung—such is her name—may be able to offer. At any rate, her horsemanship is beyond question. The "pretty horsebreaker" is not yet an institution in indigenous Oriental society. A Burman equestrienne is a marvel. The natives, of both Upper and Lower Burma, are laughing consumedly at the spectacle or the idea of a woman sitting astride on a nag.

It is something to know that there is no chance of annexation, pure and simple, of Cashmere. It would scarcely have been human if opportunity was not taken of the charges against the Maharaja to recast the administration. Colonel Nisbet has left Calcutta with the Viceroy's instructions in that behalf.

MR. COLVIN, Private Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor, has been appointed guardian of the minor Nawab of Rampore.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1889.

MUNICIPAL FACTIONS.

ANOTHER ILLUSTRATION.

WHEX will faction fights in Mofussil municipalities end? When will they learn to forget personal differences in considerations of the public good? Upon the success of the limited scheme of Self Government, which these institutions embody, depends the action which Government may take in regard to the political aspirations of the people. And yet is discredit being brought upon the experiment by the conduct of our own countrymen. Indeed, the success of Local Self-Government has been conveniently assumed as an accomplished fact, and upon this assumption are already based all sorts of enthusiastic demands for popular rights. Nothing would give us greater pleasure than if the fact were even as it is complacently assumed. Not that success of a kind has not attended the establishment of these municipal institutions, and it is satisfactory that official testimonies so far have been on the whole favorable in regard to their working. Nevertheless, there is no denying that the canker of party-spirit has been constantly at work. There is hardly a single municipality in peace. This is the fourth year after the introduction of the new scheme, and although this might be regarded fairly long time for the spirit of party to have played itself out and for experience to have grown into wisdom, we fail to see signs of any wisdom. There is discord everywhere, in a more or less violent form, and it really grieves us to hear all the reports which constantly reach us. Having taken no mean share in the discussion of the subject from the earliest stage, and feeling the interest we do in the success of the measure, we are naturally turned to for advice and help by the members of these municipalities in their worst troubles. We are at times repositories of confidences from both parties, and not unoften our position is one of extreme delicacy. It is high time, however, that a warning should be given to all and sundry. If they went on behaving in the way they have been doing, they might some day lose the privileges they enjoy under the new system. They fight one another in lightness of heart, but they are incurring a serious responsibility, which is nothing short of imperilling the present and future advancement of the country.

Such counsels are often thrown away. In too many cases, these dissensions are fomented by men, without character, unscrupulous, and disreputable, who have been pushed into an undeserved importance by the chances of election or nomination. Such men are scarcely amenable to reason, and somehow or other they find it their interest to keep up the quarrel. In peace, they sink to their natural level.

There is always a clique at work, and this clique tends to hamper the hands of the unofficial executive. One of the painful effects of Local Self-Government has been, as we pointed out some time ago, an unloosening of authority. This is chiefly felt in the collection of the rates. Municipal officers nowadays do not command the respect which their predecessors, under official régime used to do, and consequently not only is the collection thrown into arrear and municipalities are unable to meet their liabilities with punctuality, but even graver consequences sometimes ensue affecting their very personnel and constitution. Not only have municipal tax bills to be presented for payment a number of times before they are paid, and that long after they are due—not only have municipalities to keep their establishments and creditors out of their due, owing to want of money—but an attempt to enforce the law in regard to the realization of the rates may cost the Chairman or Vice-Chairman his office. Municipal tax collecting staff go about like so many seekers of alms or at best collectors of voluntary subscriptions, being put off again and again, although the law is very strict on the point, providing a regular series of cycles for presentation of bills, notice of demand, and, in default, of realization by distress. The non-official régime has often not the courage to put the law into force, and that naturally, because in case of resistance offered to its authority, attended not unoften with violence to its officers, it receives scant support from the Magisterial Courts. The other day, we gave an instance of a municipality presenting the humiliating spectacle of having had its officers whipped while in the execution of a distress, and going to law only to reap additional disgrace. A worse case of a similar kind has lately happened in the Bhadrakali Municipality. It is a small municipality, on the western side of the river Hooghly, between the municipalities of Serampore and Uttarpara. The Chairman of the Municipality is, we understand, in great trouble, for simply doing his duty. A relative of one of the Uttarpara Zemindars had a brick-making yard in this municipality, but he would not pay the tax which was assessed upon his place of business. Relying on the influence of his connections as well as on countenance given to him by the inevitable clique in the Municipal Board hostile to the Chairman, he had been evading payment long and openly defied the law. For three quarters together, he refused payment, when the Chairman, according to the due course of law, proceeded to realize the arrears by distress. This was an unpardonable offence in the eyes of the Uttarpara Zemindars, one of whom has the putni of the town of Bhadrakali. With the aid of the municipal clique referred to, they now set about the persecution of the poor Chairman in right earnest. Not only were the executing officers whom the Chairman had sent with the distress warrant assaulted, but he himself is in danger of being mauled some day. The Chairman, having proceeded so far according to law, however, in the end, lost heart. He did not prosecute for the resistance and assault. Whether he was cowed down by the formidable landlordly influence in alliance with the offending party, or acted from any amiable motive, we do not know, but he made a mistake of which advantage was of course taken. In the meantime, the usual weapon of the litigious, of lodging a number of complaints before the authorities against the Chairman, both in his private and official capacity, had been put into requisition, until we understand Mr. Duke, the sub-Divisional officer at Serampore, and the Magistrate of Hooghly have had to proceed to the spot and hold local enquiries. This is humiliating enough, and his enemies have fairly turned the tables upon the unfortunate head of the municipality. Indeed, he gave them an advantage by not following up his first proceedings, but it is really hard that men who voluntarily sacrifice so much of their time and energy in serving the public should be thus repaid with persecution and humiliation.

THE ROMANCE OF THE BALLOON.

It has been the balloon week in Calcutta. Indeed, for more than three weeks, from the commencement of the month, the good citizens have been exercised about a flying visitor and his flying tamasha—show. And for the last five days in especial, they have had the balloon quite in the head. Mr. Spencer, the aeronaut, is not quite a stranger, having some ten years before visited the city and ascended from Sealdah on the Circular Road. He is one of the most famous exhibitors in the line, having performed in all parts of the world and at many places, from the Crystal Palace, London, down to obscure county towns. He had thus ascended in the sky and descended unscathed nearly a hundred times. This is an enormous success and, we may add, extraordinary luck. All these adventurous showmen—all who habitually tempt fate by hazarding their lives on dangerous feats or ferocious animals or poisoning reptiles—invariably come by their end, sooner or later, in the exercise of their wonted skill or confidence in their respective lines. The Champion of the Belt is usually pounded to death by a rival. The admired jockey, if he is not in a hurry to retire upon his laurels, may any day be thrown off his horse into the lap of death. The great steeple-chaser is in danger of perishing by being spattered on a high hedge. The Blondin of many triumphs at last loses his balance and slips his foot to be hurled headlong and smashed to pieces. For once, the snake-charmer fails to charm and pays the inevitable penalty of his desperate game. In like manner, the balloon becomes the winding sheet as it were of the intrepid balloonist. Few aeronauts have such a run of luck as Mr. Spencer. Most of them receive their final quietus within a dozen or so of public descents. Here is a young man who has braved the peril for times without number and is not a whit the worse for it. He has repeatedly—incessantly—undertaken the risks of aerial navigation—has gone up the heavens for more times than most of us have gone on their travels on terra firma, and he retains all the enthusiasm of a scapegrace who meditates going to the sea. Enjoying, after all his adventures, unfractured integrity of limb and even a whole skin, he maintains unshaken confidence. He bears a charmed life.

Yet this renowned and thoroughly tried exhibitor had very nearly left Calcutta with an unenviable notoriety.

Such is the evil temper of this community that he was treated with suspicion from the first, and quickly given a bad name and then hanged, without the formality of even a summary trial! Here was an exhibition peculiarly liable to miscarriage, but our people would listen to no excuses. Accidents are allowed to occur in the best regulated households: only the programme of the rash man who offers to ride in the air for your amusement and edification, must be ensured against all mishaps! In an unlucky moment, owing doubtless to failure in the gas supply of the Oriental Gas Company, Mr. Spencer was unable to fulfil his engagement at Ballygunje, at his first performance: his inflated bladder could not be kicked up above the heads of the neighbouring trees. Thereupon, he became the butt of ridicule and suspicion, as if he were a poor 'prentice hand or an absolute rogue. Europeans, Eurasians, Bengalees, Upcountrymen, but most of all Marwaris—who might be supposed to have more regard for human life and limb—abused him like a thief. With more courage, they might have murdered the poor "caterer" to their amusement. The crowd was great, and the disappointment was all the more keenly felt for the long confinement, in a hot baking atmosphere, in an inconvenient situation, out of the way of most people. Then the darkness of the evening completed the misfortune of the seekers of an hour's diversion. Many were obliged to pick up their way home, leaving their carriages and servants in the lurch.

It was probably this personal disaster on the 2nd March, that was the source of the bitterness and pertinacity with which, the following week, the unfortunate balloonist was pursued. But surely Mr. Spencer could not possibly help his guests' miseries in that behalf. It is now admitted that he was not responsible even for the failure of the engagement as regards the balloon. Be that as it may, there was certainly no excuse for treating the unlucky professional, as if he were a sharp practitioner who had raised the wind. The most respectable and usually sensible men called upon him to disgorge his ill-gotten gains, on pain of being branded and drummed out as a swindler. Reis & Rayyet's was the only voice that was raised in his defence. We argued that he was no more bound to return the value of the tickets or to make over his earnings to a charity, than the manager of a theatre is bound to do so in the event of a fiasco of a performance. All Mr. Spencer's reputation—his life-long career—his previous exhibition at Calcutta—his recent success in Bombay availed him nothing. In a moment of fury, every claim to consideration was overlooked. It was forgotten that here was a famous artiste in a most difficult line, almost a sacrum—an experienced navigator of the skies. Everybody chose to see him but a thief caught in the act, trembling in the dock in the presence of outraged Justice! The poor young man did not know what to do, but he was determined to retrieve his reputation if possible—certainly to prove his honour. So having quarrelled with the Gas Company, he announced his intention of making his own gas and giving a performance free or, after the manner of Pratap Chandra Roy's Mahabharata, "chiefly gratis." That came off on Tuesday, in the Race Stand enclosure.

After the disappointment and hardship of Ballygunje, and particularly considering the suspicion freely cast on Mr. Spencer's capacity if not good faith, Calcutta might well be expected to be lukewarm on this occasion. But though people still continued loose of tongue, indulging in ungenerous and cynical remarks, likening the second invitation to a cry of "The wolf!" in the fable, yet there was quite an enthusiasm of attendance. The massing of men on the Maidan was unprecedented; certainly since the arrival of the Prince of Wales there had never been such a gathering. The wise were still at home, just moving to the terrace above our printing-office, and, as but half of the programme was gone through, we lost nothing, and were for once equal to the Viceroy himself, who was lording it over Her Majesty's lieges from his post of vantage in the Race Stand. The weather was cloudy, and though this was a comfort to the assembled host on the great plain before Fort William, it seemed a bad prospect for the navigator of the air. When the time fixed came—5-30 P. M.—the apparatus was not ready in proper form. By applying his tests, Mr. Spencer found to his dismay that the gas was not sufficient! But he could not afford to make another excuse, so he filled the huge bladder as much as he could in the next half hour, and proceeded to satisfy public expectation as well as he could under the circumstances. He had had no peace since his failure on the 2nd, and literally no sleep for the last two days. That very day—the 19th—he had had no nourishment except a bottle of beer. Thus weakened in body but strong in mind and nerve, confident of his skill and experience, with a heart for any fate, he jumped into the sling attached to his balloon, which is his only seat. His worst fear was now verified, for he immediately discovered that the gas was short. There was no help for it now, unless he would cover himself with disgrace by another disappointment and be driven to suicide. So as the balloon could not support both himself and the umbrella—the parachute—by which he meant to descend, he cut the string which held the latter and let it go, and gave the word for "hands off!" The balloon slowly ascended, moving in a northerly direction till it stood for a moment to the north of the fort. Still moving north, it passed the Government House and Government Place. As it ascended, it emerged in a stratum of the atmosphere where a different direction of wind prevailed than among us on the surface of the earth. It was a rather cloudy day and now that very day was drawing to its end. Still so long as he travelled North or West, Mr. Spencer was tolerably sure of a practicable landing. He had now reason to cry—

My wind is turned to bitter West
What was so soft a South before;
My sky, that shone so sunny bright,
With foggy gloom is clouded o'er.

Caught in a western wind, he sailed briskly over the houses to the east of Cuthbertson and Harper's premises. Onward he marched, fast and even faster, while he mounted straight up the firmament, till he ran Shelley's glorious bird close.

Higher still and higher
From the earth thou springest
Like a cloud of fire;
The blue deep thou wingest,
And singing still dost soar, and soaring ever singest

In the golden lightning
Of the sunken sun
O'er which clouds are brightening,
Thou dost float and run,
Like an unbodied joy whose race is just begun.

The pale purple even
Melts around thy flight.
Like a star of heaven
In the broad daylight
Thou art unseen, but yet I hear thy shrill delight

A rider of the heavens must be of an imaginative turn. If Mr. Spencer had not been too much occupied with keeping his balance and preserving himself from being benumbed by the cold of the upper atmosphere, he could not have failed to realise the sublimity of his situation. He was higher than ever skylark or nightingale had dared to climb, and he might have heard in his mind such aspirations from kindred spirits left below as the following

Fade far away, dissolve, and quite forget
What thou among the leaves hast never known,
The weariness, the fever, and the fret
Here, where men sit and hear each other groan;
Where palsy shakes a few, sad, last gray hairs,
Where youth grows pale, and spectre-thin, and dies,
Where but to think is to be full of sorrow,
And leaden-eyed despairs,
Where Beauty cannot keep her lustrous eyes,
Or new Love pine at them beyond tomorrow

Away! away! for I will fly to thee,
Not charioted by Bacchus and his pards,
But on the viewless wings of Poesy,
Though the dull brain perplexes and retards:
Already with thee! tender is the night,
And haply the Queen-Moon is on her throne,
Cluster'd around by all her starry fays,
But here there is no light,
Save what from heaven is with the breezes blown
Through verdurous glooms and winding mossy ways.

For a moment, the balloon veered to the south-east. And then it shot rapidly up like a rocket, and disappeared on a trice towards the east or south-east of the town. And then there was anxiety in every face, and the whole host of spectators left the scene—whether the plan of Fort William or their respective perches on housetop in a painful state of mind, bewailing the fate of the balloonist and even blaming themselves for having tempted him to his fate. Many had not a wink of sleep that night, and all discussed the subject till a late hour. Morning dawned on a still anxious city. Enquiries were being made from the previous evening in all directions, but nothing could be gathered.

Calcutta was never in such a ferment over the fortunes of one man and that a stranger. The sympathy for the intrepid man who was lost in the distant heavens above us, was not confined to any section of the community. It was universal; the very natives who quietly went about their accustomed avocations over the loss of a thousand of their countrymen in the Sir John Lawrence, went about asking about the fate of the balloon man. Hindu and Mahomedan ladies themselves were inconsolable at his disappearance. Those who had witnessed the ceremony of the aeronaut taking wing, felt the most. Father Lafont, who had officiated at it and might be supposed to know something of the disasters of reckless flights, was violently agitated the moment he saw his youngman career madly aloft the air beyond the viewless firmament. Thus it remained for nearly three days. Meanwhile, all sorts of speculation were afloat, the learned specially displaying how little they knew. Nor were rumours of a reassuring kind wanting. It seemed to be the humour of a good many witless men to start canards. Everybody was ready to believe. The newspapers were glad to profit on the prevailing curiosity. Government House itself, at the mercy of Prefect Lambert, was deceived. If we are correctly informed, the Viceroy himself, whose tender humanity was resplendent on the occasion, believed in the news, supposed to have come from a survey party in the Sunderbuns, of the safe descent of the balloonist and his apparatus. There was a sense of relief at the viceregal residence, in consequence, on Thursday, shared in from the highest to the lowest mental. But the newspapers would not be again taken in. There was absolute disbelief at the Statesman office. Later on, came the first telegram to any purpose from a responsible officer, Babu Troylucko Nath Sen, Deputy Magistrate in charge of the Basirhat sub-Division, 24-Pargannas. That officer had received an autograph intimation from Mr. Spencer of his descent in a village in the Sunderbuns, Lot Banstollabad, at 7-30 on Tuesday. That news was the signal for the newspapers to send representatives to catch the interesting aerial navigator, each trying to make a monopoly of the "lion" if possible, at any price. The Statesman actually sent a special train to Baraset, where the aeronaut was expected. From Baraset, its representative plunged into the country in the direction Mr. Spencer was to take for him, and luckily found him coming in a country carriage fast asleep. He awoke to a new sensation when he heard of all the interest his flight had excited in the great metropolis. Mr. Spencer, lucky as ever, was without a scratch. He had alighted from his volatile car as one does from a park phaeton quietly. But no sooner he landed than the balloon disburdened flew away again. He then made his way to the nearest village, not without difficulty, met by deep waters on the way. However, he managed to dodge past them. His apparition—the white ghost as the people thought—set the villagers to flight. His hissing tongue proved him of the Nag-Bans-Serpent Tribe—a surely more inviting guest than a disembodied spirit. His pantomime might be very intelligible at the European theatre or the Italian Opera, but it only made matters worse at Banstollabad. He took his coat off his back to show he was human, but the naked whiteness of his person all over only dismayed. Besides, the athletic form of the man came from Paris. At last, Mr. Spencer became a lion off of the Almighty Dolla. That was irresistible. Banstollabad bowed to the influence which is recognised by saint, by savage, and by sage, and would conquer New-York or London or Calcutta as Basirhat. The scene of glory drew the hitherto shy rustics. The rationale is done. The presence of corn dispelled the atmosphere of romance and uncertainty. The stranger's connection with here dissipated the glamour of spirituality in which their imagination had invested him. It proved him but too human. So they came and became humane to the human. All in a moment, their milk of kindness was stirred, and they brought him milk to drink and rice to eat and made him a bed to lie down. One is reminded of the adventure of Mungo Park in the heart of Africa, when of a disastrous evening he was taken in hand by the good Samaritan of a Negress. From Banstollabad, Mr. Spencer was conveyed by boat to Hosseimabad, near Takee—the seat of the Munshee Baboo—Child of luck as he has always been, he discovered on his way his balloon floating in the water, and captured it. At Hossehabad "Baboo" Rahim Baks, the sub-inspector of Police, treated him with the consideration due even from the Bengal Police to a man who can mount the air. Thence he went to Basrhat, and on to Baraset, travelling by the special train to Calcutta. At Basrhat, he read at the Deputy's the Engel shah's account of his flight. Mr. Chamberlain, the wide awake and energetic Railway Traffic Inspector, had gone in the special after Mr. Spencer. Mr. Spencer must have ascended some 12,000 feet!

And now he is besieged as never lion, real or figurative, was besieged. Great men are calling on him at his hotel, and little fry hover about the streets to catch a glimpse of him. He is the wonder of the hour.

THE MAHOMEDAN EXODUS TO EUROPE.

LIBERAL EDUCATION AND PROFESSIONAL PROSPECTS FOR MAHOMEDAN YOUTH.

Since last year there is again a revival of the mania of going to England among the young Mahomedans. It is said that they cannot receive proper education here and therefore it is necessary that they should go to that great centre of Western Learning and science to receive a sound, useful and practical training, and to qualify themselves for profitable, learned and honorable profession. Fault is found with the present system of University Education and it is declared a failure. Moreover it is said that the competitive examinations have placed an insurmountable difficulty in the way of Mahomedan youngmen who find it impossible to make their way sure to the goal of their ambition. Most of them think that their education in England, of whatever quality it might be, will give them a passport to all high and lucrative appointments at the disposal of Government and make them successful in other well paying professions.

After a careful consideration of the question, I have come to the conclusion that generally the guardians have failed hopelessly to exercise their discretion in the selection of beings who should have been sent. If the guardians did not exercise proper discretion and act with strength and courage, it may become very dangerous and ruinous. Some boys have fled from their houses and after arriving at Aden sent telegrams and letters to their guardians to send them money to enable them to proceed to England. You can imagine the feelings of the guardians, relations and especially of the native ladies on hearing such news. In some cases properties were sold and mortgaged to raise the funds and money was at last sent. There are two cases in which the families are sure to be next door to pauperism by the time the young men return with their robe of honour to India.

Now let us examine who all these students are who have become so impatient to visit England for the purpose of education, even at the risk of ruining their families. They are mostly the sons of (financially) middle class men who have hardly sufficient means to meet the enormous expense of educating boys in England. The Mahomedan youth who go to England in search of education are generally disappointed students who have failed to obtain the University degrees in the country and whose prospects of education, simply on account of their irregular habits, laziness, and want of perseverance, have become blighted. When they fail in the Entrance and F. A. Examinations here they blame the system of education, the college, the teachers and the policy of Government in order to make out a case before their guardians for going to England. Most of these men have gone for the bar which is considered to be the easiest thing possible and for which the disappointed students consider themselves fit. I do not think that either the bar or any other profession can benefit a man who has not received a proper education.

Past experience has placed sufficient interests before us to examine fully the result of their general and special education in England. In 1877 and in the following years, a very important and rather influential batch of Mahomedan students was sent to England and most of them were to qualify themselves for the Bar. Some of them were sons and relations of some of the most leading Mahomedan gentlemen of this Province and some were relations of well to do Zemindars and leading Pleaders. They had gone from different stages of education in which they were here and most of them were disappointed students defeated in the race of education and had lost courage altogether. By no means were they promising young men who could have been expected to rise to the top of the ladder in any profession or distinguish themselves as scholars. In most cases mistake of selection was apparent and inexcusable. About that time some middle-class men sent their relations and sons (although their number was small) for legal education on a purely speculative principle. They sold or mortgaged the whole or part of their properties, obliged to borrow at high interest to meet the expenses. All of this batch (of 1877) have returned and are now engaged in different professions. Almost all of them came out as Barristers and joined the Bar, and nearly all or most of them failed to make a living in the profession, with the exception of three, one of whom is at the metropolis and two of them in two of the most important districts in Behar. Not one of them has yet been able to recoup even 25 per cent. of the money which was spent on his special education in England. The success of these three men is qualified and it is due partly to their natural talents and mostly to the patronage and influence of their families and the community which they justly command. Among the rest some have been treated very generously by Government and provided with respectable and good appointments in different branches of the service. These gentlemen had luckily many circumstances in their favor which need not be detailed here. Suffice it to say that the action of Government was praiseworthy and they deserved the patronage. Local Boards or Municipalities have taken some in their service. Some of these men were so hopeless of their success in the bar that they never tried it and if one or two did it they did it in a half hearted way. Of those who were sent on speculation are some very hard cases. The time was favorable and it was fortunate that generally these men represented influential families, else it would have been difficult for them to keep up their heads above water even with this much success into the bargain.

Now the question arises, why have they generally failed as Barristers or in getting something independent of Government patronage. The answer is clear. There must have been some thing wrong either in their education or their selection of the profession for which they were especially educated. Both causes are to be found in the disappointed men. In each of these cases it cost the guardian not less than Rs. 25,000, on the whole, plus the amount spent after return to this country in setting up in the profession. This is a very large sum for one who is not wealthy. What is the quality of the education which has been purchased at this enormous sum? In most cases it is far inferior to that generally found among our graduates and in some undergraduates, not to speak of the sound or practical knowledge of law or any other special qualification for that profession. There are men among this batch who, to the great disappointment of their friends, cannot write or speak English correctly and intelligibly on the commonest subjects and whose defects of composition strike the most unmethodically trained.

In fact intellectually they have earned nothing in England which can in any way compensate for the large capital which was invested in them, and socially there is very little in them which can be admired by the respectable of their community. Those who belonged to good houses still keep most of their good qualities of good breeding and respectable and amiable manners, in spite of a superficial superstructure of Western habits alike inconvenient to themselves and to their relations and friends.

Generally these young men are too apt to borrow foreign tastes and habits, forgetting in 3 or 4 years everything they had learnt in all their previous lives. These habits and tastes cost much to their guardians and cause much inconvenience and not unoften annoyance and disgust to the respectable and old class of natives generally. I do not think that we can afford to pay and invest such large amounts for this sort of education in the present deplorable financial condition of our community. I have shewn above how some men of the 2nd batch of 1877 got something to fall back upon and how some of them remained in the bar. Of the latest batch, that of 1888, with the exception of one all have gone to England to study for the legal profession. On their return to India after being called to the bar, their prospects appear to me very uncertain and doubtful. Government can now hardly give them good appointments. The bar is getting overcrowded year by year and it is impossible to shine in it without sound training both general and legal, and some special natural qualities which must be always a quæ qua non.

I believe we have now gained sufficient experience to properly regulate our action in this matter, and if we do not benefit by it, it is our own fault. I think the following conditions should be essential for our youngmen being sent to England for education. The first and the most important one should be the financial condition of the parents and the guardians or the family to which any of them belongs. The second condition is scarcely less important that the boy is not a disappointed boy, but one who is at least an undergraduate, and promising into the bargain. The third condition is that he bears a character which would probably stand the temptations with which he would be surrounded in a great free and luxurious foreign country. If these conditions are fully observed I am quite sure the result will be very satisfactory.

Those few persons who went first, after completing their education, naturally derived more benefit by their special education there. They have to some extent distinguished themselves in some departments and are deserving of every one's commendation. Their education is such as our youngmen ought to emulate. These men did not depend upon the help of their guardians. They distinguished themselves at school or college or proved their mettle in competition, and our Government and other Governments sent them at state expense. This is the safest and most honorable and independent way of going to England for young Mahomedans, and failing in that they can be sent under the above conditions only. I would prefer to send our graduates if they have means to bear the expense and if they fulfil those conditions.

These young men who are being sent indiscriminately, so far from learning much forget the little knowledge of their own vernacular in the course of their sojourn in England. There are many among them who can hardly write an Urdu or Persian letter correctly and they ought to be ashamed of it as respectable Mahomedans. These are hard facts and they must be unpalatable. They must know that to acquire some knowledge of European manners and a capacity for small talk is not all that we expect from them after spending a fortune which could have educated at least a quarter dozen boys here very well or could have supported two helpless widows and some poor relations. These young gentlemen are all mighty politicians and seem very fond of browbeating Lord Salisbury and criticising the action of Mr. Gladstone. We do not want all this tall talk but substantial and real work and education and a character which would command the respect of every good person. There are other far better qualified persons both in India and in England to take care of England's world-famed ministers.

Many of these young men learn most of the vices of European society and bring with them European notions regarding marriage, the Pardah, female education, courtship, which are most unbecoming to their social condition. These they air in season and out of season, though they have only considered them theoretically, acquired them or learnt them at second-hand in English Society. Upon those fanciful convictions some have been betrayed into foolish connections the effect of which they could hardly anticipate and have thus compromised the position and honor of their respective families and marred their prospects in every way. Their position is anomalous and their lives fit from happy.

It is high time that the Mahomedan community should seriously ponder over a matter which is causing enormous mischief in more than one way and the immediate result of which appears to be to bring ruin on some of their good and respectable (although not rich) families. I have only placed some facts for their consideration. Their accuracy may be relied upon. In support of each fact I have positive proof collected from personal observation and thorough enquiry.

Old Moor.

17th March 1889.

ENGLISH POLITICS

BY A HINDE IN ENGLAND.

Let Log, 11th Feb. 1889.

It is no ordinary pleasure that in my first letter to Reis & Rayyet I am able to communicate to you a most glorious vindication of our Sincere saying "victory attends on virtue." I think patriotism has never before been carried in this party governed country with so much rancour, so much bitterness and so much pertinacity as since when Mr. Gladstone lost his office and following in order to his friend the down-trodden Irish. The last effort in that direction was undertaken by the Times, as is now very strongly suspected, criminal collusion with the present Government, which is doing its level best to ruin a nation's cause and the Nationalist leader. The big bubble of "Parnell and Crime" has burst at last; the villain who forged the whole batch of letters purporting to be of Mr. Parnell's and Mr. Egan's has sent in an unqualified confession of his guilt, and himself has fled to France to escape the fury of the London mob who madonately would lynch him if they could get a chance. Only the other day the "Thunder" celebrated its centenary, little dreaming that a just Nemesis had reserved such a stupendous humble pie in store for it in the near future. The Pigott-organ of Pining House Square now flags very small. In the dinner in sack-cloth and ashes to be a person than Sir Richard Webster, the Attorney-General, has his full share. Day before yesterday he on behalf of the Times admitted that the letter was not genuine and expressed the regret of those whom he represented that the letters were published. Sir Charles Russell expected surprise at the language the Attorney-General had used. He had hoped for a stronger statement. His clients would not justify their course and they would ask the assistance of the Court in endeavouring to find out whether Houston embarked on the adventure on his own responsibility. This Houston was the co-between who supplied Mr. McDonald, the manager of the Times, with the precious contents of the now historical black bag. The Liberals have gone mad over their victory. Their next move now is to unravel the whole of that diabolical conspiracy of which the forger Pigott was but the outward and visible sign. That is now the one universal cry from every Liberal platform, the one unvarying literature in every Liberal print. The table is turned with a vengeance and the Conservatives have caught a veritable Tartar.

But, before I proceed with the next item in my budget of news, I want to give you some idea of what is meant by politics in this country. We all know that England is a conservative country, and in one sense it is true. But if you want to see the undisturbed and undisturbed sway of King Demos you will find it nowhere under the sun but in this tiny island. The greatest deference is paid to popular opinion, and the humblest unit who contributes towards it is more jealous of his rights than the proudest Koolin at home. The Englishman understands better than any mortal on earth that knowledge is power, and does not neglect to keep himself posted even in such current events as may perhaps have the faintest likelihood of ever affecting his interests. He is all eyes and all ears. His power is immeasurable, and the one single rod with which he wields this power is the press of the country. It acts and reacts on the whole administration of the realm in a way that is difficult to conceive, and on a principle which I give below will show what homage is given to the voice of the people.

The Royal Court of Justice where the Parnell Committee sits is on account of want of space forbidden to the outside public, admission being given to a select few by tickets. Even such rigid economy has had to concede to public opinion to an extent as has never been known before, and no less than two hundred seats are allotted for the press, affording accommodation to a greater number than would find room in the roof of the building.

The Metropolitan Police keeps guard over a circle of 25 miles, and within this area it controls the population of Belgium, nearly 5 millions, of "all sorts and conditions of men." The court generally sits at half past ten. The evening papers come out between 1 and 2 with full details of what has transpired in the court during the first two hours. Before dusk the papers have reached their sixth edition, and till 3 O'clock, sometimes, the new-bag shriek, "Surprise! Surprise!" apprises you that the last of the day's proceedings have yet to be heard. It is impossible for our people to conceive the width, the extent, and the energy that is lavished here upon the dissemination of knowledge. There is not a single man, woman or child out of the vast population that does not know the most remarkable portions of what has transpired before the Parnell Committee during the day. From the highest to the lowest every body will tell you what were the proceedings of some lawyer, Sir Charles and the Attorney-General or the Bench, what were the most sensational disclosures, or who and who were hit off by that eminent chronicler, Mr. Lockwood, &c., &c., (one of the Parnell Committee) who gives substance to every detail in his favourite promiscuous and free country of the select company assembled in that part of the Royal Court of Justice. A magnificent and a tropical atmosphere to furnish us with all the philosophy necessary to hold a monopoly of excitement; but our wallet finances shrank into insignificance before, not the fit moment, but the political plague which rages periodically from Land's End to John o' Groat.

It would be a terrible blow to the Conservatives. But they themselves are hurrying on the downward in a way as to challenge to them to harvest the wonder and gratification and admiration of their vanquished enemy. Every one of Mr. William O'Brien's brothers and sisters has been carried away to an early grave by consumption, the survivor himself is of as weak and delicate a health as possible. In an ill-laid hour Mr. Balfour chose this man to be his victim to wield his vengeance for the lashing which he gets from the Nationalist leader both within and without Parliament. O'Brien's recent incarceration, the death struggle with the jail ward as in his determination not to part with his own clothes for a felon's garb, his thirty-six hours' confinement in a cold cell with only his hat on his criminal condition, some questions exposed, excitement, and then this, why, the cup was full to overflowing for English Liberals to hear periodically at London.

When a race is worth being great bombs are used,

And with their oath, which smote on earth and air,

Stamped her strong foot, and on high would be free,

Coleridge little thought that the later day Conservatives would bound the Liberals to an attitude still more terrible. There is not a single Liberal or Radical platform throughout the whole length and breadth of the Kingdom from which the name of the Chief Secretary for Ireland is not cursed and execrated. The papers are full with reports of these political meetings, even for the Spartan, and such is the pressure for space that sometimes Cabinet ministers are content to have a bare half a dozen lines of their speeches.

While the pulse of an excited democracy is throbbing with this ominous excitement outside St. Stephen's, within its walls is going on a scene, if possible, still more interesting. Last week on the re-opening of Parliament Mr. John Morley gave notice of an amendment to the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The first shot was fired last Monday when Mr. Morley introduced his amendment. The speech of the first literary man of the day is not half so interesting for its literary merit as for its unanswerable logic and transparent veracity. Poor Riffour is pitifully cornered. His heartless and inhuman cynicism has exasperated all right-thinking men, disgusted many of the important members of the Liberal Unionist rank; and arch shuffler as he is and one of the cleverest adepts in writhing and wriggling, the Kanya nephew of a worthy uncle will have a very stiff time of it over the Irish question.

India in Parliament is conspicuous by its absence. In last Wednesday's paper I find a notice of motion in the name of Mr. Cune-- To call attention to the administration of the laws relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors and opium in India, and move a resolution. The speaker was greeted with applause. I must stop here as my time is up; next week I will present your readers with a longer and more varied budget.

DACCA.

Dacca, 18th March, 1889.

Mr. C. F. Worsley, our new Commissioner, after staying here for a few days with Mr. C. D. Brighton, has started on a tour of inspection. The hot weather has set in early this year,--the only set-off is a cool breeze from the river side. The excellent view which Dacca commanded from the river side seems to have provoked the wrath of the mighty goddess, for a regular chain of clouds is being thrown up by the gradual cumulation of sand deposits and Dacca thus bids fair to lose its fine river view and be altogether deprived of that internal and inland commerce which that brisk port Narainganj has already a good deal usurped. Since that awful event, the last year's tornado, a day which every one here remembers whenever there is a gathering of clouds in the firmament, the Nawabs Khajah Sir Abdool Ghani, K. C. S. I. and Khaja Ahsunullah are living in a country-seat of theirs known as "Dilkoosha," literally "heart-drawing," a suburban retreat about three quarters of an hour's journey from the town proper. It is a beautiful place; the scenic effect of an open meadow before and a background studded with luxuriant trees and plants, is charming. It seems as if both Nature and Art vied with each other to make it so delightful, and well does it deserve the designation by which it is known. The old residence of Sir Nawab and their family is being rebuilt; the one just completed is a grand palace, a model of modern architecture of great beauty and taste. Thanks to the liberality of the Nawab Ashunullah, the Dacca people now get a regular supply of ice at a moderate rate of 2 annas per seer. Ice is fast becoming one of the necessities of life in this land of scorching sun and burning heat. That it is a great boon there is not the least doubt. If the working of the Local Self-Government is to be measured by the success it has attained in individual districts and towns, it is then no matter for congratulation as far as Dacca is concerned. It is rather a subject for serious consideration for those who, in season and out of season, are clamouring for a further extension of the principles of representative Self Government. Here our civic fathers are an embodiment of jealousy. They are in perpetual hot water, where the factious spirit plays the dominant part. The unmetalled condition of the roads, the mass of refuse lying in places for days together, and the deplorable condition of the drainage and sewage, all point to the activity of our senators in dubious directions. One would have thought that of recent municipal scandals no repetition was needed, but the event has turned otherwise. Today being the second day of the Holi Festival the town presented a lively picture of fantastic incongruity. The entire Hindu population one and all, and all sorts of people in every sphere and condition in life have gone literally mad over it. Even our ancient Dispensers of justice and Keepers of peace appointed by the Government to deal justice and maintain order and the public peace, participate in it fully. Nay, they are the greatest sinners in this respect. Think of more than one such reeling and rolling in the open streets with besmeared face and soiled dress. Are we to thank Western civilization and its levelling theory for this state of things?

ALPHA.

NOTICE.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

SEALED Tenders for undertaking the printing work of the Corporation of Calcutta, will be received by the Vice-Chairman, and will be opened by him in the presence of the Tenderers, who may wish to attend, at noon of the 29th March 1889. Covers to be superscribed "Tender for printing work of the Corporation."

The earnest money Rs. 200 to be enclosed with each tender.

The successful Tenderer must sign a deed of contract duly stamped and registered at his own expense within three weeks of the acceptance of his Tender.

The Commissioners do not bind themselves to accept the lowest or any Tender.

The following is the schedule of rates at which the printing work in the Municipal Office is now valued, and the most convenient form of Tenders will be to tender under the same heads, or if preferred at a uniform percentage above or below the rates there given, but any Tenderer is at liberty to add any further details or explanation he may think requisite.

Schedule of present estimated Rates.

	Rs.	As.
Royal tabular form for 100 copies	3	0
1/2 do. do. ...	1	0
1/4 do. do. ...	0	8
do. do. for 1,000 copies	4	0
Demy tabular form for 100 copies	2	0
1/2 do. do. ...	1	0
1/4 do. do. ...	0	8
do. do. for 1,000 copies	4	0
Foolscap tabular form for 100 copies	1	0
1/2 do. do. ...	0	12
1/4 do. do. ...	0	8
1/8 do. do. ...	0	4
Foolscap tabular page, intricate for 50 or 100 copies, per page	3	0
Do. solid for 50 or 100 copies, per page	2	0
Perforating 100 copies	0	1
Numbering 1 to 100	0	1

The Tenderer must also state where the Printing Office of the contractor is or will be situated.

Any further information can be had on application.

JOHN COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.
22nd March, 1889.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Sealed Tenders for breaking imported stone ballast, at the Municipal Depots, during the official year 1889-90, will be received by the Vice-Chairman, and will be opened by him in the presence of Tenderers who may wish to attend, at 12 A. M., on the 25th instant.

2. The stone is to be broken so as to pass freely in all directions through a ring 2 inches in diameter, and to be stacked for measurement, the work to progress uniformly to completion, up to 31st March 1890.

3. Earnest money Rs. 1,000 to be enclosed with each Tender.

4. The successful Tenderer must sign a deed of contract duly stamped and registered at his own expense, within 3 weeks of the acceptance of his Tender.

5. The Commissioners do not bind themselves to accept the lowest or any Tender.

6. Any further information required can be had on application.

UDOY NARAIN SINGHA,
Superintendent of Stores.

16th March 1889.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

Are strongly recommended to try our Flowery Orange Pekoe with Rose like Aroma, @ Rs. 2 per lb.

T. HILL & CO.,
Adjoining Corinthian Theatre,
Calcutta.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas
or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "OUDH" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 29th instant.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessel should be sent to the Company's Godown at Juggannauth Ghat not later than Thursday the 28th idem.

CACHAR LINE.

For particular of the sailings of this line please apply to the undersigned.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, and Debrooghur on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A tri-weekly service is maintained between Naraingunge and Fenchogunge for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

FOR SALE

Price	...	Post free	Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt	...		Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound	...		Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late
Nawab Faridoon Jah Bahadoor,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,

CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and reaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman. The Indian Pioneer's Gazette & Sporting News, October 1, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know; and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye. [Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course. — [Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruckin, or Mr. Bluk would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

...this interesting book. We are justified in so terming it, not on account of any romantic adventures that the author has to relate, nor of any very new discoveries in geography or natural history. There is something particularly in regards ethnology; and a great deal of human nature in the book, shown to the reader with a simplicity and candour which bear testimony to its truth. Called from the busy haunts of men in the city to dwell for a time in Independent Tipperah, as a pious adviser to its chief, Doctor Mookerjee relates his adventures during the several journeys to and from that capacity, without revealing the secrets of the State, like a good diplomatist. He has adhered strictly to the advice which he offers to his brethren of the Native press, and has written what he saw and knows, without revealing all, considering what he might properly say and what withhold. The above seems to be a curious passage to be found in a book of travels, and appears to have no connection with the subject. But it arises from a casual reference to a slaughter house, and a writer who "thundered weekly against the outrage of locating shambles in the immediate vicinity of a Hindoo temple" where in fact, no temple could be said to exist. Hence, the doctor advises his fellow-citizens not to be Pharisees, righteous overmuch, but to look and be sure of their facts. In the same spirit, he has written his book. He gives an account of his travels, which seem often to have been voyages, upon the widespread rivers of Eastern Bengal which in the rains become almost inland seas. On these he philosophises on the nature of the country and the people, making careful observation of his facts; and though he sometimes fancies he knows better than his boatmen, and more than suspects that they are getting the better of him, he submits with a grace that would have done credit to Socrates, and accepts the apparently inevitable in the interests of peace. The doctor is a close observer of nature, minute and inanimate, with an eye to the picturesque as well as to the sublime and beautiful. And although there is a vein of cynicism running through many of his observations, it is tempered by such evident good nature, that even a stranger would concede him to be a lander-loving rather than a stern philosopher. This is evident in his description of his boatmen and others, while he denounces the lawlessness which has made the poor fishermen suspicious even of honest intentions, because they have so long been the helpless victims of marauders stronger than themselves. Then only defence is flight or deceit, and the latter is then justification as a mode of self protection. We are shown not only the weakness of the people, but the shortcomings of the administration that leave these things possible. The author is impartial in his censures. There is much in the book to which space forbids us to refer. That it is not a prosy one may be gathered from the fact that, for its 300 pages, there are nearly as many index references. Many of the subjects are necessarily but lightly treated, but all sensibly and fairly. And Dr. Mookerjee is such a master of the English language that in the whole book we have scarcely found a phrase that might not have been written by an Englishman "to the manner born." There is nothing in it at which any one could reasonably take offence; and there is much from which both Englishmen and natives may learn greatly-needed lessons. The Indian Daily News, Nov. 22, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-embellished with detail in what is fictionously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a ruler is, by the way, facetious. He is given over to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree. "A naked Whiteman hurls his scepticibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight." "she had such large lustrous eyes." But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "Last of the Nawabs" Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course, some few have crept in. The Pioneer, Dec. 1, 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books, &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

BRITISH LAIN'S
GLYCERINE

FOR IN VARIOUS APPLICATIONS. It is not only a most valuable skin preservative, but also a most effective skin restorer. It is a most valuable skin preservative, and also a most effective skin restorer. It is a most valuable skin preservative, and also a most effective skin restorer.

It entirely prevents the skin from becoming dry, and preserves the complexion for the rest of the year. It is a most valuable skin preservative, and also a most effective skin restorer. It is a most valuable skin preservative, and also a most effective skin restorer.

Sole Makers: M. H. B. & CO. Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

LITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemist throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incident to Females of all Ages. For children and the aged, they are precious.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Erysipelas, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for its efficacy in Rheumatism. In disorders of the Chest, it is equally valuable.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds.

Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has a powerful and beneficial effect, and still, it is not at all greasy. Manufactured only at FLORESCO-HOT-EL-LOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.) LONDON.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA.
(Opposite the Police Court.)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMOEOPATHIC PHARMACY.
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN INDIA
OF PURE HOMOEOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMOEOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulation, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, showing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand tough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. East, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lockets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c. at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satin, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sankutla, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

TRUE TO ITS NAME,

JEVES' "PERFECT PURIFIER"

Is the best disinfectant and exterminator of all objectionable odours and infectious diseases.

It cleanses the rocks, purifies the atmosphere and disinfects the drains, keeps the sick-room pure and healthy.

EQUALLY USEFUL TO

ANIMAL AND POULTRY,

It keeps a cowshed pure and sweet.

It improves the coat, destroy vermin, keeps fly off, stamps out all infectious diseases.

It is a specific for foot and mouth disease.

It kills all unpleasant smell without setting up another smell of its own.

It kills fleas, red lice and vermin of every kind in Poultry, Pigeons, Cattle, Horses, Dogs, Cats, &c. Effectually cures Gapes, Roup and Comb Disease in Poultry.

IT IS GARDENER'S FRIEND AS WELL.

It destroys moss and weeds on gravel paths and exterminates worms from lawns.

It is a valuable destroyer of all kinds of ants.

It kills green fly, red spider, thrips mealy bug, removes worms from the soil in pots, &c.

Agents: DYCE, NICOL & CO.,

3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press

THE

FALL OF MANDALAY,

BY

ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime Subscribers may register their names with the Publishers

Messrs. PETTIT & Co.,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

11, Old Court House Street;

or Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

298A, Upper Circular Road,

CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,

London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene.

Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION

CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,—

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	in advance	Rs. 12
Half-yearly	"	" 7
Quarterly	"	" 4
Monthly	"	Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy,	"	" 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 107 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. }

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1889.

} No. 367

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

ALTHOUGH the writers on the Constitution, from Blackstone to Brougham and Bagehot, are deep in a conspiracy of silence on the point, and the poor manual-makers follow suit, the Queen of England has, of her own right, in her own person, a jurisdiction independent of, and apart from, her courts and judiciary. Neither the ecclesiastical nor law courts touch her privilege to sit in judgement in the matrimonial disputes of the Upper Ten in the realm. This jurisdiction is akin to that of the Caste Tribunal which existed in the last century in Calcutta, presided over by Maharaja Nava Krishna of the Sobhabazar family. The High Court of Justice, in its matrimonial side, may adjudicate on the property or other rights in dispute. But only the Queen can give or withhold what is scarcely less dear—caste.

Her Majesty has been pleased to relax the rule about the drawing-rooms, for ladies who have been divorced, whether for any fault of their own or not. There used to be no exception. Now a lady who has divorced her husband may apply for permission for attendance, and Her Majesty will consider each case on its merits. The Queen-Empress thus exercises a real influence on English social and domestic life. In spite of great temptation and sometimes pressure from her own family, that influence has been exercised for good.

SIR Donald Mackenzie Wallace arrived at Bombay on Friday week and left it on Sunday following for Kurrachee en route for Bagdad and Buhire. At Bombay, he was the guest of Lord Reay. At Kurrachee, he was interviewed by the local Phoenix. Sir Donald has reverted to his former position in the Times service.

THE richest biped in petticoat boots from South America. This she is. She has Done Isadore Cousins of Chili as the owner of many mines, of different minerals, in her country, and of a fleet of iron steamers, and what not besides into the bargain. She is out on her travels, and is now going to New York. The mot in the "Empire City" is that, if she takes the place, she may buy it. The associated Eudorashocracy, for which that city is infamous, may be meditating a coup on her for leaving blackmail. She must finally gravitate to Paris—the capital of civilization and nonsense.

THEY may be romance in every line. Uninteresting as the vulgar pursuit of wealth ordinarily is, there are not wanting picturesque situations and incidents in it, and many writers of better work in that vein. But they usually seek to affect our imagination with fabulous accumulations and financial operations on a vast scale. Plutocracy, however, is not half so interesting as aristocracy. Again, in real life, the accounts of the successful high priests of Mammon are not by any means so edifying as those of humbler but nonetheless successful pilgrims. The trials and triumphs of Plutocracy Below-stairs naturally come home to the business and bosoms of humble humanity. We accordingly present to our readers this account of the head of the Durwan profession—the wealthiest hotel porter in the world.

"The aristocratic tourist who makes his home at the Grand Pacific during his stay in Chicago is greeted on his arrival by a tall man of genteel appearance, who takes his big travelling bag with a Chesterfieldian bow and conducts him to the foot of the elevator. This man is John Culliton the richest hotel porter in the world. Culliton is said to be worth more than 1,000,000 dollars and lives in elegance in Park Avenue. He prides himself on the memory of names and faces, and knows every public man in America who has chanced to stop at the Grand Pacific Hotel. He is always posted on the railway time tables and is prepared to give his opinion readily on the amusements in the city. He has ten assistants, who receive 90 dollars a month each and then board."

THE worship of Mammon is intelligible. That of Bacchus is more grovelling and simply stupid. Here is the Romance of Rum and—not water.

"A novel kind of duel, with a tragical termination, has just taken place outside Paris between two rivals in the affections of the buxom barmaid of a wine tavern. The rivals were brothers, and they resolved to drink copious libations of fiery and undiluted rum until one or both should be overpowered. The alcoholic article sold as 'pure Jamaica' in Parisian taverns (the Daily Telegraph's correspondent says) is bad enough when well watered, but when taken neat and in large quantities it is worse than the poisonous absinthe with which too many Frenchmen ply themselves ad libitum. The brothers began their 'rum duel' before the eyes of their dumsel, who supplied them with the deleterious concoction as they called for it. At last one of them fell down by the side of the counter, and was carried home carefully and restored. The other went out into the frosty air full of liquor, caught a chill, and died, thus leaving the field free to his rival."

Talk of Amurrs after that! Why, these Bacchanalian she-devils of the capital of Civilization beat hollow any fights to be found in Timbuctoo or recorded in Herodotus.

WITH the importation of the Baku petroleum, the trade of India with Russia is on the increase. To take one instance, Russia is now a large buyer of our Indigo. The year before last, she purchased a little over 300,000 yards at Rs. 125,000. Last year, the consumption rose to over 1,000,000 yards, worth more than Rs. 50,000. A small quantity of all this rich dye is required for use at home, the great Northern empire not being famous for manufactures. Nearly the whole will be carried to other countries of Asia and Europe. Those countries were formerly supplied by England, and so was Russia too. But now that profitable carrying business is going away, Russia has insulated herself into a lonely claret in it.

THE Bengal Chamber of Commerce, on the 23rd March, waited in deputation on the Viceroy with an important address on the subject of Railways. The deputation was composed of Sir Alexander Wilson, Kt., President, the Hon'ble C. H. Moore, Vice President, and the following Members of the Committee: W. J. M. McCaw, Esq., Chairman, Piecgood, Sub-Committee, J. N. Stuart, Esq., Chairman Indian Tea Association, R. Williamson, Esq., Chairman Jute Manufacturers Association, John A. Ralli, Esq., Chairman Sub-Committee on References, Thos. Payn, Esq., also D. Cruickshank, Esq., Past President, H. B. H. Turner, Esq., Past President, and S. E. J. Clarke, Esq., Secretary. The address urged upon Government adoption of a vigorous policy of railway construction, with special reference to the clams of Bengal which have been neglected.

A MOST piteous case of murder is being investigated on the other bank of the town. A little native girl of ten, passing by a pond, was attracted by the cries of an infant lying on the slope of the water, while its mother—another girl of not very much more mature years—was engaged in removing the earth from a spot lower down. The girl loitered there for the end of the operation. Soon she saw the mad (as she must be termed) mother take up her child, and, placing it in the spot made ready for it, cover it up with earth and mud. In horror and alarm, she ran for the nearest constable, but, before he could come to the rescue, all was over with the poor infant. When the body was exhumed, it was still warm but life was extinct. The mother was still there, as if chained and unable to turn her eye from the spot where lay her first unhappy fruit of—love, regretting his rashness when too late. She was a comparative stranger at Howrah, having come three months apparently on purpose—from a rural hamlet in the Midnapore District. Not necessarily to commit the foul and unnatural murder, at any rate with the natural object of hiding her shame from her own people. In such circumstances, it is but a step from the natural to the unnatural.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

Such crimes are common enough in every country. It is the injustice of society that is responsible to a great extent for goading the victims to the murder of their offspring.

THIS is the official summary of the Financial Statement of 1889-90:—

"The Financial Statement of 1889-90 was made in the Legislative Council by Sir David Barbour on the 27th March.

The principal features are summarised as follows:—

The Accounts of 1887-88 have closed with a deficit of Rs. 2,028,000, including as expenditure Rs. 456,000 on account of Special Defence Works. The deficit has resulted mainly from a special charge of Rs. 1,059,000 incurred in connection with the conversion of the 4 per cent. Sterling Stock into 3½ per cent., from heavy military expenditure in Burma, from a fall in exchange, and in the price of opium, and from a reduction in Railway Revenue, counter balanced by an improvement in Revenue and reduced Expenditure under other heads.

The Revised Estimates of 1888-89 show a deficit of Rs. 202,000, including as expenditure Rs. 318,000 on account of Special Defence Works, and a surplus of Rs. 616,000, if the cost of these works be excluded. This deficit is less than that originally estimated by Rs. 406,000, and as there has been a heavy fall in the rate of exchange, unforeseen expenditure on Military Expeditions, and a temporary decline in the Salt revenue owing to persistent rumours of an impending reduction of the duty, the result is held to be satisfactory.

The Budget Estimates for 1889-90 show a surplus of Rs. 106,000 after providing Rs. 1,103,000 for Special Defence Works, and excluding the cost of these works, a surplus of Rs. 1,200,000. Imperial revenues have received a special asset of Rs. 710,000, towards which all Local Governments, except the Punjab, contribute. The Estimates are stated to have been framed with moderation.

It is announced with the usual reserve that the Secretary of State proposes to draw, during 1889-90, £11,600,000 of Colonial Bills, and to raise a loan of £3,750,000 under the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Purchase Act for the purpose of advancing funds to Railway Companies; also that the Government of India will probably raise a loan of Rs. 2,500,000 in India, of which Rs. 500,000 is required for the Dock Works at Calcutta and Bombay, and Rs. 2,000,000 for Municipal Water Works.

Sir David Barbour alludes to the Excise question at some length, and shows that a remarkable improvement in revenue has, in some cases been secured by greater strictness of control, and attended with a reduction in consumption. He also corrects a misapprehension regarding the policy followed by the Government.

The unfavourable receipts from the Salt revenue in the current year are clearly shown to be largely due to the persistent rumours that have been current throughout the year that a reduction of duty was imminent.

Regarding the position of silver he says:—

"The present condition is not one of permanent equilibrium. Either there will be continuous progress in the direction of demonetising silver and substituting gold, or the world will revert to the old system of double legal tender."

He holds that the action of the United States and the Continental nations of Europe may bring on a crisis at any moment, and declares that no solution of the currency question is possible without international agreement.

Reviewing the general financial position, he adds:—

"Among the more encouraging features in Indian finance is the elasticity of the ordinary revenue. It is true that we have not many new sources of revenue open to us, but the receipts from existing sources grow with satisfactory rapidity."

Attention is called to the progress made in completing the military defensive preparations.

The annual deficit in Upper Burma is shown to have been reduced by Rs. 328,000 in the year, and the position is summed up as follows:—

"I have tried to state fairly both the probable difficulties of the future, and the reasons that exist for holding that we shall be able to encounter them successfully, and my deliberate conclusion is, that while there is every need for economy and for husbanding our revenue, there is no ground for desponding or pessimist views. Unless some unforeseen disaster occurs, there is every reason to hope that the lapse of two or three years will show a decided improvement in the financial position of the Government of India. It is true that the surplus which we have been able to show in the Estimates of the coming year is little more than nominal, only Rs. 106,000, but the Estimates have been framed with great moderation, and if the Indian revenues continue to exhibit their usual elasticity, and no unforeseen disaster occurs, I anticipate that the Financial Statement of 1890-91 will show decided improvement."

IN a recent sessions trial at Ahmedabad, the Jury acquitted the prisoner who stood charged with murder, but the Judge was of a contrary opinion and sent up the case to the High Court, supporting his view in an elaborate judgment. The High Court agreed with the Jury. The Sessions Judge was shown to have placed too much reliance upon the evidence which had been worked up by the Police, and besides to have not noticed certain important points.

THE pianograph is one of the latest developments in that line. Attached to an ordinary piano, it reproduces on music paper the notes played.

THE Calcutta session of the Supreme Legislative Council closed yesterday. The session of the Bengal Legislative Council opened to-day.

MR. F. C. BARNES has been confirmed Superintendent of Stamps and Stationery, from the 6th May 1887. It took the Government nearly two years to come to a decision. Relieved of anxiety, Mr. Barnes goes on one year's leave, from the 17th April.

IN the Districts of Beerbhoom, Burdwan, Midnapore and Bankura, the District Judge and the First Subordinate Judge or (where, as in Beerbhoom, there is only one such officer) Subordinate Judge, are, in their respective territorial jurisdictions, appointed Special Judges empowered to hear appeals from the decisions of the Revenue officers employed in conducting the survey and preparing the record of rights, in certain estates.

FROM the 1st April, fees under the Inventions and Designs Act V. of 1888, sec. 82, sub-sec. (3) and sec. 62, sub-sec. (3), will be realized in cash instead of in stamps.

MR. H. MILLER having gone on 6 months' leave, the officiating Second Judge Mr. G. C. Sconce acts as Chief Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court.

THE next or second Criminal Sessions of 1889 begins on Monday, the 29th April.

NO less than 113 Mooktears have passed the prescribed examination of the 21st and 22nd February.

THE new municipal Act comes into operation from the first April. On Monday, Sir Henry Harrison ceases to be the Commissioner of Police. Mr. J. Lumbert, C.E., assumes full powers as the head of the Metropolitan Police Force, his Assistant Mr. A. B. Barnard taking his place as Deputy Commissioner.

WE publish elsewhere the result of the municipal elections in the 25 Wards held on the 15th, and the nominations by the Local Government, the Port Trust, the Chamber of Commerce and the Trades Association, as also the new boundaries of the suburban municipalities occasioned by the absorption of a portion of the Suburbs in the Municipal Calcutta.

THE Calcutta Gazette of the week publishes as an appendix the Draft Rules proposed to supersede the existing Rules under Sec. 24 of the Indian Steam-Ships Act VII of 1884. No rules can be protection against wholesale loss of life, unless they are observed and enforced. There is little chance of such observance, unless men are punished for neglect. And there is little chance in this family circle of Indian administration of anything beyond a mild wiggling for its Prodigals and scapegraces, so long as the poor victims, numbering by the hundreds, are only Baboos, native women, and so forth. By the bye, what was the final order on the Surveyor Bushby, in connection with the Sir John Lawrence?

MEANWHILE, we are glad to learn that there is a project before Government for removing, or at least reducing, the James and Mary shoal near the mouth of the Hoogly, on which so many vessels are every year stranded.

THE average of visitors to the Indian Museum, during the 20 days of February on which it was open to the public, was 1,731 a day, the total of visitors being 34,656, as follows—natives (males 23,819+9,559) 33,378 and Europeans (1,019+259) 1,278.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE High Court seems to be under a cloud. Two of the Senior Native Judges were ailing when the country was startled by the news of the sudden prostration of the good Chief. Sir Comer Petheram has been seriously indisposed since Sunday last. In fact, it was rumoured yesterday that he had succumbed to pain in the abdomen and extreme exhaustion. The news was premature, and we hope may turn out false in the finale. It is something, under present circumstances, that the Doctors have not yet given up all hopes of recovery.

MR. R. F. Rampini, District and Sessions Judge, Burdwan, has received a temporary lift to the High Court, in place of Mr. Justice O'Kinealy on furlough. Mr. Charles H. Hill, Barrister-at-law, Public Prosecutor to the Government of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, officiates for Mr. Justice Wilson of our High Court. Is there no practising barrister here worthy of, and willing for, the temporary distinction? Mr. Justice Macpherson has also obtained furlough for 4 months and ten days, and it is believed Mr. H. W. Gordon, Judge of at Satun, will again come to the High Court.

SOCIETY in Calcutta is dissolving. Soon it will fade away like camphor, leaving behind only an odour—a sound—a memory at most. The breach in the official camp has already commenced. The supernumeraries have led the way, going out like scouts in advance. Yesterday's Legislative Council of the Viceroy disclosed a gap. The Minister of Agriculture and Sir Dinshaw Petit were non est. To-night, the Hon'ble Mr. Member and the Hon'ble Law Member and Sir David Barbour leave. The Viceroy's departure is fixed for the 2nd April.

Sir Dinshaw's time is up. His term completed, he is not coming to our city again, we fear. He has left his mark, however, in his characteristic way. He has left with the District Charitable Society an offer of Rs. 20,000 for a Sir Dinshaw Moneckjee Petit Lepet Asylum. The Parsee Knight is clearly no expert in Nomenclology. Petit Lepet Asylum would have done just as well, without detracting from his fame. A long straggling designation is an inconvenient thing up for a man or institution. The name he gives is of the nature of a needless Alexandrine.

That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along.

The institution is not needless, however, and even the burden of an awkward name may be borne in consideration of the money. Possibly, the donor may relent about the name. A charitable man like the Hon'ble Parsee would not like to inflict unnecessary torture on his fellowmen.

Not is that his only great farwell charity. Sir Dinshaw has given Rs. 25,000 to the Poojapole, the asylum for the rescue and maintenance of our inferior dumb brethren.

FOR the better counting of passengers, the local Government had proposed the compulsory use of the landing-stage at Chundpal Ghat by passenger steamers plying between Calcutta and Chundpal Ghat by the Stearn Navigation Companies engaged in the service—the India General, the Rivers, and the Orissa Companies—alop, owed the innovation as calculated to injure their trade and to inconvenience the passengers. All the steamers of the three Companies now leave and arrive at Calcutta the same day. They do not use any landing stage, receiving and landing their human freight in midstream. To confine them to one landing stage is to make them forego the rivalry of trade, and to run the risk of being detained in the Hooghly beyond Wednesday—the day they all start. Indeed, the Commissioner of Police suggested different dates for different steamers. The objections have been summarised thus:—

(1.) Steamers of the three competing Companies leave on Wednesday at the same hour, and it would be hopeless to expect the representatives of the Companies to agree to the sub-division of the sailing days, as whosoever was fortunate enough to secure Wednesday, would obtain a great advantage over the others.

(2.) The passengers embark on Tuesday night; the first steamer going along-side the stage would therefore receive her passengers and leave early on Wednesday morning. But the other steamers would not be able to disembark their passengers until Wednesday, the last vessel probably not being away until late in the day, in which case it would be useless for her to start, as at present the vessels leave early on Wednesday, and land their passengers the same evening. The object is to keep the passengers on board as long a time as possible, as their caste prejudices forbid them to eat or drink whilst on the vessel.

(3.) The delay caused in starting would render it impossible for steamers to arrive at Chundpal the same evening, and pilgrims would thus be two days without food.

(4.) There would be great delay in the departure of the steamer according to the rate of the tide.

(5.) During the night it would be dangerous for vessels of the size engaged in the trade to approach Chundpal Ghat, between buoys and shipping, if the present position of the buoys be maintained.

(6.) The proposed system would be an unjustifiable interference with private enterprise.

The Port Commissioners accept these objections and are not prepared to accept the proposed compulsory rule.

The Port Commissioners did not come out with such flying colours in the late discussion that they are entitled to command submission to their wisdom. The Companies ought certainly to know their own business, but inasmuch as recent events have shown that their present methods facilitate the loss of lives, they ought to show less confidence in their own judgment and a disposition to come to reasonable terms. It seems to be an idle superstition that all the three steamers should start on every Wednesday at the same time. So far as we can judge, we see no substantial objection to the suggestion of the Police Commissioners. Its adoption would, we believe, be a greater convenience to the passengers, all round, and reduce the risk of loss, while each Company would have equal chance—good, bad or indifferent—of serving the public. For the first few weeks, the Wednesday night drive would have some little advantage over the others, but matters would soon settle down to an equilibrium. At any rate, the Companies must be brought under stricter control than they obtain. The landing and unloading must be better supervised. In their eagerness to get to land, the passengers run every risk of being thrown into the river.

As might be expected, the popular Commission inquiry has lifted up the veil from that mystery the Times property and management. But the mystery has not been entirely dispelled. The world has been more tactful than candid. It has had just a glimpse of the truth. What we have had only increases our desire to know more. The information given on the cardinal subject of ownership itself is not clear. Mr. Walter, long popularly known as the chief proprietor, himself stated that the Times is owned by a numerous body of shareholders and that he has a rather small share. Running counter to popular belief as it did, this was incredible. It was with a sense of relief that the public received the explanation that was offered—not by Mr. Walter—but that Mr. Walter tacitly admitted that he was owner of a half and a certain share, that is, in full partnership, nine annas share. But proportion seems more in accord with the place he occupies in the popular imagination as the leading man of the Times property, and indeed actively all as the principal personality on the great journal. But it is singular that the hereditary Lord of the printed opinion should be so wholly wanting in the power to express, in a Court, in English, his more than a million's concern! Here is our daily account which we take over from the Hindustan of R. L. A. P. saying that the interpretation that Mr. Walter has of the Times is a half and a ninth share besides, is fallacious, the value proceeds

His wealth is derived not from the Times itself, but from the contract to produce and print it. The printing is done according to schedule. The copyright of the Times is not his. All the machinery and all the organisation, by which the Times is made a great paper, are in his hands. The proprietors of the Times can neither appoint nor dismiss either editor, leader-writer or correspondent. If the contract were broken, the Times might appear next day under a new name exactly as it did the previous day, whereas the proprietors would have to issue a new paper under the old name. Mr. Walter is therefore master of the situation. One can understand that he feels the responsibility of his position, and that he shrinks from throwing upon his fellow proprietors a ruinous burden, which they have done nothing to create, and he has assisted to pile up.

The last remark refers to the statement, made in some quarters, that Mr. Walter will take upon himself the heavy costs of the Times in the inquiry, and will sell his Zemindari of Bowwood, if required, rather than let the expenses fall on the rest of the shareholders, many of whom are poor, women and orphans, and so forth. We do not know what authority there is for the rumour. It seems to us not the least of the many startling things in connection with this inquiry. If it is true, Mr. Walter's chivalrous generosity will be among the noblest traditions of the Times management, so famous for liberality.

We are glad to learn that—

"A movement is already taking place in influential circles of raising a fund to indemnify the London Times for the heavy expenses incurred in connection with the Patell Commission. Our well known and worthy Scotchman has declared his readiness to subscribe £10,000."

Mr. Walter deserves sympathy.

A LITERARY nuisance is laying down South. The death of President White has been the signal to all the seniors in vice and in prose to be at the subject, with the result of the production of a prodigious deal of prose. It are alone is competent to save and sublimate the spectacle might be reckoned salutary. It would be difficult to find anywhere such a cumulation of literary dung. But White! What a fate is thine! to be the victim of the enthusiasm of friends. Mr. Whitmore has, by one stroke of pen and, brought himself and his subject down with an epigram hardly distinguishable from bathos. Says this admirer—

"At any rate whatever of Mr. White has done, or did not do, he has achieved immortality."

This notable example of the Art of Linking doubtless stirred kindred spirits, and the public had better look out for the forthcoming bales of magnificent eulogy. Mr. M Tindale is the first of such spirits, who has already taken the field. He is great in verse as well as prose. His feelings find expression in both. He has paraphrased Mr. Whitmore's striking sentiment in prose at length and then plunged into poetry. His song, however, is neither rhyme nor reason. At the best, it is sounding commonplace, dressed in metrical prose, divided into lines of different lengths. The poem is called "Who are Immortal?" "In Memory of beloved David White," and thus opens—

"Who are immortal?
Not the proud tyrant, nor vain
Men of untold wealth and influence
O'er whom stand stately marble monuments.
Immortality dwells not in hyacinth-trifles,
Tablets soon perish, monuments decay;
The waiting on the Roll of Fame
Grows cold with age. The note
Of many-tongued applause, soon
Disperses in faint uncertain murmurs.
You must awake the Echoes of an time
To be immortal—echoes in the hearts
Of generations which are yet unborn,
Echoes that will repeat the story o'er and o'er
And carry it above the claims of petty interest."

Of course, the implication is, that the late Mr. White achieved the anachronism of awaking the Echoes of all time—echoes in the hearts of generations yet unborn. The reader will remark Mr. Tindale's pyramidal method of building his stony rhyme from the apex down-wards. The first line has 5 syllables, the 2nd 7, the 3rd 9, the 4th 12, the 5th 14, then there is a sudden revolution, the number going down to 10 syllables, next to 8, and finally to a few as 6 syllables. Mr. Whitmore continues in the same strain, quite innocent of self-indulgence.

"A man may live in sculptured stone,
In sweetest song?—On wall and page
Or flattering history, and yet not be immortal!
The name imperishable, the power to act
A magic spell o'er coming ages,
To cause a ripple on his side, which
Will widen till it reaches the Eternal Shore,
To lift the fallen, cause Deceit to sing
Place bread before the hungry for all time,
Teach hearts to throb in unison,
Point to a path that leads from want and woe
To national prosperity."

There are some expressions beyond us. For instance—

"The Canteens have rolled away, and strangers

Ask how came this great prosperity," &c.

Is "Canteens" the word intended? It is rather an ominous word. The Anglo-Indians may well regard an imputation on their sobriety, if it is hinted that the canteens and canteenism, in every shape and under every designation, must be abolished before there is hope of prosperity among the poor Whites.

THE bards are not only a Bohemian brotherhood, but veritable Gipseys to the backbone—not only in their fortune-telling proclivity, prophesying the fates of men and nations but down to the vulgar propensity to pilfering. No chance of kidnapping children comes amiss to any of the fraternity however exalted. If the Iliad or the Odyssey was the production of one mind, as appears too probable from the unity prevailing, it may be taken for granted that the Father of Poetry drew largely upon his recollection of the Minneangers' ballads and songs of the Heroic Age. Certainly, all the great poets who have had opportunities have been bold robbers of their brethren's bauns of the brain. What wonder that "poor Goldy" should turn a penny by a little sharp practice? He is a charming writer whose works are all popular. Perhaps none of his compositions is so wellknown and appreciated as the little song in the comedy of She stoops to conquer, to wit—

When lovely woman stoops to folly,
And finds too late that men betray,
What charm can soothe her melancholy,
What art can wash her guilt away?

The only art her guilt to cover,
To hide her shame from every eye,
To give repentance to her lover
And wring his bosom—is to die.

That is not a great literary feat to draw down deafening applause. But the sentiment is amiable and true, and it is expressed with point, and through the whole pervades an atmosphere of tranquil beauty. The credit of the piece does not belong to the gifted simpleton except as a translator. The original was the work of a forgotten French poet of the beginning of the 18th century, named Segur, who, in 1719, published in Paris a collection of his pieces containing the following stanzas.

Lorsqu'une femme, après trop de tendresse
D'un homme sent la trahison,
Comment, pour cette si douce faiblesse,
Peut-elle trouver une guérison?

Le seul remède qu'elle peut ressentir,
La seule revanche pour son tort,
Pour l'aine trop tard l'amant repentir,
Heus! trop tard—est le mort.

Nor is this the only instance. The tender poem of the Hermit, is founded upon the old ballad of the "Nuthroan Maid."

THE expiring Municipal Corporation met for the last time on Thursday. The Commissioners were called on to consider the Budget for the next year and to fix the rates. The Budget was passed as framed by the Budget Committee consisting of members of both the Calcutta and Suburban Municipalities. The questions which chiefly occupied the attention of the Commissioners were the retention of the services of the Secretary and the Collector of the Suburban Corporation. It must be gratifying to his friends to know that almost every hand was lifted up in favour of Mr. Owen as Personal Assistant to the Chairs, or rather the Chan and the stool of the Vice-man. Baboo Oghoremath Moharjee was continued to collect the rates in the Suburbs. The rates were fixed as under—

General Rate 9½ per cent.
Water Rate 6 per cent.
Lighting Rate 2 per cent.
Sewage Rate 2 per cent.

All these rates are to be recovered in advance as a consolidated rate, half being payable by the owners and half by the occupiers of houses and lands. The consolidated rate on bustee land and the huts built thereon will be recovered from the owner of the land, but he will be allowed a deduction of one-eighth as a set off against collection charges and as a commutation of all refunds for huts on account of vacancy or non-existence. Two quarters' House rate is thus payable in the quarter commencing in April 1889. The town has been granted relief of the Police Rate, and for fees for the night-soil service—levied on those who used it—an indiscriminate rate on all, under the name of the Sewage Rate, has been fixed at 2 per cent. Speaking generally, the House rate has been increased by 1 per cent, while there will be no call for the Police Rate at all. But for the accident of five quarters' collection falling during the next year, it would have been necessary to raise the General Rate, to, say, 10 per cent, a figure which may be expected to be reached in subsequent years. The suburbs will pay only 3 per cent. Water Rate, for, under the law, "houses and lands, no part of which is within 150 yards of the nearest stand-pipe or other supply of filtered water available to the public, shall pay 3 per cent. less than houses otherwise situated."

The new corporation commencing on Monday next, holds its first meeting on Thursday the 4th April. The first in the List of Business is the appointment of a General Committee, the ruling Committee of the Corporation. The number has been limited by law to 18, namely, 12 from the 50 elected and 6 from the remaining 25 quasi-elected and nominated Commissioners. These appointments must be made under rules made by the Commissioners in meeting for the 12 and by the local Government for the 6. But we do not observe that they have been yet made or published.

Of late, there has been a tendency to centralize the power of the Corporation in the General Committee, and for the Chairman to monopolize all power. The new law expressly sanctions these usurpations. The late Sir Ashley Eden held the Corporation as a whole too unwieldy for real practical work, and always recommended a select minority for the business of the town. The present Government adopted the recommendation and has legislatively fixed the number of the Committee and empowered the Chairman to give effect to the deliberations of the Committee independent of the general body of Commissioners. The law provides that "when the Chairman and the majority of the General Committee are in accord and inconvenience is likely to result from delay, it shall not be necessary before action is taken to wait for the confirmation of the Commissioners in meeting, but if the Commissioners in meeting do not confirm the action of the General Committee, such steps shall be taken to carry out the orders of the Commissioners as may still be practicable."

As an evidence of how it is proposed to work this new power, the Chairman last week issued an advertisement inviting tenders for printing work of the Corporation, without so much as even the knowledge of the Town Council or the General Committee which sit every week to advise the Chairman. That supposes the abolition of the present printing staff of the Corporation—about 50 souls. If the new law is worked in this spirit, at its next revision, we may reasonably expect the abolition of the large corporate body and the vesting of the entire control in half a dozen hands.

HAVING, with others in the press, had occasion to notice the indecent family selection of examiners for the sole candidate this year for Doctoral honours, we ought to record that the candidate has failed in the ordeal. We have received the news with mixed feelings. We regret the disappointment to Master Jogendra Chunder Ghose, whom we personally like and whose first appearance as the editor of the works of a great Indian we cordially encouraged. He is a promising young man, capable of industry, and his disappointment can be only temporary.

MUCH nonsense has been talked in society in connection with this examination, by men who are constitutionally or from defect of education, incapable of appreciating the sacred duty of journalists, and by none so much as by the precious old fogey who, to its shame, is the head of the vakel bar. This man, who, in the Dark Age of the old Sudder Court, obtained the right to wear the vakel's turban, with no more than the education of a Kerani, has never improved during all the ages. By force of a barren longevity and a superb capacity to be all things to all men and the smiling instrument of the mean in power in particular, he has come to be somebody. Of course, this is exactly the sort of person to anticipate and exaggerate the good will or bad will of his patrons. And this honourable gentleman has, in his latter days, taken to criticise the proprieties of Reis & Rayyet! We have no space to devote to him this week, or we could give many particulars which would have amused the reader. We will only mention that there is on record, in the printed proceedings of a suburban public meeting, a complaint against him which shows of what moral calibre he is made of. Ne sutor ultra crepidum.

THE latest and last sitting of the Calcutta session of the Legislative Council of India yesterday, was occupied with discussion on the Budget. The debate was wound up with a speech from the Chair, in which the Viceroy announced the decision of the Secretary of State that the Budget will be every year presented for discussion, not by accident, but of system—not by favour, but of right. This had been anticipated, but his Excellency added something of even more importance and which was scarcely hoped for. He said that, subject to certain necessary restrictions, the right of interpellation will be granted. We will notice the debate hereafter. This notable installment of reform we owe to Lord Dufferin's initiative.

THE Bombay Gazette reminds the public of a previous dangerous flight in the air from the Western Capital. In 1853, one Fitzherbert Knight, after a previous failure, ascended, in a balloon, on the 18th December, to the height of 8,000 to 10,000 feet, and was carried far out into the sea, and was rescued from death by the humane Captain Fox of the Lady & Family steamer, who ran a race for many miles in the direction of the balloon as he saw it drifting in the air for the purpose and took up Knight who, clinging to the netting of his apparatus, was slowly sinking and was half under water. At Bombay, however, he was given up for lost. The Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy, Sir Henry Leeke, who was at Breach Candy, himself galloped to the Dock Yard, had a boat placed on a truck and carried across to Breach Candy and sent after in search, but it returned after midnight without any information. Next day, the Bombay press said that Mr. Knight had recovered his credit at the cost of his life. This impression remained until four days after a letter from Surat announced that the aeronaut had been rescued ten miles out in the sea the very night of his ascent.

About the same time, Mr. Knight visited Bengal and twice performed before the public at the late Raja Baddy Nath's wellknown seat at Cossipore. As usual, the first attempt was disappointing, the balloon would not be persuaded to rise, but it rose at last, not higher than the loftier trees in the neighbourhood, and immediately collapsed and sank down to the ground. Soon, however, the aeronaut redeemed his credit. The next demonstration was quite a success. Mr. Knight rose to a decent height and sailed in the air due east and descended in safety in a field adjoining a poor hamlet beyond the cantonment of Dum-Dum.

Whatever the case in Bombay, Mr. Knight was not the first aeronaut in Bengal. Many years before him, a man of the name of Reade had strayed to this country who "attracted the natives" by his offer to ride in his own car in the sky. The greatest sensation was caused by the announcement. The whole country crowded to Garden Reach to witness the phenomenon. He was as good as his word. He rose in his balloon and soon descended in the same place. In his descent, the balloon struck against a lofty chimney, and he received an injury, we believe, in reaching from his car.

Up to the late letters on which the Mulharao of Cashmere is being built, most of his life from the moment he was regarded by the Government as a subject to be of any account, not, at the worst, as a serious rival to the sovereign. Colonel Henderson has been deputed to take up the inquiry. Meanwhile, the poor Mulharao has been fighting one of his suits. If he has asked to abdicate or to be given a British minister, it must be under a pain. What would not native powers give to avoid the cruelty of Mulhar Rao, that victim of British intrigue and official perversity! The Government of India has not, however, acceded to the motion proposed to appoint one of our European officers as Dewan of Cashmere. So low has the Mulharao fallen, that he had, according to a correspondent of the Pioneer, gone inveig, to British territory, to fall at the feet of his hereditary servant Lachman Das.

THE Calcutta University is a very beggar on horseback, and it is justifying to the letter the proverb in regard to its prototype. Heedless of praise or blame, it is riding valiantly to the precincts of the unmentionable regions. Whatever reputation it once possessed had, in course of time, particularly of late years, been sacrificed. Since the appointment of a stupid Registrar and the ascendancy of a not over scrupulous native party, its very respectability has come in question. To-day again comes the melancholy news of another step in the "progress" in not heavenward enterprise on which it seems to have set its heart. There was a meeting of the Faculty of Arts to elect five representatives to the Syndicate. Eight gentlemen were proposed, of whom the five who stood at the head of the poll were of course elected. We give the names and the number of votes received by each.

1. Sir Alfred Croft	38
2. Mr. Justice Gurusdas Banerjee	31
3. Dr. Mahendralal Sircar	29
4. Mr. Pedler	26
5. Babu Ashutosh Mookerjee	24
6. Mr. Tawney	22
7. Principal Meher Chunder Nyayaratna	14
8. The Rev. Mr. MacDonall	11

So all the Baboos got in at the expense of the Sahibs. The English-speaking Baboos were preferred to the scholarly English and Scotch gentlemen and practical educationists as representatives of the Arts Faculty of what is essentially an English and European University situated in India. Of course, as an Indian University, the Calcutta looks after the higher education in Sanskrit, and yet there is no room for the only Pandit proposed, though all three English-speaking Baboos could be provided for. The more rational course would have been to send the Pandit and all the Europeans—all picked men. We blush for this result. It was due to the votes of the unlettered natives who form the majority in the University.

The worst feature in to-day's election is the supersession of Principal in favour of his pupil of last year or so, Baboo Ashutosh Mookerjee, Junior. It is an outrage and a crying shame. It is the effect of hard canvassing, doubtless. Mr. Mookerjee is a clever young man who does not understand the beauty of being his light under a bushel. He is making frantic efforts to push himself to the front. He has drawn on himself a snub at the Asiatic Society, we believe. If he has the true Indian modesty, he will yet withdraw to make room for his old master.

We have delayed our issue to give the latest news of the Chief Justice. He is still in full consciousness and bravely struggling on. It has been decided to perform an operation on him by electricity tomorrow.

Two or three days ago, Sir Comer was received by Father Lafont into the Church of Rome and received the Sacrament.

He had made his will before, and has now only added a codicil appointing Mr. Justice Norris as an executor.

We do hope the operation will set our suffering Chief up. In any case, he cannot resume his duties for some time to come. The question of an Acting Chief has been before the Government. Unfortunately, at this moment, the senior Puisne Baboo Romesh Chunder Mitter too is suffering. The Law Member visited him and inquired, but the Judge referred him to his physician. Dr. Sircar, being asked, positively set his face against risking such a valuable life. According to him, Mr. Mitter needs rest.

We suppose we are safe in congratulating Mr. Pinsep as the Chief Justice in prospect, pending the appointment of the fact man.

LORD LANSDOWNE paid a visit to Burrabazar, to ascertain for himself the desirability or otherwise of the proposed Central Road from the Howrah bridge to Sealdah. A walk over the portions to be traversed by the new road is enough to convince one of the necessity of such an opening for ventilation of that portion of the town. But what about the Funds? That is the question. The desirability of the project is a matter of course.

The defeated candidate in Ward No. 10, at the municipal election, objected to several of the votes of the candidate immediately before him, on the ground that persons who were not members of such bodies had voted on behalf of companies or joint families. The Chairman over-ruled the objections as too late. Thereupon, Baboo Surendra Nath Das obtained a rule from the High Court calling on the Chairman and the other candidate to shew cause why those votes should not be cancelled. The rule was argued to-day and discharged. The Chairman's ruling is maintained.

THE issues have been fixed in the Burdwan adoption case—namely, whether the late Maharani had the power to adopt, and whether the adoption if made was valid.

THE Resident has left for Hyderabad—a sadder if not wiser man than he came. He has been snubbed for his hostility to the Minister. The Mehdi Hassan scheme has survived the criticism of Messrs. Mehdi Ali and Howell. The Government of India do not care to interfere. They are ready to give Hyderabad any length of rope.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1889.

THE LATE JOHN BRIGHT.

ON Wednesday the 27th instant, from his home in England, left the earth for his Maker a plain undecorated Englishman of no birth, nor vast estates, nor academic renown, nor high classical attainments, who will be mourned, as never Prince was, throughout the civilised globe. With the death, at the mature age of 78, of John Bright, England has lost her greatest orator and the world its most upright—perhaps its sole upright—statesman. It is true, he has recently been neglected and under a cloud, in consequence of his inability to admire the boycotting and bloody policy of the Irish Home Rulers and their Gladstonian allies, but there has never been so much as a whisper of reproach against his good faith. His courage and consistency were the more resplendent from his painful separation from his leader and former associates. This Tribune of the People was no vulgar demagogue, living upon the breath of the populace. He was on need prepared to estrange democracy as to Irish aristocracy or defy royalty. Submitting to the arbitrament of his own soul only, he never cared to conciliate parties or persons. Throughout a long career, he repeatedly found himself alone, without a sigh as without a blush. Though sharing to the full the heat and burden of the angry strife of party politics, he managed to preserve his simple Quaker soul in its pristine purity. His career had a statuesque unity which does not belong to the times. Its moral grandeur is almost unique in British history.

With every part well acted—life enjoy'd,
And every talent to the last employ'd,
Here good John Bright is laid; a people's grief
Consigns to memory their regretted chief.

HOW TO PACIFY BURMA.

THE continued fighting and prolonged disturbed state of Upper Burma, is a strange commentary on the official and semi-official assurances in regard to the situation in that unhappy country. The public have been systematically gulled by statements, constantly made through official reports and newspaper correspondence, of progress rapidly being attained in the various districts, towards pacifying Upper Burma. A reference to almost every other issue of the Englishman, the Indian Daily News or the Statesman, will corroborate me.

The encounter with "Dacoits" in February last, reported in the Statesman of the 12th of that month, resulting in the death of Lieutenant Stoddard, two sepoys of the 17th B. I. and two men of the Hampshire, is said to have been the sharpest we had. The writer unhesitatingly asserts, without fear of contradiction, by other than officially cooked up reports, that it is not true the encounter referred to was the sharpest. The statement is simply an official fiction, to delude the people of India, and misguide public feeling at home. Before and since the writer left Upper Burma, there have been both sharper and more disastrous contests with the Burmans.

Many, more particularly officials, object to a spade being called a spade. They say it is unparliamentary and vulgar to call an untruth a lie. To avoid hurting the soft-skinned official whose eye may fall on this article, the writer will be as near parliamentary in language as possible. All the same, the writer agrees with Johnson and Webster that, that which is untrue is a lie.

Any writer undertaking to lay the naked truth before the public on the subject of the Burmese or any other question, stands a good chance of being misjudged, his statements set aside as ill timed or exaggerated, and he set down as a disappointed man, an unsuccessful office-seeker. Such is almost invariably the case when the delinquencies of Government officials are shown up, by a writer who would not bow to their views. In this instance, at any rate, no such trick is possible. The author of this article is neither a disappointed man, nor an unsuccessful office-seeker; he is alike free, independent, and unprejudiced. He was an active eye witness of the glorious 11 days' campaign, for deposing King Theebaw and wresting unjustly from him his territory, said to be larger than France. The whole process, according to Sir Charles Bernard speaking in London on the 20th February last, was accomplished with the loss only of 11 men. This statement is so palpably incorrect, that it can not go unchallenged. In a future article, the writer will deal with the lecture of the late Chief Commissioner of Burma, delivered in London at Falcon-square Chapel, on "Burma and its People."

Burma has almost ceased to be the absorbing political topic of the day, its annexation being a pronounced fact which there can be no revoking. If this construction is correct, what must Burma look forward to, other than a reign of Terror, the country washed in blood of the sons of her soil, of men who have every right, as we ourselves, to repel invasion! What an ignominious display of weakness to say French intrigues compelled us to annex Burma, knowing so well that France had no means of access to Burma to protect interests of any magnitude she might secure for herself! The writer has said before, it is not true that war was declared or Burma annexed to checkmate French intrigues. That Mons. Haas did start a scare at Mandalay, cannot be denied; but that France entertained the purpose Mons. Haas succeeded in deluding Theebaw to believe, is as false as it was impossible. Few know outside the circle of those who were in Burma some years before its annexation and were present at the occupation of Mandalay as the writer was, how this scare on the part of Mons. Haas came to light.

It has nowhere yet been said that Mons. Haas intrigued in any way. His arrival in Mandalay at the time things were becoming hot for Theebaw, was made stock of, and his every footstep watched and dogged.

It was not till Mons. Haas put in writing what he intended proposing to his Government, the heads of a scheme, nothing short of a man who should have been in a lunatic asylum, in place of being at large, would do, that the chance for ruining the poor King came. How the particulars of this wild Frenchman's insane scheme came to the knowledge of Government, was long a mystery, the truth is that Mr. Andriano, Italian Consul at Mandalay, who pretended to play into the hands of Theebaw through the Kenwoon Mencee, soon ascertained what was in the wind. The Kenwoon, who has the credit of selling his Royal Master, furnished Mr. Andriano with a draft copy of the proposals. Of course, once in the hands of a man who knew what use to make of it, and did not scruple to do so, and it naturally found its way to Rangoon, to enlighten Sir C. Bernard. For this business, Mr. Andriano received Rs. 5,000, and, in the presence of the writer, on the evening of Lord and Lady Dufferin's embarkation for Rangoon, was, together with his wife, congratulated that Theebaw had not made away with them! In further writings of the author, the Italian Consul's name will be read with interest, showing his connection with the Bombay Trading Corporation, Limited, and the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company. It may not be out of place here, however, to mention the Italian Government did not approve of his conduct as accredited Consul to a sovereign with whom Italy was on friendly terms.

The author has already said he is free, untrammelled, independent and unprejudiced. He by no means arrogates to himself the proud rôle of a champion of right against might, but only claims to be a judge of what is right and what is wrong. The Almighty he believes has endowed all men with the same power, if used in the right direction. He has an equal right to exercise it with the highest-born. He has no interests to serve, beyond his effort to induce those who persist in wholesale plunder, rapine, murder and bloodshed in the name of Government, to restore to the Burmans, Burma conditionally. It has sometime since become an exploded idea, that we are fighting dacoits. They are not so, they are patriots fighting to preserve their own traditional and hereditary rights. No one who knew anything of Burma or the Burmese, after our cowardly and dishonorable capture and deportation of Theebaw, looked forward to anything but a continuation of guerilla warfare, such as has taken place and will continue, until our eyes are opened to the enormity of our errors, and we proceed seriously to reconcile to us, so far as lies in our power, the people we have causelessly converted into our bitterest enemies.

On the occupation of Mandalay in November, 1885, Colonel Sir Edward Sladen, Political officer, and many others including the writer, were opposed to annexation, as unjust, uncalled for and cruel in the most terrible degree. It is fresh in the writer's memory that political officer's remark, "if annexation is the outcome of our being in Mandalay to day, I resign the service and go home." For sometime after Sir Charles Bernard's first proclamation, there was some conflict of opinion as to whether the proclamation meant annexation pure and simple, or if we were only for a time intending to assist materially in administering the government of the country.

Lord Dufferin, however, had reserved to himself the right, to set the matter at rest, and on the night of the Banquet at Mandalay in February 1886, His Excellency's speech removed any doubt that had been entertained through the bungling proclamation made by Sir Charles Bernard, as the Viceroy's voice, clear as a bell, announced, that Upper Burma had become part and parcel of Her Majesty's dominions. Upon many this announcement fell like a thunderbolt, and crushed the last hope.

Many still hoped against hope that Her Majesty the Queen-Empress would not carry out the whole tale of murder and dacoity that were being perpetrated in her name. But how clear did the Viceroy make it to all, that the murder, rapine, and robbery, begun, and then going on, under His Excellency's own eyes, were to be continued, as they still are being continued to this day! An hour after those words fell from the lips of the Viceroy, Colonel Sir Edward Sladen, resting his hand on the writer's shoulder, said, briefly and sadly, "I resign." And he did so. The incident requires no comment from the writer.

It is not in egotism that these reminiscences are obtruded. The object of diverging from the subject heading of this article, has been to show, that by his presence on the day of occupation of Mandalay by our Forces and his continued residence for over two years after in Mandalay, etc., and perfect knowledge of all that transpired officially and unofficially, his intimacy with the old officials of Theebaw, entitle the writer to some position as an authority on matters affecting the good of Burma.

Some readers will probably be amused and tickled by the assurance of the writer. Others may wonder at his boldness in introducing what they may consider glaring fiction into a serious article of facts; or they may smile, and then dismiss it from mind.

But the public at home for whose information this article is more specially written, on coming across the lines, will take, no doubt, quite a different view, and accept the statement of one who knows. The fact will yet be recognised in Great Britain that no more monstrous wrong could have been inflicted than robbing the Burmese of Burma in the interests of a body of merchants, who had robbed Theebaw, solacing themselves in their ill gotten gain, and the ruin of the king.

The writer's object is to bring about amity, and not embitter the continued and determined enmity now paramount in Upper Burma. The public of India are still ill informed of the state of affairs in Burma. The confused and muddled ideas of Parliament and England regarding Burmese affairs requires to be dispelled, and the extraordinary ignorance displayed from time to time removed, and statesmen rise equal to the situation of affairs as they now exist in Upper Burma.

The pacification of Burma as we are now trying to bring it about, is absurd and cruel in the extreme. It never will be pacified, and it will only be held at an immense cost of coin, and endless loss of life. As in Egypt and the Soudan, we have burnt our fingers, so also in Burma. Restore nominally the House of Alompra, and we will in six months have peace in Burma and a law-abiding people. Give Burma a constitutional form of Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Some occupations tend to the development of certain diseases, and those who toil as miners are peculiarly liable to rheumatism, lumbago, and other allied complaints. In the goldfields and copper mines Holloway's remedies have been largely patronized by the workers to their very great advantage, and they can be confidently recommended as invaluable remedies for inward congestions, spasms and cramps in the bowels, and all those conditions of the lungs and liver to which those who work underground or in impure atmospheres are so peculiarly liable. For cuts, bruises, sprains and stiffened joints, the action of Holloway's Ointment is eminently healing and soothing, and a supply should always be at hand in case of need.

Government, place a minor at Mandalay, with a strong-minded Resident. Let them know they have a Burmese King if he be but a puppet, they will be satisfied. We in no way by such an act of grace affect our status as a powerful nation, in no way diminish our prestige or national pride: Constitutions have been constantly on the change from time immemorial and to the end of the chapter will continue. Let the immense amount of treasure we have spent in opening up the country for them, be recouped as indemnity. To do this there are no difficulties in the way which cannot be overcome. Until we do this or something closely approaching it, there will be as now a cry of Peace! Peace! where there is no Peace.

ZITO.

ENGLISH POLITICS.

BY A HINDU IN ENGLAND.

London, March 3, 1889.

A few hours after I posted my letter to you, last Friday, Richard Pigott had blown out his brains in a room at the Hotel de los Embajados in Madrid. From here he went over to France, spent a day in Paris, and then went to Madrid where he passed off as Roland Ponsonby. There were two warrants issued against him, one by Sir James Hannen, the President of the Royal Commission, and the other by Mr. Vaughan, the Bow-street Police Magistrate, before whom Mr. Parnell had preferred a charge of forgery. The British Embassy at Madrid had received from Scotland Yard and from the Foreign Office, and had communicated to the Spanish civil authorities, a full description of the fugitive, and requested them to look out for him. An inspector accordingly went to the hotel and made inquiries of the landlord and servants which soon convinced him that the so-called Ponsonby was the man wanted by the British Embassy. The inspector sent for the interpreter of the hotel La German. He was the only person who had conversed with Pigott, and had been constantly with him since his arrival in the through express from Paris on Thursday morning. Pigott was in his room when the police arrived to arrest him. Till then he had spent most of his time going about Madrid with the interpreter. The inspector, in order to avoid alarming Pigott, went up to his room with the German, asking the latter to tell the Englishman to follow him to the office of the Civil Governor, who would communicate to him some news which concerned him. Pigott without any sign of emotion put on his overcoat, took his hat and umbrella, and left his room and went as far as the stairs with the inspector and the interpreter. Then he quickly turned his steps to the bed-room calling out to the interpreter that he was going for his cards. The others did not follow him into the bed room, and actually waited for him in the corridor outside. Pigott went into the alcove of his room, took a revolver from the only small leather bag he had brought with him and shot himself dead. He must have fired the shot into his mouth, as it shattered the skull and the upper part of the mouth. The inspector and the interpreter, together with some other persons, entered the bed room only to find all assistance useless.

The Pigott incident has evoked curious comments from the American and Continental Press. The San announces gravely that Parnell has, it is understood, offered Mr. MacDonald, of the London Times, £150 a week to lecture in the United States on some peculiarities of English journalism. Mr. Walter and Mr. Bockle have received similar offers, but have declined, "owing to an engagement to prepare an obituary notice of the property of the Thunderer." Now that Pigott has gone to his last home, one word before I have done with him. A cowardly forger as he was, clever by half in working in the dark the ruin of some of the greatest men of the day, and a nation's cause along with it, this last act of the suicide must be held to have relived to a certain extent the uniform gloom of a life long villany, inasmuch as he bade adieu to life to avoid "a dishonoured old age to be passed in shameful slavery."

Last Friday the debate on Mr. Morley's amendment to the Address came to a close. The motion was lost by 79 votes, the ayes being 260 and the noes 339. Mr. Gladstone was at his best. "Time is nothing," said Disraeli's Vivian Grey; and those who heard the Grand Old Man last Friday night thundering against the iniquities of the present Administration were constrained to echo that sentiment. "Come to the country," was the defiant challenge of the veteran octogenarian, and he repeated it more than once.

The former music of his voice has been restored to a considerable extent. The same marshalling of facts, undisputed and undisputable, the same force of logic, and last though not least, a magnificent peroration kept the House well-bound for more than an hour and a half. The Chancellor of the Exchequer who had sat at the feet of Mr. Gladstone to learn his art, in rising to reply to his former leader, could not help referring to the magic of the ex-premier's speech. "I trust," said Mr. Goschen, "I trust that the House, though still under the spell of the eloquence of the right hon'ble gentleman would permit me to follow him through the main portions of his speech." The last speaker on the Liberal side was Mr. Parnell. When he rose to speak at 11 O'clock, the House presented a scene almost unique. Amid a scene of extraordinary outburst of enthusiasm Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Morley, Sir William Harcourt and all the members of the Liberal party took their places to cheer the "uncrowned king" of Ireland. Such a reception has never been given to one who is not in office or has not been in office.

Last Monday the installation of President Harrison in the White House of the United States passed off amidst pouring rain. The inaugural Address is not much thought of in this country, and is generally characterised as commonplace. An uncompromising advocate of Protection, the increase of the Navy, the repudiation of the monopoly of the Panama canal by the French or any other European power, the plethora in the National Treasury and the restlessness and uneasiness consequent thereon, these were the main points touched in the speech.

THE NEW CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA MUNICIPALITY.

FIRST GENERAL ELECTION UNDER ACT II (B.C.) OF 1888, ON THE 15TH MARCH 1889.

Declaration of the Result of the Election under Section 19 of the Act and Rule 18 of the Rules prescribed by Government for the Election of Commissioners.

Names.	Number of valid votes.	Remarks.
WARD NO. 1.
Kumar Binoy Krishna	No poll.
Baboo Behary Lal Mitter	poll. } Elected.
Mr. R. Mitra	Withdrew before poll.
WARD NO. 2.
Mr. N. N. Ghose ...	586	Elected.
Baboo Hurry Protnomo Sen ...	456	Elected.
Dr. U. K. Dutt ...	291	Not elected.
Baboo Buddy Nauth Dutt ...	53	Ditto.
WARD NO. 3.
Baboo Kally Nauth Mitter ...	299	Elected.
Kunwar Shubul Krishna ...	243	Elected.
Baboo Omerto Lal Bose ...	131	Not elected.
" Mohney Mohun Chatterjea ...	79	Not elected.
WARD NO. 4.
Baboo Nolin Behari Sircar ...	449	Elected.
" Surutt Chunder Mitter ...	375	Elected.
" Omritto Nauth Mitter ...	175	Withdrew from the contest at 5.30 P.M.
WARD NO. 5.
Baboo Lal Behary Bysack	No poll.
Kumar Durgachandra Narayan Roy	Withdrew before poll.
Dr. Lal Madhub Mukerjee
WARD NO. 6.
Dr. Bhuban Mohun Sircar ...	411	Elected.
Baboo Umachant Sen ...	371	Elected.
" Probodh Chunder Mitter ...	153	Not elected.
WARD NO. 7.
Baboo Juggunnath Khanna ...	No	...
" Sewbux Borka ...	contest.	Elected.
WARD NO. 8.
Moulvie Budhudeen Hyder ...	763	Elected.
Baboo Sree Nath Dutt ...	516	Elected.
" Gobind Chunder Bhur ...	105	Not elected.
WARD NO. 9.
Dr. Zahiruddeen Ahmed ...	387	Elected.
Baboo Narendra Nath Sen ...	290	Elected.
WARD NO. 10.
Baboo Gonesh Chunder Chunder ...	230	Elected.
" Rash Behary Doss ...	207	Elected.
" Sootendro Nath Doss ...	197	Not elected.
WARD NO. 11.
Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dutt ...	384	Elected.
Hon'ble Dr. Mahendralal Sircar, C.I.E. ...	383	Elected.
Baboo Bepindro Nauth Chatterjea ...	88	Not elected.
" Preo Nauth Paulit ...	68	Not elected.

WARD NO. 12.
Baboo Nobin Chand Boral ...	316	Elected.
Mr. H. W. Hubert ...	309	Elected.
" W. E. S. Jefferson ...	223	Not elected.
WARD NO. 13.
Moulvie Fazlur Rohomon Khan ...	336	Elected.
Mr. D.O.B. C. Moore ...	273	Elected.
Baboo Preo Nauth Dutt ...	209	Not elected.
WARD NO. 14.
Moulvie Ahmad ...	330	Elected.
Baboo Sootendro Nath Banerjee ...	290	Elected.
" Pran Nauth Paul ...	8	Withdrew shortly after the commencement of the poll.
WARD NO. 15.
Moulvie S. Lalit ...	233	Elected.
Mr. H. E. Menzies ...	83	Elected.
Moulvie A. I. Mohamed Mehdi	Not elected.
" Aga Mohamed Musa ...	1	Not elected.
WARD NO. 16.
Mr. H. J. S. Cotton ...	No	contest.
Dr. R. C. Sanders	Elected.
WARD NO. 17.
Mr. G. T. Doucet ...	132	Elected.
" J. Ghosh ...	115	Elected.
Moulvie A. I. Mohamed Mehdi ...	71	Not elected.
" Aga Mohamed Musa ...	0	Not elected.
WARD NO. 18.
Mr. J. G. Apard ...	No	contest.
" W. Corfield	Elected.
WARD NO. 19.
Baboo Omerto Lal Ghose ...	No	contest.
" Sootendro Nath Roy	Elected.
" Dwarka Nath Sen ...	0	Withdrew before poll.
WARD NO. 20.
Baboo Ashu P. Ch. B. was ...	133	Elected.
Moulvie Abdul Jawad ...	130	Elected.
" Aga Mohamed Musa ...	6	Not elected.
" Aga Mohamed Mehdi ...	0	Not elected.
WARD NO. 21.
Mr. W. Swinhoe ...	207	Elected.
Baboo Kanti Chunder Banerjee, C.I.E. ...	161	Elected.
Dr. S. Banerjee ...	120	Elected.
Baboo Kanti Mohun Roy ...	51	Not elected.
Mr. H. B. Mendes ...	8	Not elected.
WARD NO. 22.
Baboo Pran Nauth Pundit ...	412	Elected.
" Kanti Mohun Goswami ...	327	Elected.
" Sootendro Chunder Mitter ...	188	Not elected.
" Preo Nauth Mullick ...	10	Not elected.
WARD NO. 23.
Baboo Preo Nauth Mullick ...	88	Elected.
" Sham Churn Bose ...	72	Elected.
" Jogesh Chunder Roy ...	51	Not elected.
WARD NO. 24.
Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterjee ...	63	Elected.
Kumar Satya Badce Ghosal ...	52	Elected.
Mr. Braumfeld ...	17	Not elected.
WARD NO. 25.
Baboo Okhl Chunder Mukherjee ...	142	Elected.
" Mony Lal Banerjee ...	131	Elected.
Mr. C. Deholls ...	62	Not elected.

The following gentlemen have been elected to be Commissioners of Calcutta under section 8, clause 2 of Act II (B. C.) of 1888:

Mr. W. J. M. McCaw	By the Bengal Chamber of Commerce
" C. H. O'Sullivan
" J. Dyce Dalrymple
" William Wilson	By the Calcutta Trades Association.
Mr. A. A.
" W. H. Phelps
" W. M.	By the Commissioners for making improvements in the Port of Calcutta for the time being.
" M. P.
" M. P.
The Chairman of the Commissioners for making improvements in the Port of Calcutta for the time being	By the Commissioners for making improvements in the Port of Calcutta.
Mr. James

The following gentlemen are appointed by the Local Government under section 7 of Act II (B. C.) of 1888:

Mr. A. ...; Mr. Elias Gubboy; Mr. J. E. D. ...; Maharajah ...; Nawab Abdul Latif, Bahadur, ...; Barrister-Surgeon K. McLeod, ...; Prince Jehan Khatun ...; Mohamed Wahid Ali, Bahadur; Sahibzada Mahomed Bahadur ...; Surgeon-Major W. H. Gregg, ...; Moulvie Muhamed Yusuf, Bahadur; Baboo Joy Gobind Law; Mr. Harpender ...; Rastomjee; Baboo Durgagutty Banerjee; Lieutenant Colonel G. F. E. S. Neill, ...; Moulvie Aga Mahomed Mehdi.

THE NEW SUBURBAN MUNICIPALITIES AND THEIR TERRITORIAL LIMITS.

The following arrangements shall take effect from the 1st April 1889, with regard to the municipal administration of those portions of the Suburbs which will not be amalgamated with the Town of Calcutta under the provisions of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act II (B. C.) of 1838.

(1.) The area included within the following boundaries shall be withdrawn from the operation of the Act.

BOUNDARIES.

Part (I).

North.—Circular South road.

East.—Pagladanga Canal road till its junction with the Pagladanga road.

South and West.—Pagladanga road.

Part (II).

North.—Chingrihatta road, from its junction with new Tangrah road till it meets the Pagladanga road.

East.—The boundary on the east commences from the junction of Chingrihatta road with Pagladanga road, and runs southwards to the Panchanagram iron boundary pillar; thence southwards along the eastern side of an unmetalled road till it meets the municipal tramway line; thence it runs westwards along the southern boundary of the municipal tramway line till it meets the South Tangrah road.

South.—South Tangrah road.

West.—New Tangrah road till it meets the Chingrihatta lane and then Chingrihatta line till it meets the Chingrihatta road.

(2.) The area included within the following boundaries in the present Wards IV and VI shall be withdrawn from the Suburban Municipality with a view to its being included within the limits of the South Suburban Municipality.

BOUNDARIES.

Excluded area in Ward No. IV, (T. Pygmy).

North.—The Port Commissioners' railway line.

East.—Gurrahat road from the railway line crossing to the junction of the said road with Mullahatty road.

South.—Mullahatty road.

West.—Rusa road South, from its junction with Mullahatty road to the railway level-crossing on the said Rusa road.

Excluded area in Ward No. VI (Mudra and M. Chakr).

North.—The river Hooghly.

East.—Nemuck Mehal Ghat road till it meets the Circular Garden Reach road.

South.—Circular Garden Reach road and Paharpore road till it meets Rameswarpore lane.

West.—Rameswarpore lane, till it meets Garden Reach road; then Garden Reach road till its junction with Dum-Duma drain, and then the western edging of the Dum-Duma drain till it meets the River Hooghly.

(3.) The remaining portions of the Municipality, after the withdrawal of the above-mentioned areas shall be subdivided into two municipalities, to be called respectively the "Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality" and the "Maidoolia Municipality." The boundaries of these Municipalities shall be as specified below—

Cossipore and Chitpore Municipalities.

North Boundary.

Commencing from the north-east angle at Panamuck Ghat on the river Hooghly, the boundary follows the north side of Panamuck Ghat road eastwards to its junction with the Cossipore road, thence northwards along the western side of Cossipore road till its junction with Dhoria Bagin road, thence eastwards along the northern side of the Dhoria Bagin road till it meets the Bariaclpore Trunk road, which it crosses, and thence continues along the northern side of the North-South road, eastward till it meets the Eastern Bengal State Railway line, crossing to the east side of the said line at No. 2 bridge north of the Dum-Dum station.

Eastern Boundary.

The boundary on the East follows the eastern side of the Eastern Bengal State Railway line, southward till it meets the railway bridge over the new cut canal at Ooldadanga.

Southern Boundary.

The boundary on the South is the new cut canal from its junction with the railway bridge of Ooldadanga till it meets the Balaighatta Circular Canal, which runs westwards, meeting the river Hooghly at Bagbazar.

Western Boundary.

The western boundary is the river Hooghly.

Municipality of Maidoolia.

The boundary on the North and East is the new cut canal and on the South and West the Balaighatta Circular Canal.

The number of the Commissioners for each of the above-mentioned municipalities shall be twelve.

The South Suburban Municipality will be formed in the following manner, with effect from the 1st April 1889:—

The following agricultural villages and lands shall be withdrawn from the operation of the Act:—

On the West of Tolly's Nullah.

(1) Thakroon chuck, chuck Kullyan, and Bengal Nullah in Ward No. X (Sodepore).

(2) Janka and Hanspookur in Ward No. VIII (Burisa).

(3) Kulagatchea and the western portion of Sonamooke, and Bigpota in Ward No. IX (Sursona).

(4) Begorekhal, Koor chuck, chuck Kido, chuck Shibrampore, chuck Joynuggur and the western portion of Goragatcha situated beyond the limits of Goragatcha khal and extending from North to South, with Budge-Budge road on the North and Gungatampore road on the South, in Ward No. III (Behala).

On the East of Tolly's Nullah.

(5) Aroopatha in Ward No. XII (Tiljulla).

(6) The southern portion of Ward No. II (Dackhuria).

The area included in the following boundaries, which has been withdrawn from the Suburban Municipality by a separate notification of this date, shall be included within the limits of the South Suburban Municipality:—

BOUNDARIES.

Area in Ward No. IV.

North.—The Port Commissioners' railway line.

East.—Gurrahat road, from the railway line crossing to the junction of the said road with Mullahatty road.

South.—Mullahatty road.

West.—Rusa road, South, from its junction with Mullahatty road to the railway level-crossing on the said Rusa road.

Area in Ward No. VI.

North.—The river Hooghly.

East.—Nemuck Mehal Ghat road till it meets the Circular Garden Reach road.

South.—Circular Garden Reach road and Paharpore road till it meets Rameswarpore lane.

West.—Rameswarpore lane, till it meets Garden Reach road, then Garden Reach road till its junction with Dum-Duma drain, and then the western edging of the Dum-Duma drain till it meets the river Hooghly.

The boundaries of the South Suburban Municipality shall be as follows:—

Northern Boundary.—Commences from the north-east corner of Tanga road at Hingutcher, and thence southward along the southern edge of the said Tanga road, where it meets the Topsy road; thence westward along the western edge of the Tiljulla road, thence westward along the eastern edge of the Tiljulla road to its junction with the South Eastern State Railway; thence southward along the eastern edge of the said railway to its junction with the Port Commissioners' new railway embankment; thence westward along the south of the said embankment to Rusa road, and thence crossing southward along the eastern edge of the Rusa road to the junction of Tallygunge bridge road; thence westward across the bridge over Tolly's Nullah to Tallygunge Circular road, Shapur and Guragatcha road, and thence westward to Taratolla road, where it meets Nemuck Mehal Ghat to the south bank of the river Hooghly and westward up to Gobaria ferry Ghat.

Southern Boundary.—Commences from the northern border of Joka, where it is cut by the Bakrahut road; thence eastward till it meets the Diamond Harbour road at Thakurpookur outpost; thence eastward along the northern edge of that road till it meets the south-west limit of Thakroon chuck; thence northward along the western borders of Thakroon chuck, chuck Banban, Kaleepore and Sodepore; thence eastward along the northern border of Sodepore and the Sodepore lane till it meets the Hridaspore lane; thence southward along the western edge of the Kowrapookur road up to the culvert across the Thakurpookur and Kowrapookur roads, a little to the south of the Kowrapookur outpost; thence northward along the western bank of the Kowrapookur khal till it meets Tolly's Nullah; thence eastward along the northern boundary of villages Sodepore, Roypore, Pajih Roypore and Ibrahimpore; thence again to the south commencing from the north-western corner of Gurrahat and passing southward along the Gurrahat road till it meets the Rusa road; thence westward till it meets Tolly's Nullah; thence southward along the said nullah and Ganga Nullah; thence eastward to the south eastern extremity of Barhash.

Eastern Boundary.—Commences from the western border of Gurrahat; thence northward along the western border of Haltoo Luskur ghât, Noudadanga, Chanbagha, Dhallenda, Bynchtollah and Hargachea.

Western Boundary.—Commences from Gobaria ferry ghât; thence southward through Nadial, kismut Satgharia, Kadampur; thence turning eastward passes through kismut Dum-Dum, Maklathee, Ramdashathe, Belpookuria, and Kistopur; thence turning southward through Bharchunna, along the Jemirpool khal, crossing the Budge-Budge road, and thence along Bagir khal till it meets the Gungatampore road; thence turning westward along the southern edge of Gungatampore road, meets the Shibrampore road; thence turning south along the Shibrampore road; thence turning east along the Kastdanga road; thence turning southward along the Kastdanga branch road and the eastern border of villages Bagpatha and Kulagatchea.

The number of Commissioners of the South Suburban Municipality shall be twenty-four.

AN ORDINARY MEETING of the Commissioners of Calcutta under Act II (B. C.) 1888,

WILL BE HELD AT THE TOWN HALL,
on Thursday, the 4th April 1889, at 3 P.M.
BUSINESS TO BE BROUGHT FORWARD.

1. To appoint a General Committee under Section 63 of the Act.
2. To appoint other Standing and Special Committees under Section 63.
3. To make other arrangements, if necessary, for the management of the business of the new Corporation.
4. To confirm the proceedings of the Town Council at a Meeting held on the 23rd March 1889.
5. To confirm the proceedings of the Buzee and Sanitary Committee at a Meeting held on the 21st March 1889, especially to pass orders under Section 258 in respect of the improvement of Rajah Bagan Buzee excepting the north-west block.
6. To consider the proposed new Pension Rules.
7. To consider the proposed Rules for the protection of wild birds, hares and deer.
8. Vital statistics for the month of February 1889.

JOHN COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.
March 29, 1889.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

Are strongly recommended to try our
Flowery Orange Pekoe with Rose like Aroma, @ Rs. 2 per lb.

T. HILL & CO.,
Adjoining Corinthian Theatre,
Calcutta.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "OUDH" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 29th instant.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessel should be sent to the Company's Godown at Juggannauth Ghat not later than Thursday the 28th idem.

CACHAR LINE.

For particular of the sailings of this line
please apply to the undersigned.

DHUBRI & DEBRUGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri
daily immediately on arrival of the mails from
Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S.
Railway for booking of traffic through to river
stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBRUGHUR DESPATCH
SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrughur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday,
Tuesday and Thursday, and Debrughur on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH
SERVICE.

A tri-weekly service is maintained between Naraingunge and FenchooGUNGE for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas
or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of
A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines,
Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books,
&c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

FOR SALE

Price	Post free Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt	Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound	Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Formerly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis
and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder
Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman. -- The Indian Pioneer's

Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never coming to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr.
Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous
Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India.
Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no ingard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which delights our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress
he notes among the boatmen on his course —
[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be fam-ilar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun rising, and setting:—[Extract.] — The Statesman,
October 7, 1887.

BEETHAM'S

GLYCERINE - AND - CUCUMBER

For INDIA and all HOT CLIMATES this highly-scented emollient Balm is INVALUABLE. IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and REFRESHED in the HOTTEST weather. Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, REDNESS, IRRITATION, TAN, etc., and LEAVES the SKIN SOFT, WHITE, and GLOWING.

It entirely prevents all those burning, DRY, and WINDY effects, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the red-hot effects of the SUN and WIND more effectually than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BITES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin, this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers M. BEETHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

LITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM

The Greatest Pain-Sore-Exter.

It has driven out of a long system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of suffering from these ailments, and suffering with them in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, RHEUMATISM, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic value, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1/6 each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith, Stanfield & Co., & Scott, Thompson & Co., and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

THE PILLS

LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS.

They invigorate the system, and are invaluable in all cases of indigestion, biliousness, and other ailments of the liver, stomach, kidneys and bowels.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for all cases of Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, and all other ailments of the throat and lungs.

For Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds and all other ailments of the throat and lungs.

Manufactured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Co.,

OXFORD STREET (late 530, Oxford St.) LONDON.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA.
 (Opposite the Police Court.)

THE CALCUTTA
HOMOEOPATHIC PHARMACY.

HOT
 EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
 DISPENSARY IN ASIA
 OF PURE HOMOEOPATHY ONLY,
 WHICH
 INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
 INDEPENDENT HOMOEOPATHY
 and maintains to this day
 THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
 THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, showing 100 times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khairatpur, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Frost, Reet, Lucknow says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only cost Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Foblets, Pencils, complete shirt studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satara, says:—"The best gold watch of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the foblet for Rs. 10." Mr. C. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sambolga, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 50." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

OLIVINE

Thirty-three Prize Medals and First Class Certificates and were specially appointed by the Royal Commission for the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in 1886, where not a single case of illness occurred amongst the native artisans there employed.

Authorized by the Government of India, and largely used by the Calcutta and other Municipalities.

Sanctioned,

by Her Majesty's Board of Trade.

Used in the Royal Households, by Her Majesty's Government Establishments, by the Corporation of London, Parochial Vestries, Smithfield and Billingsgate Markets, Peninsular and Oriental and other Steam Navigation Companies, the Railway Companies, Principal Hospitals, &c.

Agents:—DYCE, NICOL & CO.,

3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press

THE

FALL OF MANDALAY,

BY

ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime Subscribers may register their names with the Publishers

Messrs. PETTIT & Co.,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

11, Old Court House Street;

or Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

298A, Upper Circular Road,

CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,

Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION

CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital

Address:—

2, Utkoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PRINCESS)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	in advance	Rs. 12
Half-yearly	"	" 7
Quarterly	"	" 4
Monthly	"	Rs. 1-2
Single or sample Copy,	"	6-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 5 a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Utkoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1880.

No. 368

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

TO VICTIS.

LISTEN the Hymn of the Conquered, who fell in the battle of life—
The hymn of the wounded, the beaten, who died overwhelmed in the strife;
Not the jubilant song of the victors, for whom the resounding acclaim
Of nations was lifted in chorus, whose brows wore the chaplet of fame,—
But the hymn of the low and the humble, the weary, the broken in heart,
Who strove and who failed, acting bravely a silent and desperate part;
Whose youth bore no flower on its branches, whose hopes burned in ashes away,
From whose hands slipped the prize they had grasped at, who stood at the dying of day
With the work of their life all around them, unpitied, unheeded, alone,
With death swooping down o'er their failure, and all but their faith overthrown.
While the voice of the world shouts its chorus, its psalm for those who have won
While the trumpet is sounding triumphant, and high to the breeze and the sun
Gay banners are waving, hands clapping, and hurrying feet Thronging after the laurel-crowned victors— I stand on the field of defeat
In the shadow, among those who are fallen, and wounded, and dying and there
Chant a requiem low, place my hand on their pain-knotted brows,
Breathe a prayer,
Tola the hand that is helpless, and whisper, "They only the victory win,
Who have fought the good fight and have vanquished the demon that tempts us within,
Who have held to their faith unrelaxed by the price that the world holds on high;
Who have dared for a high cause to suffer, resist, fight, if need be, to die."
Speak, History! who are life's victors? Unroll thy long annals and say
Are they those whom the world called the victors, who won the success of a day?
The Martyrs, or Nero? The Spartans who fell at Thermopylae's trust,
Or the Persians and Nixes? His judges, or Socrates? Pilate, or Christ?

W. W. S.

Holloway's Pills.—With darkening days and changing temperatures the digestion becomes impaired, the liver disordered, and the mind despondent, unless the cause of the irregularity be expelled from the blood and body by such an alternative as these Pills. They directly attack the source of the evil, thrust out all impurities from the circulation, restore the distempered organs to their natural state, and correct all defective or contaminated secretions. Such an easy means of instituting health, strength, and cheerfulness should be applied by all whose stomachs are weak, whose minds are much harassed, or whose brains are overworked. Holloway's is essentially a blood-tempering medicine, whereby its influence reaches the remotest fibre of the frame and effects a universal good.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

AFTER a visit to San Sebastian and to the Queen of Spain, our Queen has returned from Biarritz to Wind or Castle.

A TERRIBLE hurricane has passed over Spain leaving its trace in immense damage both on land and sea. The German men-of-war Adler, Olga, and Eber in port were totally wrecked, and 9 officers and 87 men drowned. The United States men-of-war Trenton, Vandalia and Nipsic shared the same fate with loss of 4 officers and 46 men. The only man-of-war which escaped was Her Majesty's ship Calliope. She went out to sea to avoid the storm.

THE Viceroy with the Marchioness of Lin Downe left Calcutta for the Seamer ship on Tuesday the 2nd. There was a halt at Allahabad. On the 4th Lord Lin Downe paid a visit to the Mun Central College and received a deputation of the Anglo-Indian and Eurasian Association. In the evening, in honor of the visit, the Lieutenant-Governor of the N. W. Provinces gave a Garden Party. At midnight, His Excellency left for Lucknow.

AFTER the Sovereign or the Viceroy, the next notability is the Clown.

WHILE others are on the wing to the cool Hill, the devout man of wisdom and of the hot sun by a trip to the sandy beach of Orissa.

THE Editor of the Lancet and President of the Bengal Theosophical Society, has gone on a pilgrimage to the shrine of Jagannath at Poores. Those who know will recognize the names of things here in the meeting of the god and the man. There is an obvious affinity between the worshipper and the object of worship.

FOR a private entertainment during the official mourning for the death of the late Maharaja of Cochin, an official has been fined one month's pay. He ought to have known better.

ELECTRICITY is being utilized in the Gudian forests for felling trees. The machines were lately driven by steam power.

THE new United States Minister in London is Robert Lincoln, son of the President Abraham Lincoln.

LAST year, Prince Oscar of Sweden renounced his right of succession to the throne and joined hand and heart with Mrs Ebba Munck. The first fruit of the union is thus announced:—Birth, a Daughter, Carlacrona, end March, 1879, Oscar and Ebba Bernadotte.

IN renovating a pucca well disused for the last 20 years, on the roadside between Bhurwangola and Jeagunge, as many as 17 human skeletons were brought up. Doubtless, this excavation was a handy till for deposit for the use of the good things and highwaymen of the neighbourhood, once so notorious for insecurity.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

A TRAIN on the Transasian Railway, while passing through a tunnel, was derailed and the seventeen carriages composing it were smashed to atoms and fifty passengers killed or seriously injured. It was the work of robbers who wanted to plunder the passengers, but all the passengers were not dead and some of these captured the desperadoes. This great iron conveyance is destined to work wonders in one of the darkest corners of the globe.

THE firm of Schichau are engaged on a new ocean-going torpedo-boats for the German Navy.

THE New World is being burdened with the disabilities of the Old. Since 1776 the United States have doubled their population. The number of the band and the thence since times longer than 30 years ago. The dear have quadrupled, while the means are six times as great.

THE trade in teeth is the largest in the whole of America. About twenty millions are made every year, of different lines. The Canadians prefer snow-white teeth. In South America, the cry is for yellow. The Chinese, however, will order none but black.

THE new Michaelmas University has improved upon the older Universities of the other Province. It has introduced the visu voce examination. We only hope the examiners will not come to the massacre of the names of names with long and elaborate written questions of exceptional difficulty, like a modern Judge of the Calcutta High Court at a law examination for the emolument of pleaders.

THEY have agreed upon a Customs Union between Cape Colony and the Orange Free States. There was a banquet in honor of the occasion in which the Premier Sir John Gordon Spragg spoke hopefully of the foundation of an African fraternity. The Natal Government, however, keeps away from the Union.

THE Belgian Mail Steamer Courtesy de l'Amir has sunk off Dunkirk. She collided with another Mail Steamer. The captain, first officer, chief engineer and twelve of the crew and passengers are reported to have perished.

AFTER an adjournment of a fortnight, the Patroll Commission resumed sittings on the 2nd. Sir Charles Russell opened the case for the defence.

BOUTANER is still the cynosure of the French Government. The Republican party demanded his arrest and imprisonment as also the trial of several Deputies for the trial to be held by the League of Patriots protesting against the bombardment of Michioff. Levee was obtained of the Chamber to prosecute, but the Public Prosecutor M. Roulez hesitated to enroll him in this business and declined to go against the General. For this reason he has been ordered and superseded by M. Guey. The trial of M. Dorende, three Deputies and one Senator has already commenced as being members of a secret Society. The General has been charged with treason. He, however, prefers to keep himself out of French territory and the hands of his prosecutors in Belgium, where he means to remain till the next general election. He refuses to submit to a trial for treason by the Senate.

THE Hon'ble Syed Ameer Hassan having obtained leave and resigned the Coronership of Calcutta, Moaxie Abdul Jubbar acts both as the Northern Division Magistrate and Coroner.

MR. H. J. S. Cotton goes on 3 months' leave from the 17th instant.

MR. P. Nolan has been appointed a member of the Bengal Legislative Council in place of the Hon'ble H. J. Reynolds, C.S.I., now retiring from India. Mr. Nolan has surprised everybody into good humour with him. When he first came to Calcutta, he was regarded with suspicion but he quickly dissipated it.

UNDER an order of the Bengal Government, during the year 1889, all public offices and Revenue and Magisterial Courts in Bengal, with the exception of the offices of Collector of Customs, Shipping Master, the

Registrar of Assurances, Calcutta, the Collector of Stamp Revenue, Calcutta, the Stamping Department of the office of the Superintendent of Stamps, Calcutta, and the Salt Rowannah and Opium Sale Departments of the Board of Revenue, shall be closed for—8 Eed-ul-fitr, which falls on the 1st June, or, if the moon be not visible on the 31st May, on the 2nd June.

Eed-az-za, which falls on the 8th August, or, if the moon be not visible on the 29th July, on the 9th August.

Moharrum, the last two days of which fall on the 6th and 7th September, or, if the moon be visible on the 27th August, on the 5th and 6th September.

Fard-e-doo-dahoon, which falls on the 7th November, or, if the moon be visible on the 15th October, on the 6th November.

THE Amrita Bazar Patrika is not often tempted to literary criticism of English productions. Providence may bring a man luck even in the desert. The Sub-divisional Officer of Basirhat in the wilderness of the Sunderbunds awoke one morning and found himself famous—by no act or omission of his, but by the mere accident of Percival Spencer descending on him. And now he is having a run of luck. He has just charmed our contemporary. The Patrika is in raptures over his account of the balloonist, comparing it with the best Special correspondence of Dr. W. H. Russell, Mr. G. A. Sida, Mr. Alex. Forbes and the rest. Tastes differ, however. With all deference to our contemporary, we would back the Naib of the Jhadda against Troylukho Nath Sen and all the Deputies. Here is

"THE NAIB'S STORY"

A little after sunset some men brought me news that some big white thing was passing aloft over the village. I had never before seen anything like it. No one could make any conjecture as to what it was. Raj Krishna Montu, who is credited with more intelligence than the rest, gave us to understand that it was some bafoon or

A MESSENGER FROM THE SKIES

Passing along on his way, and wanted us to be off from his course. I had sense enough not to be of the same view, but I could not make out what it was. About half an hour after, men came running to me and shouting out that some shah had come there. I soon found him, followed by a number of men, coming in the direction of the catcher's hut. The shah did not know a bit of Bengali, and I did not know a bit of English. So free communication was out of the question. The shah broke out in an unintelligible strain out of which I could pick out only the words "English" and "balloon." I did not know what a "balloon" was! Under the circumstances I did what best suited to my mind—

I MADE HIM SEE.

He seemed to be impatient for something, and wanted to run off. The jungle was close by. I got there in about twenty minutes. I wanted him to raise the situation, but he did not understand. So whenever he attempted to run out, I had to stop him by holding him by his arm. I brought some maaz (fried rice), a few plantains, and a pot of cow-milk, which I set before him. I did not know that sahib were in the habit of taking boiled rice, so I did not offer it. The plantains were taken. He seemed to be so very thirsty that he drank a good deal of water. Even the water was brackish. But that was the best we could procure. Even that water we have to bring from a distance of 4 miles. The shah seems to take the cow's milk for goat's milk. Being an orthodox Hindu I could not give a bit within the room as that would mean pollution. But I tried to make him as comfortable as I could, and placed men around him to attend upon his wants. In the morning, not knowing

WHAT TO DO IN THE DILEMMA?

I thought the best thing I could do was to take him to the police station. The words "police station" fascinated him, and from that time he began to give them out at intervals "police station, police station, police station." At noon I offered him the same food as I did at night. At eleven we started for Hossehabad thana. As we were about to start we saw something floating down in our direction.

I TOOK IT FOR THE DEAD BODY OF A COW.

Soon after it came distinctly to our view. It soon reached the eyes of the shah. He wanted to jump after it in the river. We had again to catch hold of him by the arm to prevent him. The odds were that he would have been a prey to the mongers. We dug the "thing" up and our boat. [The "thing" proved to be the trunk balloon.] We reached Hossehabad in the afternoon. I made over my charge to the police sub-inspector who was an English-knowing man.

THE SAHIB GAVE ME A WATCH.

I declined to take it, as I knew I did not really could do nothing for him. What little I did, I did from a sense of duty. But the sahib pressed me to take it, and the police inspector made me to understand that the sahib would be very sorry if I did not accept it. I therefore could not refuse acceptance any more. The sahib also made a present of three rupees to my boatmen. From my experience in the watch episode, I did not think of returning the money again, as it would have been a futile attempt. Thus ended an interview in which neither understood what the other was talking about.

That is the best thing that has yet appeared in the prolific literature of the Balloon boldness, not excepting the Khat's Spencerian prose.

IN evidence of the extraordinary interest roused by the Flying Man, we read in the morning press—

"During the past day or two various Native gentlemen have displayed a keen interest in Mr. Spencer's welfare. By invitation, the neronaut visited the house of Babu Peary Mohun Roy, who introduced him into his zenana, and presented him with a handsome gold and general ring. Another visit was to the house of Ryt. India Chandra Singh; and a third to that of Babu Juggadmand Mookerjee, who also presented him within the zenana, and bestowed upon him a gold chain, and an old gold mohur of very considerable value. The last named gentleman entertained a party of European ladies and gentlemen to meet the aeronaut.

Baboo Juggadmand as the famous introducer of hons to Pinda ladies was in his rôle. He has now other respectable men to keep him in countenance.

WHILE the poor Maharaja is plunged in profound anxiety at the powerful European intrigue going on against his throne and his very personal safety, it is announced that "The Cashmere Durbar has undertaken to station three Regiments of Infantry and one Mountain Battery permanently at Gilgit."

In a little time, the whole Cashmere army will be practically British.

THE judicial administrators, appointed by the Government of India, having reported that the directors of the bank had accepted the Paris represented the affairs of the bank to be in a satisfactory condition, and declared an increased dividend. As the position of the bank was shaking, the Government had decided to make an enquiry to be made. Such is the telegraphic news. But why did not the Tribunal of Commerce take action on the matter?

ON the 26th March, at the suit of the Oriental Loan Association, the High Court gave a decree for Rs. 13,274 against Mr. Arthur Blackstone, being Rs. 10,750 of two bonds with interest at 12 per cent.

THE withheld judgment in the sensational Patna Mission case has been pronounced, Mr. Justice Macpherson being the spokesman. The court held that the girl Lachmima was unlawfully detained in the Zenana Mission-house, but that the detention was not for an unlawful purpose within the meaning of Section 551 of the Criminal Procedure Code: hence the Magistrate had no power under that section to make her over to her lawful guardian. If, however, he had the power, which he supposed he had, on the facts before him he exercised it properly. The evidence of marriage which all the parties concerned believed to be valid, was ample and satisfactory. The charges of immorality against the mother were not therefore established. Therefore reversing the Magistrate's order made without authority, the Court declined to remove Lachmima from her husband or mother, either of whom was her proper or lawful guardian, to be made over to a stranger whose detention of the girl against the wishes of the guardian would be unlawful. Nothing, in the opinion of the Bench, was established in these proceedings of a character which could warrant the High Court in depriving the husband or mother of the charge of the girl.

WITH Mr. Pratt as District Judge and Mr. Lee as Magistrate and Collector, Midnapore will again enjoy "pleasure unmingled and without thorn the rose." An earnest worker and endowed with superior powers of observation, Mr. Lee is accessible to respectable and well-informed natives and gives them every reasonable facility of communication with him. It is therefore hoped that he will find it but easy work to restore good feeling between all classes of the people, although it is changed much for the worse since he was last in the district.

The present Magistrate of the district, who relieves Mr. Quinn at Patna, is an impartial and hard-working officer, but he is led by his physical and mental constitution to rely too much on sub-District officers of all shades and grades and in matters wherein they can not give correct information or unbiassed opinion.

The last Gazette, we find, cancels the appointment of the Joint Magistrate Mr. Lee as Magistrate and Collector of Midnapore, and transfers him to the Sudder station of the 24 Pergunnahs.

To qualify themselves as staff officers, German Cavalry officers will be henceforth required to go through a course of steeplechase-riding in Hanover. The cadets are to be pitted.

WE congratulate the coach-makers and horse-dealers on the good time coming. Lady Lansdowne is fond of driving. The head of the sex having been found rein in hand leading her own team, it is calculated that the next season in Calcutta will see an invasion of charming Jehus in petticoats.

THIS is the latest pronouncement of the Lord Chief Justice Coleridge on indictments for libel:—

"Mr. Charsley, formerly coroner for South Bucks, had indicted a Mr. W. Devenill for libel arising out of a letter which appeared in the Windsor and Eton Express on the subject of altering the name of Slough. Mr. Charsley had now left Slough, and his lordship remarked that he discharged a parting shot at Slough in the shape of a large handful, in which he fell foul of a gentleman named Ellman. This does mean Mr. Devenill the letter complained of. Lord Coleridge said he was bound to tell the jury that the question of libel had been very carefully considered of late, and he did not believe there was a judge on the bench who was not of the opinion he himself held it very strongly— that the practice of indicting for libel had grown to a very mischievous extent. If they looked back to the old law books, when there was not particularly favour for the liberty of the Press, and when many a thing now passed over would have been made the subject of ex officio and other information, they would find that all the great authorities laid it down strongly, and, as he believed, with good sound reason, that while everyone might bring an action for libel there ought to be something of a public nature about it to justify the interfering of the Crown as representing the public by proceeding by indictment. The Crown was the prosecutor in a case of indictment, and therefore an indictment for libel ought to be something which interested the Crown, something which concerned the general interests of the public, and likely to create a breach of the peace. If a libel was repeated and was infamous, and was liable to create the effect he had indicated, the person should be indicted; but where there was nothing of the sort, when it was clearly an individual squabble between two persons, he trusted they would agree with him that, in his judgment, it was well settled law that it ought not to be, and was not, in point of law, a proper subject of indictment. The person libelled had his remedy by bringing an action. Blackstone had said a jury ought not to find a bill, nor ought one to be presented where there was no matter of a public nature involved. The grand jury threw out the bill."

A LIMITED number of Members of the Covenanted Civil Service will be permitted to present themselves for examination in the Russian language while on furlough, under Regulations published in to-day's Gazette of India.

IN cancellation of previous notification on the subject No. 690 of the 1st February 1884, Department Finance and Commerce—the Governor-General in Council, by order No. 1746, dated 4th April 1889, is now pleased to direct that, when a part of an estate paying annual revenue to Government under a settlement which is not permanent is recorded in the Collector's register as separately assessed with such revenue, the value of the subject-matter of a suit for the possession of, or to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of, a fractional share of that part shall, for the purposes of the computation of the amount of the fee payable under the Court Fees Act, 1870, in the suit, be deemed not to exceed five times such portion of the revenue separately assessed on that part as may be rateably payable in respect of the share.

ERRATA.—P. 146, Col. 2, l. 17, (for She stoops to Conquer read) The Year of Wakefield.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE latest news from Paris is that the Boulanger sitting of the Chamber was a stormy one, but the Government carried, by a majority of 152 votes, their proposal to prosecute the General for treasonable designs against the Republic.

The General has retired to the nearest free country with a people a great proportion of whom are ethnically, certainly linguistically, one with the French, as the most convenient base of operations. Therein he has been mocked with the fate of Tantalus. A telegram of yesterday reports that sober practical Brussels would have none of him. Popular demonstrations have been held against the distinguished refugee, and a demand has been made upon Government for his expulsion from the territory. It is said that several Boulangist Deputies have arrived from Paris, doubtless to concert plans in concert with their chief. All the more reason for the impatience of the Belgians of the new connection imposed upon them. They may well be afraid of the consequences to their country from the presence of the firebrand—of the reflex action on the institutions of a propaganda by foreigners from their midst in favour of Caesarism or—Anarchy. The people of Belgium, notwithstanding many things in common with the French, are substantially a different people. They were Brabantians

THE Budget in Council is certainly a welcome concession, for which we all have so long been praying, and whose value will be enhanced by the more important boon to follow. But there is a tendency to exaggerate the practical benefits of the Government laying the papers before the Chamber. The Pioneer well takes the Times of India to task for talking like uneducated native papers. Says the Allahabad journal:—

"Nor is there much force in saying that 'this year Lord Lansdowne has determined to inaugurate a reform' in presenting the Budget in Council. Have the discussions on the Petroleum Bill last year and on the Income Tax Bill the year before been forgotten? On both occasions the situation was expounded to the Council by the Finance Member for all purposes of discussion as fully as if it had been the actual statement. When so far back as 1883 the Finance Minister is found expressly declaring his regret that the rules do not permit him to present his Statement to the Council, there being no question of legislation, it is nonsense to talk as though a popular victory had been gained over a secretive Government. The announcement that Lord Lansdowne was able to make yesterday that he will in future be regularly placed before Council will be a popular one: and no one will have better cause for rejoicing than the Government of India—among other reasons, because it gives them of taking the measure of the popular opinion. It is a talk roundly of abuses and extravagances, and a series of memorials with the implied suggestion of reforms, if he were only given the chance to present his Statement to the Council that it is discovered how little Yule, for instance, should certainly be paid for some little time."

Just so! And Mr. Hume might be added too. After the dissipation of so many years, he would not be formidable. It is very much like to see some of our noisiest windbags in Council. Their collapse would be quick and enlivening.

THERE seems a screw loose at Duj ching—or at least, in the Darjeeling correspondence of the Statesman. Our contemporary's scribe at the Himalayan Capital of Bengal, writing on the 1st instant, offers this information, whatever it may mean:—

"There have been several robberies again lately, and yet our district superintendent of police is as good as they make them."

That is indeed a nut to crack for the poor editor or his reader. The grammar is beyond us, for one, at any rate. But though there may be solecism, or fallacy, or anomaly, there is certainly no anachronism. In the cool retreat of the Hills, they are evidently keeping the month's opening day sacred to congenial spouts.—After the momentary diversion, the writer returns to the plains of puny prose and sober sense.

"The fact is our police force is utterly rotten, the men are half-starved, under-fed Nepalees, who are too great fools to get more lucrative work. The pay of the force is too low, and the sooner this fact is recognized the better."

The influence of the hon. mty. still be traced in the hankering for size as a necessary element of Police efficiency. Probably, the writer is not acquainted with the Oriental idea on the subject, according to which a low stature is a positive advantage. At any rate, it can be no valid objection to the particular people in question. The Recruiting Sergeant's Standard would condemn to civil and military disability all the mountain tribes on our Northern and Eastern borders. The Gorkhas are nonetheless prized as soldiers, though "under-sized," big thumping Hindostanis are at sea on the heights of the Himalayas. They would be no match certainly for the nimble Lepcha shoplifter or the desperate Gorkha burglar or highwayman. It is more to the point, to inquire whether the diminutive Nepalese of the Darjeeling Police are starved, half-fed or to the full. What is the pay of the Darjeeling constable? And what the ordinary rate of wages in the locality?

Whatever the case in the hills, the Police in the plains are far from overpaid. We believe they are not adequately paid. Neither constable, head-constable, nor sub-inspector is properly cared for, and this is one of the many causes of the inefficiency and demoralization of the Force. When the public are so ready to come down on the Police for every real or supposed omission or commission, they should in common fairness see that these hard-worked servants of the state have enough to eat, for themselves and their own, and to fall back upon when superannuated. We hope our contemporaries and politicians will give thought to the matter.

WHATEVER may be said of the incapacity of the British in their colonial enterprises and their relations with less advanced tribes,—and the British themselves are the foremost in fussy self-depreciation of the kind—they undoubtedly shine in comparison with the other Western races in what is confessedly most difficult work. After all due allowances made, for peculiar circumstances, and even that mysterious element called "luck," History depose in their favour. Italians and Germans are nowhere. Portuguese and Spaniards and even the all-conquering Yankees, they leave behind. The accommodating sympathetically French have been shamed by them. What a burden for a long series of years has Algeria proved to France! What a disaster was the Mexican enterprise! What a doubtful boon is the new French Empire in Indo-China! The plodding sure-footed Hollanders themselves must unhesitatingly yield the palm to Great Britain. Dutch India has, at its best, been a miserable failure. And now then Sumatra, in the face of the smug notions and settlements of the British, is as bad a business as they ever had in the colonial line—an inglorious connection which they dare not wash their hands off—a perpetual harassment. According to the Pioneer's Rangoon Correspondent:—

"An Englishman who has just arrived here from Ocheleh, a port in Sumatra, gives a deplorable account of the Dutch position there last February. Ocheleh is a fort which has yet only been visited by vessels carrying food for the troops or coal for the Dutch men-of-war. There is apparently no trade. The Dutch hold with a force of 3,500 men about five miles of sandy coast. They are constantly attacked by the Achinese both by day and night. This desultory warfare has been going on for 16 years, and seems no nearer its end than it was 16 years ago. All the supplies for the troops have to be brought by sea; whilst the Achinese, whenever any advance is attempted, have a secure retreat to their mountain fastnesses, to reappear again when the Dutch troops retreat to the coast. A reinforcement of 3,500 men had been sent for to Batavia, so bad was the outlook for the Dutch in February. The operations seem beyond their power, and yet they are unwilling to cease."

The well-known and much respected Dr. Marks, long the Principal of the Christian College, has lately been lecturing at Rangoon on "Burma, Past and Present." It must have been a most interesting discourse. No one knows the history and culture of both native and European society better than Dr. Marks. His experience dates from the reign of the old King, Thibaw, a reign during which, in fact, he came out as a missionary. But has he told all that is the question. We doubt exceedingly, on the whole, if he has. He is a good and true servant of Christ. The whole European society of Rangoon is content to the core, and has been so from the beginning, and it could scarcely bear the truth about itself. Even a cautious introduction of a short probe might provoke convulsions. There is little house of any kind in any department. The late sensation in the law courts over the world-an-king of matters. The scandal against Mr. Meyler, too, was due to the prevailing demoralization. A little computer is the worst possible nuisance to the busy-going White community of Amoy.

THE veteran inventor Ericsson has at length pecked out of the world, at the age of 73. A Swede by birth, he joined the Swedish Navy, which he gave up as not affording facilities for his work as a mechanical man. He took up his residence in England. But his lack was by no means equal to his genius. He succeeded well enough in his own laboratory, but his public trials were usually marred by accident. He failed with his "flame engine," and in 1827 he lost the prize offered by the Liverpool and Manchester Railway Company, Mr. George Stephenson being the fortunate winner. His flame engine, too, invented in 1833, did not come up to his expectations. Then he removed to America in 1834, working as a blacksmith in the establishment for building war steamers. It was not till 1837 that he emerged from obscurity, by winning several prizes at the Great Exhibition. He rose to his highest fame by the invention of the monitor, on which the principle of revolving muzzles for guns was first employed, which was a god-send to the cause of the North in the American Civil War, then suffering cruelly from the depredations of the Alabama, war steamer of the enemy. The Alabama had avenged the Federal blockade of the South, by sweeping the sea of Federal commerce, and the Monitor now gave the coup de grace by insinuating itself into the Northern harbours and running into the Federal vessels and smashing two of the finest frigates of the Federal navy. There was a panic at the appearance and the audacious doings of this naval apparition. Ericsson with his Monitor rid his adopted country of its pest, by destroying the formidable Confederate engine of naval warfare.

ON Monday, Sir Henry Harrison held a sort of levee of all the principal officers of the Corporation. It was the day for the commencement of the new Municipal Act. He impressed on his subordinates their new responsibilities under the Act, arising out of the new powers and territorial aggrandisement. On Thursday, there was the first meeting of the new Corporation, which was very full, nearly all the 75 members being present. The Chairman welcomed them in a happy speech inviting their co-operation in the new municipal measures for the town and in the reclamation of the Suburbs, promising his own loyalty to the Act and the Corporation. He believed the Act workable, and considered opposition unavoidable but desirable and healthy when not originating in self-interest. The good feeling of the Chairman was reciprocated on behalf of the Corporation, by Baboo Kally Nath Mitter and Annamalai Nath Chatterjee. The pleasantness of the first greetings was marred by Mr. Ap. n. who drew the attention of the assembled Corporation to the imperfections of the Act in the election portion. Mr. n. then, he put a question to the Chairman, whether as a member of the Bengal Legislative Council he would take the earliest opportunity to move for amendment of the Act. The principal business before the meeting was the election of the General Committee and the formation of other Standing and Special Committees for working the Act. The Government had laid down the modus operandi by which six out of the 25 pre-selected and nominated members, are to be selected for the General Committee. Of each of the 25 who might be put out each was to write down the names of six who were willing to serve, those obtaining the highest votes being considered as members of the General Committee. The meeting was for a ballot, instead of open voting in these elections. In fact, the test has been to this direction for some years. This is to be lamented. The Commissioners should be above "eye-name," and fearless to vote according to their conscience in open daylight. It is a clear illegality, besides. The retention of the provision for poll in the Act emphasises the intention of the legislature against secret voting at the meetings of the Commissioners. The meeting directed that 3 members for the General Committee be chosen from the 7 Suburban Wards, and 9 from the 13 town Wards. The elected 50 chose the 12 and the remaining 25 returned the 6 to compose the General Committee. It is to be noted that 49 out of the 50 elected Commissioners expressed their desire to be on the General Committee.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1889.

SIR CHARLES BERNARD ON BURMA AND ITS PEOPLE.

SIR Charles Bernard, late Chief Commissioner of Burma, like most other Anglo-Indians who failed to make their mark in India as administrators, having no laurels to rest on, has taken to posing as champion of Government, in the character of public lecturer. This is not new, and nothing wonderful. It is not unusual for men, who have proved so utterly a failure, as did Sir Charles while Chief Commissioner of Burma, to enter the arena of politics, and, by exerting all his oratorical or argumentative power, seek to subvert the public at home. It was thus that the late Chief essayed to sway the good people in England. It was not that in his official capacity he had been weighed and found terribly wanting, and had left the East under a cloud, neither mourned nor regretted, but that the circumstances attending his retirement were due entirely to the incapacity of the people of Burma to appreciate his administrative abilities. Few men like to admit they have failed, and none more scrupulously guard against such admissions than Anglo-Indians, particularly the members of the great Eastern Bureaucracy.

The downward promotion which awaited Sir Charles Bernard had he elected to return to India, i. e., as Resident at the Court of Myore, was more than sufficient to extinguish a man of greater calibre. It will be remembered with what readiness the Chief Commissioner threw him self body and soul into the annexationist arms, how he despatched in all haste the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company's steamer Ashley Eden with an ultimatum, while troops were under orders at Calcutta and Madras for immediate embarkation, how, in fine, he carried out in its entirety the annexation of the province, made wholly and solely in England's interests, together with that of the Bombay Burma Trading Corporation Co., Limited, of Bombay. All this Sir Charles Bernard performed, in the very teeth of, and in fearless opposition to, the vehement and passionate protestations of the unanimous voice of the people of India. And for all his zeal and activity, he was awarded an empty title and downward promotion. When we keep in view that Mr. Andriano, the Italian Consul, received £5,000 sterling for services, as mentioned in our last issue,) for the late Chief Commissioner with a draft of £10,000. Sir Charles Bernard's proposed treaty, certainly Sir Charles Bernard has a right to look for and expect better hands of those he had served, not too well. Putting aside, Sir Charles Bernard's practice of giving compensation in coin, the Indian people is well rid of Sir Charles Bernard. His reckless haste in pressing upon Lord Dufferin the measures he counselled in regard to the annexation of Upper Burma, and which he knew too well the Home Government would make no hesitation in accepting, has, with poetic justice, recoiled on himself.

It could not be unknown to Government officials holding the position the late Chief Commissioner of Burma held, that he lived under the piercing eye of publicity and that his every action would be subjected to criticism, and every trifling incident in connection with the part he played in the annexation of Upper Burma ultimately brought to light. Not by the aid of any secret society or the aid of a magnifying glass, but by men capable of criticising and passing judgment on his actions. The writer very willingly makes allowance, in that, the clamouring at Rangoon for annexation, supported by his Lieutenant Mr. Thirkel White, carried Sir Charles entirely away in his weakness. It is, to say the least, a lamentable weakness to see men holding the position Sir Charles Bernard held, listening to appeals and suggestions of agitators, who had everything to gain and nothing to lose. Such was the advocacy and agency by which Mr. Thirkel White, his Secretary, succeeded in leading, by the nose, the late Chief Commissioner. A little common sense, a dash of human nature, and the eliciting of facts for himself, would have enabled Sir Charles to rise equal to the situation. But he chose to listen to a man, whose lust of aggrandisement is proverbial, of lofty, insolent deportment, and Burma's enemy, and he now reaps the benefit of his folly.

It is a most unpleasant comment the writer will have to make upon our dealings with the Burmese, during the campaign of 1885-86. To begin at the beginning, with the character and popularity of the ex-King. Was there ever such a gratuitous blackening of a poor neighbour and ally's reputation? In respect of any assertions to the contrary, by Sir Charles Bernard or Sir Charles Crosthwaite, the writer defies either to produce a jot of evidence of any kind to question the fact that Theebaw was adored as a King by his subjects, one and all, from the highest to the lowest, and respected by all disinterested foreigners who came in contact with him.

On February 20, Sir Charles Bernard delivered a lecture in Falcon-square Chapel, London, on "Burma and its People" illustrated by lime light dissolving views. After describing the extent of Burma, and comparing it proportionately with the United Kingdom, Sir Charles communicated to his hearers a knowledge of the ancient prowess of the Burmese and their success in repelling attacks and invasion by the Chinese. The recitation must doubtless have proved highly edifying to his audience, at least to that portion which belonged to the missionary community. The lecturer rapidly advances to the year 1824, when the first Anglo-Burman war broke out, and, as Sir Charles puts it, terminated favorably to the two countries. The late Chief Commissioner, the writer not unreasonably thinks, might have been less reserved in his language, and acquainted his audience with the precise degree of advantage obtained by either country. Gauging by the modicum of our favors to those who have had the courage to resist our insatiable thieving propensities in the last 50 years, the advantages must have been, if not wholly so. Again in 1855, Sir Charles says the Burmese became troublesome to the British, necessitating active measures to bring the King to his senses, and terms were again arranged, as in 1824, presumably also favorable to both countries. In 1855, the writer was in the Crimea, and now has neither time nor desire, to question whether at this period the Burmese were or were not at fault.

The lecturer now brings his hearers down to the year 1878. It may be presumed Sir Charles in speaking of the King who died then, alludes to King Mindon Min, as he says Theebaw succeeded him. It is quite true that Mindon Min left a large number of children behind him. That Theebaw, on his accession to the Throne, caused a number of them to be put to death, is also true. With the exception perhaps of King Mindon Min, King Theebaw did no more than his ancestors had done for centuries before him. Why Mindon Min did not do so, it is not so difficult to say, seeing that, on his accession, he was left the only legitimate successor to the Throne; at least he foresaw no danger of intrigue or revolution; hence relief by slaying a number of relatives to suppress any probable revolt was unnecessary.

The lamentable weakness of the then Resident, the late Mr. St. Barbe, and his want of firmness in such an emergency when the edict went forth to put to death the Princes on Theebaw's accession, is a sad illustration of our ignorance, in selecting men of untried ability to fill offices of the very highest importance. The writer has the authority of Ministers of the ex-King for saying, it is not true that Mr. St. Barbe received at the hands of Theebaw insulting treatment. But the Resident was seized with an unaccountable panic, and not only by his ignominious flight did he leave European and British subjects behind him, but by showing how little of the firebrand he possessed, commonly called British pluck, he left Mandalay in a perfect state of chaos. From this date England ceased to be represented at the Court of Mandalay. The law sometime after sought the friendship of Italy, through Mr. Andriano, without success. Failing with his own countrymen, the Italian Consul found a ready market for his wares with Sir Charles Bernard.

At a later date Mons. Hass entered the field, making promises of all sorts, without the authority of his Government to do so. This is seized upon, and a scare is started. Sir Charles indeed informs his audience, that Theebaw also attacked traders in the sea coast and threatened to drive the British into the sea! Is it possible the English public are so ignorant of the map of Burma, and so credulous as to place any belief in a conglomeration of such monstrous nonsense?

Upper Burma has no sea coast, and the nearest point of Upper Burma to the sea coast before annexation, i.e., just above Allammyo, is not less than 500 miles distant from the open sea.

It is correct, as Sir Charles Bernard said on the 20th February at London, that in 10 days (it was a little more) the King agreed to the terms demanded by General Sir Harry Prendergast, namely, the Burmese to lay down their arms, and Theebaw to give himself up. At this point Sir Charles does not complete the information. At Ava, where the disarmament took place, General Sir Harry Prendergast gave the Burmese officers and men, to understand that their King would remain in Burma. This incident will be fully commented on in "The Fall of Mandalay."

It is true King Theebaw and Queen Soopyalat were the day following our occupation of Mandalay, transported in a commonplace bullock cart to the foreshore, placed on board the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company's steamer Theorch, (since wrecked and now lying in the bed of the river at Minboo) sent down to Rangoon and reshipped for I. M. S. Cher to Madras. It is not true this was accomplished, as the lecturer said, with a loss only of 11 killed, twice that number and more were laid low within the 11 days we occupied in reaching Mandalay. The lecturer goes on to say, Lord Dufferin then held a conference with the chief men of Burma. The writer denies there was any such thing as a conference held in the true acceptance of the term. There was a convention which all the ministers were obliged to attend, they had no voice in anything, and every man of them signed away his birth-right, not even getting in lieu the scriptural lines of pottage.

The lecturer's figures of encounters is much below the mark, and the casualties distorted and wilfully made incorrect. As a rule, the people of Upper Burma are healthy, but when Sir Charles Bernard announced to his audience they are very happy, he knew it was not the case, and that he was misrepresenting fact, goes without saying. During our 4 years' occupation of Burma, we have caused more misery, greater loss of life, more bloodshed and rapine than had been in the former 30 years in Upper Burma. It is not true that in our advance on Mandalay we were welcomed and received with open arms, and our advent hailed with delight, as of deliverers of the oppressed from the oppressor and tyrant.

It would be useless to deny there were isolated cases of supplies solicited and given, but it is monotonously misleading to say they were given in the same official reports would have us believe. The very few exceptions where supplies were so obtained were granted with the very worst grace; they were given out of absolute fear, certainly not love; almost at every landing we effected, the villages were entirely deserted, every soul having fled to the jungle, leaving behind only pigs and pariah dogs, in some cases not these even. At Myingyan, one of the largest if not the greatest trading centres in Upper Burma, where a primitive attempt was made at a defence, on landing not a soul was found or to be seen in the village, the trenches only just deserted, and the antiquated guns of Theebaw toppled over the bank into the river. Even at Mandalay, our landing was not witnessed by more than 50 natives, 45 of which were Poongyees. The writer marched with Colonel Budgeon at the head of the Madras Pioneers, Siege train, and Madras Infantry to the Palace, a distance of 4 miles, on the whole line of march not meeting half a dozen Burmans, and not a European until well into Mandalay, the night that Theebaw and Soopayalat were made secure. The writer slept within the Palace the same night.

On reading the account of the late Chief Commissioner's lecture, the writer was much struck with the lecturer's idea of line light illustrations. What the subject of those illustrations were, we in India are not enlightened on. But it may fairly be presumed the following were not amongst the illustrations.

1st.—The wholesale slaying of Burmans at Mandalay, summarily tried by Major Adamson and condemned to be shot by a Military firing party, daily detailed for this purpose.

2nd.—Colonel Hooper's photographing by an instantaneous lens the Burmans being shot.

3rd.—The bodies after execution suspended to a bamboo by their hands and feet in the manner live pigs are, and carried, bleeding and disfigured, through the public streets and Bazar.

4th.—The disastrous Flood in Mandalay in August 1886, covering an area of some 35 square miles, carrying away in its fierce and destructive swiftness lies in value of property and between 700 and 1,000 human beings, officially reported to have caused a loss of 35 lives only. The weird-like apparition of such illustrations would probably prove too much for even a sensation-mongering London audience. The writer would only here remark, there was less to reprove in Colonel Hooper's action than there would be in Mr. Villiers of the London Graphic, or Mr. Prior of the Illustrated News, sketching a condemned criminal on the scaffold just preparatory to the bolt being drawn and the culprit disappearing below. Surely, Sir Charles Bernard, K. C. S. I., is not so friendless as to be allowed to drift into the public lecturer's groove! It would be a real act of kindness if some friend would warn him against this petty conceit. The whole lecture delivered at Falcon-square Chapel, from first to last, was an interesting tissue of monstrous blunders, and fencing with the truth. Notwithstanding anything either the late or the present Chief Commissioner of Burma may choose to say to the contrary, there is no doubt that Theebaw was respected, and, but for his excessive weakness, would probably have made as good a ruler as any of his predecessors. As at all Native Courts, so it was at Mandalay, intrigue, vice and immorality reigned supreme.

The writer in conclusion now only adds his own conviction, that, but for Lord Ripon's pusillanimity, and Mr. St. Barbe's cowardly scuttling out of Mandalay, King Theebaw, instead of vegetating at Ratnaghiri, would be ruling at Mandalay to-day.

ZITO.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

IX.

Miscellaneous—Resolutions.

From words to deeds is a natural transition! What if, having disposed of the speeches and the speakers, I took up their work? If words are women, deeds are men! Indeed, I have the authority of Shakespeare, when I say that

"T is deeds (not words) must win the prize.

And of deeds again, quality rather than quantity should be sought. Now it is no secret that the last Congress excelled the previous ones in quantity more than in quality. And if there was more work, there was also less time to do it. The result was, as indeed it could not fail to be, that business had to be pushed through, with indecent haste; and hurry we know never makes good curry. There was a universal complaint last year, which was echoed and re-echoed, that the speeches generally were very commonplace and stale even as a twice-told tale. The Resolutions this year were too many in number, seventeen, I believe, in all. To be sure, Lord Lansdowne was frightened out of his wits to read the strings of the nation's grievances! Now, to say the least of it, this is most unbusiness-like. There was, however, a distinct departure made. The Resolutions also embraced social questions. And here at least Lord Dufferin scored a distinct triumph! Pray, do not understand me to say that Lord Dufferin was not ill-advised or hasty in inditing his diatribe against the Congress; but, on the other hand, it is not so that his parting shot had no redeeming feature in it. I hold with Lord Dufferin that there are social topics which can very well be brought within the arena of discussion in the Congress. Your Congressswallah must be prepared to make sacrifices when he is called upon, from time to time, to do so. A nation's regeneration cannot be effected by mere 'tall talk.' By your words, ~~more~~ than by your deeds, you must shew yourself deserving of higher honors and greater privileges. Reform ~~your~~ such stuffs as compose your ubiquitous ~~your~~ must yourself move if you would have ~~them~~ move. You should be prepared to ~~move~~ ~~more~~ than half way. Nothing perfects ~~more~~ than position and its responsibilities. Position ~~weakens~~ the weak, but sobers the strong-limbed. It would not do for one aspiring for precious boons to say,

I am Sir Oracle;

And when I open my lips, let no dog bark.

There will spring into existence greater Oracles, who will not be dumb. So let no one in the Congress fold be impatient of criticism, be it good, bad, or indifferent. There is a tendency abroad, a mischievous one, to assume that the moment one criticises anything of the Congress, he is motives ever so high and his objects ever so noble, he is damned. In Bengal, I have found this feeling more rampant than anywhere else, and "'Tis true, 'tis pity, and pity 'tis true." Other Provinces have begun to catch the contagion. Every Congress man must be a party man, pledging his honour, and honesty and soul and all to his party; or he must be consigned to eternal damnation. There were not persons wanting who, in the exuberance of patriotism and in the plenitude of their wisdom, of which God seems to have vouchsafed to them more than the ordinary amount, their vision Diomed-like purged off, could see through, as an object behind a transparent screen, the motives of the Reis and Rayyet, the Indian Nation, and Hope, in assuming an attitude which these have thought fit to do. This spirit of dogmatism is the bane of progress and reform. Mistrustfulness destroys confidence, and begets evils. Believe, O thou Sceptic! when any one of these say,

I would only repress them to secure.

Perhaps, the most noticeable feature of the last Congress was the sending of the two letters of condolence and congratulation to Mr. Bright and Mr. Gladstone respectively.

From—George Yule, President, Indian National Congress, Allahabad.

To—John Albert Bright, Rochdale.

"The Congress, consisting of fourteen hundred delegates from all parts of India, join in expressing their high appreciation of your father's services to India, their sorrow at his illness, their sympathy with him and his family in his suffering, and their earnest hope for his complete recovery." This was on the 27th December 1888. The next one was despatched on the 29th December. "To William Ewart Gladstone, Hawarden Castle, Chester.

"Congress assembled from all parts of India, fourteen hundred delegates present, congratulates you upon your birthday, and prays that by the blessing of God, you may have many happy returns of the day."

Now this is all very well so far as it goes. But if we dive a little deeper into the matter, what do we find? We find not an individual delegate here or an individual delegate there showing an inclination for the Liberal party, but an entire body professing to represent the most conservative nation on the face of the earth who had met in solemn conclave, committed, and most seriously committed. As it was, it was bad enough in all conscience. This is the climax of—imprudence. In the first place, it is opposed to historical truth to declare that we have derived no benefit from Conservative Ministry; perhaps, the truth lies quite the other way. Indeed, once in the course of an interesting controversy, Mr. Robert Knight, who is himself a staunch Liberal, proved, by reference to concrete examples, that we are indebted to the Conservatives for some of the greatest charters of human freedom. It is plain then that our soi-disant leaders of liberal proclivities have taken advantage of this popular superstition to commit a whole nation. But will this tactics, for I cannot characterise it otherwise, hold water? It is on the face of it preposterous, not to say preternatural, to assume that the world will be credulous enough to credit that all these fourteen hundred and odd delegates are all Liberals, true and loyal. It will only give a poor idea of the intelligence and, shall I add, of the honesty?—of the delegates, that they suffered themselves to be thus played upon. O shade of Socrates! Come to the rescue of thy Truth which is in jeopardy! Nor does it bode any good in the future. To plunge into the vortex of party politics is like sacrificing truth at the altar of personal gain. When the next appeal to the entire British nation will be preferred, who will have the heart to make it without a compunction? Truly speaking, the appeal shall not be to the entire British nation, but only to that section of it which rejoices in the name of Liberals, which at present is a house divided against itself. I have often heard it argued that unless you identify yourself with one party, unless you throw yourself into the whirlwind of party politics, there is no hope for your case, being ever so much as heard. Now, I can understand there is at least some plausibility in this kind of argument; but is it honest and straightforward dealing? Whoever else may be, I am not one of those who follow. The end justifies the means policy; for, it does not take long for a man who stoops to bad means to resort to questionable ends—and then his own end is not far off, I mean, morally. Addison, though himself a Liberal, had always had the wisdom to steer clear of the two "strange animals"—Whigs and Tories. The adhesion to any particular party would never permanently improve matters, although it assuredly does serious injury.

That the Congress is counted for something even in England, will be evident from the fact that such appeals (quoted below) have been found necessary to be made to it. This is an earnest of its future success. Indeed, from private sources, I learn that already the air of England is thick with rumours—of early changes and reforms, on a large scale, in the constitution and policy of the Government of India. You must not be taken by surprise to find a committee of the House of Commons sitting early in winter to enquire into the grievances of the Congress and the press. It is hoped its result will be that there will be great shuffling of cards.

"HOUSE OF COMMONS.
15th November, 1888.

To—The General Secretary, Indian National Congress, Allahabad.
Sir,

You are doubtless aware of the resolution passed by the House of Commons on the 5th of June last:—

"That in the opinion of this House any mere suspension of measures for the compulsory examination of women and for licensing and regulating prostitution in India is insufficient, and the legislation which enjoin, authorises, or permits such measures ought to be repealed."

Our special experience in this country has taught us the necessity of extreme care to make such repealing legislation reliable and complete, and the need of strengthening the hands and the purpose of a willing Government by the expression and the help of an awakened public opinion.

We venture, therefore, to suggest to you that the subject is one which might fittingly be brought before the Congress at Allahabad.

We have the honour to remain,

Your obedient servant,

(Sd.) JAMES STANFELD.

(Sd.) JAMES STUART."

"From—The Executive Committee of the Ladies' National Association for the Abolition of Government Regulation of Vice.

To—The Members of the Indian National Congress, meeting at Allahabad, on December 27th, 1888, and succeeding days.

Gentlemen,—We address you in the name of thousands of women banded together to oppose all laws for the Regulation of Vice by the State.

After nearly twenty years of persistent struggle, we have had the reward of seeing Great Britain and Ireland freed from such laws.

But our sympathies are not limited to our own country or race, and our hearts are deeply moved at the thought of our fellow-subjects in India, who are still under the bondage of a system even worse than that which we have successfully opposed in our own land.

We ask your earnest co-operation with us in seeing that the Resolution passed last spring in the House of commons, to promote the repeal of the Indian Contagious Diseases Ordinances of 1868, and the vice-regulating clauses of the cantonment Acts, is strenuously and sincerely acted upon in India.

We make the remark without any desire to give offence to any one, but it is matter of common knowledge that men in official administrative positions need the support of public opinion to enable them to fully carry out such changes as the one in question. Such support an active public opinion affords to administration in this country. We would far hope that your Congress, through its various Committees, will make it a part of their business to see that infamous arrangements which have been so strongly denounced, alike in India and in England, are swept away, and that nothing however colourably innocent it may seem, be allowed to take their place.

The Indian Acts and Ordinances have not only been condemned by Parliament, but by the English people, who have been roused to a deep sense of responsibility in having allowed them to be imposed on our people. We rejoice in the belief that the enlightened public opinion of India is on our side, and we lay our views before your Congress with the confident hope, not only of your appreciation and support, but also of your cordial co-operation in the efforts we are making to render the State regulation of vice in India impossible.

Signed for the Committee,

(Sd.) JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER,

Honorary Secretary.

November 1888."

Now the above appeals practically inspired the Resolution XII which was placed in the hands of Captains Hearsey and Banon. It is a moral plague-spot, and ought to find no place in the Statute Book.

At another time, I shall take up the resolutions one by one. Much, it is true, has been said and written upon them; but much yet remains to be added.

B.

ENGLISH POLITICS.

BY A HINDU IN ENGLAND.

London, March 15, 1889.

The event of the week, as every Englishman but a Pigottist will tell you, was the monster meeting held at St. James' Hall last Wednesday evening when "The National Protest" of the United Kingdom found a spokesman in the best abused man of the day, Charles Stuart Parnell, Mr. John Morley being in the chair. Since the historic gathering at Bingley Hall last November when 25,000 representative men of our section of politics met together to demonstrate their enthusiastic loyalty and affection for Mr. Gladstone, such a sight has not been seen from Land's End to John o' Groat. Every possible interest was represented. Every difference was sunk and every effort was made to emulate as to who should do the greatest honor to the hero of the day. I read somewhere no animal is more dangerous than a maddened sheep. Still John Bull like Brutus is cold as flint, emits a spark only when very hardly knocked, and becomes cool again. Some idea of the universal excitement will be formed when I tell you that in less than three weeks more than a quarter of a million of people have signed their solemn protest against "Brave Balfour" and his government by batoning and bludgeoning, and from Mr. Morley's remarks before putting the resolution before the meeting, namely, that since he had been in the chair, he has had about sixty telegrams from every point of the compass, congratulating those who held this meeting and wishing them and the cause well. I need not say not a syllable came from India, either of sympathy or antipathy. We have not got that sympathy, we have not got that vitality as yet to throb and respond to the progressive stages of another people's nationhood, though in this case we bear the greatest resemblance to that people, morally and materially. India the poor India the poor safe and sound under Ghorian's mutual winks, but so does the victim of the vampire bat.

The Government is at bay. Mr. Morley's speech was as telling as incisive. "I think that the publication of this tale and malicious libel on the very day on which the division was to be taken on the Coercion Bill, with the avowed object of influencing that division—I say that that constitutes an aggravation of the offence which even this Parliament will be bound to notice and to punish. There will be other forms of retribution—but the Vimes, after all, that great Jupiter that does in-led forge its thunderbolts, that great Jupiter is much less important than her Majesty's Government." The present move is to do away with the Attorney General of the Government, and then to kick out that Government itself. The proof of a criminal conspiracy is being thrust home with a force of logic which would not take long to open the eyes of the British electorate. The Government have allowed the Attorney General, their chief law officer, to devote week and months as counsel for the accusers. The Times itself vouched for the Attorney General in July last. They said, "These charges against Mr. Parnell had been formulated in open Court by the head of the English bar, a man whose eminence—legal, personal, professional, and official—offers an absolute guarantee that in his learned judgment he has the means of proving what he asserts. The Attorney General having access to official knowledge, as he has admitted it himself, leads the public over all these months to think that The Times has taken all reasonable precaution, even unto the comparing of the handwriting. It is the old story. If the first law officer of the Crown neglected at the first instance to test the genuineness of the documents on which rested his whole case, a folly which the veriest junior holding his first brief would not be guilty of, then he is a fool.* If on the other hand he knew—a situation from which he has now no possible means of escaping—that Pigott's letters were forged, then he is the greatest knave that has ever dishonoured his silk. Angry challenges are thrown out to Government from all sides to come out from behind the petticoats of The Times, as Mr. Parnell quaintly put it and to face the country; and no sooner the electors have a chance than this false image, with its front of Fairy brass and its feet of Dissentient clay will be trampled in the dust under the feet of all honest citizens of the United Kingdom.

In our cheap country we manage everything cheaply, sometimes paying not more than one Rupee four annas for a wife. But we have not yet come to woo with brickbats and criminal prosecutions and even a Bat cannot be hooked so summarily as in Patland. A young man named Huggins was indicted at the Mayo Assizes yesterday for assaulting Bridget Swift. He pleaded not guilty. The Lord Chief Justice consented to the case standing over for an hour, and allowed the prisoner out on bail during that time. When the case was again called on the prisoner produced a certificate of his marriage with the prosecutrix, the ceremony having taken place in the meanwhile. Under these circumstances the prosecution was abandoned, and the parties left the court arm in arm.

The following will give you some idea of how Zemindary is carried on in Ireland, the Zemindar in this case being no less a personage than your Vice-Emperor, the constitutional autocrat of India. The Press Association states that writs of ejectment have been served upon the Bishop of Kildare and the Revd. Thomas Kelsoe, Parish Priest of Luggerecurran, on behalf of the Marquis of Lansdowne, in respect of ten acres of land held by them on the Luggerecurran estate. Father Kelsoe has taken an active part in the promotion of the plan of campaign in connection with this estate, and he has permitted the erection on the plot of land in question of twenty huts, which are at present occupied by evicted tenants. Father Cummins, the predecessor of Father Kelsoe, interested himself in clearing the estate of Ribbonmen and White boys in the time of the first Lord Lansdowne, and in recognition of his services in this connection ten acres of land were granted to him at a rental of £10 a year. Writs have also been served on the whole of the occupants of the huts.

TRUE CAUSE OF THE MAHOMEDAN DECLINE.

The picture your able correspondent "Old Moslem" has drawn of the England returned Mahomedans, is natural and impressive. Throughout his long article, he has tried to prove the mistake of the ambitious Mahomedans in going to England in search of education, without passing the F. A. examination at least. He also tries to repudiate the idea of the present system of education being defective. He further adds that those who go to England in the hope of receiving sound education are generally the plucked candidates of the university examinations. He attributes their "irregular habits," "laziness," and "want of perseverance" to their unsuccessfulness in academical attainments. In fact, he finds fault with the candidates and not with the system of education and their indolent parents and guardians. I now beg with your permission to point out something to the contrary which does injury not only to the individuals but also to the community and to the Mahomedan nation at large.

To begin with, the Mahomedans are not in any way inferior to either the Christians or the Hindus. Mahomedan boys never get proper and methodical training like the Hindu and the Christian lads. Therefore, it is impossible for them to display their hereditary ability as a race, and it is also unjust and premature to impute to them inability and want of energy. Their present degraded social position is chiefly due to the defective education they receive through the indifference and negligence of their parents. The university is not solely to blame but the parents themselves.

The poverty of the Mahomedans is always put forth as a plea for not giving proper education to the young. It is absurd to repudiate this in toto. But I shall state a few words regarding the rich and well-to-do middle class men, who can well afford to spend thousands of rupees in giving parties and in immoral amusements, and who can also subscribe hundreds to innumerable funds at the request of the officials and in the hope of winning empty titles. Of course, this class of men cannot be called poverty-stricken. It is the sons of these men who generally go to England for better education. Now, Sir, do these men pay regular and proper attention to the education of their children? I, without the fear of being contradicted, say that they do not. They never take any personal interest in the education of their children, and even do not care to hear the quarterly reports of their progress. In supplying necessary funds for proper education, they are niggard and parsimonious. To save a few rupees, they employ incompetent tutors to instruct their children at home, and thus lay the foundation of the mental culture of the boys with third-rate materials. Is it possible to build a castle on a foundation made of mud and rubbish? By sowing seeds of weed these parents and their friends expect to reap paddy at the time of harvest. The failure of the children of these men in the University Examinations is principally due to this rotten foundation, the outcome of which is "irregular habits!" "laziness" and "want of perseverance." Knowing full well the training they receive, I do not find much to blame the Mahomedan youth.

The following are the causes which led the upper and middle class young Mahomedans to go to England for the sake of education. As soon as "the enlightened" among them appreciate their miserable position in society and find out the true cause of their unsuccessfulness in the University Examinations, they, as rational beings, naturally want to better their social position by going to England and coming out as Barristers. They have much confidence in their own ability and their ultimate success there; for they know that they will be able to get the help of competent teachers who know the method of training perfectly and who can prepare a candidate for any examination with success. As soon as a Mahomedan aspirant reaches England he begins to work and study with one of those teachers and passes every examination during the "term." Is it not possible for him to get the assistance of one of the educationists and pass university examinations in India? Yes, it is possible; and there are able men too in India. But the parsimonious and indifferent parents would not engage the services of any such men to coach their children.

The failure of the Mahomedan Barristers at the Bar, and their not giving satisfaction to their parents, friends, and community, cannot justly be attributed to their education received in England. It is to be remembered that they go to England at an advanced age full of demerits, and their parents do not allow them to stay there for more than a couple of years or so. The education they receive there during that short period is not and cannot be sufficient to put them on an equal footing with those who have received sound education from their childhood; but it is more than what they could have ever obtained in India during their whole life. It is praiseworthy on the part of the sons of those parents, who do not take personal interest and do not spare sufficient money in giving them proper education in India, to leave their sweet home and compel the unthoughtful and irresponsible parents to pay the expenses of education in England.

The indifference of the parents to the education of their children is very detrimental to the interest of the Mahomedan society and highly injurious to the nation. Hundreds of cases are to be found in which the negligence of the parents and want of proper training ruined the prospects of the young Mahomedans and made them the curs of society.

Your correspondent asserts that "generally these young men (the Barristers) are too apt to borrow foreign tastes and habits, forgetting in 3 or 4 years everything they had learnt in all their previous lives." Now, let us see what this "everything" means. Had they ever read their national history "in all their previous lives?" Had they any conception of the usefulness and soundness of their social customs and habits? Had they any knowledge of what the Mahomedan taste is? Had they ever been taught any book on social etiquette of their community? The answer is no on every point, except that they had instinctively followed the example of their parents in their early days. No wonder then if these enlightened men after making themselves acquainted with the usefulness and benefits of the Western customs, habits and tastes adopt the same in preference to those of their own, and thereby shake off the little outward show they had of Mahomedanism and thus turn out perfect Sabibs at the great chagrin of those who were responsible for their practical and useful education. Had they been acquainted with their national history, social customs and etiquette, they would have never transgressed from the path of their forefathers, like the Englishmen who are well versed in theirs and are the faithful followers of their ancestors. Is not this state of affair due to the defective system of education? Are the youth to blame for their present social position or their parents? As regards these young men's bad habits, here they do not imitate the Europeans but follow the example set to them by their parents and friends at home. Their education in England has given them one great advantage over the members of their own circle in this matter, and that is moderation which is now unknown in oriental society.

In conclusion, I would advise "Old Moslem" to try his able pen to make the Moslems of the old school understand their responsibility in the education of their children, and to bring about the required change in the system of education, and then if not satisfied with the social and mental progress of the Mahomedan youth he will be quite justified in upbraiding and finding fault with them in any shape he pleases.

KHAJA KHEZER,

* Oh!—ED. R. & R.

† Oh! oh! Ed.

FOR SALE

Price	...	Post free Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt	...	Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound	...	Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman. The Indian Pioneer's Gazetteer, Spelling News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who, being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts lights upon journey, never tiring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not indolence, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reverence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following: [Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no negard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye: [Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ru-kin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.] The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight; "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course, some few have crept in. The Pioneer, Dec. 1887.

In Pamphlet, Price 1 annas

or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books, &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA.

Are strongly recommended to try our Flowery Orange Pekoe with Rose-like Aroma, @ Rs. 2 per lb.

T. HILL & CO.,
Adjoining Cornhill Theatre,
Calcutta.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "NEPAUL" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 5th instant.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessel should be sent to the Company's Godown at Juggumouth Ghat not later than Thursday the 4th idem.

CACHAR LINE.

For particulars of the sailings of this line please apply to the undersigned.

DHUBRI & DEBRIOUGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubbri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBRIOUGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debriooughur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, and Debriooughur on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A tri-weekly service is maintained between Naraingunge and Cachar, for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,

Agents.

12, Clock-Gate Street, Calcutta.

BEETLEMAN'S GLYCERINE SOAP

FOR THE SKIN. Glycerine Soap is the best for the skin, as it is the only soap that does not dry the skin, and it is the only soap that does not irritate the skin. It is the only soap that does not dry the skin, and it is the only soap that does not irritate the skin. It is the only soap that does not dry the skin, and it is the only soap that does not irritate the skin.

SOLE MAKERS: M. B. H. & CO., 12, Clock-Gate Street, Calcutta.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

LITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system
Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,
After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended.

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic value, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Rupee each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemist throughout the world.

Agent in Calcutta: Smith Street & Co., R. Scott Thompson & Co., and Bathgate & Co., Limited.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Unify the blood and rid the system of the
LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS.
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are immediately and effectually remedied in all Complaints connected with the Liver and Bowels.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Erysipelas, Itch, Scalds, Ulcers, Venereal Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for curing all kinds of skin diseases, and is the best remedy for the treatment of the skin.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds.

Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases. It has been found to be a most effective and safe remedy for all the above complaints.

Manufactured by J. C. Holloway, 533, Oxford Street, London.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA.
(Opposite the Police Court.)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, showing 100 times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand tough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fust, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lockets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satna, says:—"The best gold-worth of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Samkutra, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' DISINFECTANTS:

The best and cheapest Antiseptics,
Deodorizers and Cleansers.
Jejes' Perfect Purifier

supercedes Carbolic and other Disinfectants, being much more efficacious, non-poisonous, non-corrosive, stainless in use, and cheaper. Prevents contagion by destroying its cause. Instantly removes bad smells. It is an almost unfailing cure for Eczema and other Skin Diseases; and is the best known Insecticide. Can be had in the various forms of Liquid, Powder, Soap and Ointment.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

prevents infection by destroying its cause, killing the very germs of contagious diseases. It removes instantly all noxious smells, not by temporarily disguising them (as is often the case), but by chemical combination, substituting instantaneously for a poisonous a pure and healthy atmosphere, and thoroughly eradicating the evil.

Agents: -DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press

THE

FALL OF MANDALAY, BY ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime Subscribers may register their names with the Publishers

Messrs. PETTIT & Co.,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

11, Old Court House Street;

or Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

29SA, Upper Circular Road,

CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION

CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,——

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PELSANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	in advance	Rs. 12
Half-yearly	"	" 7
Quarterly	"	" 4
Monthly	"	Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy,	"	" 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or proof. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Re. 5 a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

reinstated

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS, LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1889.

No. 369

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

THE EXORDIUM OF SADI'S BUSTAN.

Translated from the Persian
By Edward Stachey.

IN THE NAME OF GOD, THE MERCIFUL, THE COMPASSIONATE!

IN the Lord's name! Who did all life create;
The Wise! Who taught man speech articulate.
The Lord, the Giver, the Help in time of need!
The Merciful! Who hears when sinners plead!
The Great! From Him whose shall turn away,
Greatness shall seek in vain, seek where he may;
Kings, who lift up their heads in pride of place,
Bowed down before His throne themselves abase;
Not even the stiff-necked doth He take in wrath,
Nor from His presence drive them, unheard, forth.
The Sea of Knowledge, infinite, divine,
Doth in each drop two elements combine:
Justice and Mercy,—neither of these can fail;
He sees the sin, and, pitying, draws the veil.
Though evil deeds bring down the wrath of Heaven,
He who turns back, repentant, is forgiven.
Against his father should a son rebel,
Unmeasured wrath the father's breast will swell.
Displeased, the kinsman owns his kin no more,
And drives him like a stranger from his door:
If to thy friend thou should'st unfriendly be,
He breaks the fellowship, and flies from thee:
The servant slothful in his daily tasks,
Promotion of his master vainly asks:
And if the soldier in his duty fail,
No plea will with his king and chief avail:—
But He, Lord of the noble and the base,
Against no rebel shuts the door of grace.
The fair earth is His table, duly spread;
He asks not, "Friend, or foe?" Welcomed are all, and fed.
If He were quick to mark iniquity,
Who from His anger could in safety be?
His nature knows no change: His kingdom stands
Needing no help from man's or angel's hands.
All things, all persons, serve His kingly state;
Man, beast, fowl, ant, and fly, upon Him wait.
For them His bounteous table He prepares;
Where even the lonely, far off, Simurgh* shares.
That bounteous love in all His works He shows;
He grasps the world, and all its secrets knows.
His Will is law, His greatness all things own,
Whose kingdom is of old, with rivals none.
On one man's head he sets a monarch's crown,
One from a throne He to the dust brings down.

* The Phoenix or Griffin of Oriental legend, dwelling alone at the end of the world.—Translator.

From Him the cap of fortune this receives,
To that the beggar's garb of rags He gives.
If He should bid unsheath the avenging sword,
The Cherubim, silent, obey His word:
Should He proclaim the fullness of His grace,
The Lost One cries, "I, too, have there a place!"

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

WE offer our condolence to the Duke of Cambridge and the Royal Family for the death, announced this week, of the Duchess of Cambridge.

LEAVING Allahabad on Friday, last week, the Viceroy reached Lucknow the same morning, and staying there the same and two succeeding days, His Excellency left it for Simla on Monday afternoon.

HER Majesty's Secretary of State for India has expressed "approval of the excellent manner in which General Graham conducted the Sikkim operations, which resulted in the complete defeat of the enemy with but little loss on our side." Lord Cross has further, in appreciation of the services of our troops, "approved of the grant of a gratuity to the troops employed in the operations, the units being fixed at Rs. 24 and Rs. 12 for Europeans and Natives respectively."

THE "Lansdowne" Railway bridge over the river Indus at Sukkur, opened on the 27th March by Lord Reay, is of the cantilever order—consisting of two cantilevers, each 310 feet long, with an ordinary girder of 200 feet connecting them, the whole giving a clear span of 790 feet, the largest in India. The girders are partly of steel and partly of iron. The roadway for ordinary traffic is on the same level with the rails. The bridge crosses the river where the Indus is divided into the Rahri and Sukkur Channels by the island of Bhukkur. The work was commenced in April 1883. The revised estimate for the entire project comes up to Rs. 4,10,755, including Rs. 90,316 for block-houses on the abutments of the bridge. The Superintending Engineer in charge, Mr. F. E. Robertson, has been awarded special thanks in the Gazette by the Governor-General in Council.

RUSSIAN telegraphs from London, on the authority of the Daily News, that Persia has ceded to Russia Kelat-e-Nadir—the fortress built by Nadir Shah to overawe the Turcomans, and the most important stronghold in Khorassan.

THE Chief Justice is recruiting his health in Barrackpore, from where he is supposed to do his judicial and other duties. It is the privilege of our High Court Judges to be absent from the Court on full pay without leave of any kind.

MR. HOWELL must bid farewell to Hyderabad and retire to his own obscurity in the Service. Mr. D. Fitzpatrick, C.S.I., Chief Commissioner of Assam, has been prevailed upon to accept the Residency of intriguing Hyderabad which has wrecked the reputation of so many. He had refused the appointment. And well that he did so, for Assam offers a good field for administrative distinction.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

SENHOR DE CAMARA, Governor of Din, is under suspension under an order of the Portuguese Governor-General. A Court of Inquiry has also been ordered on his conduct at Simbon.

WITH the retirement of Mr. H. J. Reynolds, C. S. I., from the 17th instant, the Hon'ble F. M. Hudday has been appointed Chairman of the Calcutta Port Commission and confirmed a Member of the Board of Revenue, L. P. Mr. J. Beames, Commissioner, Bhagalpur Division, officiates as the second member for Mr. F. B. Peacock still on furlough. This transfer not only disturbs the public mind but other Commissionerships. Mr. C. C. Stevens, from Chota Nagpore, comes to the Bhagalpore Commission, Mr. W. H. D'Oyly, Magistrate and Collector, Mozufferpore, temporarily taking up that duty. Mr. W. H. Grimley, Magistrate and Collector, 24-Pergunnahs, becomes Commissioner of the Chota Nagpore Division, and Mr. C. W. Bolton, Officiating Magistrate and Collector, Mozufferpore, acting as Magistrate and Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs, on being relieved of his present appointment by Mr. W. H. D'Oyly. Mr. H. Lee, Joint-Magistrate and Deputy-Collector, 24-Pergunnahs, acts temporarily as Magistrate and Collector of that District till relieved by Mr. Bolton.

BABOO JADU NATH ROY again acts as the Fourth Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, Baboo Krishna Mohun Mookerjee, Subordinate Judge of Khowda, acting as Judge of the Small Cause Court. Baboo Jadu Nath is a lucky man. On the last occasion, he was appointed to act in the Calcutta Court for six weeks as the nearest officer, it being considered inexpedient to bring in another from a distance for such a short period. And now he has been called to officiate for a larger term, probably on the strength of his previous acting incumbency there. We hope this does not mean that Baboo Ananta Lal Chatterjee, Sub-Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs at Alipore, is permanently to be left to pine in unmerited neglect.

BABOO TARINI KUMAR GHOSH, Deputy Magistrate and Deputy Collector, 24-Pergunnahs, has been taken in by the Presidency Commissioner as his First Personal Assistant, and Baboo Obinash Churn Mullick, Deputy-Magistrate and Deputy-Collector, Baraset, as the Second in place of Baboo Ananta Nath Chatterjee who goes on 3 months' leave. The new comers are both gentlemen of family and education, which is more than can be said of most native officials. Does the out-gone go out in chagrin and sorrow at repeated supersession, or is he required by his friends of Hathkhol?

SIR Syed Ahmed of Aligarh has secured for himself, through his friend Principal Sir William Muir, the honorary degree of Doctor of Law of the Edinburgh University.

ON the publication of the Rules for the guidance of Benchers of Magistrates in the town of Calcutta, we commented, among others, on their incompleteness. The Government has now added one more Rule to remedy the defect. It runs thus:

"Rule 14. The Chief Magistrate may at any time delegate any or all powers conferred on him under these rules to the Junior Specially Magistrate."

We hope Mr. Marsden will more formally than now record his orders under these Rules, for they are a part of the law.

THE "Bengali Journalist" in the Indian Spectator is one of the Elect. He gives here a specimen of his charity:—

"Should a magistrate who has been convicted of a criminal offence be allowed to hold his situation as a dispenser of justice? A case has just occurred here which leads me to ask this question. Jnanendra Nath Pal, a young Deputy Magistrate, assaulted a poor Brahmin without justifiable provocation. The native Presidency Magistrate in Calcutta, before whom the case was tried, found the prisoner guilty of assault and fined him eight rupees. Jnanendra Nath Pal is now, in fact, a dismissed criminal. How can a dismissed criminal dispense justice? As far as I can see, it is inconsistent to allow a dismissed criminal to try criminals. It is something like asking the blind to lead the blind. Jnanendra Nath Pal ought to be dismissed from the service to which he is now a discredit."

Of course, the Journalist lives in a steel house and can afford to pelt stones freely at others who are not so fortunate. This indeed is being unco-righteous with a vengeance. It is something to know that there is at least one man who never lost his temper, but he might have some kindness for the weak. If a man is to lose his appointment for a single lapse of the sort, the majority of offices will remain frequently unfilled. For the Elect are few.

We like his protest against the reintroduction of the infamous C. D. Act better.

Here is how one side of the Brahmo Church depicts another:—

"There was a time when the late Keshub Chunder Sen was looked upon as the man to root out idolatry from the land and replace it by a simple theism, which was the pristine religion of India and was upheld by some of the highest Hindu Shastras. It is sad to see that instead of such a sound and highly desirable result being attained, the religion preached by Keshub Chunder himself has now dwindled into a form of man worship. The Church which Keshub Chunder dedicated to the worship of the one God is now filled with men who practically assign a higher position to their departed spiritual teacher than to God himself. The pulpit in Keshub Chunder Sen's Church is considered to symbolize his teachings and to emphasize the continuance of his ministrations. None is allowed to preach from this pulpit. It has been decided that it shall ever remain vacant. It is believed by the followers of Mr. Sen that the pulpit is the last visible symbol of their late teacher. This would fairly indicate to what is the Brahmoism of the Church of the New Dispensation, as Keshub Chunder Sen's Church is called, gradually drifting."

The writer concludes with the consolatory reflection that at least his sectional Brahmoism is above reproach. Just so! The mote is a disfigurement always confined to another's eye.

THE Joint-Magistrate of Chittagong is engaged on the following case:

"A man named Rakimuddin went to Mecca some 13 years ago. He had been leading the life of a fakir during all that time, and had in a manner given up the idea of returning home. In the meantime another man of the same name went to Mecca and made his acquaintance. The second Rakimuddin managed to learn the antecedents of the fakir Rakimuddin and, on returning from his pilgrimage, contrived to get the fakir's home, his wife, and all. The mother and wife at first hesitated to acknowledge him, but they gave way before his cunning persuasions. The fakir Rakimuddin was of a fair complexion and the false Rakim of a dark hue, and when pressed for an explanation accounted for it to his having submitted to the painful ceremony of Ten sikh. He had lived with the family for a period of three months without any molestation, when he went away to visit his would-be-father-in-law's house. In the meantime the real Rakimuddin returned home and wanted to be admitted to his own house. He was refused admission by his mother, wife, and brother. Great confusion followed; the villagers and the neighbours gathered, and he was at last recognised. The trick played upon the poor mother and wife was now brought to light. The impostor was sent for, on the plea of his mother's illness; and was instantly arrested and handed over to the police. The wife's position is the most deplorable of all, as she shortly expects to become a mother."

This is as singular a romance of real life as we ever remember. It would be the fortune of a novelist.

THE potato disease has appeared on the Nilgiris. The whole of the Nilgiri seed is infected with the fungus known as the Botrytis Infestans. The growers are all natives, and it has been suggested that Government should import good seed and sell it to local cultivators at cost price.

A COVILATION is reported of the head, Rungtao, of the Khaoggi treasury at Imphal, by the local Subler Court for misappropriation of funds. He has been ordered 5 years' imprisonment and refund of the amounts. The prisoner, claiming to be a British subject, claims a fresh trial in any British Court.

SADANUND ESSAYIA, cashier to the Bombay Small Cause Court, has been sentenced by the Sessions Court—Mr. Justice Bayley—to six years' rigorous imprisonment, for criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 15,000. The small fry are easily caught, while the whales always manage to break through your nets.

THE Lord Chancellor Halsbury refused to join a dinner party to which Mr. Labouchere had been invited, on the ground that "really one cannot be expected to sit at the same dinner table with a man who has accused you of nepotism, and designated you the Lord High Jobber of England."

As a prevention against fires so frequent at Travancore, the Maharaja Bahadur is willing to assist in the conversion of thatched into tiled buildings, and has therefore set apart for the purpose Rs. 20,000.

WHAT is the disease king Otho of Bavaria is suffering from? His hair turned gray in a single night while his physical power has entirely left him. He is quite unable to walk without the support of two servants.

THE South of India Observer has been cast in Rs. 200 damages with costs by the Sub-Judge, in the suit of Mr. Wapshare, Secretary of the Nilgiri Game Association, for Rs. 2,000, for libel.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

OUR surmise about General Boulanger has come true to the letter. The ink of our last week's leaderette was scarcely dry before news arrived by telegraph that the Belgian Government had yielded to the demand of the Belgian press and public and expelled the General from Belgium, who was, in consequence, expected to cross over to England. The news was since modified, and it was announced that Boulanger had not been expelled but warned that no agitation in his behalf would be allowed in Belgian territory. It will come to the same thing, after all, we suspect. Belgian pride has avoided a humiliating inhospitality to a distinguished foreigner who has taken refuge in Belgian soil, which might have the appearance of a truckling to a powerful neighbour. All the same, Boulangerism has been practically snuffed out in Belgium. It may not suit the General to sink into genuine retirement, and in that case he shall have to shift his quarters. Meanwhile, in France, he is to be impeached, in his absence, for high crimes against the State. As Warren Hastings was tried by the High Court of the House of Peers, so Boulanger will be tried by the Senate. On Monday the 8th April, a decree constituting the Senate into a High Court for the nonce for the trial was read. It was the signal for an angry debate. One after another, the partisans of the General rose in protest against the proposal and in condemnation of the entire conduct of Government, with regard to the illustrious Frenchman, driven by a contemptible cabal from his country. The Government, however, was too strong for the malcontents. The latter were outvoted. So the Bill for regulating the procedure of the Senate as the High Court of Justice was passed by a large majority. The court was to have commenced its sitting yesterday.

THE most important event at home in England, is the motion brought forward in the House of Commons, on Wednesday, by Dr. Clark, member for Caithnessshire, for granting legislative independence to Scotland. Dr. Clark represented, not without some show of truth, that the ministry did not give sufficient attention to Scotch legislation. There was some discussion, in which Mr. Gladstone joined, saying that the question was not yet ripe enough to be dealt with, and then the motion, being put to the vote, was rejected by a majority of 111 votes.

That is all that we learn by telegraph. The daily press seems to be satisfied with it. But it is an insult to the intelligence of the Indian community to expect it to be content with crumbs like these. Reuter is neither a very appreciative politician nor an impartial reporter, having been found wanting at several notable junctures. But perhaps he never displayed such utter incapacity for the service he has undertaken, as the enlightener of the public mind, by quick information of all that transpires at the chief centres of the world. His agency has only proved its calibre by not furnishing details of the discussion on the 10th. It has entirely failed to take the measure of the incident in the House of Commons. It was more than an incident—an event, if Reuter's man could only see it. Not seeing it, he has dismissed the subject with a notice of half a dozen lines. Since Mr. Gladstone turned his back on the Empire, to become the patron of Parnellism and disruption and revolution, no more important motion has been made in the British Parliament than the one introduced by Dr. Clark. It is the beginning of the end, we are afraid. Mr. Gladstone, who is responsible for all the mischief, must himself have been taken aback by the proposal of the ardent Scot: we are loath to believe that he incited the member for Caithnessshire. The motion was almost an impertinence, in the face of the comprehensive scheme of Local Self-Government for Scotland introduced by the Government, and which was read a first time two days before, on Monday. There is clearly something rotten in the state of Denmark. A grave crisis seems to threaten England from within, which will require all her patriotism and wisdom to overcome. The danger seems imminent. It is a terrible prospect for our poor country. We can only pray in all sincerity and humbleness to God, to avert a calamity common to England and India.

THERE is severe distress in certain parts of the country, notably in the Diamond Harbour Sub-division. The District Board had opened small relief works which have enabled many of the poor to tide through the season so far, and now ample measures are required, as the distress not only continues but is steadily progressing from bad to worse, specially in the villages of the Mathurapore and Bankipore Police-stations. Much time has already been wasted, it is to be feared, and we hope there will now be no more delay. We are a long suffering people, and, although we have a considerable beggar-population—encouraged no doubt by our charity itself—the ordinary poor are above supplicating for food relief. Accordingly, they pine in silence with remarkable patience and fortitude. They exhaust all their resources and consume their vitality, never very high, before they descend to the street to beg. When they arrive at this critical stage, there is no more margin left for dilly-dally. Help must come at once or it might be too late. Such seems to be the condition of the rural population of many villages in the Diamond Harbour Sub-division. A man of the name of Nilambar Das, of Mathurapore, is reported to have died of starvation three weeks ago. After passing two consecutive days without nourishment, he went out to beg and fell senseless on the way and died soon after. It is said that he has left a starving wife and children.

A GREAT and disastrous fire has consumed Surat. Originating in the premises of a Parsee timber merchant, in the afternoon of Saturday, it spread round, favoured by a strong breeze, and raged all night. The municipal authorities were paralysed before the strength of the enemy. Five thousand houses have been destroyed, including those that had to be pulled down to prevent the fire from spreading. The loss is estimated at nearly a quarter million sterling. This for a country town or port in India means little short of ruin. Surat is not Chicago, any more than India is the United States.

ON Wednesday, they held a meeting of sympathy and relief at Bombay, at Sir Dinshaw Manockjee Petit's house. Lord Reay, who had been to the scene of the wreck, returned by special train on purpose to attend the meeting, and drove direct from the Railway station to Sir Dinshaw's. He was given the chair. His Lordship described the sad state of things he had just witnessed. After recording their sympathy and their sense of the immediate necessity of taking measures for giving relief, they at once commenced action with opening a subscription. The Governor offered the goodly sum of Rs. 1,000. Rs. 28,000 were subscribed on the spot.

THIS is not the business of Bombay alone, however, but of the whole country. Other cities ought to show their sympathy to poor humbled Surat. Calcutta above all should justify her precedence as the capital of India, by being prompt to relieve her Western sister. We have great pleasure, therefore, in announcing that Mr. Manockjee Rustomjee and Sir Alexander Wilson are astir in the matter, and have formed a Committee for the purpose.

AT Thursday's meeting of the Calcutta Corporation, specially convened for the purpose, the Commissioners, finally considered the project of the new central road from the Hooghly bridge to Sealdah, and resolved to construct the road, provided the Government lent them without interest the two lacs of Rupees offered. The matter, in some shape or other, had been under discussion for the last 5 years, and for the last two years Mr. Cotton had taken it up in right earnest. He wanted to signalize his Chairmanship of the Corporation by this highway across a most crowded part of the town. The cost has been estimated at nearly half-a-crore of rupees, and the Commissioners have in hand only five lacs—the sale proceeds of the Dharm'alla market. They must borrow the balance, paying interest on the loan. The Commissioners, however, rely upon the new powers secured to them by the new law to recoup a large proportion of the cost by sale of the surplus land. For the Commissioners in meeting may—

(a) acquire any land required for the purpose of opening, widening, extending, or otherwise improving any public street, or of making any new public street, and the buildings, if any, standing upon such land; (b) acquire, in addition to the said land and the buildings, if any, standing thereupon, all such land with the buildings, if any, standing thereupon, as it shall seem expedient for the Commissioners to acquire outside of the regular line of such street, provided that, without the special sanction of the Local Government, not more than one hundred feet shall be acquired on either side of the regular line of the street ;

(c) lease or sell or otherwise dispose of any land or building purchased under clause (b)."

Whatever the proprieties of the law, the Commissioners have here a source of income for the improvement of the town, and they mean to utilize it in the present instance. In fact, the Legislature has granted the power for this express purpose. It is proposed to acquire about 100 biggas of land and to resell 55 biggahs at a valuation estimated at about 29 lacs. Government had been applied to for a subsidy. It was even at one time announced that Government had sanctioned a grant of two lacs from the surplus funds of the Howrah Bridge. That offer was withdrawn and the project of the new road seemed to fall through. It was again revived and after rather a protracted correspondence Government at last offered to advance 2 lacs for 3 years without interest. Armed with this offer, both the Chairman and Mr. Cotton renewed the agitation for the new road and received the final sanction of the Commissioners last Thursday. The 2 lacs is intended for the interest on the loan during the acquisition and construction of the road. That saves the raising of the House Rate for the interest. There was a feeble protest against this "big jump into the unknown." Baboo Kally Nath Mitter moved an amendment admitting the desirability of the improvement but advising cautiousness in such an expensive project. He advised taking up the work by piecemeal, limiting the first year's outlay to five lacs. But the Chairman's resolution for the entire work at once was adopted. The critics of the Corporation may take heart at the zeal displayed by the Baboo Corporators in favor of the new road and for similar reforms. On Thursday, member after member of the Corporation rose to defend and recommend the Harrison-Cotton scheme. The enthusiasm was so great that three Native Commissioners were on their legs simultaneously to second the Chairman's proposition, immediately after he had resumed his seat. It was evident from the commencement that the Chairman would carry the day.

So sanguine is Sir Henry Harrison of the financial prospect of the scheme, that he believes the new road will ultimately cost the Commissioners next to nothing. We hope the Commissioners will not prostitute their new power of extra acquisition. But we cannot pretend to be easy on this head. One Commissioner was heard to say, in defence of the measure, that, whatever the immorality of the law, the Commissioners would be absolved of all blame as soon as the declaration would appear under the hand of a Secretary of Government. The responsibility would be transferred, for under the Land Acquisition Act such a declaration is proof conclusive that the land declared was required for a public purpose.

TWICE during the week, Mr. Percival Spencer regaled Calcutta and its suburbs with his aerial navigation—on Wednesday and Friday. The first was a private ascent, at 3-30 in the afternoon, from the grounds of the Oriental Gas Company, in Narkuldanga. For a consideration of Rs. 500 paid him, Mr. Spencer took with him a Bengali, Ram Chunder Chatterjee, of the Indian Circus Company and an assistant in the License Department of the Calcutta Municipality, who hopes to take to ballooning as his profession. They rose to a height of from 3,000 to 4,000 feet. The balloon—the "Viceroy"—was provided with two valves to allow of the escape of gas, an anchor, ropes, and other usual appliances. The "Viceroy" took a northerly direction. It was plain sailing, and the descent safe on level ground. The valves were opened a short distance beyond Dum Dum, and both the Master and tyro, after careering through bright and cloudless sky for about an hour, alighted in "unfractured integrity of limb" close to a station next to Baraset on the Central Bengal Railway, in time to catch the train reaching Sealdah at 8-5 P.M. According to Spencer, the Babu passed the initiation well. The Friday's was a public exhibition. The site selected was the Cossipore Tramway Grounds, Gun Foundry Road. Time 5 P.M. It was the closing day of the Bengali year and a public holiday, and the fame of the London aeronaut drew a large crowd to witness his Drop from the Clouds. Warned by previous experience, the arrangements all round were much better than at Ballygunge, and Mr. Spencer went through the performance in his usual felicitous style. At a height of one mile, he took to his parachute, when immediately the balloon turned round, vomiting out the gas enclosed, and fell headlong to the ground—we mean the balloon. Mr. Spencer was not so abrupt. For the first 100 feet his descent was a drop indeed. He shot down through the sky like a stone by force of gravitation. Then his parachute opened and moderated his pace. He came circling down gradually. In fine, he descended successfully with his umbrella and touched with his feet the solid earth at a distance of half a mile from his start, in a paddy field. The crowd dispersed pleased with the feat accomplished.

WE have received several communications on matters municipal, which are under consideration and inquiry. With respect to our remarks on municipal factions, we are asked, by more than one Correspondent, if we could name any municipality to which official sympathy has not been extended but has worked most successfully. In education, experience, and social position, a non-official Chairman in the Mofussilis, often, superior to his predecessor—the average Deputy—but his orders are transgressed with impunity, while the latter, though personally commanding less respect in high native circles, is supported by the whole Civil Service in exacting obedience to any requisition that he issues orally or in writing. Again, the treatment which not only Beauracracy but also individual official magnates accord to a Chairman not in Government service, goes very much to lower him in the estimation of the common run of people. In one of his last year's tours, Sir Stuart Bayley himself was made by district officers to speak most courteously to a young and inexperienced member of the Subordinate Executive Service, while the Chairman of a Municipality, who is of excellent birth and education and who had worked all night to make suitable arrangements for His Honor's reception, was not even introduced to him.

The following suggestions occur to us as calculated to lead to the satisfactory working of Local Self-Government.

- (1). The appointment to the chair of experienced and efficient sub-district Officers where elective municipalities have been established.
- (2). These officers should be transferred like Munsiffs, every three years or so.
- (3). The Government should allow no inferior officer nor any member of the Subordinate Executive Service to take precedence over a non-official Chairman within the limits of his own municipality.

THE Petits of Bombay are in bad odour among their neighbours as a purse-proud family. The vanity of wealth is, however, the besetting vice of parvenus, and it were vain to expect within at least three generations the true aristocratic dignity. At the same time, it is but fair to recognise that these Parsee Barings of Bombay have made ample amends for the weakness in question. Charity covers a multitude of sins, and surely a little unreasonable brag or foolishness of bearing may be passed over in a family which habitually enjoys the luxury of doing good. Indeed, if ever there was a house which could legitimately boast of their possessions, it is that of the Petits. For they know the right use of money.

SIR DINSHAW MANOCKJEE PETIT is one of the most charitable men of the age. He has distinguished himself and taken the lead in liberality in a city remarkable for its liberality. There has probably been no race with a capacity for giving like the Parsees, and he is the Doyen of the great givers among the Parsees. He has a consort fully worthy of him. We have lately had to record several of their large benefactions in Calcutta, Bombay, and elsewhere. The whole family takes a delight in giving away, on a large scale, for the public good. We have now to announce a princely benefaction, for the benefit of education, by another member of the family. Mr. Framjee Dinshaw Petit has just placed the sum of Rs. 75,000 at the disposal of his Excellency the Governor for the purpose of erecting and fitting a laboratory for Scientific Medical Research, on a site which has been approved by the donor, in the immediate vicinity of the Grant Medical College. Of course, the Governor in Council has much pleasure in accepting the offer, and, in doing so, desires to publicly thank Mr. Framjee Dinshaw Petit for his munificence in supplying an institution, the want of which has long been felt by those most interested in promoting the cause of higher medical education in that Presidency.

Also the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that the institution shall be called "The Framjee Dinshaw Petit Laboratory for Scientific Medical Research."

THE Dacca Gazette reports that Babu Rajani Kant Ganguli, B. A., Headmaster of the High School at Debrughar, Assam, has invented a spinning machine. We hope he teaches well. It would have been more to the purpose if he had mastered the Arts of humanity before devoting his mind to, or trying his hand at, the mechanical Arts. One would suppose that the principal of the chief educational institution at an important centre, in the virgin Province of Assam, had too much occupation of an absorbing, and by no means unattractive, kind, among new and interesting races, to leave any room for serious inquiries into the processes of the industrial arts with a view to their improvement. As a Brahman he did not start with any fund of early observation. Is he a priest of the profession ennobled by the genius of William Thom? Jestings apart, it is true enough that Dominie Sampson in the East does show a strong turn for handicraft—an absolute genius for mechanical invention—in the weaving line. Some years ago, the then headmaster of the Dacca Normal School invented a spinning or weaving machine. He was showered with congratulations and encomia by a patriotic press, and great were the expectations of the regeneration of the country from the introduction of the new machine. The inventor himself was sanguine and applied himself with characteristic energy to the practical working of his new method. But at the end of some years, all we heard about it was that he had paid dearly for his whistle. We hope better luck may attend Baboo Ganguli. But he had better consult his predecessor of Dacca in the line. The Native Press would be kind to him by not tempting him.

THE new Bombay Municipality consists of 72 members, namely, 23 Parsis, 20 Hindus, 18 Europeans, 8 Mahomedans and 3 Portuguese. The Calcutta Corporation as just reconstructed gives 35 Bengalis, 21 Europeans and Eurasians, 11 Mahomedans, 2 Armenians, 2 Jews, 2 Hindustanis, 1 Cashmere, and 1 Parsee, or a total of 75. The Christian element is the same in both the Municipalities, and yet the Calcutta is stigmatized as a Baboo Corporation. The strictly called Baboos number less than half of the total strength and are outnumbered by the other nationalities taken together. There is less chance of the Baboos taking in others than for the Europeans overwhelming the Baboos with non-Baboo votes. So the Englishman may be consoled.

WE are afraid there is no immediate prospect of the abolition of "Volapuk." If the poor Swiss dominie who invented the universal tongue is dead, he has left a few demented but determined disciples who stifle the hobby and air it out on every likely opportunity. And now Wealth that knows not what to do with itself, hungering for occupation and possibly "sensation" too, has joined their camp. Somebody, unknown to fame but whose name the Volapukists will not willingly let die, has left a considerable sum for the prosecution of the craze.

THE new Parisian fashion is for ladies to smoke cigarettes after dinner. Why do not the dear creatures go the whole hog and patronise the Oriental luxury of the chibouk and the snake-pipe? It would be a great step in refinement. The perfection of smoking is to draw through water the fumes of tobacco seasoned with rose petals and saturated with molasses or honey and perfumed with all the spices of Araby the blest and of Taprobaue and Thibet.

THE following expression of opinion, drawn from Mr. Gladstone by Nawab Mehdi Ali Khan, of the Hyderabad ministry, is worth preserving:

"Hawarden Castle, Chester, December 10, 1888—Dear Sir—To reply in full to your interesting letter would require a much larger and closer examination of many questions respecting India than it is in my power to institute. The representative system of government has played a great, and may yet play a greater, part in the history of mankind. It is of Aryan and mainly Western origin, and in the opinion of many it has grown out of the internal arrangements of the Christian Church. As it is capable of yielding such great benefits, I desire its extension. I have not heard that the combination of Mahomedan with Christian Bulgarians has worked ill. But it would be a great mistake to carry it 'per saltum' into countries where the conditions of its application would be novel, and therefore quite uncertain. Long consideration and tentative effort seem best adapted for such cases. While leaving the question itself thus open, I should be strongly predisposed against forcibly suppressing any opinion in regard to it which might be expressed in a loyal and peaceful manner.—Faithfully yours, W. E. Gladstone.—The Nawab Mehdi Ali, Hyderabad."

That has naturally proved rather a stiff dose to our ultra-congressists. It is most guardedly worded, but it is substantially the St. Andrew's Dinner oration of Lord Dufferin over again, in a nutshell. Had it proceeded from any other man, there would have been a howl of indignation against it, from one end of India to the other. But our politicians have neither independence nor impartiality. Mr. Gladstone, like Lord Ripon, may do anything with them with impunity. For ourselves, we are at one with the illustrious leader of the Opposition that the time is not yet for a large measure of representative government in India. The vanity of our patriots has quite turned their heads, and they think they are up to anything. They are not. Even admitting their pretensions to the full, they are yet but a handful—a drop in the Indian Ocean.

WE are not only deluged with bogus firms, but these firms themselves are venturing on novel and irritating experiments on the patience of the public. Once we had only the pest of advertising quacks who vended infallible cures and electric charms, and publishing adventurers who, for moderate cash, offered you sun, moon and stars. Then we had the watch and jewellery swindle. Other and less savoury features have been added since. The Indian Daily News lately reproduced in its editorial columns the following letter signed "Engineer" from an up-country paper:—

"Is there no relief from the following, in re Messrs. Alex. Anderson and Co., Agents, Calcutta? On the 13th February, my camp was 13 miles from the post office. My Harkara paid one rupee four annas for a V. P. Post parcel containing that book Fanny's Hyle, and a lot of old rubbish and advertisements. I did not order that book, and returned it to the post office, but the post-master refused to receive it. I then on the 17th wrote to Messrs. Anderson and Co. for the return of my money, and asked how to return their book, &c.; but adding insult to injury they, instead of honestly returning my money, sent me another copy of this Fanny's Hyle, and more rubbish, but this time charging annas ten only. I was expecting a parcel from a respectable Calcutta firm, and my harkara had orders to that effect, and in good faith paid ten annas to the post office. I mean to try and recover my money through the Court, but in the meantime I wish to warn the public."

Here is something a good deal worse than a bogus firm—a regular pandering trade in open day. We are not sure, however, whether this correspondent would not have done better to suffer in patience. If he was so bent on reform, he could have sent the case up to the Chief of the Police of Calcutta, and at most added a letter to his editor, but not for publication. By appealing to the press and washing his stinking linen in public, he has done only harm. Indeed, from his neglect of obvious prudence, he has almost laid himself under suspicion. He reminds one of the nice lady who congratulated Dr. Johnson on the absence of indecent words in his Dictionary, and drew from the formidable lexicographer—a hater of all forms of cant and humbug as he was—the crushing response that she must have been searching for smut.

So much for "Engineer." But what shall we say of the editors? What a pass has the Anglo-Indian press come to, when such a letter could be published, whole and entire, unexpurgated, in respectable newspapers! Have manners changed so far that it is now allowable to mention by name the most notorious productions of Holywell Street?

With respect to the bogus concern and its trade in vice, we hope Mr. Lambert will do his duty sternly.

THE Hindoo Patriot had, for some time, been on its last legs, and now it has written itself down an ass. Its opinion has long ceased to be of any account. It evidently goes begging for favours. It certainly lives on the charity of the community—on the public respect for the great names once connected with it. It might get on decently enough by prudent husbanding of that capital, but it has neither talent enough nor character enough for even that humble existence. In its extremity, it has constituted itself the apologist of every wrong—the ready butterman to everybody whom it conceives to be somebody, either in the present or in the future.

God help the man, condemn'd by cruel fate
To court the seeming, or the real great!
Much sorrow shall he feel, and suffer more
Than any slave who labours at the oar!

It is the humble servant of not the great only but the fiftieth cousins german of men of power, position or pelf. It does not omit to make its obeisance to the very lackeys. Of course, the art of literature it chiefly cultivates is the art of blarney. Its favorite part of speech is the adjective—of the stinking oleaginous kind—which it applies with such reckless profusion as to make the objects of its attentions cry for mercy.

Thus it has come to cover, with the whole length and breadth of both its ears, the superannuated lawyer whose impertinence towards us we chastised last week. We can understand, and even pardon, the fellow-feeling which makes one blockhead wondrous kind to another. But this phenomenal journalist shows an enthusiasm of dulness—a zeal in the cause of darkness—that is startling at the far end of the enlightened Nineteenth Century. At a time when even India and the Indians boast of girl-graduates, the cult of garrulous seasoned incompetence, without a shred of dignity of bearing, is surely an anachronism.

Not content with making such defence as was possible in such a case, and abusing the plaintiff's attorney, this rash literary hack actually assumes canonicals, and pronounces a funeral oration on the old. That gentleman will hardly recognise his own face on the canvas of the flattering artist. He is "the Nestor of the native Bar." Is he? Ask Manomohan Ghose, ask W. C. Bonnerjee, ask T. Palit, ask R. Mitter, ask K. M. Chatterjee, ask N. Haldar, ask Abdur Rahman, ask P. L. Roy, ask Dutt and Bose, ask any of the numerous gentlemen of the long robe bearing pure Indian patronymics! Does he pretend to be so? Then, he is not only old, but something more grievous besides. The Nestor! Fine word that, to be sure, but, pray, where did you steal it from? No! we forget. It belongs to the establishment. We remember how the former editor be-Nestored a respectable member of the Tagore tribe into a Maharaja. The present staff seems to have inherited his famous Book of Phrases, without his brains to use it. The phrases accumulate in geometric progression. Soon the Nestor is turned to "the Gamaliel." That is finer still! And suggests the same inquiry, the more so that it is no part of the regular office furniture, like the Homeric allusion. Thou art, indeed, an ancient little rogue thou Vitellius!

This sort of playing with epithets at random is not without its dangers. We strongly suspect the writer got it second-hand. We can lay a bet that the poor object of the adulation does not know where on earth it comes from. If any man of character will privately assure us to the contrary, we promise to pay into his hands Rs. 20, for any charitable use he may like to spend the sum in. All the same, the sounding polysyllable has on the poor gentleman so-called an effect similar to that of "Mesopotamia" on the old lady. And then, this "Gamaliel" during the last thirty years has presided at the tribunal of public opinion which daily holds its meeting at the Bar Library. This awful sentence is not yet ended, but we better take breath here; the half of it gives enough news of a prodigious kind to ponder upon. In fact, the poor Gamaliel is already dispersed in thin air. Who is this Gamaliel who has been a fixture in the Bar Library for the last thirty years? It cannot be Sir Charles Paul, who has not been half as many years Advocate-General. It is not of course Mr. Evans or Mr. Woodroffe. We know no such monster. Is it possible that this intelligent writer and master of phrases is thinking of the comfortless apartment in the High Court in which the vakils en masse jabber and screech at the top of their voices, to show the wisdom and manners they have learnt at the feet of their precious old maid of a Senior Government Pleader? If so, he does not know the situation of the Bar Library! In fact, he plainly shows that he does not know anything—not even the meaning of the word. Of course, he has no idea of what the institution is like. In fact, many pleaders are not aware that the barristers' club in the High Court is a different thing from the damp floor or low shed or foot of umbrageous tree or long table in the High Court at which the vakils are wont to congregate. It is useless to spend breath on such a pretender.

THE death of John Bright has been mourned throughout India. The whole native Press, English and vernacular, has paid the tribute of just admiration to the deceased, and noticed with gratitude his sympathetic interest in the welfare of our people.

THE Rast Goftar and Satya Prakash, of Bombay, has signalled the occasion by appearing with an opening article In Memoriam, accompanied by a woodcut from a carte de visite photograph of the deceased.

WE see that the writer in R. G. and S. P. speaking of John Bright, says—"He was not a patriot of the type mentioned by Dr. Johnson in his dictionary." Misquotation is a common fault, because we quote not always first-hand, and are too vain to confess our obligations. It is enough to avoid being too specific in our references. There is danger there. The above citation is, to all appearance, a slip. What is the patriotic type defined by Johnson in his great Lexicon? Patriotism is not one of the words on which the great lexicographer exhibited his idiosyncrasy. He defines Patriot

"1. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country.

Patriots who for sacred freedom stood. Ticks!

The firm patriot there,

Who made the welfare of mankind his care,

Shall know he conquer'd. Addison.

Here tears shall flow from a more gen'rous cause.

Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws. Pope.

2. It is sometimes used for a factious disturber of the government."

The Doctor hardly shows his usual discrimination on this word. That example from Addison is unfortunate. According to it, patriot and philanthropist would be convertible terms. The second meaning given of patriot is an idle surplusage. It is only by an irony that "the word is sometimes used for a factious disturber of the government." But irony thus inverts the meaning of every word, and his work would have swelled to nearly twice its size, had the Doctor incorporated the ironical signification of all the words. Perhaps, we should modify our remark that his treatment of the word patriot does not exhibit his personality in the same way as some others. It does to this extent that, but for his political bias, he would not have given the sneering sense of the word patriot. Throughout his life, he never concealed his scorn for the so called patriots—a scorn which latterly turned into horror. He kept himself out of his own Club for fear of their contact with him, and got up another of a more exclusive personnel.

The writer in the Rast Goftar had doubtless in his mind the Doctor's famous remark to Boswell, that "patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel."

THE financial difficulties of the hour will attack many snug sinecures, and be the death of some idols. The shears are about to be applied to the department of Public Instruction. It is, we believe, in contemplation to abolish the Hindu School. It will tax the Director's utmost tact and prestige to demolish this venerable relic of the past. There are legal, or at any rate political difficulties in the way.

MON. MARTHIVET, Director de l'Interieur, Pondicherry, arrived at Chandernagore early in the week. He is just now at Darjeeling. One of the objects of the visit is to enquire into the present state of education in the French Settlement in Bengal, a memorial having gone up from there for a change in the system. M. Marthivet is, next to the Governor-General of French India, the leading official.

THE Prajabandhu people have not succeeded in their appeal to Pondicherry from their conviction in the Chandernagore Court, at the instance of the Bandel curate. The superior court held that the curate was no public functionary, and that his conduct was not, therefore, open to public criticism.

So there is yet hope for the Calcutta University. The son-in-law has gone out, and Mr. Tawney has come in, as Registrar. There was a move to bring in the Revd. Lal Behari De, but his Reverence, for all the pains and penalties of an active canvassing, could not score more than four votes. He made up for the paucity of his supporters and admirers as much as he could, by adding his own spare presence. Before the claims of number one, delicacy is an idle word. If he was not a host in himself, he hoped to draw by his magnetic charm—his glittering eye. He was certainly his chief supporter and greatest admirer. He defended his own cause with zeal, and fell fighting—neither like Lucifer nor like a hero.

SHAKESPEARE has paid to the full the penalty of his great fame, by being the victim of all sorts of fanatics and mountebanks. If seven cities clamoured over the question of Homer's nativity, three times seven professions and pursuits have claimed Shakespeare as their own respectively. Not a little ingenuity or even research has been lavished upon the production of evidence to support each of the different views. His works and the writings of his times have been overhauled to supply the slightest ground for surmise, if not belief. The unfortunate reader is overwhelmed with the mass of references. Thus the game has proceeded all through this century in particular, ever since England learned from the critical Continent to appreciate her greatest genius. Thus from a saint to a publican and sinner, all through the Church, the Army, the Navy, &c., he has been everything by fits and nothing long! One enthusiast would make him out a bobby—another a beak. At third sees in him a Sawbones—a fourth a veritable Sangrado. Thus has our poor Poet been persecuted, and his reputation compromised, until his very identity became completely confused. The wrong having reached its worst, there naturally came a pause. When a great limb of the law proved to his own satisfaction that the great Poet was or had been a pettifogger, there was an end of the matter, one would suppose, and his poor ghost would thenceforward be let alone. Vain thought! The frivolity is still going on, without any signs of abatement.

We are accordingly glad to see that an Indian newspaper—and strange to say one hailing from what is usually regarded as the Benighted Province—has done itself and the Press of this Empire honour, by entering a trenchant protest against the silliness. The writer shows up the prevailing folly, by pretending to enter the lists of competition himself. Following their method with scarcely any exaggeration, he effectually laughs to scorn these biographical speculators in Shakespearian study. He propounds the idea that Shakespeare was a racing man, and he makes out that he was an Indian book-maker, jockey, better, abetter, and what not, and familiar with Gymkhana slang?

If wit could shame a demoralising literary fashion, this jeu d'Esprit in the Madras Times would tell.

ERRATUM.—P. 172, Col. 1, last line, for 100 read 350 ()

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1889.

THE PERSONNEL OF THE NEW CORPORATION.

As might be expected, most of the Commissioners of the Town Corporation under the old Act offered themselves for re-election under the new, and most of them have been returned. Nor is this matter for regret. The necessary continuity of policy might otherwise have been placed in jeopardy. It would have been unwise to deprive the town of the experience of the former members. New blood too has been infused. It is not always of the best, perhaps, but the very newness of it has an advantage. And a portion of it is very good, unquestionably. There is, besides, a collateral benefit to the country from the zeal to sit on the board, of the scions of wealth or of commerce who cannot possibly lend any assistance to the deliberations of the Corporation. We hail Kumar Binay Krishna Bahadur out of the dissipation of Congress day-dreams to the discipline of work-day existence. There may be a pang in the process of disillusion, but the end is worth the cost. For one accustomed to nourish the soul on the ambrosia and nectar of the enfranchisement of India, the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world, it is not easy to place himself on the small beer of Bustee improvement and the Great Sewage Question. It is a descent from Olympus to a dunghill. But a bird in hand is worth two in the bush, and a municipal Chamber in esse may be preferred to a National Assembly in posse. We hope the Kumar will not be content with the empty honour of a seat, but take his share of the work and show the stuff that is in him. We believe there is stuff in him. Shobhabazar has sent up probably its best young man in him. It ought to have been content with him. Mr. Sew Bux may not be a brilliant acquisition, but the corporation will be found strengthened by the interest of the great Marwari community which his presence in it implies. In fine, the old personnel has been served up, spiced with new ingredients. On the whole, there is a distinct advance in respectability and strength.

If closely judged, several of the Wards of the Town can hardly be congratulated upon the new men sent up by them, the new electorates, formed of the European Chamber of Commerce, the Trades Association, and the Port Commissioners, have done well. The Government, which had to choose a diminished number, has sent down to sit on the board a miscellaneous lot of nominees. This was unavoidable. It is easy to criticise the list, but we think it represents a very fair selection. There is a reason, and usually a fair reason, for each choice. The Government has to look to many considerations which escape the ordinary observers, and to satisfy many interests not ordinarily thought of. Some deference to wealth and rank is incumbent on it. With paternal impartiality, it has to satisfy aspirations which have no chance except in its watchful kindness. Above all, it has to redress the balance of representation and lend voice to minorities. It is thus, we have the Mahomedan Aga Mahomed Mehdi and the Parsee Manickjee Rustumji Junior, the Oudh Prince Mirza Jehan Kadr and the Mysore Prince Buktayar Shah, the Jewish millionaires Messrs. Gubboy and Ezra, the Sobhabazar Raja Sir Narendra Krishna, and, last not least, the Hindu millionaire Mr. Joy Gobind Law, who is also an accomplished man of business. The other appointments are unexceptionable. The nominees still represent important sections of the public, they are men of experience and proved merit, who would be an acquisition to any body. Most of them are experts, some in medicine, some in engineering, and others in administrative work. We were particularly pleased with the Government choice of Baboo Doorgagutty Banerjee. The Collector of Calcutta has a natural claim to sit on the Municipality. But there was room for only a few, while the candidates were numerous and the field of selection very wide indeed. And, after all, Doorgagutty is but a servant of the state, who could not be expected to press his claims with sufficient force or the required pertinacity. In the hot scramble of solicitation, there was every likelihood of his claim being overlooked and himself left in the lurch. Besides the small chances in a competition for a few prizes between a host, he had to encounter prejudices and positive hostilities. It is an open secret in town that Sir Henry Harrison and Mr. Cotton do not like him, to speak mildly. He, a native official, had had the rashness to have an opinion of his own—opinion, which, to his misfortune, happened to run counter to those entertained by those Sahiblogues—the Coryphæus and the Doyen of the Corporation. Nor is he a patriot of "New India." Still less an orator or a journalist who can make or mar an official reputation. So the thoroughly respectable native gentleman, grown gray in the service of the state, who joins independence of judgment to experience and had the courage to express his opinion, was voted an obstructive. Complaint to that effect reached the fountain head, it is said—to the imminent risk of the accused's general prospects in the service. Luckily for him, the influence of Secretariat and departmental cliques is not paramount in the present régime, as in previous administrations, and the intended victim escaped. The Lieutenant-Governor had the penetration to see the usefulness of a zealous official native member on the board, who could assist it with his experienced judgment, but who would never be a factious oppositionist.

Great efforts were made, by his native friends and official patrons, to get Baboo Amrita Nath Mitter appointed by Government, after his "stampede" from the "hustings." It is even said that he was offered a seat and had accepted it. But his sanguine patrons had reckoned without the host. The inexorable Lord of Belvedere spoiled the game of partition of Turkey—or Ceylon, as we say in Indian parlance. Providence preserved to him the Sick Man's rightful possession. The hasty gentleman forgot the Lieutenant-Governor's rule of action in such cases. Sir Stuart Bayley acted according to the principle on which he declined to appoint Baboo Ananda Chunder Roy of Dacca. The man who appeals to the electorate must take his chance with them. Without very exceptional reasons, the Government would not choose the rejected of the people. Such was Amrita Nath Mitter.

We think Sir Stuart Bayley's principle is sound, and its application correct. With regard to Baboo Amrita Nath's merits, a great deal too much has been made of him by his fussy friends. The Municipality will surely survive its loss, and the public has no reason to break its heart at his absence. He is very far from a popular man. His very unamiableness gave him an advantage—made him a good watch-dog over expenditure. But the talk of his independence and public spirit is all nonsense. He is practically responsible for one of the biggest scandals in the Corporation.

The amalgamation with the suburbs, strengthens the Corporation by the addition of some seasoned members. We are glad to see our friends Baboos Prya Nath Mullick and Pran Nath Pandit elected. Baboo Kanty Chunder Banerjee brings to the board professional knowledge. The new representative Baboo Gossamy is well spoken of. We only hope the Suburban patriots will not carry to the town all their Suburban practices. Perhaps, the greatest acquisition will be found in the Vice-Chairman of the Suburbs. Baboo Ashutosh is a successful lawyer, a journalist of repute, and a practised speaker. Above all, he brings to the deliberations of the metropolitan municipality all the experience of successful municipal administration in its immediate neighbourhood, now incorporated with the Town itself. Non-official heads of Municipalities have great difficulties to contend with, and Baboo Ashutosh is not the only one who has succeeded. But geographically as well as sociologically, the Suburbs were an exceptionally hard nut, and he cracked it, to the wonder of everybody.

A HINDOO PUBLISHING HERO.

NOTHING shows the pettiness and inaptitude of our people—nothing proves their primitive poverty of conception—than the criticism which has been evoked by the new title which Her Majesty has granted to Baboo Pratap Chandra Roy. One would suppose that titles were granted with extraordinary care and intelligence. It is notorious, however, that they are usually given away at random, sometimes for doubtful services, at other times for little services, and occasionally for no services whatever. The objection to Roy is that he has risen from the ranks!—just the reason for glorifying him!

Is he not learned enough? Neither Runjeet nor Mahomet could sign their names. He ought to have left literature alone? Why, then, do you all idolise David Hare, a poor watch-maker, who had not even made money? The learned or the wealthy are not the only salt of the earth. It is not they who have done most valiantly and to the best purpose. The Panjabi founded a great kingdom, and the Arab established one of the chief and best religions of the world. The uneducated English mechanic was the father of modern education in Bengal. Here, again, is the poor Bengali colporteur or pedlar in books who, having conquered the disadvantages of early life and supplied the defects of early education, established a good thriving business, but, instead of retiring on its profits, was fired with the ambition of doing something for his country and the world, and, working on a plan of his conceiving, has been one of the greatest disseminators of literature in India. If Socrates brought philosophy down from the academy to the streets and the market-place, Roy has brought the most venerated literary treasures of the Indian Aryans from the groves of the Rishies to the pecuniary capacity and the understanding of the feeblest and most lowly. He has had collated, edited, translated and printed and published the Ramayan, the Mahabharata and the Harivansa, and has distributed them free and almost free, by thousands, in original and in translations into Bengali and into English. A humble man who succeeds in such a humble colossal enterprise, deserves a statue, and they grudge him a few paltry letters after his name! Perhaps, his crime is that he is one of us. That shows how little we deserve! It proves only the calibre of his critics. They would have no objection to a European or an American—even an outlandish mountebank. They study the lives of foreigners who have risen from nothing to distinction. But directly they see one such among their own people, they fail to recognise him. And these sages think they are fit for a parliament!

The following letter from a White Pandit from the Antipodes may perhaps prove somewhat of an eye-opener to some of our snarling brethren:—

“Hamilton, Canada, Feb. 14.

My dear Mr. Roy,

I will not let a mail pass without expressing to you a measure of the pleasure your favor of the 6th ultimo gives me.

I congratulate you most heartily on your recent honors at the hands of the Imperial authorities. You have honorably earned them. May Providence grant you and yours long to enjoy them. I am proud to know your name will stand with those of Monier Williams, Rajendra Lal Mitter, Hunter and the long list of men of the ‘Order’ whose love for and service to India are known throughout the civilized world. As an Englishman, I am also proud to think your services have met with appreciation at the hands of our gracious sovereign, through the wise discernment of her advisers. I have no idea that the millennium is either here or hereabouts, so far as our times are concerned, but one is glad to think that in this XIXth century the political shepherds have a more genuine regard for their flocks than in the past.

I trust the Karyalaya may indirectly receive some advantage from the marked attention you have received. What pleases me is that it is in sooth pour le mérite of establishing so useful an organization that you are singled out for distinction. I am sure the consciousness, that your efforts have not been fruitless to do the work nearest to hand, for India and the Great Empire, to which we belong, will give you a true pleasure without which all honours would be empty. You see I am like the old Scotch-man, Sandy in poor Kingsley's Alton Lock—always thinking of the Cause, the Cause.

I now wait anxiously to hear how you succeed with His Excellency Lord Lansdowne. From his most excellent reputation here, I expect great things from him and feel confident I shall not be disappointed. My wife and son desire to convey their respectful regards to yourself, your wife and daughter, and you will please to accept these of

Yours sincerely,

(Sd.) H. B. WITTON.

Here is another from this side the water:—

“London, 9th March, 1889.

DEAR FRIEND,

I congratulate you most heartily on the deserved honor you have had conferred upon you. The orders of distinctions are too often conferred for services of a political and military character. It is, therefore, a pleasure to find that such valuable peaceful labours as those in which you have long been engaged have met with this recognition to which they are so justly entitled. When your noble patriotic work is completed, you will deserve to be advanced to the rank of Knight Commander and to be remembered in history as Sir Protap Chandra Roy.

It will please you to know that the work to which I have given the last two years will also be crowned with success. I am informed by a high authority that the India Government have resolved to reform the Police Department in India. I have written hundreds of letters and scores of articles on this subject, and the cry for reform can no longer be resisted. Several bad cases of Police corruption have recently occurred and I have not omitted to turn them to account, and to get my friends to do the same. By this means the question has never been allowed to sleep, and a reform is to be the result. I am now endeavouring to get all my friends to publish the best practical remedies which they can think of; so that the Government may be helped as much as possible. It is no good to complain unless one is ready with some reasonable remedy.

I rejoice greatly to note the steady progress of your great work.

Very sincerely yours,
(Sd.) FREDERIC PINCOTT.”

These are but two of many congratulations which are flowing in from all directions of the compass. Nor is this sort of correspondence the only form in which the worth of the man is acknowledged. Scarcely has a learned man or woman from Europe or America of late visited Bengal, who has not taken care to visit as a pilgrim to a shrine of learning, the now world famous Datavya Bharata Karyalaya.

Truly has it been said, that a prophet is not honoured in his own country.

ENGLISH POLITICS.

BY A HINDU IN ENGLAND.

London, March 22.

Last week some significant answers were elicited by Mr. Bradlaugh and other friends of India in Westminster showing at what rate the values of the lives of the Empress' British Indian subjects are assessed by the present Conservative Ministry. In answer to Mr. Bradlaugh, Sir J. Fergusson said, "It is true that on that part of the coast (of East Africa) which is the scene of disturbances British Indians have suffered great losses from the stoppage of trade and destruction of property, though a large number are still residing and carrying on business within the sphere of German influence, I can not say that the destruction of property of the Indians has been the main result of the action of German ships, although incidentally they have suffered by the state of war. In September an Indian and his wife were unfortunately killed in the firing which followed an attack upon the German Company's people by some natives from the interior. Indians have returned home in destitute condition, but we have no actual account of their numbers. Deeply as the loss of these British subjects is to be regretted, there is no principle of international law on which compensation can be demanded from the German Government."

Mr. Bradlaugh gave notice that in consequence of the exceeding gravity of the facts, and the answer which had just been given, he would at the earliest opportunity raise the question before the House.

Yesterday the same question being pressed by Mr. Maclean, Sir J. Fergusson said a memorial from British Indians in East Africa was received by telegraph on the 12th of October, praying Her Majesty's Government to take early measures to stay further loss upon their trade, and destruction to their property. It contained no request for compensation. There was no correspondence on the subject which could be usefully produced. Mr. Bradlaugh asked whether, in view of the admitted losses of the British subjects, the Government were making any inquiry to ascertain whether any course could be taken to protect them. Sir J. Fergusson replied that what Her Majesty's Government had done was to warn British Indian subjects on the coast of any apprehended events which might render their continuance there dangerous, but the Government could not possibly guard them against acts of war with which they had nothing to do. This flippant answer was justly resented by Mr. W. M. Arthur who asked whether the Government would pursue a similar course with regard to English residents in the Pacific. And all the answer that he got for this his pertinent and inconvenient question was loud cries of "order" from the chair.

As a most pregnant instance of the way in which Her Majesty's ministers shirk such obnoxious questions as are now being pressed by the Indian Congress both on the public at home and in India, the following answer of Sir J. Gorst would be read with interest. Last Monday, in answer to Mr. Bradlaugh, he said that no papers on the constitution and functions of the Legislative Councils in India could, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, be at present laid upon the table with advantage to the public service. Mr. Caine asked the Under-Secretary for India whether Mr. Josiah Whympere who was gazetted as a Companion of the Indian Empire in the recent distribution of honors was the Manager of a brewery company at Murree. If so, what were the services rendered by him to the Indian Empire which induced the Government of India to recommend him to the honor. And whether it was a fact that Sir Frederick Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief of the forces in India, a short time ago, recommended Mr. J. Gelson Gregson, lately Secretary to the Soldiers' Total Abstinence Society, for a similar honor, expressing the opinion that Mr. Gregson's great services had resulted in the increase of sobriety and good conduct among the soldiers stationed in India equal in its results to the addition of a regiment to the forces in India. Sir J. Gorst in answer to the first question said yes. He was recommended for honor by the Viceroy "on account of his public spirit in developing the local resources in the Rawal Pindi district and on account of his services to the military department; (2) the Secretary of State is not aware of any such recommendation having been made by Sir F. Roberts, nor has any such recommendation been made to the Secretary of State by the Viceroy."

Eastern politics must always attach very great importance in the movements of Russia, especially in Persia. The latter has now formally engaged not to grant any railway concessions without previously consulting Russia. The Shah is willing to concede to the Russians the right of navigation in all rivers flowing into the Caspian Sea, but is unwilling to accede to the other demands of Russia. The Shah leaves for Europe in the middle of April and will travel by way of Tabriz and Tiflis. He intends visiting St. Petersburg, Berlin, Paris, and London.

For the relief of the Heathen Chinese from devastations by flood and famine from which his country is suffering, besides that of the Lord Mayor, appeal for aid was preached from every pulpit here both of the Established as well as of the Nonconformist Church. Last Sunday week I was present in a chapel the pastor whereof is the President of the Baptist Union. The congregation was of a mixed character, and along with the contributions of the wealthy the poor servant girls' copper went in also for this China Relief Fund. The Chinkiang riots which we read of last Wednesday, strikes us therefore simply as inexplicable. Chinkiang is on the mouth of the Yang-tse-kiang and is a treaty port. A quarrel between a Chinaman and a Sikh policeman collected a mob who began by pulling down the police-station and breaking the windows of some dwelling-houses. Finding themselves unchallenged masters of the situation they sacked the British and American consulates, burning the former to the ground. The two Consuls and other foreign residents narrowly escaped, and reached a vessel lying in the Yang-tse-kiang. Chinkiang is the centre of a large port of the famine-stricken district; and Mr. Mansfield, the British Consul, who had to fly for his life, has been very active in collecting funds and in distributing relief.

Japan has turned a new leaf with a vengeance, it seems. The Mikado has granted a new constitution to the country more after the German than the English model, and it is framed so as to leave a considerable power in the hands of the Emperor. There is a House of Peers, in part hereditary, in part elective, in part nominated; and a Lower House of 300 members elected by ballot and paid for their services. "The Commons," we are told, "will be selected by the cities and prefectures from the highest taxpayers, but the election of such persons has to be approved by the Emperor. The nominative portion of the Upper House will consist of persons appointed by the Emperor for their erudition. The latter will be life members, while the elected members will sit for seven years only. The Lower House will have 300 members, elected by ballot. They will sit for four years, and there has to be one session annually of three months' duration." Nine years ago the Mikado promised a Parliament to complete the structure of popular liberties, and on the 11th of last month he was as good as his word.

Busy as the week has been in Parliament, I fear I have encroached too much on your space to give any lengthy account of the unraveling of the skein of that vile conspiracy the first intimation of which, it is nearly a month now, Sir Charles Russell gave before the Royal Commission. The country is rapidly veering round towards the Grand Old Man whose followers in the majority of cases have been returned in bye-elections. Last Friday there was a most stiff contest at Kennington, a metropolitan borough. The Conservatives hitherto held it by a majority of some 400 votes. Mr. Beaufoy the Liberal candidate not only wiped out the Conservative majority but carried 632 additional votes in the bargain to make his triumphant entry in the great Council Hall of the Nation. The cost for warming, ventilating, and lighting the Houses of Parliament in the coming year is estimated at £16,100 or nearly two and half lacs of our money. The warming which Her Majesty's ministers are now having at the hand of the Opposition, they would stipulate to stake their whole fortune to get rid of were it even fifty lacs.

A NEW MAHOMEDAN MISSIONARY IN EAST BENGAL.

It has been a busy time with us, of both creeds, Hindu and Muslim. The Hindus have had their Barni snan which came off on Sunday last, continuing until Monday. It takes place at a place some three miles from Narainjanj. In the intense desire of the Hindu members of the population of the town and the neighbouring places to have this auspicious and purifying bath, they would hear of no obstacles. Vying with one another, they all flocked early to the sacred spot. The strong instinct of old belief in the efficacy of a bath, at a certain locality, on a particular time of the day, is very powerful within the female heart. It is really surprising how, in the paramount concerns of the spiritual life, our men are still ruled by their female partners and relatives.

While our Hindu fellow subjects were thus engaged in a semi-religious act, the Mahomedan community has been stirred by the preaching of a new missionary. Moulvi Husain Ali of Patna belongs to a new class of preachers. Besides his acquaintance with his native Oordoo and the Mahomedan classical tongues, he knows English and is versed in the secular knowledge of the times. In fact, he chiefly addresses the younger generation brought up in our schools and colleges. He seems well fitted for the rôle he has adopted--that of rousing his hearers to a sense of their higher responsibilities. He is trying to infuse the spirit of religion among the English-educated Mahomedan youth. After lecturing in various parts of India--at Lahore, Lucknow, Monghyr, Pubna, Rungpore and other places, he is now in our midst on this self-imposed mission. On Sunday last, he delivered an excellent lecture in Oordoo on "The Past and Present Condition of the Mussalmans." I need not go into details. He treated his subject from every point of view. The contrast he presented between a Mussalman of the days of the Early Khaliphate and a follower of the Prophet of the 19th century, was most striking. At this time, the solid virtues of the former were nowhere to be found; while the mode of life abhorrent to a Moslem of those days was the very existence of the latter. The lecturer concluded with an appeal to the parents and guardians of students to make every endeavour to give their children and wards a sound and liberal education,—not only in Persian and Oordoo, but also in English. He begged them to preserve the boys from those temptations which have been the wreck and ruin of many a Mahomedan youth. For corrupt social surroundings, in the midst of which our children are bred up, he held the guardians directly responsible. I sincerely hope that this lecture will bear fruit.

The weather had been very hot, specially for the last few days. We had had no rain. As I am writing however I find the sky becoming cloudy and small drops of grateful rain falling. We may have storm as there are indications all round. The health of the town was not very satisfactory. There have been some cases of cholera in some of the quarters, and it is not to be wondered at.

ALPHA.

Dacca, 9th April.

SALE OF LIQUOR WITHOUT LICENSE.

(Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Trevelyan.)

BOISTUB CHURN NAWN & ORS. (Plaintiffs.)
v. WOOMA CHURN SEN. (Defendant.)

This was a suit brought by Boistub Churn Nawn and Co., of China Bazaar, against the defendant (who carried on business at Meerut), to recover a certain sum of money alleged to be due for a quantity of beer and porter sold and delivered to the defendant. The plaintiffs held no license under the Bengal Excise Act for the sale of fermented liquors.

The defendant, among other matters, pleaded that the contract was void and contrary to the terms of section 23 of the Contract Act, in so far as the plaintiffs had sold the goods without having obtained a license under the Bengal Excise Act of 1878, and that therefore the price of the goods could not be recovered. Section 23 of the Contract Act states that "the consideration or object of an agreement is lawful, unless (1) it is forbidden by law; or (2) is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law; or (4) the Court regards it as opposed to public policy. In each of these cases the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful. Every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful, is void."

The Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court held that the contention raised by the defendant was sound, that the Excise Act was framed chiefly in the interests of the public, and that the sale by the plaintiffs, having been one made without a license, was contrary to law, and the contract could not therefore be recovered on. The learned Judge therefore dismissed the suit, contingent on the opinion of the High Court, on, among other questions, the question whether the contract was void, having regard to the provisions of the Bengal Excise Act, Act VII of 1878?

Mr. Acworth for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Hill and Mr. O'Kinealy for the Defendant.

Wilson, J. (Trevelyan, J., concurring): The principal question which has been raised before us in the reference is whether a contract for the sale of fermented liquors by a person who has not obtained a license under Bengal Act VII of 1878 is illegal, and therefore void.

The sections bearing upon the matter are these: Section 4 has defined exciseable articles as including spirituous and fermented liquors. Section 11 says that no person shall sell any exciseable article without a license from the Collector. Section 53 says, whoever manufactures or sells any exciseable article without a license shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 500 for every such manufacture or sale, and then come the provisoes, with the last of which I shall deal presently.

A number of cases have been cited to us from the English Courts upon the question, in what cases and under what statutes the imposition of a penalty is to be construed as intended to prohibit the act to which the section refers; and in what cases that penalty should be regarded as only a means for protecting the revenue. Two tests have been applied in many of the cases. First, in a number of cases it has been said, and the view has been acted upon, that in an Act intended only for the raising of revenue and the protection of that revenue, a clause imposing a penalty may well be construed, not as prohibiting a transaction in such a sense as to make it illegal and void, but as providing a means of enforcing the liability of the person on whom the penalty is imposed.

If that test be applied in the present case, it seems to me that the conclusion at which the Judge of the Small Cause Court has arrived is correct; because it seems to me clear that the Act with which we are dealing is not, and was never intended to be, a mere Act for the protection of the revenue, but that it is an Act having other objects of public policy in view as well. In the first place, we should be shutting our eyes to what is a matter of common knowledge, that in this country as well as in England for many years past, from a period long before this Act was passed, men have never supposed that the regulation of the traffic in intoxicating liquors is to be dealt with upon considerations of revenue alone. In the second place, when we turn to the Act itself, I think the same thing is apparent from its express language, in which respect it is unlike the Act of the George IV. chapter 51 under which several other cases cited to us were decided, particularly the case of Smith v. Mawhard. The preamble of the Act is a good deal wider than if the object were merely the protection of the revenue; it is this—"whereas it is expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the manufacture, sale, and possession of exciseable articles," and there is another object, "the collection of the revenue derived therefrom," and as we go through the Act, we find that these two objects are kept, side by side, in view to the regulation of the drink traffic in the interests of the public, and the protection of the revenue. This is particularly apparent from certain Sections in the Act. Section 14 was referred to, and it is not without weight. The 29th Section is an important section, because it shows that a license is to be cancelled, not only on grounds affecting the revenue, but on grounds affecting the character of the holder, showing, I think, clearly, that in that section, at any rate, the legislature had in view public morals, as well as the protection of the revenue.

Then section 62 has been referred to, and I think rightly referred to, because it shows that a difference is made between the holding the same article for a purpose connected, and for a purpose not connected with the traffic in intoxicating drinks. Then section 67 expressly deals with cases of misconduct on the part of a person holding a license, and the permission of misconduct by such a person of a character directly connected with public morals, and not with the receipt of revenue. And, again, section 80 is another special provision relating to the case of cantonments. The object of Section 80, I apprehend, can be nothing but the securing of the discipline, the morals, and good conduct of the troops in cantonments. The consequence, then, to my mind is that, both on general principles and the terms of the Act itself, this Act cannot be said to be a mere revenue Act, but it is an Act, having, no doubt, the protection of the revenue in view, but having in view also important objects of public policy. Another test has been applied in various cases in order to determine whether the penalty imposed by an Act was intended to create a prohibition so as to invalidate a specific act of dealing in violation of the law in which the penalty is to be found; and that is to see whether the penalty is imposed in general terms for the carrying on of a trade, or for the omission of some preliminaries which the law imposes to the opening of a trade, or some such general purpose as that, or whether the penalty is imposed on each specific act of dealing. In the latter class of cases the Courts have been prone to construe the penalty as creating a prohibition, and therefore vitiating each transaction.

If that test be applied in this case, it is clear that the penalty is imposed on each specific act. Section 53 of the Act imposes, for selling an exciseable article without a license, a fine of so many rupees for every such sale. Thus what the legislature had in view was not merely the general carrying on of the trade of a trader, but every specific act of sale. This is the more apparent from some of the provisoes which follow the general words in that section. The 3rd proviso says that "nothing contained in the first clause of this section applies to the sale of any imported spirituous or fermented liquors purchased by any person for his private use, and so disposed of upon such person quitting a station or after his decease." That proviso shows that, in the view of the framer of the section, if it had not been for the proviso, any officer who, on being ordered from one station to another in Bengal, sold his stock of wine to his successor, or to anybody else, would be liable to the penalty if he did so without having a license; and that if the executive or any gentleman living in Calcutta were to sell his stock of wine, without taking out a license, he would, but for the proviso, be liable to a penalty. All this shows that the thing which the Legislature had in view was any act of sale; and that, according to the authorities, is strong evidence to show that the penalty is imposed with the view of prohibition.

The result then is, that, according to the authorities, this case falls within the class of those in which the penalty is imposed for the purpose of prohibition, and not of those in which it is imposed solely for the benefit of the revenue. Several cases decided in the Indian Courts have been cited, but they do not throw a very strong light upon this case. They related not to contracts of sale, but contracts of a different character. The result is that, in my opinion, we ought to answer the fourth question referred to us in the affirmative, and as that disposes of the whole case it is unnecessary to answer any of the others.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Counsel for the Delicate.—Those to whom seasons of changeable temperatures are protracted periods of trial should seek the earliest opportunity of removing all obstacles to good health. This cooling Ointment, perseveringly rubbed upon the throat and chest. Quinsey, relaxed tonsils, sore throat, swollen glands, ordinary catarrh, and bronchitis, usually prevailing at this season, may be arrested as soon as discovered, and every symptom banished by Holloway's simple and effective treatment. This Ointment and Pills are highly commended for the facility with which they successfully conquer influenza; they allay in an incredibly short time the distressing fever and teasing cough.

FOR SALE

Price	Post free Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt	Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound	Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,

BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,Formerly Minister to the lateNAWAB FARIDOON JAH BAHADOOR,(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa.)Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman. The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. C. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlightening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river: [Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye: [Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course. — [Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting: [Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious—he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large lustrous eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course, some few have crept in. The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas

or 6 copies for a Rupee.

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books, &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

Are strongly recommended to try our Flowery Orange Pekoe with Rose like Aroma, @ Rs. 2 per lb.

T. HILL & CO.,

Adjoining Corinthian Theatre,

Calcutta.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "MYSORE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 12th instant.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessel should be sent to the Company's Godown at Jungmannath Ghat not later than Thursday the 11th idem.

CACHAR LINE

For particular of the sailings of this line please apply to the undersigned.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, and Debrooghur on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A tri weekly service is maintained between Naraingunge and Fenchougunge for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,

Agents

1-3, Chive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

BEETHAM'S
GLYCERINE-AND-CUCUMBER

For INDIA and HOT CLIMATES is a most valuable
IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and PREVENTS the HOTTEST WEATHER, Removes and prevents all Eruptions, Freckles, and all skin diseases, and RENEWES the SKIN DELICATELY, leaving it soft and WHITE.

It entirely prevents it from becoming dry and cracked, and preserves the COMPLEXION from the ravaging effects of the SUN and WIND more effectively than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BITES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For anointing that soft velvety feeling to the skin this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers: M. BEETHAM & SON Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

LITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has been out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages.
For Children and the aged they are precious.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For Disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,
Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.) LONDON.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMOEOPATHIC PHARMACY.
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMOEOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMOEOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, showing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch-maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fust, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Locketts, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmsmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Samukula, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' SANITARY COMPOUNDS

In the various shapes of

Liquid, Powder, Soap and Ointment

are invaluable in the Indian climate.

They are perfectly harmless, non-poisonous, and non-irritant.

They have proved efficacious in skin diseases. They cure wounds and ulcers. Even Lepers have found them valuable.

To the rich and the poor, the healthy and the sick, they are alike welcome.

They destroy the virus or contagion of small-pox, measles, typhus and typhoid fevers.

They cleanse your homes and clothes and purify the air. They keep your body clean, teeth strong and skin pure. Your bed free from bugs, your drains inodorous, and closets free from bad smells.

They may be used with safety and with happy results in sick-room, kitchen, and every other part of a house.

Preparing for the Press

THE

FALL OF MANDALAY,

BY

ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime Subscribers may register their names with the Publishers

Messrs. PETTIT & Co.,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

11, Old Court House Street;

or Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

29SA, Upper Circular Road,

CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,

London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene.

Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION

CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,—

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly 7
Quarterly 4
Monthly Re. 1-6
Single or sample Copy, 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. }

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1889.

} No. 370

CONTEMPORARY SONNETS.

A BREATHING-SPACE.

A BREATHING-SPACE! We have a respite still.
The storm is gathering, and the clouds of war,
Big with their deep-voiced thunder, growl afar
Portending ruin yet with palsied will,
As spell-bound dreamers, we are slumbering still,
Now hot, now cold, like ague: or, with jar
Irate of rancorous faction, haste to mar
The slow great work of our forefathers' skill.
O shame! We cannot, if we will, come down
From our high place; or leave the abandoned wave
To rule of others; nor ourselves disown;
The fall of monarchs lies too near their grave.
For life, for safety, arm ye then, be bold!
The envious nations thirst for England's gold.

"NAI MA TOUS" -

WHEN the Athenian orator of yore
Would lift his country to its earlier height,
By Marathon and Salamis he swore,
And pointed to their glories full in sight.
So by Trafalgar, and by Waterloo,
Let us too swear, we will not yield one inch
For sloth, or weakness. We have work to do
Greater with greater empire. Shall we flinch
Degenerate? Nay, with strong embattled host
Hold we our land, with fleets our subject seas!
Mistrust the very breakers round our coast
Lest they be leagued to admit our enemies!
We have in us the blood of Nelson's men
Has it grown cold? 'Twas molten lava then.

A. G. B.

The Spectator.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE play upon words is not the most reputable vivacious utterance, and many masters of literature, like Addison and Johnson, have specially heaped their contempt on it. It is mere fastidiousness, however, and many more masters have shown their appreciation of the verbal bon mot. Some of them have not been ashamed to perpetrate it. Douglas Jerrold occasionally allowed himself the dissipation. Charles Lamb was fond of it. The elder Hood was a master in the line. Hood was an inveterate sinner. Gilbert Abecket, who was as good a hand at an eloquent leading article in the Times as a rollicking ballad in Punch, published an elaborate quizziology of the laws of the country made up, for the most part, of verbal quibbling. Under the circumstances, an Indian schoolmaster need not forfeit caste for perpetrating a pun. The truth is that there are puns and puns, and a good pun is better than an indifferent witticism of the higher order. The Calcutta dons, therefore, may well be proud of a lucky hit, even in the verbal line.

THE schoolmasters' wrangle in their Senate House, on Saturday last, over the appointment of Registrar, was enlivened by some plain speaking and at least one joke. The Patron Saint of the schoolmasters, Sir Alfred Croft, gave the Reverend retired Professor, Mr. Lal Behari Day, a bit of his mind, while Professor Rowe gave the coup de grâce to his Eminentus brother's candidature by the pithy and pregnant remark—
"One hour of Tawney was worth more than a whole Day."

MR. Tawney's appointment is satisfactory on many grounds. Mr. Tawney, after all, only comes back to his own. Then, a wellknown scholar and University administrator replaces a man of proved incompetence—the sham and shame of the Education Department. The spell of family interest is broken. The fortunate son-in-law is relegated to his original obscurity. The waxen wings of Icarus have dropped from the heat and perspiration of a single term. We congratulate the Fellows on their recovery, and the whole University on its relief.

ORIGINAL obscurity, we say advisedly, for we dare not think of deserved insignificance. That would give the full measure of relief to the aggrieved department, but it is now out of the question. Therein the better half is concerned. The same ruin would engulf fair and foul, innocent and innocent, and we should be constrained to cry with poor Lord Ullin,
"My daughter! Oh my daughter!"

OUR contemporary of the Indian Daily News is lucky in nomenclology. For a long period, its management has been entrusted to illustrious names. A great Irish name has just supplanted a heroic Scotch clan.

IN the first general election under the new Local Government Act, two ladies have, not without severe contest, been elected, namely, Lady Sandhurst and Miss Cobden. The defeated candidate in the Brixton division, Mr. C. Beresford Hope, after taking counsel with his lawyers, carried the contest to the law courts. He moved the Queen's Bench to set aside Lady Sandhurst's election as against law, on the ground of her sex. The question of woman's eligibility was purposely left undecided by Parliament, and this gave the lawyers great scope for their ingenuity. At last, Justices Baron Huddleston and Sir James Fitz James Stephen have decided women not admissible. The horrid men! This decision will be the occasion, doubtless, for a great demonstration and agitation in favour of woman's Rights.

CUTE is Reis & Rayyet for imagining from the Phoenix's account that Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace had been interviewed at Karachi by our contemporary. And for understanding our error and yet having no intention of enlightening us and, indeed, chuckling over our stupidity, the Phoenix is, of course, simplicity itself, to say nothing of the refined Sindhian courtesy. Oh cruel man, pitiless as the sands of thine own Deserts! Wilt thou let us burst in ignorance? Thy Beloochee neighbours would have been kinder to a lapse that did not imply moral perversion and proceeded from no mischievousness.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

HERE, culled from an English paper, is a pretty LESSON IN ARITHMETIC.

"Where do you live, my little maid?"

"I live right here, at No. 4."

"Why, how is that, my little maid,
For 22 is on the door?"

"The number sir, is number 4."

She slowly said it o'er and o'er:

"Our teacher says, and she should know,
That 2 and 2 are always 4."

Native Opinion is prompt to a fault. "Now that the time of the meeting of the Congress is fast approaching," our contemporary makes some suggestions towards the working and stability of the movement. What, are we not in the middle of April and is not the Congress to take place at the end of December next? Or, are they going to have two or three sessions in the year? They must have strange notions of things down in the West, when they regard a meeting at the far end of the year as already "fast approaching."

CAPTAIN John Page, of the ship Oceanic, reports, as a phenomenon, that on the 7th March, in lat. 1-11 S., long. 66-4 E., at 12-30 A.M., during a calm, a small black cloud rose up from the N. E., and when overhead, poured a heavy shower of hailstones, some of a good size. And the Bombay papers make room for the interesting news. One would suppose Captain Page had seen the irrepressible sea serpent.

WE read that the wellknown aeronaut Baldwin has gone to Australia on his parachute business, but his prospect in the Colony are not hopeful. A greater showman is in possession of the field. He is an American, calling himself Professor Bartholomew, who ascends 3,000 feet, and then casts himself into space with a parachute to which a trapeze is attached. On this trapeze he performs all sorts of gymnastic feats as he descends earthwards, and even hangs suspended by his feet. There is nothing extraordinary in a parachutist who is a gymnast going through these exercises. But so long as balloonists are not able to descend to the spot whence they ascend, these gymnastics high in the upper air will be lost to the spectators.

IN the Mysore Chief Court, Mr. Justice Plumer has fined a man, of the name of Lukanna, Rs. 20, for contempt of Court, for seeking to influence the Court by getting a third party to write a letter to the Judges, in a particular case soliciting that it be decided in his favour.

ON the 29th March, the P. & O. Co.'s mail steamer Oriental conveyed home from India a large number of passengers, amongst them being the Earl of Scarborough, Earl of Ancan, Mr. A. V. Freere, solicitor, Sir Samuel and Lady Baker, the Hon. Dudley Leigh, Baron MacGurgon, Lieut-Col. S. Babington, Superintendent of Police, Poona, Colonel Henry Fraser of Hyderabad, and Mr. A. Cotterell Fupp, Accountant General, Allahabad.

THE House of Commons has adjourned for the Easter recess, to re-assemble on the 29th.

SIR James Fergusson, from his place in Parliament, has denied that Persia has ceded Kelat-i Nadir to Russia.

THE Secretary of State has decided adversely to Mr. Crawford. The Commission found him not guilty of corruption, but guilty of indebtedness. Lord Cross pronounces him disqualified for public service and has ordered the removal of his name from the list of the Civil Service. Mr. Beames is more fortunate.

THE Calcutta Review under the editorship of the civilian Mr. Phillips earned the doubtful honor of a question in Parliament, and Sir John Gorst undertook to direct the attention of Lord Lansdowne to the political character of the publication.

THE Home Budget was presented to Parliament on the 15th. The last year closed with a surplus of £2,700,000 and a reduction of national debt to the amount of £7,500,000. The surplus, however, is swallowed up by the surrender of local taxation and the increased naval outlay. The revenue for the present year is estimated at £85,000,000 and the expenditure at £86,966,000. The increase in expenditure is stated to be due to increased army and navy estimates. The total sum, we read in the Army and Navy Gazette, provided for the purposes of the Army is £17,335,800 for 1889-90, against £16,700,300 for the year just closed. The number provided for in 1888-90 was 149,667. The present year's establishment is given at 152,282. It is intended to make up the deficit and also to shew a surplus of £180,000, by using £1,000,000 out of £1,500,000 saved by the conversion of consols, by increasing the death duties one per cent. on estates over £10,000 in value, and by raising the duty on beer by one-fourteenth of a penny per gallon. Mr. Goschen cannot find his way to the abolition of the duty on silver plate to the relief of the Indian trade. A bill will shortly be introduced dealing with the light gold coinage.

THE German Navy Bill has passed into law. By it, the Navy will have its own Admiral-in-Chief as the Army has its General-in-Chief, the Emperor having the supreme command of both branches. The Emperor himself was for the change, and Prince Bismarck in person supported the proposal in the Reichstag. The Navy is to be divided into two naval battalions, instead of one, and quartered at Kiel and Wilhelmshaven, consisting of four companies each.

THE American President has also been empowered in this behalf. He has authority, by the United States Naval Appropriation Act, to construct one armoured steel cruising monitor of not less than 3,000 tons displacement, with engines of not less than 7,500 horse-power and a maximum speed of not less than 17 knots; a sister-ship to the Tesaurus, of not less dimensions than that vessel, of not less than 21 knots speed, and a coal endurance of not less than 15 days at 10 knots, the vessel to be armed with two pneumatic guns of not less than 15 in. calibre; and two shell cruisers or gun boats of from 800 to 1,200 tons displacement, and one armoured ram for coast defence. The new Secretary of the Navy is Benjamin F. Tracy, who is described by the New York Army and Navy Journal "to be an honest man, a high-minded and honourable gentleman, with whom the best elements in the service will find themselves in full sympathy."

AT the present moment, a Committee, under the Chairmanship of Sir S. Northcote, M. P., are taking evidence on the subject of the rations supplied to the troops at home. Is it not time for a Soldiers' Dietary Committee here?

THERE seems to be no foundation for the report so extensively circulated when the mail which reached us on Thursday left London, that the Duke of Cambridge intended to resign his position as head of the Army.

THE Army and Navy Gazette of March 23, thus summarises the news from Burma:

"Affairs in Burmah are still in a disturbed condition. The Chin Field Force is blocked up among the mountains, and reports from the front state that the troops are suffering great hardships. The expedition started too late for such a long and hazardous campaign. The Upper Province is very unsettled. Several dacoity raids are reported from Myingay, and much loss of life and property has been occasioned. In the Lopa district two small columns, made up from the Rifle Brigade and the 4th Battalion this time, the 1st Battalion having returned to India after a trying experience, are in the field, and rendering excellent service, as so good a battalion is bound to do. Near Magun some Bengali Infantry have had a sharp encounter with a large dacoit band. Further disturbances are also expected at Gungaw, and Ottama, the most formidable of the dacoit chiefs, is in the field, and reported to be marching in that direction with his followers."

ON the advice of its law officers, the Madras Government has ruled that a receipt for sums above twenty rupees must be stamped before or at the time of execution, and that the adhesion of an one anna stamp afterwards will not make the receipt a legal or a valid document. A duplicate receipt is equally liable to stamp duty, but the department of the administration requiring it, must furnish the additional stamp. For purposes of record, certified copies of original receipts will do.

Is the Government of India of the same opinion? Does Sir Charles Paul construe the Stamp Act in that fashion? Whatever it be, in the present tightness of Indian finance, Madras may be congratulated on having tumbled upon a slight additional source of income. When a receipt is unstamped at the time of execution, a prosecution will lie.

THE late Mr. White, President of the Anglo-Indian and Eurasian Association, Madras, left behind him property valued at Rs. 39,000. In December last, he made a will and appointed the Official Trustee his executor. That functionary, however, declined to act, and the Administrator-General asked the widow to administer the estate. The Madras High Court, on application, granted her letters of administration. In the meantime, Mrs. Ballard, sister of the deceased, has filed a caveat contesting the validity of the will.

THE Deputy Collector at Madras Mr. Thomas Pritchard, has committed suicide by cutting his throat.

THE Hyderabad-Oomerkhot Railway has been sanctioned.

It is said that the Government have rejected as impracticable the proposal to establish a pigeon post between the Andamans and Burma.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Northern Bengal State Railway has experienced one of the saddest accidents. On the 15th, at Madhonagpur, a running train was blown off a bridge—an open one—and precipitated into the river. There were very few first and second class passengers. The third was fairly full chiefly of coolies and many of these were either dead or injured. The Railway report as yet gives the figure of the dead at less than half a dozen and the injured at only four dozens. We doubt not, Government will call for a full report of the accident and publish the same for general information. Horrible rumours are afloat in native society.

MR. PERCIVAL SPENCER has not yet ceased to be the wonder in Calcutta. On Thursday, he drew another crowd. He made another balloon ascent—from the Gas Works grounds at Narkaldanga. It was not a single flight. He had as his companion Lieutenant H. J. Cunningham, of the Royal Canadians. The Lieutenant is an amateur balloonist himself, having voyaged in the air before. He utilised the present occasion for scientific observations. The balloon bore no name but was the largest used by Mr. Spencer, being of 24,000 cubic feet capacity. It rose rapidly, took a northerly direction, then receded to the south and again sailed to the north-east towards Dum Dum and Baraset. The aeronauts started on their voyage a little after 5 in the evening and, in an hour and a half, they had alighted at the village of Lakhifooh, two miles from Baraset.

ONE Anil Chandra Banerji makes this desperate attempt to be famous in a letter to a Calcutta paper.

"If you kindly publish the following few lines in your widely circulated paper for Mr. Percival Spencer's information, I shall be heartily thankful to you. To convince the world that there are natives of India who are no less daring than other people in the world, I wish to undertake the daring task of ascending in a balloon and descending with the parachute. With this intention, I propose to Mr. Spencer that if he kindly allows me to take my aerial flight by his balloon, I shall be greatly obliged, and the feat will be very interesting to the public, as well as a matter of glory for the Indians that a Bengali young man who has not yet numbered twenty years, will play such an adventurous part. In conclusion I wish to say that I will perform the feat without any pecuniary consideration."

That is cool, to be sure. Master Banerji has probably nothing more substantial to give but his thanks to a professional man for the use of his costly apparatus. Will he lend his chudder to Mr. Spencer to go to Rangoon with? He thinks his own pecuniary unselfishness a sufficient obligation on other men, including showmen and tradesmen, to go out of their way to make substantial pecuniary and other sacrifices to satisfy his crazy crave for notoriety—to help him in making himself famous or ridiculous. For he evidently has no adequate conception of the adventure for which he is so lightly ready. At the eleventh hour, his nerve might fail him. Ten to one, he would perish in the attempt, from his flabby Dal bhat muscle being unequal to the strain. He is a representative man, however. Like too many of our writers and speakers, he talks as if the whole world is interested in the training of the Bengali race. He thinks everybody is bound to assist him in his queer enterprise at his call, without knowing who he is, or estimating his chances. He has no idea that Mr. Spencer or any other person might be landed in a criminal jail for taking him too easily at his word.

It has been found in America that the refuse of sugarcane is capable of turning out excellent white paper of very fine quality. In this country, it is not wasted but burnt for the boiling of the juice. But how many resources are wasted by us in pure ignorance! A moderate share of European science and American energy would have made India one of the richest countries, if not the richest, in the world. If the foreigners who rule it had not themselves tasted of the Lotos of the Land, they would, in a decade or two, raise a magnificent revenue, by the prosecution of a vigorous policy of agricultural and manufacturing improvement. Unfortunately, those who come out do not stay and feel no permanent stake in the country, and too easily succumb to the prevailing relaxation and are content with a hand to mouth routine, while the magnates at Home—in the governing country—are nervously afraid of causing any possible alarm to the vested interests of British Commerce.

Native Opinion says:

"By the last Australian mail Surgeon Major K. R. Kutikar returns hale (sic) and hearty (sic) from his Australian trip. The object of this trip is well known and requires no repetition. Where-ever he went he was well received and was almost the lion of the day."

Now that, in consequence of repeated invasions of the Asiatic Indians, England has been exhausted as a field for lion-making of interesting tawny or swarthy strangers, it is satisfactory to learn that a new region has been opened in a different direction. Why don't our Biboos—the sons of Mammon and Behal in particular—sail thither. If they cannot all be lions, they have the chance of being wolves and jackals. Our town corporators might go there with advantage to themselves and their country and view the spectacle of a wondrous progress in the course of a generation or so. We wish our extreme radicals and visionaries might be packed off to the Southern Sea. They would probably be disabused of their sentimental faith in parliamentary government of a single Chamber, as Lord Sherbrooke we suspect was, as Attorney General of New South Wales. We wonder our Surrender Not has not yet gone on pilgrimage to the goahead Land of Liberty consecrated by the bones of Barrington and other congenial spirits.

THE Indian Mirror has been much exercised by the neglect of its prophet in his own country. The first stone indeed was cast by Mr Skime, but as a well-born and well-bred and withal accomplished member of the Civil Service, he is of course the impersonation of hauteur and insolence in Young Indian slang, an Anglo-Indian. But that that great appreciator of goahead native excellence and accomplishments, the experienced editor of the Indian Daily News should follow suit, is enough to break the tender heart of his Aryan brother. The said experienced editor actually sees no culture in native society. This is simply ignoring the obvious. This in the resplendent presence of Su No Render! As if the man of the Mirror is a man of the moon mooney. In the bitterness of soul, the native editor complains. His fury draws out of him a momentary spark of very near vivacity when he begins with the remark—"Our contemporary of the Indian Daily News has made a discovery." That sarcasm is as old as the hills, and is here, besides, not apropos, but it is a great thing to the lugubrious journal of the leaden eye, and may serve to preserve its poor habitual readers for another term from committing filo de se. The Mirror continues:

"In his issue of the 12th instant, he speaks of the 'almost general absence' of culture, 'even in the better classes of native society,' and says that, 'as a rule, culture is not a national feature.' We did not expect this dogmatic assertion from our experienced contemporary, without even an attempt to define what is understood by him by the word 'culture.'"

That is somewhat of a departure from the usual language of the editor. Is the famous stone of Blarney removed to the temple of Jagannath, and has he been secretly kissing it there? Instead of protest against the horrid Anglo-Indian, we have quite a touch of soft sawder and human nature in the whining compliment to "our experienced contemporary." Before the close of the sentence, however, the writer recovers himself and the attorney-editor enters his caveat. The Indian Daily News has committed the unpardonable silliness of not attempting, for the benefit of its Aryan brother, to define the word culture! There! we have Dryasdust in all his glory!

The Anglo-Indian is not to be charmed by a compliment, however. The relentless man's response to the friendly, if awkward, advances of the Mirror is crushing. He metaphorically pulls his victim by the ear in almost the formula of a formidable Doctor of the 18th century, saying

"We cannot hold ourselves responsible for any lack of understanding on the part of our contemporary."

THE following paragraph is on too important a subject to be withheld. We give it for what it may be worth :—

"The Hospital states that an unexpected testimony to the value of inoculation comes from South Africa. Mr. G. A. Farini, the explorer of the Kalahari desert, had some oxen bitten by poisonous snakes, and one of his bushmen, it is said, cured them by making incisions round the bite, and rubbing into these a powder made from the dried poison-sacs of other snakes. In a few hours the inflammation caused by the bite disappeared, and the oxen were quite well. A few days afterwards the bushman himself was bitten. He at once inoculated himself in a similar way with the powder, and having extracted from the wound the fangs of the snake that had bitten him, he drank a drop of poison from the virus sac. He immediately fell into a stupor that lasted some hours. At first the swelling of the wound increased, but it soon subsided. Next morning he inoculated himself again. By the evening of that day the swelling had disappeared, and two days after he was as well as ever. The favourite antidote is a little lizard of very deadly powers, called N'auboo, which is so valued that a native will give an ox for the dead body of one, to dry and reduce to powder for this purpose: but if he had no N'auboo, he uses the poison of any snake he can get."

If the above experiments may be relied upon, they are very important. They prove something more than the value of inoculation. It is a strange proof of the perversity of the doctors that they fail to recognise the true drift of Mr. Farini's researches. His experiments clearly make for Homœopathy. They are an unexpected testimony to the truth of the strange generalization upon which the learned German chemist and investigator of the physiologic action of drugs stumbled, namely, Similia similibus curantur. But whatever their relation to any theory of medicine, they are too interesting to be passed over. We trust our Indian men of science will pursue the inquiry and test Mr. Farini's assertions. We are glad to learn that there are a few still engaged in researches into snake-poison. Here is an account of the latest :—

"The experiment now being made by the present Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, Dr. Waddell, as to whether a snake's poison will affect itself, or other poisonous snakes, clearly shows that there is no agreement of opinion among authorities on the point which he has taken up. Professor Weir Mitchell, an American specialist, was led to the conclusion that one rattlesnake can poison another; whereas Dr. Vincent Richards has expressed himself satisfied that a cobra cannot kill a cobra, though he has often seen his specimens fight savagely. Dr. Fayrer was of the same opinion, though not clear as to whether a cobra would be able to destroy a daboia, for instance, or a krait. These conclusions, however, would appear to have been arrived at by the way, and we do not know that any of the authorities mentioned ever carried out such careful experiments with the express purpose of determining the point as Dr. Waddell has done. The latter took nine newly caught cobras which were inoculated with cobra venom, the efficacy of which was proved in each case by simultaneous experiments on fowls, which died almost immediately. But in no case did the cobras suffer; and when they were eventually killed, several days afterwards, the post mortem showed no signs of the poison having had the least effect. But when the venomous snakes are pitted against one another, the results become more obscure. For instance, the cobra poison is apparently inoperative on the daboia and seemingly on the krait, but deadly to the ordinary viper; neither krait nor daboia can harm the cobra; and it is doubtful if the daboia, in spite of its huge fangs, can hurt the krait. But, on the other hand, there is no doubt whatever about the potency of cobra poison upon non-poisonous snakes. Dr. Waddell records fifteen experiments made upon the latter, and in every case but one, death followed upon injection in times varying from a few minutes up to two or three days. The case, therefore, seems to be made out that poisonous snakes do possess immunity from the effects of their own poison, and to a great extent from that of the poison of other venomous species, which the non-poisonous varieties of the same race do not share. What is the reason? Dr. Waddell propounds the theory that it is because the immunity is an acquired condition—a toleration to the venom established through imbibition of small quantities of the venom in the modified or attenuated form which the venom assumes when mixed with salivary and gastric juices and absorbed through the alimentary canal—in other words, that the snake inoculates itself against the consequences of its own virus. And if the snake, why not the man; for that is the conclusion evidently to which Dr. Waddell means to work up. Experience alone can prove whether some sort of protection can be devised; and, if science can answer that question in the affirmative, whether it would be ever worth men's while to undergo inoculation in order to be "immune to" the remote risks of snake-bite."

Here, too, the direction of scientific investigation is the same. Dimly but unmistakably it points Homœopathywards. Be that as it may, the experiments are most valuable, and Dr. Waddell is entitled to the thanks of the public and of men of science for his devotion to a difficult and dangerous line of work. Whatever may be the value of his theory, he has, by no little patience and risk, succeeded in establishing certain valuable truths on the subject. We think we now approach land. We are hopeful of the application of these facts to the successful treatment of cases of snake-poisoning.

Dans l'adversité de nos meilleurs amis, nous trouvons toujours quelque chose qui ne nous déplaît pas.

As Rochefoucault his maxims drew

From nature, I believe them true :

They argue no corrupted mind

In him : the fault is in mankind.

This maxim more than all the rest

Is thought too base for human breast :

"In all distresses of our friends,

We first consult our private ends ;

While nature, kindly bent to ease us,

Points out some circumstance to please us."

If such is the weakness of human nature even in respect of the distresses of friends, what must be its positive malignity in the case of others! This reflection has been forced on us by the attitude of the British press on the discomfiture of one of themselves in the Irish State Trial by Special Commission. There is no love lost between the Times and its brethren, evidently, and there is no pretence to sympathy for it in its hour of trouble. They are all crowing from their dung-hills down on the wounded and fallen eagle. They are virtuously cruel in their reproaches to the Times for its stupidity. The Times has been guilty of having been taken in, and there is no expiation for it in this world or the next. Had this sort of nonsense been confined to the baser organs of British Radicalism, we should not have wondered: they have a superstitious horror of, and perhaps an old grudge against, the leading journal. But the pity of it is that respectable papers, the organs of educated thought, have degraded themselves in this matter. Some of them have had their trials too, but they now talk in supreme unconsciousness of any misfortune in the past or unfortunate possibility in the future. "No one can contend for a single moment," gravely remarks the Daily Telegraph, "that even the most ordinary precautions were adopted, or the slightest knowledge of the world evinced, in the dealings which our contemporary held with dangerous persons called into activity by its action"; that the paper gave itself "to youthful enthusiasts, raw in political life, to rash patriots incapable of prudence; and to hungry adventurers who joyously supplied them with ridiculous forgeries." According to the respectable Daily News:—"The Times endeavoured to destroy Mr. Parnell. Mr. Parnell has destroyed the Times. . . . The smallest of provincial organs is utterly incapable of engaging in the abominable traffic which has led the Times into such abysmal depths * * *." The saintly Pall Mall Gazette, whose editor, for all his virtue and wisdom, was not long since sent to jail, says the paper "is no longer the old Times, an honest embodiment of the prejudices and instincts of the average Englishman, that we have to do with now, but rather with a kind of possessed Times. An evil spirit has entered into the leading journal, rendering it incapable even of those human and generous instincts which are characteristic of our race."

This is the style in which the dry tree chuckles over the burning of the faggot!

No content with the present calamity, these relentless brethren are unearthing the past for any incident to the Times' discredit. Truth has gone back to the last century for material to point a moral against the humbled contemporary. It sent agents to disturb the dust of the British Museum and they have been lucky in discovering some scandal in the—family history of the victim. It is thus related :—

"It appears that on Saturday, February 13, 1796, it published, as coming from the reputations of L'Eclair, a Paris journal which then enjoyed the reputation of being usually well informed, the text, in French, of a treaty of peace alleged to have been entered into between the French Republic and the Emperor of Austria. The news was so good and so unexpected that all the Funds rose at a bound, and the Stock Exchange temporarily rejoiced. This was despite the fact that the previous evening, in the House of Commons, Mr. (afterwards the celebrated Lord) Grey had called the attention of Pitt the Younger to the fact that copies of L'Eclair were in circulation that day containing the striking news, and that the Prime Minister had replied that he knew nothing whatever about the matter, and that he doubted its authenticity, because the French used in the supposed treaty was more than dubious. It was, in fact, as grotesquely bad as Pigott's spelling; but the Times then, as now, was confident in the integrity of its agents, and told Mr. Pitt on that eventful Saturday that 'all we can say is that the thing came to us in the regular way from Ramsgate in the name of our Dover correspondent, and that it appears to us perfectly regular.' But by the Monday it began to recognise that something was wrong, and the Committee of the Stock Exchange took the matter up and offered £500 to be put on the track of the forgers, for by that time it had been found that forgery had been at work, some Jews in the City of London having for speculative purposes fabricated the whole number of L'Eclair in question, and circulated it to various papers and prominent persons in the shape best calculated to deceive."

That is not a story to the credit of British morality, but these papers are prepared to cut their own noses to spite the enemy.

WHILE the supreme Government and local Administrations have retired to their respective summer retreats, Sir Stuart Bayley is toiling in the plains. He is in no hurry for the hills. Last week, he held a Durbar for the new recipients of honor at the hands of the Viceroy. Having commenced late his legislative session, notwithstanding this being a Gazetted holiday, our Lieutenant-Governor had his Council this forenoon. In the evening, there will be an Evening Party at Belvedere "to meet the members of the National Indian Association."

Early next month, he visits Chittagong unto the Hill Tracts.

THE counter-raid into the Lushai country is over—for this year. Government are not content with the slight advantage of the hour. They have an elaborate policy for the permanent pacification of the tribes. Its development will require some little time. In four or five years, they are confident of realising it and completing the conversion of the barbarians on that border into peaceful subjects and neighbours, as in Assam. Meanwhile, they are pushing on the construction of roads. They rely upon the opening of communications as their chief instrument for subjugating savages. We sincerely wish them Godspeed!

DURING the week, two wellknown members of the Civil Service have left the Presidency, one for a quarter, the other "for good." Mr. H. S. Cotton, Secretary to the Board of Revenue, Positivist, philo-Indian, and author of "New India," goes on a three months' pilgrimage to Western Europe. A few friends, chiefly European, attended at the railway terminus to see him off. Mr. J. H. Reynolds, the Senior Member of the Board, goes home on retirement from the Service. There was a large attendance of native and European friends and admirers at the landing to give ecbat to his parting, headed by the Lieutenant-Governor. Before his departure, he received the usual marks of private and popular regard. Baboo Jagannath Khunnah, the leader of the Buria Bazaar merchants, gave in his honour a party at the Town Hall. This was followed by a more general demonstration held in the heart of the native town, at the palatial mansion known as Mothoor Sen's, now the property of the millionaire Babu Jadu Lal Mullick. No better site for a grand entertainment could have been fixed upon. That house is one of the architectural "hons" of the city, and contains the loftiest and most spacious hall in any private dwelling in the country. The whole place and grounds were most tastefully decorated and converted into a fairy garden with arcades and arbours, all under the experienced loving supervision of Baboo Hem Chander Mitter, a leading gentleman of that ward of the town. In consequence of the approaching departure of Mr. Reynolds, the day selected was unfortunate. It was the first of the native year when our people are specially occupied. It was crowded too with previous engagements for the European community. The European Brahmans would not for anything in the world give up their opportunity for dining out at *burra khana*s. Hence the vast place was not well filled. But many made their apologies and the names of the Committee showed the estimation in which the retiring official was held. Great credit is due to the Secretary Babu Kally Prosunno Dey, of the National Magazine. This, it will be remembered, is the same to whose exertions we owe the portrait by public subscription in the Town Hall of the late Mr. J. Gibbs, one of the most genial and accomplished and devoted public servants in India, and one of the best friends of its people.

ANOTHER big official shortly goes to Europe from the interior. Mr. J. Lewis, Commissioner of the Rajshaye Division, has obtained six months' leave from the 1st May. We heartily wish him a safe voyage home, a happy sojourn in the scenes of auld lang syne, and a pleasant return hence with renovated health and spirits to take up with zest the threads of his work. We are sure we echo the sentiment of his important and extensive jurisdiction and, indeed, of all who have ever come in contact with him. Belonging to an old Indian family which has given many members to the Services, Civil and Military, Mr. Lewis inherits an affection for the country and the people. He has latterly had a splendid opportunity of showing it in the establishment of that noble and much needed institution, the Native Retreat in the Darjeeling Hills. The value of this institution it is impossible to exaggerate. Though the sinews of war have been supplied chiefly by the liberality of the Maharaja of Cooch Behar and the ambition of Babu, now Raja, Gobind Lal, it is to Mr. Lewis's sympathetic interest in the wants of the native population that we owe the Native Sanatorium.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1889.

OUR NATIVE CHIEFS.

FROM A EUROPEAN POINT OF VIEW.

THE repugnancy with which innumerable Native Princes and Princesses of India view our treatment of them, after despoiling them of their birth-right, appropriating, without any pretence or show of decency, a large portion, and, in many cases, the whole of their property and estates, under a cloak of dissimulation and hypocrisy, concealing our real object, in most instances, simply as trustees, and, in others, robbing them of the whole, leaving them in beggary, not even respectable poverty, is a matter of course. And is there a man in India who can be surprised that by every European power we are despised and looked down upon with the utmost contempt?

Let any other Government only attempt to do as we have done, and what is the result? An immediate hue and cry to denounce their actions, accompanied by most questionable assertions, conveniently overlooking, meanwhile, we have been guilty of the most sinful offences against both person and property, and then seek, in the most contemptible manner, to frame excuses for ourselves. It is distressing and painful to think of the many who now, with the paltry pittance allowed them by Government, eke out a most miserable existence, born in and, until we interfered, living in, affluence and luxury. As an instance, see Queen Myouk Shwe Yay, the Dowager Queen of Burma, now appealing to Lord Lansdowne for an increase to her allowance.

Is it not a refined cruelty that this lady, now well stricken in years, should be kept in little better than absolute poverty, upon a pension of Rs. 250 per mensem, and be made to suffer for the offences of others? Her daughter Princess Kyouk Souk Thake Khomi Din being the recipient of the shameless pension of Rs. 125 per mensem, or something like £8. 10s. sterling, scarcely a good mechanic's pay at home? The monthly expenses of the Dowager Queen of Burma and her daughter are Rs. 2,000, and Government allows the two the insignificant sum of Rs. 375, landing them in monthly arrears to the extent of Rs. 1,625, in addition to accumulated unpaid debt of Rs. 30,000. The writer is unable to find language to express indignation sufficiently strong in the case now under review. European sovereigns are not so despoiled and robbed. Then, by what law of God or man, do we assume the right to despoil all and every one who fall under our displeasure?

It is inexplicable, and one day, sooner or later, will bring its own judgment. National dishonour we seem to feel none. What treasuries and private estates have we not plundered, what ancient houses have we not wrecked and ruined, what royalty and nobility not despoiled, making wanderers and exiles of the members over the face of the earth, and we have the impudent audacity to say such acts are those of a Christian Government! It is not surprising that many say, if such acts are those of Christians, they themselves are proud they are not Christians.

Witness our treatment of the King of Oudh's Family. After robbing the King of his vast territories and plundering his treasuries, we keep the existing members of the family on a starvation pittance and find some paltry excuse to justify our conduct of rapine and plunder, the magnitude of which cannot be defined. There is not a case of a king or chief in the East we have deposed in which we have not wilfully, without a thought of the wrong we were doing, shifted upon their own shoulders the crimes we ourselves committed.

What has our conduct been of Dhuleep Singh? Iniquitous in the highest degree. We deceived him, lied to him, robbed him, and, in the end, to show how complete was our want of rectitude, we made a Christian of him, and now have left him an outcast, to drift over the world, to live in a strange land on the generosity of pitying strangers!

It must not be implied that the writer commends Dhuleep Singh's present line of action. But, with the man's evil advisers and his ill-balanced mind—the result of our harsh treatment—he has fallen evidently a prey to hallucinations. After appropriating the contents of his treasuries and private property to ourselves, and pointblank refused to give him any information on the subject of his inquiries in regard to the plunder, is it surprising that Dhuleep Singh should openly declare himself our implacable enemy? No! it is not. But it is well for us he cannot do more.

There is not a dynasty we have deposed, that we have not pillaged and despoiled by open force, down to the annexation of Upper Burma. This may be ingenious and artful policy, it is certainly not statesmanship.

The Secretary of the Indian National Congress, writing on February 20th to the Pall Mall Gazette refuting the libel made by Sir Edward Watkin on the Congress, seeks to strengthen his situation by insinuating that if any Russian gold is coming into India, it must be finding its way into the Punjab for the purpose of propagating disaffection amongst the Sikhs in the interest of Dhuleep Singh. We do not pooh pooh Mr. A. O. Hume's Congress "fad," but we certainly do not think he went very much to convince Sir Edward Watkin, that Congressmen were not the recipients of Russian gold, by making the above assertion, and that the Congress movement meant the destruction of Russian hope of ever invading India. A simple denial to Sir Edward's "I do" was all that was necessary. There was no need to bring forward the name of poor Dhuleep Singh, whose followers see as little of Russian gold as Congressmen are ever likely to do. Men who are insane enough to believe Russia has money for such hair-brained agitators, should be confined in a lunatic asylum. We have arrived at a wonderful state of moral perfection, but we are certainly not ripe enough yet for Theosophism.

Are we to be congratulated for bringing about such a state of things? Has our supremacy in the East proved such a blessing as to gladden the hearts of our Indian subjects one and all? A moment's reflection will convince any man in India, that our forcible conversion into British Provinces of the territories we have plundered and despoiled, are as much subject to raids and dacoity as they were 50 years ago. Vide our latest perfidious dacoity, Burma, conceived, planned and executed with a cold-bloodedness, unequalled by any of our former acts of vandalism.

While we write, Cashmere is being driven under a cloud. Another coup is in course of planning at the Foreign office! We are being deceived, or are again deceiving ourselves, that independence exists in our own rights only. Sheer madness! Our native Princes are not allowed the ghost of a chance to discern right from wrong. Orientals, from time immemorial, have always had a knack for dabbling in poisons, and a familiarity with drugs, if not inflammable at least dangerous to life to a degree. If it be true that the Maharaja has suggested his own abdication, we are not surprised. It is not that he contemplated poisoning Mr. Plowden that has induced the Chief to take this step, but that he is weary of constant British interference, and no longer feels confident of maintaining his state in the face of the settled greed of our Government. The writer is bold enough to assert the poison incident is a gigantic intrigue against, and to depose, the Maharaja. We have for years, in the most covert manner, coveted Cashmere, and desired to convert it into British territory. We have seen it said somewhere that Colonel Nisbet should have his hands strengthened. Strengthened indeed! Colonel Nisbet has already in this scandal displayed great weakness, and, like other politicals, is more or less purblind, when he imagines he has got hold of the right end of the stick. We do not look at this scandal from a "pessimist" point of view, but past and current events prove that, if Colonel Nisbet ever had hold of the stick at all, it is the wrong end.

The writer for the present will dismiss the Cashmere incident, by placing before the public in India and England, the three following questions:—

1. Has England any ulterior design on the independence of Cashmere?
2. Have we abandoned our annexation policy?
3. Can the Foreign office answer those two questions truthfully?

Where are all our pledges and treaties with our Native Chiefs and feudatories? What are they worth? What were they worth when made? Nothing! Advisedly, nothing, when made between contracting parties, one of which has not the power to compel the second to keep good faith. There is not a treaty now extant between us and any Native Chief in India, worth the paper it is written upon. If the Viceroy, with the counsel of the Secretary of State, think fit to treat it as waste paper, he may do so, and, without a moment's notice, will drive a coach and four through any such treaty.

This state of things in treaty matters does not exist in Europe. There we have great powers to deal with, equal in strength and armament to our own. Let Lord Salisbury attempt to drive a coach and four through any treaty we have with Germany, France, Russia or Italy, and I do not hesitate to say, if he were insane enough to do, as is done in India, the continent of Europe would rise against us, and materially alter the map of Europe. It is unfortunate India forms a field, where there is no such opposing element, and has to submit to conduct, England herself has to submit to, from the other European Powers equal in strength to herself. It is simply a system of blustering swagger we exercise, and by such conduct keep the subjects in fear, certainly not love, either for ourselves, or British rule.

The writer asks, Is there any justification for the violation of such treaties with our Chiefs, the confiscation of private estates, and plundering of treasuries? By such a vile and unscrupulous course what have we gained? a legacy of discontent and ill will, which, at any time, should an opportunity occur, will rise against us. Justification there is none, not even political necessity, we add only insult to injury, in the violation of treaties at the price of national honor. Claiming the privilege of not being an atheist, it is hard for one to believe the Government of India does not lay claim to the power of Almighty God, having the right to all, and over all, at least in India.

The revelations of the late Sir Charles MacGregor, made public lately, are of a nature sufficiently startling, not only as throwing light upon our unscrupulous actions in Affghanistan, and confirming the suspicions of the Khartoum martyr, the late General Gordon, when he resigned the Private Secretaryship to Lord Ripon at Bombay, over the question of Yakoob Khan's deposition, but sufficiently interesting to make men now living in our midst, feel uncomfortable, having lulled themselves into fancied security, in the belief that dead men tell no tales.

The writer has not yet read the Life and Opinion of Sir Charles MacGregor, K.C.B., but, from a personal acquaintance and coming in daily contact with the late General during the Trihoot famine in 1874, can assert that it is not true that he was a cruel man. He was chivalrous and humane to a degree, tender and compassionate, though a strict disciplinarian. What he did was always done well, and he insisted upon all under him doing the same. Sir Richard Temple, then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, spoke in high terms of his qualities as an officer, and, in frankly admitting he had in MacGregor an able Lieutenant, did not forget to give him credit for the magnitude of his charge during that trying time.

ZITO.

. THE INCOME TAX.

THE Income tax threatens to be a permanent burden on the Indian people. The official view, at any rate, leaves little hope of its discontinuance. No less an exponent of that view than Sir David Barbour, Finance Minister of the Government of India, appears to be strongly in favor of its retention. In the debate which ensued in the Vice-regal Council on his own Budget, some of the native members of the Council took just exception to the income tax, as a source of real hardship and oppression to the people. The Hon'ble Syed Ameer Hossein, in particular, made out a strong case for abandoning the impost on the return of better times. Raja Doorga Churn Law also bore weighty testimony to the odious character of the imposition as well as of its administration. "If the finances be," he said, "in such a condition as to admit of any reduction of taxation, I would suggest that the taxes which act oppressively on the people be first taken away. The income tax is working great hardship. No form of direct taxation is suited to our country. If the income tax be abolished, it would afford a substantial relief and would be really appreciated by the people." This view, however, met with no support from the Finance Member. On the contrary, he was so much opposed to it that he could not allow the occasion to pass without expressing his formal dissent. He said:—

"My hon'ble friend Syed Ameer Hossein has made a plea for some relief to the payers of income tax, and especially for those whose incomes are less than Rs. 1,000 per annum. So far as the wealthier members of the community are concerned, I think the claim for relief is of the weakest character. I doubt if there is any other country where the taxation falls so lightly on such classes as it does in India. I would ask my hon'ble friend to consider what taxation he and I and the other official members of your Excellency's Council contribute towards the cost of the government of this country. If he does so, he will be astonished at the moderation of the taxation on the official, commercial and professional classes in this country. I admit that there is more to be said for the exemption from the income tax of persons whose income is less than Rs. 1,000, but even in their case the plea for exemption appears to me to be by no means a strong one. In the first place, as incomes rise in this country, an income of even Rs. 500 a year is not low relatively to the incomes of the vast majority of the people. In the next place, the persons whose incomes are between Rs. 500 and Rs. 1,000 would pay little or nothing towards the expenses of the State, if they did not pay the income tax. And last of all, we cannot do without the money, and I do not foresee the time at which we will be in a position to say that this class has the first claim to relief."

Sir David Barbour is perfectly welcome to his opinion about the taxation of the higher official, commercial and professional classes, composed almost exclusively of Europeans, and who would pay nothing to the state, if they did not pay the income tax. But he must not lose sight of the fact that natives of the country belonging to those classes stand on a different footing. They are generally holders of land for which they pay a land tax, besides other cesses. As regards his argument, for retaining the tax on incomes ranging from Rs. 500 to 1,000, we do not exactly see its force or application. Compared with the ruling average of income in this country, an income of Rs. 500 is, in truth, not low, but, in instituting such comparison, we must not overlook the social system of the country. It is extremely unfair to apply such a test. There are respectable classes in this country for whom an income of from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,000 is actually too low, particularly in these days of high prices. And in regard to these classes, Sir David Barbour's statement, that if they were exempted from the income tax they would be exempted from all taxation, does not apply. Belonging to the respectable classes, they pay land revenue, and otherwise contribute to the cost of government. The Finance Minister does not notice the argument against the retention of the income tax based on its oppressive administration. Probably that administration is not believed in high official quarters to be really oppressive. The other day, in the Bengal Government Resolution on the administration of the income tax, Sir Stuart Bayley, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, endorsed the opinion of a Divisional Commissioner that the tax excited no more odium than was incidental to the obligation of having to pay anything at all. The fact, however, is otherwise. The assessors of the tax are over zealous officers, bent on showing as large a collection as they can, regardless of the limits prescribed by the law, and Syed Ameer Hossein expressed but the plain truth when he said that, at any rate, a portion of those returned by the assessors as having an income of Rs. 500 or upwards never really enjoyed that income. We may be credited with having some reliable experience as to the character of these assessments, particularly in regard to the lower classes of assesses, and we are in a position to say that, if the irremediable iniquity of its administration were any argument against the continuance of an impost, the income tax should be done away with immediately.

Sir David Barbour is explicit in his view. He cannot look forward to a time when the tax on even the lowest grade of income might be remitted. We are, nevertheless, not without a hope. After all, the Finance Member's view may not prevail. The thing itself is causing so great hardship that it is bound to go, at least as regards the lowest class of income. Some remarks fell from the Viceroy, which, though very guarded, would seem to show that the opposition offered by the native members to the retention of direct taxation of an oppressive character struck a sympathetic chord in Lord Lansdowne. We quote the passage we refer to—"The income and expenditure of the past year are beyond recall, and at the time when the Budget is framed it would be extremely difficult for the Government to recede from the arrangements which it has made for the year which is just about to commence. In regard, however, to the years that lie beyond, the Government of India is not committed to the same extent and is still in the position to profit by useful suggestions and advice. I welcome in this spirit that which has been given to us by the hon'ble members who have placed on record their opinion as to the course which should be adopted in the event of our being hereafter in a position to remit taxation. I trust that they are right in anticipating that we may, before we are much older, find it to be our agreeable duty to consider what burdens we can remove from the shoulders of Her Majesty's subjects in this part of the empire, and I can promise them that should the Government of India, while I have the honor of being connected with it, find itself in the happy position of being able to dispense favors, we shall be careful to do so with the utmost circumspection, and with a due regard to the arguments which they have advanced." It may be premature to build upon these words any definite hope with regard to the most unpopular tax that now exists, but it is not unlikely to have been meant by way of a response to the earnest appeals which the native members in Council addressed to his Lordship in behalf of the poor taxpayer.

BOOKS.

AN INDIGENOUS HOMŒOPATHIC LITERATURE.*

Bengal, as the earliest of the Indian Provinces to embrace Homœopathy, has naturally taken the lead in the creation of an Indian Homœopathic Literature. The great house of Berigny & Co. has played a most important part in this work. The pioneer Homœopathic Chemists, they have also been the first Homœopathic publishers. They felt the country's pulse with the first tentative brochures in Bengali. The success of these imperfect things emboldened them to publish in sumptuous style the first elaborate treatises in Homœopathy from the pen of the late Harikrishna Mallik, of the well-known Zemindari family of Meherpore. A hereditary Vaidya and an accomplished Sanskrit scholar, Harikrishna was peculiarly fitted to popularise the teachings of Hahnemann among his countrymen. The next writer in the field was Baboo Kali Kissen Mitter, the survivor of three remarkable brothers of Baraset. He produced a voluminous work on the Diseases of Infancy, published by the same firm we believe. Baboo Mohesh Chunder Ghosh next brought out two considerable but practical books, one of them being founded on the original Treatment of Cholera in English by his eminent nephew, the Hon'ble Dr. Sircar. Since then, works in plenty have appeared which we have not had an opportunity of seeing, but some few of which at least, from the names of their authors, must be more or less meritorious. And we once more hail in the field with pleasure Baboo Kali Kissen Mitter in the maturity of his powers. Although the book before us appears without the name of the author, we are assured that he is the writer. It is characteristic of him that, although he has published many things, he has always done so anonymously. He has never had any reason to be ashamed of his productions. This book, as it is the last from his veteran pen, is also his magnum opus. It is a valuable legacy of his rich mind to the profession and the public. It is a splendid monograph on the Materia Medica and Therapeutics of that prime ill which flesh is heir to and to which Indian flesh in especial is exposed—Fever, in all its manifold shapes and varied complications. The book, though modestly offered as a compilation, is almost an original treatise embodying not only information derived from a variety of published sources, European and American, but also the results of personal observation during a long series of years. It really adapts Homœopathy to the peculiarities of this country and the needs of our people. It is enriched with all the latest researches into the articles of food commonly used among us—a desideratum in purely Western works which much detracts from their value in Indian practice. Lastly there is an interesting Introduction which though it travels into debatable ground challenges study.

A PUBLIC SERVICE MANUAL OF PERSONAL CONDUCT.*

A book which is avowedly a compilation of the Orders of Government on such a simple subject as the personal relations of public servants, by one of them, and one of experience into the bargain, scarcely calls for any notice beyond a simple acknowledgment of receipt coupled with, at most, a word on its get up, good, bad or indifferent, as the case may be. It does not afford room for literary judgment, and such merit as may belong to publications of the class may be taken for granted. By each successive publication it withdraws itself farther and farther from the reach of critical interference. Such a book preeminently is that before us. Belonging to a class below criticism, it has, by flux of time and by other advantages, reached a height far above it. It is a collection of orders and rules regulating the personal relations of Government servants by not one but two old Government servants of that very department which is most familiar with those orders and rules. And it is now in the Third Edition! Such light, short and summary trial as such a publication may be exposed to, it has presumably long since passed through unscathed. The authors or compilers themselves were from the first so confident in their knowledge of what they were about, that they would not unnecessarily waste the least breath. They did not care to write a line by way of preface. Their book was introduced by the title page. This is being classical with a vengeance—following the Horatian precept of medius res literally! In this edition, however, the plunge is stayed, for a moment. Not that there is any pretence of a preface. Our authors do not surrender one iota of their method. In place of a preface there is an advertisement—not in the obsolescent sense, in which it is synonymous with preface, but in a veritable downright business announcement. This, of course, involves no superfluous expenditure of paper, the space on the back of the title-page being utilised with the new matter, after which comes the table of Contents, and then the plunge headlong into the open sea of the subject, a sea without light-house or other landmarks. This addition is nothing more or less than a page of opinions of the Press on previous editions. These opinions are honorable, coming as they do from the best quarters and being, of course, complimentary. Here, then, disappears the last possible chance of criticism. The authors come fortified on all points, and armed cap à pie. Their position is impregnable. What can the most daring critic do with such a Gibraltar but salaam it from a distance. It actually bullies him into submission. He must admire it willy nilly. It is presumably perfection.

Yet, the whole is an unfounded presumption. This book, the production of a strong duet of authors, is alas! too human, subject to all the infirmities of our lot.

It is very far from a credit to the community. It shows extraordinary incapacity in those responsible for it and a singular indifference in the public as well as a defect of the critical faculty in the press. The production of a book by courtesy—a furbishing of mere odds and ends of Gazettes—offers no opportunities for literary ambition. Charles Lamb himself, the genius lost in the desk's dull routine, if told off by his employers on such an errand, would perhaps have been at a loss to lend it distinction, unless he cared to provoke the grave and reverend seigniors of the India Office by a desperate pun. Yet not exactly so. Behold Gladstone and his Budgets! What ingenuity in massing numerals and marshalling accounts! How the dead bones are galvanised into flesh and blood realities! Nobody expects anything like such feats from Indian Assistant Accountants-General when our Chancellors of the Exchequer themselves pass with credit without suggesting anything beyond a distant comparison with the Grand Old Man. But there is a humbler ingenuity which is certainly expected of all who claim public notice by offering printed matter. There certainly may be an elegance even

* Sadrishia Chikitsa Vidhan, Sibiram o Aparadhar Jwar o Anugangik Roger Bhui Gajya Guna Sangraha.

A Materia Medica of the Homœopathic Therapeutics of Intermittent and Other Fevers and their Concomitant Complications with the clinical experiences from thirty years' practice. Calcutta: L. V. Mitter & Co.

* A Compilation of Orders of the Government of India on the subject of the Personal Conduct of Public Officers in their Relations to Government, to their Subordinates, and others. By I. C. Bose, M. A., Fellow, University of Calcutta, Assistant Accountant-General, Bengal, and G. D. Pudumjee, B. A., Assistant Accountant-General, Bombay. Third Edition. Corrected to date. [The British Arms.] Calcutta: Printed by I. C. Bose & Co.

in this sort of mechanical authorship. Some modicum of method at all events is a sine qua non. In point of fact, there is no pretence to decency of arrangement here. That it should not be attained in the course of three editions, is indeed a marvel. We repeat, this only proves that there is no criticism in India.

There may be an art in trifles. Not only is that not discernible in this work, but the authors may well claim almost a genius for bungling, so many are the imperfections of what must by this have been above reproach. The whole thing is scrappy to the last degree, showing neither research in the information nor intelligence in the presentation. There is no attempt at classification—no logical sequence. A number of regulations and orders of constant reference at the Accountant-General's office are strung together without order. There is no reason why one comes before or one comes after. The 47 matters are not disposed of according to subject nor presented in alphabetical or chronological order nor in the order of importance. The inconvenience from this methodical immethodicity is not even minished by an index: there is only a table of contents seriatim. This confusion is worse confounded by a sort of perversity. The title-page is contradicted at the outset. The book opens with the General "Rules for the Submission, Receipt, and Transmission of Memorials and other papers of the same class, addressed to Her Majesty the Queen," &c. Are these Rules among the "Orders of Government on the personal conduct of public officers in their relations to Government," &c.? If they must be retained at all, they should have been delegated to an appendix. The same objection applies to the Rules for the transmission of Letters (other than Memorials) to Her Majesty or any members of the Royal Family or the Secretary of State and, of course, the same compassionate remark. In fine, the book is simply beneath criticism. It does not show ordinary education. In avoiding writing a single line of their own, the authors probably thought they would escape detection. But they have not succeeded. For, they could not well avoid a title-page, and, in inditing a title for their work, they have discovered themselves. "A compilation," to begin with, is an absurd title. It may be a description of a book, but not the name of one. And, then, we have the "orders of the Government of India on the subject of the Personal Conduct of Public Officers in their relations to Government," &c. The Italics are ours. But why the subject of? We have already shown that the title does not strictly coincide with the contents. Lastly, the title page is defective for want of the publisher's name. For a work by Government officials, for the guidance of public servants, and now in its third edition, this is an extraordinary omission.

JOHN BRIGHT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

London, March 29.

Death has withdrawn a most majestic personality,—the curtain has fallen over one of the heroes of the world. Last Wednesday morning at 25 minutes past eight, Mr. John Bright peacefully expired at One Ash, his residence in Rochdale. India's greatest friend is gone, England has lost one of her greatest statesmen, Truth its boldest champion, the people their Great Tribune. One voice shall henceforth be absent from the Great Council of the nations, to warn man out of the purple stream of war, whenever unChristian principles should preponderate, and urge on the destruction of the species instead of its preservation. Posterity, according to the standard by which we all judge our fellows, will give the palm to his oratory, to his statesmanship, fortitude, or philanthropy, but civilization will record of him as the great Christian hero of the century. Often great, though less often many sided, as are the virtues of the great men of England, few have served mankind with so much devotion and success, fewer still with so much love. "Heart within and god o'erhead," was the motto of the honest Quaker; "I am a plain and simple citizen," he said once in one of his most memorable perorations; and in half a century's service to his country, if one thing was more conspicuous than another, it was, as he exemplified it in his life, his great love for Christ's simplicity of character, and his ardent desire to learn the spirit of Christian charity. His mission was to preach and practise the Gospel of Peace on earth,—Peace at any price.

John Bright was born at Greenbank, in the vicinity of Rochdale, in 1811. His father, Jacob Bright, was a cotton spinner, a man of substance, proprietor of Crankshaw Mill. He received a sound English education, but for the culture of his intellect and for the stores of information which his speeches prove him to have possessed, he was mainly indebted to his own efforts. His reading in the historical and poetical literature of England was extensive, and his interest in every department of real, vital, productive knowledge was constant and impassioned. His family had been Quakers for many generations, and Mr. Bright remained faithful to the Society of Friends to the close of his life. He was twice married—first in 1839 to Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Jonathan Priestman, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and in 1847 to Margaret Elizabeth Leatham, daughter of a Quaker banker of Wakefield. He had had seven children, a daughter by his first wife and three sons and three daughters by the second. One of the boys died at an early age. The other two are now taking part in public affairs. Mr. W. L. Bright, the member for Stoke-on-Trent, being a hearty supporter of Mr. Gladstone in Parliament.

The bent of Mr. Bright's genius was early displayed. It is said to have been among the young temperance reformers of Rochdale that he first had an opportunity of discovering that his, as Mr. Disraeli said, was one of those tongues "born to guide human beings." In 1835 a stripling entered Mr. Cobden's ware-house in Moseley-street, Manchester, and asked him to address an educational meeting. Mr. Cobden went to the meeting, and was so much struck with the eloquence of the young man at whose request he had attended that he made an effort to enlist him in that crusade against the Corn Laws in which Cobden was already engaged. A witness to some of his earlier attempts describes him as dressed in black, of a sombre, Quaker-like appearance, square-built, muscular, with a broad face and forehead, fresh complexion, and mild blue eyes, voice good but somewhat harsh.

In September, 1838, a banquet was given by a number of gentlemen in Manchester to Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Bowring. In his speech in reply to the toast proposing his health, Sir John Bowring made a remark on the impossibility of estimating the amount of misery inflicted by the Corn Laws. It was proposed to form an association for the total repeal of the obnoxious statutes. A day was fixed for a meeting to organise the society, and out of this germ sprang the Anti-Corn Law League. Among the first names inscribed in the Provisional Committee of the Association was that of John Bright. The next eight years were perhaps the most active of his public career, and it is not too much to say that more of the real history of England during that period is to be learnt by following the steps of Cobden, Bright, and the other chiefs of the League than by reading the despatches of placemen and placehunters watching the strife of Parliamentary parties, or tracing the rise and fall of cabinets.

In July 1843, Mr. Bright was returned for Durham by a majority of seventy. In his first speech in the House he announced himself as not only member for Durham but "one of the representatives of that benevolent organization the Anti-Corn Law League." The active operations of the League continued till 1849 when an Act of Parliament was passed repealing the Corn Laws.

The limits of space forbid me to dwell, as I would fain do, upon some of the most important events which are associated with his name. I pass by therefore the history of his connection with Factory Legislation, the part he took in the American Civil War, his principle of "peace at any price," and his thorough detestation of Lord Palmerston and his Crimean War. Mr. Bright as a Cabinet Minister, I will pass over, nor would I refer to his first acquaintance with Lord Hartington but for a little anecdote in connection with the latter which might not be uninteresting. Mr. Bright remembered how twenty years before he had met Lord Hartington at a Lancashire inn, and found him little in love with the promise of a political career. One reason was a disbelief in his power of public speaking. Mr. Bright urged him to remain in Parliament, reminded him of the past services of the house of Devonshire, persuaded him that proficiency in public speaking was very much a matter of practice, reminded him that Hume on his entrance into Parliament could scarcely put two sentences together, pointed to the brilliant example of Lord Athorp, who made up for lack of eloquence by the transcendent honesty and transparency of his character, and finally said there was no influence and no dignity in the House of Commons to which, if he would but persevere, he might not fairly aspire.

It was in regard to India that he delivered some of his best speeches. "You may govern India, if you like," he said, "for the good of England, but the good of England must come through the channels of the good of India." "I am willing to avow that I am in favour of justice and conciliation—of the law of justice and kindness. Justice and mercy are the supreme attributes of the perfection we call Deity, but all men everywhere comprehend them. There is no speech nor language in which their voice is not heard, and they could not have been vainly exercised with regard to the docile and intelligent millions of India." "You have had enough of military reputation on Eastern fields; you have gathered large harvests of that commodity, be it valuable or be it worthless. I invite you to something better, and higher, and holier than that; I invite you to a glory not 'fanned by conquest's crimson wing,' but based upon the solid and lasting benefits which I believe the Parliament of England can, if it will, confer upon the countless populations of India."

I will conclude with one more quotation. It is one of the most striking and powerful of his many splendid perorations. With us it has a special significance to-day and I hope and trust it will be echoed by the two hundred and fifty millions of my countrymen. "I believe the time is coming, nay, we are upon its very threshold, when a large number of those hitherto excluded will be admitted, and we shall feel more than ever before that we are one nation, and one people. Many of you have stood, as I have often stood, on the sea shore in an hour of quiet and of calm. No tempest drives the waves, the wind is but a whisper, and yet the tide comes in as by some latent and mysterious power. The loiterers on the beach are driven from point to point as the waves advance, and at length the whole vast basin of the ocean seems filled to the brim. So on this occasion, there is no violence nor even menace of force, but opinion grows; its tide moves on; opposition ignorant on the one hand, insolent on the other, falls back; and shortly we shall see barriers thrown down, privilege and monopoly swept away, a people enfranchised, and the measure of their freedom full. You have honoured me this morning by committing this great cause in part to my keeping. I may defend it feebly, I may fall from the ranks before it is won, but of one thing you may be sure—I shall never betray it."—I say, Amen!

Law.

[Judgment in the Bombay Rain-betting Case on the appeal by the Government of Bombay against the order of acquittal by the late Chief Presidency Magistrate under the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act of 1887.]

Mr. Justice Jardine, in delivering judgment, said: I am also of opinion that the acquittal was right. The facts are not in dispute. It is admitted that people frequent the house of the accused to bet on the quantity of rain which may fall in a given time, and that there is an appliance used to measure the quantity, of the nature of a rain-gauge. The appliance is the accepted measure of the quantity; it registers quantity just as the watch in the hands of the judge at the horse-race registers time, or as a thermometer is used to register heat, or a barometer the pressure of the atmosphere. Its use resembles further use of these instruments, in that it does not introduce any element of chance into the betting. Thus, in my opinion, it differs very much from the Pari Mutuel machine, which in Follett vs. Thomas, L.R. 6., Q.B. 514, was held to be an instrument of wagering, and to constitute the transaction, among the parties betting, a game of chance within the meaning of the Act 31 and 32 Vic., Chap. 52, s. 3. The Advocate-General has argued that the appliance for measuring the rain-fall constitutes the betting a game, and that the gauge is itself an instrument of gaming, within the meaning of Bombay Act 4 of 1887, s. 3, an enactment which strikes at gaming, but not in the preamble or elsewhere at wagering or betting. He relies on Follett vs. Thomas. He concedes that if two people meet together where there is a thermometer used for ordinary convenience or scientific purpose, and bet about the number of degrees of it which it will register in a given time, the thermometer is not an instrument of gaming, the bet is not a game, and the persons betting are not guilty under the enactment. But, as I understand the argument, the contention is, that if the thermometer is contrived and used only to facilitate the betting, then the bet, the chance, and the instrument constitute a game. I do not think this criterion can be accepted in construing the statute, which, as it interferes with the liberty of the subject, must be construed strictly (Bowls vs. Henwich, L.R., 9 C.P. p. 339), more especially as it shifts the onus of proof in certain circumstances from the prosecution to the accused. There would also be found great difficulty in practice in drawing the distinction, as evidence would have to be taken about the reason for having the particular gauge, watch, thermometer, or barometer made, and the various uses to which it might be applied. Moreover, the uncertainty would promote evasion, so in circumstances like those of Hampden vs. Walsh, L.R. 1, Q.B. p. 189, where there was a wager whether the world is round, and the wager was settled by certain tests agreed upon before and applied by the referees and umpire on a spot chosen, the question whether the bet was a game, whether the enactment had been broken, might depend on the question whether the scientific instruments used to ascertain curvature had been invented or made for the purpose or were ordinary instruments of survey. I do not think the case of Follett vs. Thomas goes as far as is contended. The English statute strikes at wagering and betting, so the Pari Mutuel machine was obviously within the mischief contemplated. It was held to be an instrument of betting. There is no law in India which makes wagering and betting unlawful. This Act against gaming does not mention those practices. Again, there are two other differences between the case of Follett vs. Thomas, and the case tried by the Chief Presidency Magistrate. In the former, it was argued and shown that the amount of winnings did not depend solely on the result of the horse-race. Lord C. J. Cockburn says "Whether a horse-race be in itself a game of chance or not, we can entertain no doubt that, if some additional element of chance be introduced the wagering on a horse race may be converted into a game of chance." The Pari Mutuel arrangements introduced a variety of chances "independent of the issue of the race as well as the will and judgment of the winner, depending, as it does, on the will or caprice of the other persons betting" . . . "There being then this element of chance in the transaction among the parties betting, we think it may properly be termed, as among them, a game of chance." In the case before us this element did not exist, the rain-gauge only registered an operation of nature, and did in no wise, like the Pari Mutuel machine, increase the number of chances among the bettors themselves. Thus the reason on which Follett vs. Thomas was decided does not apply to the present case of a rain-gauge, which did not of itself create a new and peculiar form of diversion among the bettors, which in England might be treated as a game under the statute. The other distinction is that there is no horse-race or other sport or contest in this case as there was in Follett vs. Thomas. It must be repeated also that the learned Judges held that case to come within the mischief at which the English statute struck, namely, wagering and betting. But in India, as pointed out by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, the Legislature has refrained carefully from interfering with wagers or bets; and while enacting laws similar to those of England, relating to common gaming houses, has abstained from any enactment of laws about betting houses. There is no law here like the statute 16 and 17 Vic., chap. 119, which was passed for the suppression of betting houses, and makes them to be deemed gaming houses. The subject has been before the Legislature several times, and the omission to interfere by penal law with betting has doubtless been intentional. In 1848 it was decided by the Judicial Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council that the statute 8 and 9 Vic., chap. 109 (to amend the law concerning games and wagers) did not extend to India (4 Moore's I.A. p. 339), and that in the absence of statute, an action might be maintained on a wager. In the same year Act 21 of 1848 was passed as suggested by the Judicial Committee, declaring null and void all agreements by way of gaming and wagering. In Act 87 of 1867 an exception is made in favour of certain horse-racing transactions, and the rule and the exception are substantially reproduced in section 30 of the Indian Contract Act of 1872. The Indian laws go no further than to make wagering contracts void—they are not unlawful. The distinction is discussed fully in an unreported case—Parakh vs. Ransordas, P. J. 1875, p. 76—by Westrop, C. J.

That judgment incorporates another by Sir M. Sausse, in which also that learned Chief Justice discusses the English and Indian statute law, and affirms the unanimous judgment of the Supreme Court in Ramlal vs. Dulabdas that wagers were not illegal by Hindu law. "The state of Hindu law," says Sir M. Sausse, "on this subject appears to have been very analogous to that of British law before the statute 8 and 9 Vic., chap. 106, until which period wagers, generally, were unlawful contracts, although particular descriptions of them, such as gaming with dice, cards, &c., were rendered illegal by statute." It is also not to be forgotten that the Indian Legislature, in amending the Indian Penal Code, re-enacted as section 294, a law of 1884, which treated lotteries as transactions which may be authorised by Government itself. The Indian Legislature has never felt itself opposed against wagering and betting in the several terms used in the Preambles to the English statutes. If this Court were to hold that a bet is converted into a game, and the betting house into a gaming house, and the bettors there into offenders against the criminal law, because a rain-gauge or hour-glass or other measure is contrived and used to settle the bet, I think the Court would assume to itself the work of legislation which Parliament has confided to another authority. Except by a metaphorical use of the word, contrary to the ordinary as well as the statutory use, a bet cannot, for the purposes of criminal law, be treated as a game. The common and legal use of the latter word coincides substantially; it required express enactment to make betting houses to be deemed gaming houses. What the law treats as a game can be gathered from the statutes reviewed in Jenks vs. Turpin, L.R. 13, Q.B. D. 505, e.g., 16 Car 2 C. 7, where cards, dice, e.g., tables, tennis, bowls, skittles, shovel board, cock-fighting, horse-races, dog-matches, foot-races, are mentioned before the more general words "other pastimes, game, or games whatsoever." According to Bacon's Abridgement, gaming, a foot-race, and horse-race, are games within the statute; so, it seems, is cricket. In the present case, where money is staked on an operation of nature, and the instrument is a mere measure of the operation, I am of opinion that that amusement provided by the keeper of the house, who makes an income by allowing the bettors to come there and use the rain-gauge as a means of deciding the event of the bet, is not a game; and that the house is not a common gaming house within the meaning of Bombay Act 4 of 1887. I am also of opinion that the Act is not directed against betting and wagering practices, except as connected with games.

The Court therefore dismissed the appeal.

Holworthy's Pills and Ointment.—The attention of all sufferers is drawn to these well-known remedies, for they possess conspicuous advantages as a safe and reliable aid in all those emergencies to which travellers, emigrants and sailors are so especially liable. They have been largely patronized by wayfarers by land and sea, and, in fact, by all classes of the community, to their very great advantage. The Pills are beyond all doubt one of the most effective remedies ever discovered for cases of obstinate constipation, confirmed indigestion and colic, complaints which are engendered by exposure and irregular feeding. The Ointment will be found of the very greatest service in cases of piles, abscesses, erysipelas and all kinds of local ulcerations.

WANTED.

Three or four qualified temporary Sub-overseers, experienced in earthwork, and expert at levelling.

Salaries from Rs. 40 to Rs. 55, and, where a horse is necessary, horse allowance.

Apply, stating salary that will be accepted, to

THE DISTRICT ENGINEER,
Bhagalpur.

District Engineer's Office,
Bhagalpur, 15th April, 1889.

FOR SALE

Price	...	Post free Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt	...	Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound	...	Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGA

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late
NAWAB FARIDUDDIN JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Dackoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Fariduddin Jah Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman. — The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; and those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river: [Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye.—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course [Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting.—[Extract.] The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree. "A naked Whiteman" hints his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes." But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course, some few have crept in. The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books, &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta Catalogue, free on application

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

Are strongly recommended to try our Flowery Orange Pekoe with Rose like Aroma, @ Rs. 2 per lb

T. HILL & CO.,
Adjoining Corinthian Theatre,
Calcutta

Rivers Steam Navigation Co. "Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "MYSORE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 11th instant.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessel should be sent to the Company's Godown at Juggannah Ghat not later than Thursday the 11th idem.

CACHAR LINE.

For particulars of the sailings of this line please apply to the undersigned.

DHURU & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhuru daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, and Debrooghur on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

NARAYINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A tri-weekly service is maintained between Narayingunge and Fenchooingunge for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNILL & CO.,
Agents.

12, Chive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

BEETHAM'S

GLYCERINE - AND -

SOAP

FOR INDIA AND TROPICAL CLIMATES.

IT KEEPS THE SKIN COOL AND REFRESHES THE BODY'S VIGOR.

Removes and prevents all eruptions, itching, and all skin diseases.

It entirely prevents all heat and sunburn, and preserves the complexion from the ravages of the sun, and is far more effective than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the heat and sunburn of India is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin this delightful preparation has no equal. Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers: M. BEETHAM & SONS, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system
Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For children and the aged they are precious.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.) LONDON.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMOEOPATHIC PHARMACY.
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMOEOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMOEOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lockets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutta, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

TRUE TO ITS NAME,
JEYES' "PERFECT PURIFIER"
Is the best disinfectant and exterminator of all objectionable odours and infectious diseases. It cleanses the roads, purifies the atmosphere and disinfects the drains, keeps the sick-room pure and healthy.

EQUALLY USEFUL TO
ANIMAL AND POULTRY,
It keeps a cowshed pure and sweet.
It improves the coat, destroy vermin, keeps fly off, stamps out all infectious diseases.
It is a specific for foot and mouth disease.
It kills all unpleasant smell without setting up another smell of its own.

It kills fleas, red lice and vermin of every kind in Poultry, Pigeons, Cattle, Horses, Dogs, Cats, &c. Effectually cures Gapes, Roup and Comb Disease in Poultry.

IT IS GARDENER'S FRIEND AS WELL.
It destroys moss and weeds on gravel paths and exterminates worms from lawns.

It is a valuable destroyer of all kinds of ants.
It kills green fly, red spider, thrips mealy bug, removes worms from the soil in pots, &c.

Agents: DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press

THE FALL OF MANDALAY, BY ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime Subscribers may register their names with the Publishers

Messrs. PETTIT & Co.,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

11, Old Court House Street;

or Messrs. DIPPY & Co.,

298A, Upper Circular Road,

CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London.

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,——

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society
RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly " 7
Quarterly " 4
Monthly Re. 1-4
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or preon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1889.

No. 371

TRUE MAGIC.

TO W. W. S.

I.

THERE dwelt of late by Tiber's flow
A Sage of aspect to inspire
Weird thoughts in those who marked the glow
Of eyes where Rosicrucian fire
Gleamed hollow, and whose look remote
Some far-off mystery seemed to note.

II.

'Twas rumoured, those who sought the tower
Where lone and vigil-worn he sat
All darkling at the midnight hour,
Consorting with the owl and bat,
Came forth with pallid lips to tell
Of ghostly things that there befell

III.

For he could bid a slumberer's thought
Through time and space its passage wing,
With news by docile spirits brought
Could make the smitten table ring,
And e'en (dread thought!) from dust could raise
Like life the folk of other days.

IV.

Much of these feats did he impart
To one, a fellow-sojourner
For Art's sake in this realm of Art,
As once they left the city's stir
And passed beyond the ancient wall
Along the broad-browed Viminal.

V.

Replied this last, "Faith, too, have I
In arts which may the dead restore;
Dost ask example?—see, hard by,
The studio of my friend:—its door
To us (though absent he, of late)
Is free,"—and so they entered straight.

VI.

The Wizard, rapt, paced dreamily
The studio round; with absent glance
Passed all the noble statues by,
Preferring to recall, perchance,
What yesternight's long séance gave
Of tidings from beyond the grave.

VII.

"Mark," said the other, "how my friend
Makes his unbodied thoughts our own,
Persuades the plastic forms to blend,
Then turns them into breathing stone;
Almost with awe I look around,
And half believe 'tis holy ground.

VIII.

"See where yon' block of Parian stone
Awaits his hand:—within it lie
Love, hate, joy, anguish;—he alone
The shrouded passion can descry;
His chisel is the wand of might
Will bring the latent soul to light.

IX.

"What Art divine, to rend the veil
That wraps the beings of the past!
Nay, more, the spirit's husk and shale,
Its accidents, aside to cast,
Till in these forms around we view
The master-motive shining through.

X.

"The soft Egyptian musing here
Forgets her queenly pomp and sway;
Love's vassal she; in thought she's near
Her amorous Roman far away;
Creeps in her ear the splash of Nile,
By Tiber strays her soul the while.

XI.

"Now mark the Queen whose pomp of soul
Made Babylon a dwelling fit
For gods:—here will that scorns control,
And pride, and lust of empire, sit
Enthroned;—if Love may venture nigh
'Tis with trailed wing and abject eye.

XII.

"Wouldst view the god in fairer guise?
See here in Sappho's form he beams,
All thrilling in a soft surprise
She harks to tones late heard in dreams,
With lips that murmur, eyes that long—
The spirit of a Paphian song.

XIII.

"Canst show, with all thy magic power,
How, 'neath an evil spirit's wing,
A soul is darkened? In his hour
Of rayless gloom see Saul the King,
Majestic still though sore oppress'd,
Clutching the beard that hides his breast."

XIV.

The Wizard paused before reply,
As one whose thoughts are elsewhere,
"These forms are born of fantasy,
And wrought by other hands would bear
Another aspect—I evoke
The people as they walked and spoke.

XV.

"No fancies:—those we call the dead
Are close to hearing and to sight;
To lure them from the world we dread
Needs but a nature tuned aright,

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

11/12 M. X. 10

A magic known to witch and sage
In every clime and every age.

XVI.

"If, of this necromantic power
You ask for proof, come visit me
In private and propitious hour,
When, duly reverent, you shall see
The forms of those yourself shall name.
King, poet, warrior, winsome dame.

XVII.

"At my command, the self-same face
That Antony upturned to kiss
Shall smile on you—your eye shall trace
The features of Semiramis;
And, as dead Samuel rose for Saul,
The Hebrew king, obey my call.

XVIII.

"Sappho in lyric utterance
Herself shall manifest—you'll hear
What held all Lesbos listening once."
Observed the sculptor's friend "I fear
'Twill show, if her authentic verse,
How death has changed her for the worse

XIX.

"But not alone live here again
Those who once were in the shadows vast
Whose birthplace was a poet's brain
Take substance, or a people past,
Or vanished faith, compact is brought
Before our eyes, in marble wrought.

XX.

"I know not if Medea stood
One moment to inflame her heart
With thoughts of Glauco, that the flood
Of jealous rage might force impart
To flash aloft yon dagger bare
But, if she did—behold her there "

XXI.

"Grief veils, as twilight veils the sky,
The beauty of this maiden's face,
Touches the features tenderly,
Transmutes, not hides, the charm and grace.
Lone princess, all her glories fled,
Jerusalem mourns, uncomfortable

XXII.

"That listening Sibyl, rapt and awed
Hears through the stillness of the shrine
Dread tokens of the coming God;
From those sad lips the will divine,
Dim prescience, wisdom veiled, would come
Ere yet the oracles were dumb

XXIII.

"Here are no fading ghosts, mere things
Of air As in the Pharaoh's land
The giant forms of ancient kings
Rise vast above the desert-sand,
So, o'er the flats of everyday,
The larger life that these portray

XXIV.

"Thus, the true magic, can compel
True homage, both of mind and heart
And he who wields such potent spell,
Endowed by nature, nursed by art,
May claim inheritance through these
With Phidias and Praxiteles."

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

WE reproduce, for the benefit of our readers, a fine poem which was published a few years ago in a leading London periodical. We do not recognise the writer, but "W. W. S." whom he addresses in this high classical and artistic strain, is evidently Mr. William Story, the eminent Sculptor-Poet who has, from a long time past, made Rome his home, where he has executed many works of art and whence he has issued many books, literary as well as technical. We recently offered a splendid little piece from Mr. Story's pen. Who that has once read will ever forget the vigorous stanzas in our issue of the 6th April? It will certainly do mankind good to remember the moral of the Hymn to the Conquered.

**

ON Saturday last, the Bengal Legislative Council passed the Bill for the protection of emigrant coolies in the labour district of Assam. The Council meet again on the 11th of next month.

.

SIR Stuart Bayley left for Chittagong on Thursday, by the British India steamer Kistna. He is accompanied by the Chief Secretary, the Public Works Secretary and the Private Secretary. He is expected to leave Chittagong on the 5th proximo by the steamer Kapurthala.

.

THE Lieutenant-Governor has published his intention to direct, under section 45 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878), that the river Kusi and its channels within the districts of Bhagulpore and Purneah are areas within which all unmarked wood and timber, and all wood and timber on which the marks have been obliterated or defaced by fire or otherwise, are deemed to be the property of Government, unless or until any person establishes his right and title thereto under the provisions of the said Act and the rules made under it. The proposed rules with regard to the collection of drift timber in the Kusi river, in the districts of Bhagulpore and Purneah, are also published.

**

FOLLOWING the example of the N. W. P. Government, the Government of Bengal has agreed to permit rent being paid by means of postal money-orders, and has published the draft rules on that behalf, inviting objections if any. The system has succeeded in the collection and payment of land revenue. The rayyets of Uttarbarh-Jhampardah, in the Howrah district, at war with their landlord, applied for the concession. The experiment will be first tried experimentally in the Burdwan Division, from the 1st July 1889. If the working for six months prove acceptable, the system will be further extended.

.

SENIOR Francisco Vasco Guedes succeeds Senhor Cardozo Carvalho as Governor-General of Goa.

.

THE Maharaja of Benares had been seriously ill of fever. We are glad he is improving.

.

THE Railway between Bhojpur and Porebunder has been completed.

**

THE Public Works Account's Committee have retired to Simla to draw up their final report.

.

MR. W. B. OLDHAM having obtained furlough for eighteen months. Mr. H. Lee, from the 24-Pergunnahs, acts as Magistrate and Collector of Burdwan.

.

MR. E. V. WESTMACOTT's time being up in the Port Commission. Baboo Jaggannath Khunnah has been appointed a Commissioner in his stead.

.

THE Second Criminal Sessions will commence on Monday next, Mr. Justice NOLAN presiding. We may expect some sensation, for the Calcutta Corporation stands charged with committing a nuisance.

.

THE Yearly Examination of Candidates for the Fourth Grade of Accountant, Public Works Department, will begin on Monday the 3rd June, at the Civil Engineering College, Seebpore.

THE session of the Engineer Department of the Civil Engineering College, Seebpore, begins on Monday the 3rd June. Applications for admission to the Mechanical Apprentice Department must be filed before 25th May.

THE week's Calcutta Gazette publishes the price-lists of staple food-crops in the local areas of Bengal, prepared under section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII of 1885, for the period from 1st October to 31st December 1888.

THE Dhurmtolla Street is one of the best in the Town. But the stables on both sides of its banks make it impassable from Wellington Square to the maidan. We would draw the attention of the Corporation to the unhealthiness of this portion of the street.

BEFORE a bench of magistrates in the Midlands, a well known lady was charged with shooting game without a license. In defence, the plea was that she had acted on impulse, having been asked to take a gun by a gentleman of the shooting party. It was found that she was engaged in the sport for two hours, too long for an impulse, and she was fined £2 and costs.

A FRENCH Raja Brooke has turned up at Paris. The Civil and Military Gazette's correspondent there recently mentioned a M. de Mayrena, who, after various incidents of travel in the East, found his way to the Principality of Sedang, where he has lately been elected King, whence he has gone back to France on a political mission. All this is romantic if true, but the previous question is, Where is Sedang?

A MOST interesting literary and historical "find" has been made in Great Britain. The Indian Planter's Gazette's Home Correspondent reports:—

"Not since the late Mr. E. E. discovered the great store of Pope and Caryll manuscripts, together with the autograph letters of King James II. and other distinguished personages, among the mouldering lumber of an outhouse at West Grimsted, has so interesting a discovery been announced as that of which Mr. Maxwell Lyte tells us in the introduction to his Report on the Duke of Rutland's Manuscript. Other eyes and hands had been at work in exploring the papers at Belvoir, but Mr. Lyte was not satisfied with the meagre results, and his perseverance was soon rewarded with a bundle of documents, comprising a letter of the Duke of Clarence, the hero of the 'butt of Malmsey' legend, whom Mr. Mansfield by the way has rather unceremoniously dismissed from his acting version of Richard III. More fortunate still, in looking for this bundle, he came across a key labelled 'key of old writings over stable,' and, guided by this hint, repaired to certain old stables at the bottom of the hill on which the castle stands. Here it was that, in a loft under the roof, he finally came upon a vast mass of ancient papers. Cobwebs hung from the rafters; dust, broken plaster, and dirt lay thick upon piles of documents standing three or four feet high, and leaving scarcely standing room. The rats had done their work in gnawing and staining, and many a paper which might have shed light on disputed points of history was found to be irretrievably damaged; but in the course of the first half hour the explorer found an autograph letter of Lord Burleigh, side by side with a letter of Charles James Fox. Rattled fragments of a letter of the Earl of Leicester, with other more legible gossiping letters from the Court of Elizabeth next repaid his toil. Then came more letters of the Duke of Clarence, with others from Warwick, the king maker, King Edward IV., the tyrant Richard, and his great adversary, the Duke of Richmond."

THE East India Association, which had not been heard of for a long time, has again entered appearance. They recently got up a very good meeting at the Westminster Town Hall. Sir Roper Lethbridge, M. P., presided and Mr. C. W. Whish read a paper on the Indian National Congress and the Indian Patriotic Association. We have not seen the text of the paper, but as reported it was a distinct condemnation of the Congress and its methods of agitation. According to Mr. Whish,

"the Indian National Congress might perhaps be described as the first attempt on the part of British India to demand a constitution and to aspire to representative self-government. Its members, among whom might be found representatives of nearly all the various races and creeds of Hindustan, claimed that they formed an Indian national party. Certain definite demands for reform in administration had already been formulated, including an examination for the Indian Civil Service in India itself, the practical abolition of the Arms Act, separation of the judicial and executive services, facilities for the attainment of commissions in the Army by natives of India, and the permission of native volunteering and representation through elected members in the councils of the Empire. Some of the methods employed by the reformers in furthering their views appeared particularly objectionable. The Government must do one of three things—either oppose, encourage, or compromise the congress. The contingency existed and must be faced. The English Government in India was peculiarly in need of some agency by which it could be brought into touch with the people.

It was to be feared that far too wide a gulf separated the rulers from the ruled for the former to be able rightly to understand the feelings, needs, and aspirations of the latter without some intermediary. However, there was much in the Nationalist programme which no Government ought to permit to continue, and it was the deliberate opinion of many by no means extreme politicians that the political propagandism of the congress must be put a stop to if a catastrophe was to be averted. Whichever way one turned a difficulty came to view, leading to the conclusion that a compromise was inevitable."

We can understand Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji's feelings on reading the report of this meeting. He it was that, by immense exertions involving great sacrifices, set up the East India Association. To what base uses has it come! must now be his reflection. Our friend Major Evans Bell has already gone to Heaven, or he would have felt the same mortification.

THE Allahabad High Court—Messrs. Justices Straight and Mahmood—are engaged on a boy conversion case. Last week, one Sarat Chunder Chuckerbutty applied to their Lordships for the restoration to his custody of his younger brother Satya Saran from that of the Revs. J. J. Lucas and H. Forman, missionaries of the American Presbyterian Church, on the following grounds:—

"1st.—That he is the elder brother and guardian of one Satya Saran Chuckerbutty, a minor, aged about 15 years, who, having been educated in the Jumna Mission School, passed the University entrance examination in March 1887 from that school, and has all along prosecuted his studies in that school, and was prosecuting his studies before last Christmas in the Muri College, Allahabad, at the expense and under the guardianship of the petitioner. 2nd.—That the respondents, being connected with the Jumna Mission School, on the 25th December 1887, baptised the said Satya Saran in the Jumna Mission Church, and the petitioner became cognisant of this fact on the 26th December 1887. 3rd.—That on the 29th December 1887 the said Satya Saran having intimated by letter to the said defendants his intention to renounce the Christian religion, the said defendants came to the petitioner's house, and demanded from the petitioner the surrender of the said Satya Saran, which the petitioner refused to do. 4th.—That on the 30th December 1887 the said defendants, without the knowledge or consent of the petitioner, improperly removed the said Satya Saran from the guardianship of the petitioner, and are now keeping him in their custody without any legal authority or permission. 5th.—That the petitioner has several times called the defendants to make over the said Satya Saran to him, but the defendants have refused to do so."

Mr. D. Banerji appeared for the applicant, and Mr. Howard and Mr. Alston for the Reverend gentlemen. They filed a counter-petition from the boy Satya Saran, in which he gives his age as 17, and that he, of his own free will, received baptism at the hands of Mr. Forman at Allahabad, and that, after his baptism, he went to his house where his brother made him to undergo purification and tell his neighbours that he had only intended conversion, but had not been baptised, that he had to bow to the goddess Durga and to drink of the churanamrita of his mother, and that he was afraid of his life if sent to reside with his brother who had threatened to kill him and Mr. Forman and then himself, if he did not do as directed. Both the brothers were examined by the Judges, and the case was adjourned sine die for order.

IN a letter, without date, the District Magistrate of Rajshahye Mr. H. A. D. Phillips, who has grown to be a terror to the local Zemindars, thus reports the accident at Madhanagor to the Englishman:—

"There seems to have been a small tornado such as that which occurred last year in the districts of Dacca and Pubna. To the west of the scene of the accident is an extensive beel stretching for miles, and it was across this beel that the wind came with immense velocity, travelling from south-west to north-east. On the west of the railway and near it are some villages, both to the north and south of the beel, and as the wind was backed up between the high land on either side its force and speed were, of course, enormously increased. The railway embankment is high, and the pressure of the wind through the space under the bridge must have been very great. The bridge is an open bridge, and the wind seems to have come from underneath and lifted the train off the rails. Had this not occurred, the rails would have been torn up, and the permanent way damaged. In one or two places can be observed the marks of wheels on the centre of the sleeper between the two rails, and similar marks on the masonry abutment outside. The width between the marks is just the width of the gauge. This shows that the train was bodily lifted up. The bridge has no rail or parapet on either side, but had one existed, it could not have prevented the train from going off."

"It is believed that there were about 125 passengers in the train, 40 regular passengers, and the rest coolies. There was no first class passenger. There was a European or Eurasian in the train, by name Macdonald, and he is said to have behaved very well, and to have rendered much assistance to the railway people. 69 persons were treated for wounds of various sorts, but only ten were severely wounded. Three people were killed, and one has since died. It is possible that there are other bodies lying under the carriages in the water. Nine carriages fell from the bridge into the water, a height of about 25 feet. Seven were completely capsized. Four carriages were smashed and crushed while three were not much injured. Had the accident happened in the dark, there must have been greater loss of life, the doors being jammed to. The depth of the water is only three feet. Two carriages were smashed to pieces, and I fancy that these may have been rather older carriages than the others.

"As I have said, nobody seems to have been to blame, but possibly further departmental inquiries may disclose some fault or defect."

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

OUR prediction has come true to the letter, after all! Belgium would not—could not allow any Boulangering nonsense in her territory. Finding that country too hot for him, the General has crossed over to England. He arrived at Charing Cross station on the 24th, where both groins and cheers awaited him.

For libelling M. Raynal, ex-Minister of Public Works, M. Gilly, one of the members of the Chamber of Deputies, has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

IN Russia, the Nihilists continue to be the terror. Their activity is now directed to manufacturing bombs at Zurich. Warned by the Prefect of St. Petersburg, the Czar had to forego his presence at the funeral of one of the ministers on the 20th.

FATHER MCFADDEN, charged with complicity in the murder of District Inspector Martin at Gweedore on 3rd February, along with two female and eighteen male peasants, has been let out on bail.

Mr. Conybeare, who championed the tenants at recent evictions in Donegal, has been charged with conspiracy to resist the law.

Mr. Parnell's Scotch action against the Times was non-suited for want of jurisdiction. He has since withdrawn his Irish suit.

An Indian loan of £3,500,000 at 3 per cent., for constructing railways in India and discharging debentures, has been floated by Lord Cross in England.

NAWAB Mehdi Ali had resigned his office as Finance Minister of the Nizam's Dominions, to point his disapproval of the course now adopted in connection with the Mining concessions. He could not well go out altogether, and has since been prevailed upon to withdraw his resignation.

Nawab Mehdi Ali Khan has shown his spirit by resigning. Having persisted in his opposition to the Medhi Hasan settlement supported by the Premier, that was the only course by which he could maintain his honour when, under the decision of the British Indian Foreign Office, that scheme was adopted. It was a protest not only against the local Vicer but also against the Government of India itself. Sir Asman Jah would not accept his resignation. He felt that with Mehdi Ali the ablest man in the ministry would depart and his administration would be utterly weakened. We should not be surprised to learn that Sir Asman Jah received a demi-official hint from Simla not to allow the withdrawal of the offended Secretary in the Finance Department. Nawab Mehdi Ali is not a common man. He has friends too in England who would doubtless have inquired of Her Majesty's Secretary of State the cause of the Nawab's resignation. Then the whole intrigue about the settlement with the notorious Deccan Mining Company would have come before Parliament and the public.

THE Calcutta University has been unusually late this time in publishing the results of the examinations. It is not yet known when we shall hear the last of the examinations. To-day we are only given the list of successful L. M. S. and B. A. s. In the first L. M. S., there are 11 and in the second 15 students, all from the Medical College. The B. A. list, from various colleges and institutions, gives the number 317, besides the Honours in the same examination. Here, we find, in English, First Division, 9, the Presidency College heading the list and returning 6. Next, the Metropolitan Institution giving 2 and the City College making up the total with its only one. The second Division has passed 37. Mathematics, 1st Division 4, 2nd, 14. Mental and Moral Science, 1st Division 5, 2nd, 18. Physics and Chemistry, 1st Division 5, 2nd, 8. History and Political Economy, 1st Division 1, 2nd, 3. Sanskrit, 1st Division 2, 2nd, 16. Persian, 1st Division 1. The Presidency College, in every instance, returns the most successful candidate in the order of merit. The Entrance result is expected in another fortnight. The First Arts is yet far off.

THE Calcutta Corporation lately passed a Resolution asking for power to control the sale of exciseable articles in their jurisdiction. The missionaries, as represented in their Calcutta Conference, have joined suit and memorialized the Bengal Government for the transfer of the authority to the local municipality.

IN Kurnool, in the Madras Presidency, the municipality derives an income from its street sweepings. The receipts equal Rs. 82 per annum for every thousand of the population. The attention of the other municipalities has been drawn by Government to the fact, with a view to an additional source of income. Here in Calcutta, the refuse is chiefly utilized for the reclamation of the salt lake. But Mr. Harrington has proposed to the Municipality to burn them all, for a consideration not exceeding the cost of their cartage.

The sweepings are removed from the streets at stated hours. The horse-droppings continue the greatest nuisance in the streets always. Can nothing be done to remove it? Why not farm the droppings out and raise an income and at the same time keep the streets clean of them?

CALCUTTA is rather a formidable place. There is never much charity between competitors in the same line, and we are so rich in shams and humbugs that we are apt to suspect every stranger as an additional burden. See how narrowly Mr. Spencer—a hereditary aeronaut of wide celebrity—escaped being hooted out as an imposter without common honesty! When at last he showed the stuff that was in him and indeed made a hit, carrying the hearts and the imagination of his detractors away with him in his seemingly wild flight high up the sky towards the Sunderbuns, he was not long allowed to enjoy his glory. The irrepressible Bengali entered appearance in the field as a rival, to show that there was nothing surprising in the feat of swimming in the air and disappearing in the clouds in a balloon. One Baboo Ram Chunder Chatterjee accompanied Mr. Spencer on his next ascent. Emboldened by his success on that occasion and encouraged doubtless by Spencer's instruction, he has announced his intention of going up this afternoon by himself, alone. Meanwhile, aeronautics itself has been reduced to an absurdity by the juvenile genius and ambition of Babudom. A native correspondent of the Indian Daily News, who, by the way, writes well, says that ballooning is the Baboo rage of the hour. It is the only subject of conversation in native society. It would seem that the Congress and Mr. Hume and even the substantial grievance of our friend Captain Hearsey have been already forgotten by a patriotic public. Why does not Sir Syed Ahmed Khan raise a subscription to invite Mr. Spencer to the Upper Provinces, to give a diversion to the minds of our people there now surcharged with the Congress past and future? Here, our very boys are after the balloon. And not in thought only but also in deed. Baboo N. N. Dass clinches his argument with this crowning anecdote of Penfant terrible of Young Bengal.—

"The desire to make such ascents has nevertheless taken a deep root in the native mind, and your readers will be astonished to hear of an attempt made in this direction by a little child. Master Hera Lal Chatterjee, a boy of six years of age, and the son of Baboo Behari Lal Chatterjee, of Rajah Rajbullub's Street, was asked by his playfellows yesterday (Ap. 21) whether he could descend from the top of a two-storied house by means of a parachute. The plucky fellow immediately replied that this would be the most pleasant thing to do, and getting hold of a broken umbrella proceeded to make it something approaching to a parachute by tying ropes round it. This done he ran up to the roof of his house which is a two-storied one, and is nearly 40 feet in height, and, moving round the so-called parachute in the air two or three times, threw himself down from the roof, before any one had time to say a word. There were many elderly boys present, who, had they known that the little child would really commit such an act of foolhardiness, would certainly have prevented him. The moment he let himself down from the roof, a cry was raised by the youthful spectators all round, who thought that their brave companion would be crushed to pieces in a second. By that time, however, the little fellow had reached the ground quite unhurt, and laughing heartily."

THE enthusiasm with which the southern reformers have set to work in promoting social amelioration, bids fair to be crowned with a considerable measure of success. Already, some twenty-eight high caste widow marriages have taken place. And there is no disposition to be content with this result. Old Dewan Bhahadoor Raghunath Rao is vigorously at work. He has called a Congress at Madras for consolidating the reform organisation. Here is his manifesto:—

"A meeting of the Re-marriage Association of Madras will be held in the premises of the Mahajana Sabha office at the Hindu office, at 5 P. M., on the 21st April 1889. All the resident members of the Association are requested to attend. All similar Associations and those sympathising with the former in the Mofussil are requested to depute one or more of its members to attend the meeting, or to appoint some residents of Madras to represent them at the meeting, furnishing them with a memo, showing what they may have done towards the realisation of the objects of the Association up to the end of 1888, and offering suggestions for the more efficient working of the same in future. At this meeting the question of the affiliation of these Associations with National Social Conference of India will be discussed. All sympathisers with both these Associations are earnestly requested to attend.

We confess we are sanguine of the ultimate success of the effort. But whether they succeed or no, so long as the reformers proceed on strictly Hindu, though of course liberal, lines, they deserve the full sympathy of every right-minded and feeling member of our community.

THE same remark applies to Mr. Malabari's reform. He has exhausted his wild oats in the line and is now moderation itself, and we cannot understand the jealousy with which he is still regarded in certain quarters, still less the malignity with which he is pursued. On principle, we are opposed to legislative interference with a social life having its roots in religion, and specially the interference of a legislature of foreigners. But no such objection holds in the case of the proposal to raise the age qualifications. That is already a matter of British law. But the law is obviously defective, and it is but reasonable that it should be amended. It would be a strange superstition that would not allow an enactment made in our generation to be touched.

THE Berlin Beauty Competition has ended disastrously. Beauty was all right, as became her, good soul and charming creature! but the male Beast spoiled the interesting fair. To keep off professionals, the jury were young married men and betrothed bachelors. The contention over the Golden Apple was here multiplied as many times as there were judges to adjudge the prize. Each considered his own the worthiest. From words the judges went to blows. The competitors left in terror. The police rushed in and closed the tournament. It is said 18 champions were wounded. And this is civilization!

SIR Comer Petheram had been neither to Barrackpore—where preparations had been made for his reception—nor to Darjeeling, as has been announced in the papers. He is at Kurseong, and is regaining his health. It is not yet known whether he takes leave. It does not matter.

THE heat and close atmosphere of the last two days is made bearable to-day by a south-easter. The squall prevented Ram Chunder taking his projected flight into the sky.

WE would draw the attention of our readers to the municipal advertisements elsewhere regarding licenses to be taken out for carriages and horses and trades, professions and callings. Horses and carriages must be licensed for the current half-year before the next month begins. We think it also necessary to point out that, as the author of the Act, Sir Henry Harrison improves upon the law by the addition of the declaration appended. The law as it is does not, that we can see, require any person to bind himself as the Chairman would wish. Neither the Act quoted nor the schedule makes any allusion to the verification.

Persons exercising any profession, trade or calling must take out their licenses at the old rate, before the 1st July. Any one who considers himself liable under a lower class, or exempt from the tax, must apply with particulars before that date.

WE hope the Chairman of the Corporation will not be as hard as his notice, in the collection of the House-rate for the last quarter of the expired year 1888-89. Two quarters' bills are payable during the current quarter. It would indeed be a hardship if the strict letter of the law were enforced in the realization of the bills. The Chairman has quoted both the old and the new Acts in support of his demand and intention to collect the bills by process of law, on expiry of a week after presentation. But the Chairman, in his eagerness to clear old accounts and to set the new Act agoing easy, forgets the practice and the rules saved by the new law, which require twice presentation of the bills and allow the Collector full one quarter to realize them. It would be in perfect keeping with the old and the new law, if both the bills were collected by 30th June. It is not necessary for the purposes of the Act that no bills for the current quarter should be issued till after the return of the previous quarter's bills by the Collector.

THE friends of the newly discovered Nestor of the bar, who has, for thirty years, been presiding at the unknown tribunal of public opinion that daily sits in the backslums of the High Court premises, are in great glee. They have wrung out a rejoinder from our Grandmother's Journal to the reply we gave it for its foolish championing of the said Nestor. They are hawking it about as a fine specimen of galee of the Grand Old Thersites. And, of course, we are undone. Only, we don't perceive it. Do any of our readers see the poor thing dancing on the skirts of our certainly "characteristic cap" that "points" its scorn at humbugs of all sorts? As for the satires of old Hans, we might well reply in Lessing's epigram. Hans

Has published satires upon me, you say,

Which vilify sorely my words and my deeds;

Pooh, publish?—poor Hans, let him scribble away,

That can scarce be call'd "publish'd" which nobody reads.

We had already administered our crusher, which will yet find its victims, to use a homely Bengali expression, dead in their respective quarters, from agony. If we now notice the feeble essay of the worm to turn round, it is out of some compassion for an old love. The Hindoo Patriot is visibly sinking so fast that it is doing it a good turn to notice it, even for rebuke or chastisement. Soon the poor thing will not be heard of.

It is widely recognised as the Sick Man of the Native Press. It has for some time been in a miserable state. And now the malady, having travelled from the extremities to the trunk, has gone up to the topmost regions. The doctors had advised a change of air, but the change must be thorough to give any ground for hope. Deoghar will not do, but the poor patient has been too long accustomed to Mohant's persad to move from that retreat. He must go to sea and make for Europe, and as far north as Perthshire, to have the benefit of the famous springs.

The Patriot under its present regime is too hard of sense to be felled by the classic axe. It is the veritable Scotch block requiring a surgical operation to make it perceive wit. In its low vitality it may be said to bear a charmed life. Knock it down, upset it, kick it over and over, and still it moves like Gahleo's earth. Haul it over the coals, and it only groans. Therein only it is English and no mistake. The stupid British, cried Napoleon, they know not when they are beaten!

Who shames a scribbler? Break one cobweb through,

He spins the slight, self-pleasing thread anew.

Destroy his fib or sophistry; in vain,

The creature's at his dirty work again.

And so it still makes a show, grunting and squeaking at us!

We have given it mortal offence for telling the truth about its condition.

Is there no hope, the sick man said,

The silent doctor shook his head.

And the sick man wants to dismiss the brave doctor who performs his melancholy duty without flinching, and tells every visitor that he is a fool and wears motley and—worst crime of all in the eyes of the naked and bare-headed Bengali—sports a "pointed cap"—the most distinguished headdress in the country.

Notwithstanding its condition patent to all the world, the Patriot has a good opinion of itself, and a very poor opinion of its neighbours. It pretends to turn up its nose at others' Billingsgate, but its delicate self itself hails from no more aristocratic neighbourhood than Balliaghata and Chingrihata. Accordingly, it has indited a peculiarly fishy paragraph. It calls itself the Triton and us the minnow. Pro-di-gious! This quite beats the aspiring frog in the fable hollow! And it talks of "blowing its wreathed horn to soothe the turbulent waves, and riding away!" Thank you, Martinus Scriblerus for that magnificent prose. Thou hast surely written thyself down an ass, and no mistake. The next time we shall find thee "riding on the whirlwind and directing the storm!"

As for calling us wretched, rash, intruding, fool, cad, and what not, why, thou art welcome to play with the whole dictionary, but nothing will alter facts. Thou mightest as well call thy "governor" salu, as call one who would lose caste if he stooped to be thy gooroo—thy spiritual guide here and hereafter—"cad." The truth is, as the Persian of old sang, the Almighty deprives of reason those whom he forsakes.

But for a' that and a' that, thank you for your new Tritonship. You will surely blow your wreathed horn, and are quite competent to control the turbulent waves. But you forget that you have only one voice, whether you aspire to the Triton's horn or Jove's thunderbolt. The bray is undisguisable.

One last word about the Suburban meeting which has been exercising poor Nestor and his friends. If a respectable man will come to us between 10 and 2 in the day, we will satisfy his curiosity. The thing is in print. We have had enough of Nestor and his crew—unless they again give offence. In spite of all we have said about him, we have spared an old friend who wilfully gave the first provocation.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1889.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION IN BOMBAY.

TECHNICAL education has been fairly established in Bombay. Well may the Western Presidency congratulate itself upon being the first in this new field. The commercial character of Bombay as well as the well-known liberality of its citizens, points to that city as, of all others, the natural leader in an experiment of this kind. Bombay having now set the example, let the rest of the country follow. The success also which has already attended the first start of the movement in Bombay, is full of hope for all in the future. Lord Reay, in formally opening the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute, felt just pride for the signal success which has been attained in a few months of its existence. This his Lordship attributed to the fact that, in setting to work, the Government had not waited for a programme. The Institute was placed under a strong representative committee, thoroughly conversant with the wants of the community, and then left to shape its own course, without being tied down by a preliminary hard and fast programme at the beginning. The advantages of this course and the dangers of insisting upon a programme to start with, were set forth in Lord Reay's inaugural speech with a charming freedom and candour. "In these few months of its existence," said Lord Reay, "the success has been signal and more than I could have expected, and it is greatly due to the fact that in starting this institution we did not yield to the cry with which we were met when we first thought of inaugurating technical schools. Where is your programme? Well, if we had been unwise enough to lay down a hard-and-fast programme, I doubt very much that we should have been here to-day. Nothing is easier than to draft programmes. Those who asked for it only wanted it for purposes of criticism. We should have been told that our programme was not definite enough or not comprehensive enough or too ambitious, and finally that we had not carried it out. We did not publish programmes; we did not publish many Government Resolutions; the only way in which technical education in India will prosper is to place such institutions under the guardianship of men who know the wants of the community and who are able to deal with these wants from close personal knowledge." One of the great dangers in starting is "to aim higher than the wants of technical education at the present moment demand." This has been avoided by the appointment of a committee possessed of practical experience of the needs of the community and the selection in Mr. Phythean of a Principal who is at once possessed of sound judgment and devotion to the cause of technical education. Steps have also been taken to secure a thoroughly scientific and sound teaching.

Technical education in the Bombay Presidency is placed in three divisions. First, there is the Polytechnic College of Science in Poona. Secondly, the Technical or Art School for dealing with Art in its application to Industries. The third division embraces all that is not included in the first two, and will be taken in hand when the Arts School has been completely developed. Lord Reay dwelt with satisfaction on the equipment of the Institute. "That special side of technical education—art applied to industry—finds its natural home in the Arts School. And I should not have been satisfied with what has been done here if I had not been able to give to the Arts School for the Art-industries the development it required. That has been done, and that being so, this institute, standing on its own proper footing, will hold its own against all comers, if it sticks to the programme which has been laid down, and which must ultimately take up the whole ground of what I have called the third division, all which does not properly belong to the two other divisions." The equipment of the Institute, satisfactory as it is for the short time it has been in existence, is still wanting in some things to make it complete. These were pointed out by the Governor of Bombay and comprise a laboratory for technical chemistry; dyeing silk, wool, cotton and vegetable fibres, bleaching and calico-printing; electrical engineering classes; a museum of industrial and commercial products; a hosiery department; a library; in the cotton department a department of research into the construction of ancient designs, and the formation, if possible, of original designs; and short-hand writing. His Lordship concluded with supporting the movement against the alarm which it has aroused in Europe. If the multiplication of technical schools in European cities has raised up opponents against them there, India offers a virgin field for the experiment, and the need of technical education is too really recognised to fear any similar opposition. Lord Reay also referred to the admiration commonly expressed for the old apprentice system in Europe at the expense of modern technical education. With all that may be urged in its favour, the apprentice system lacked the benefit of scientific training, and it is only a self-evident truth that a training in the rudiments of science must confer manifest advantages which were absent from the old system.

THE BURMAN AS HE IS.

UNTIL the other day, I was in ignorance of the existence of a pamphlet entitled, "The Burman As He Is," by Mr. James H. Linton, and published at the Methodist Publishing House. The pamphlet, I learn, gives not only the personal experience and observations of Mr. Linton, but as well the expressed views of many Englishmen, old residents of Burma, of the real character of the Burmese.

The author without hesitation acknowledges having freely availed himself of Commissioner Birgg's graphic description of the Burmese. Mr. Birgg's authority on matters in connection with Burma, as a disinterested and independent writer, is unquestionable and the very best guarantee Mr. Linton could give with reference to the accuracy of his statements. The valuable influence of such candid expressions can hardly be over-estimated. It gives me very great pleasure and satisfaction to be able to confirm every sentiment expressed in Mr. Linton's brochure, more so that it confirms my assertions in the article lately contributed to this journal, "How to Pacify Burma." It is something to know that I stand not alone in disinterestedly reviewing the present unhappy state of Burma.

In his pamphlet, Mr. Linton lays before his readers a series of brief sketches of prominent traits of Burmese character, not as a purblind partizan, but after a careful study of his subject, quoting many valuable illustrations in support of his assertions, all well and ably blended. Moderation has been his guiding policy; he has not suffered himself to jump to hasty conclusions, but is justly impressed with the erroneous representations made from time to time of the Burmese character, and asks, as I myself have frequently done, Why call men who are fighting for their national independence "dacoits" and "rebels?" They are patriots who, as Mr. Linton says, doubtless feel justified in punishing those of their countrymen who quietly submitted to the invasion of their country. It is untrue utterly, cruelly and shamefully that they are either "dacoits" or "rebels." They are, as Mr. Linton asserts, patriots struggling for the restoration of their national and hereditary rights.

Pages two to four of this compact little pamphlet, gives a vivid description of the Burman, and should disabuse the mind of every European, both in India and at home, of the absurd speculative hypothesis that they are incapable of rising above the ordinary rayyet of India. They are excellent athletes, and as fond of sports as any race in Europe or India, are naturally of a gay, lively and rollicking disposition, full of fun, and in every sense equals of the Hindoo or Mahomedan. They have a profound contempt for the natives of India, and will resent being treated other than as equals. They are high-spirited and very sensitive, where their fair fame is affected. Men and women have equal rights. Boat-racing is in great favor with the Burmese. Of this manly sport Mr. Linton gives a very spirited account in the 4th Chapter. Over Boat, Foot and Pony races, in the midst of the greatest enthusiasm, the Burman goes wild with excitement. Mr. Linton gives a good account of the three distinct races inhabiting Burma, the Burman proper, Mons and Karens, and speaks well of the American Missionaries, and I quite agree with Mr. Linton that one Karen Christian in a disturbance will do more good than 50 Punjabi policemen.

The last three chapters are devoted to the pucka dacoit, the opening chapter dealing with the oft-repeated tale of Theebaw's monstrous atrocities and massacres, which newspaper mongers, annexationists and agitators so highly coloured, exaggerated, and ultimately manufactured into a monstrous interesting tissue of falsehood. Mr. Linton says our one inveterate fault is a constant looking at foreign peoples through the medium of English glasses. I go further very much and say, fault being a misnomer, it is one of the many evils we carry along in our wake of civilization, like litigation, the magnitude of which, within the last 25 years, has grown beyond the capability of conception and is now the curse of India.

Buddhism neither encourages nor sanctions lawlessness and dacoity, and no Buddhist Priest does or will countenance either. Upper Burma has not yet accepted British supersession, and until it does so, (if ever) in the fullest acceptation of the term, there cannot and will not be peace!

Mr. Linton, in his last two chapters, deals with the real typical Burman dacoit, and draws a truthful similarity to him in the Indian dacoit, men who will go for anything from pitch and toss, to murder, crucifixion and torture of the most inhuman character. It is not want or poverty that constitutes the Burman dacoit's (in theatrical parlance) make up, it is his innate love of lawlessness, as with the European brigand, resulting in lucrative but dangerous employment.

Had I seen Mr. Linton's pamphlet sooner, I should certainly have noticed it in my article, "How to pacify Burma," as it contains much that is highly interesting at the present time in connection with Burma. The author has traced in remarkably good style and taste his graphic description of the law-abiding Burman, and the lawless dacoit, between whom there is no similarity, not even a remote likeness in their objects.

The little brochure is a most interesting and readable summary of undeniable and uncontestable facts, and should not only be read by every European and English-reading native in India, but should be read and inwardly digested by every man in Europe, who has or takes any interest in the East. It is a very instructive, a most readable booklet, and wholly void of any political reference. I hope this notice may attract notice. Mr. James H. Linton is the author. This pamphlet may be had at the Methodist Publishing House, 6 Waterloo Street, at eight annas per copy.

ZITO.

JOURNALISM IN EXTREMIS.

For shame! write better Labeo, or write none:

Or better write; or Labeo, write alone.

* * * * *

Of what is bad, a little's a greate deale.

Better is more: but best is nought at all.

Lesse is the next, and lesser criminal.

Little and good, is greatest good save one:

Then, Labeo, or write little, or write none.

Such is the advice that comes to every discerning lip, on marking the decadence of a once great journal in the hands of a well-known blockhead cast out of the Bæotia of Upper India and his worthy ambitious young nephew, inadequately checked and corrected and feebly sustained by the wreck of a man—a once famous knight of the quill now in his dotage, who, with loss of power, has been left only with a eunuch's spite. Such is the advice all benevolent spirits would give, if there was any chance of the pretenders and drivellers to listen to sense.

Had the paper been a legitimate concern, the evil might have been arrested in the usual normal way, or at least the public scandal long since suppressed. The proprietary would either have shut up a losing shop, instead of keeping it up with the reluctant doles of wealthy friends (as on the Doorga Pooja reckoning day), or sent the whole crew of weak or bungling hands to the right about. But it is a charity business—a trust property, and it is undergoing the fate of trust property in general. It is even more unfortunate, for it is a worse anomaly, as a business. The journal is at once a trust and the organ of a corporation. What wonder, then, that it should come to this! A corporation is an indifferent machinery for business management, and this nondescript corporation, since its soul left with the late Kristo Das Pal, has itself been in a bad plight for want of a good director, and is rapidly going down-hill. As for the Trustees, they are dominated by a lacklander of a retired schoolmaster burdened by a joke-loving Government with a territorial title which he can ill afford to support, even with the doubled pension procured him by the friend whom he always envied and to whose memory he has been foully ungrateful—(we mean, of course, Kristo Das Pal)—who sucked the life-blood out of the concern, so as to exhaust his remaining powers and bring himself to death's door, and blast his former reputation, without doing the paper any literary or political service, and still frantically sticks like a horse-leech to the very carcase!

Fond fool! six feet shall serve for all thy store;

And he that cares for most shall find no more.

We scorne that wealth should be the finall end,

Whereto the heavenly Muse her course doth bend;

And rather had be pale with learned cares,

Than paunched with thy choyce of changed fares.

Or doth thy glorie stand in outward glee?

A lave-ear'd asse with gold may trapped be.

But it is too late, this quest of the Golden Fleece. And California is not in Scott's Lane. And if Kristo Das Pal has left a fortune made on a native weekly, he evidently did not leave his recipe for the benefit of his successors. The mad attempt of the greedy Trustee to coin his failing brains into money, at the rate of Rs. 10 a column including extracts and all, sense or nonsense, even with the advantage of himself being his own computer and paymaster, could not make even a serving Raja rich but must make a paper poor indeed! It has already recoiled on both, making the one a sad spectacle and losing the other over twelve hundred subscribers. The latter seems beyond redemption. We would still wish to preserve the former. There might still be left work in him if he would give himself rest for a length of time. This, at any rate, is not the time of life to overwork the system. He may still watch, but then he must choose efficient hands.

The blockhead will never do. It is a dead piece of office furniture, which no amount of licking in public or private will improve into a mind. You may as well kick one of the racks in your press into a leader writer, as bully the blockhead into a sense of grammar.

There may possibly be danger from such tools, but never any good worth a thought. We will give a story from old Jelaluddin Rumi to this point:—

"The Prophet had a scribe who used to write down the texts that fell from his lips. At last this scribe became so conceited that he imagined all this heavenly wisdom proceeded from his own wit, and not from the Prophet. Puffed up with self importance, he fancied himself inspired, and his heart was hardened against his master, and he became a renegade, like the fallen angels Harut and Marut. He took his own foolish surmises to be the truth, whereas they were all wide of the mark, as those of the deaf man who went to condole with a sick neighbour, and answered all his remarks at cross purposes."

As for the young nephew, we will make him a parting present of a fable from the Arabic:—

"A lion took a wolf and a fox with him on a hunting excursion, and succeeded in catching a wild ox, an ibex, and a hare. He then directed the wolf to divide the prey. The wolf proposed to award the ox to the lion, the ibex to himself, and the hare to the fox. The lion was enraged with the wolf because he had presumed to talk of 'I' and 'Thou,' and 'My share' and 'Thy share,' when it all belonged of right to the lion, and he slew the wolf with one blow of his paw. Then, turning to the fox, he ordered him to make the division. The fox, rendered wary by the fate of the wolf, replied that the whole should be the portion of the lion. The lion, pleased with his self-abnegation, gave it all up to him, saying, 'Thou art no longer a fox, but myself!'"

We hope the lion will yet see through the wolf, and give due encouragement to the promising fox.

PATNA.

Patna city, April 19.

I have very little to write regarding the state of weather which is one of the favorite subjects with most of the correspondents who write for the papers. I must say however that it is getting warmer daily and that all the offices are now held in the morning. The latter portion of the night is cooler and the general health of the town is bad. Smallpox, fever and other diseases are prevailing. The weighing of opium has, I believe, commenced or is about to commence, and it is justly believed that at this particular time cholera and other diseases break out in an epidemic form. The reason is clear why the public health of the town suffers. But neither the municipality nor the authorities here have ever directed their attention to this matter, although this fact is known to all. A large number of cultivators come from the interior and they spread themselves in different parts of the town. Proper care is not taken to lodge them in any safe place. They are exposed and they add by their dirty habits to the already insanitary condition of the town. These men ease themselves on the river bank or on lanes and fields, near enough to the places where they stay in, and in some quarters the nuisance is so great that it is difficult for respectable persons to live in their houses without injuring their health. Most of the bye-lanes are used by the unclean inhabitants as public latrines, and this may be seen every morning if one passes through them. These cultivators also sometimes bring with them the germs of some infectious diseases which prove very dangerous. In all other districts, as far as I know, the opium factories are on the outskirts of the town, in a quiet place far from the populous part. I cannot understand why the same arrangement for weighing is not made here. I would draw the attention of the energetic and able Sanitary Commissioner to this fact and ask him to make it a point for enquiry during his next visit to Patna. Government may also ask him to make a thorough enquiry about the matter and report. He may ascertain the number of cultivators that visit the town, the accommodation which the Opium Department gives them and the sanitary precautions which are taken during their congregation. If attention is paid to safeguard their advent to the city, it will be a great boon to the inhabitants who are already exposed to the insanitary condition of this town. A place may easily be fixed and some Bungalows erected outside the municipality for weighing.

Our much respected Magistrate Mr. C. C. Quinn goes on leave for 6 months, and he has been relieved by Mr. Faulder who was acting as Joint-Magistrate at Chupra. Every one is sorry to lose him even for this short time.

On the 12th instant at about 8-30 A.M., a rather interesting ceremony of prize distribution to the boys of the Lodikotra Middle School took place, at the house of its energetic Secretary Munshi Mahomed Kayem. Mr. Quinn, the Magistrate, presided and there was a very select and influential gathering of the Mahomedan elite of the town. The Circle Inspector and other educational officers were also present. The Secretary of the School committee first read out the report, after which the prizes were given away by the president. This done he made a few suitable remarks on the condition and progress of the school and in respect of the general education of the Mahomedans in which he always took a keen and lively interest. He was followed by Mr. Syed Mahomed, Deputy Magistrate of Patna, who delivered a short but clear and forcible speech in Urdu. He commenced by explaining the purport of the address of the Magistrate-Chairman, and then made some useful remarks on the importance and usefulness of the Middle and Vernacular schools. In his opinion, if these schools were well conducted, they were very useful in giving elementary education to the students. He attributed the progress of general education in Bengal much to the opening of such schools. He insisted upon the moral training of the students and also looking after their vernacular when they were in such schools. He advised all supporters of education in Behar and those who are responsible for the conduct and character of students, not to mix in politics which, he said, had done much harm both to the students and their guardians in Bengal. He said that the control and care of the students should not be allowed to pass in Behar from the hands of the headmasters, principals, and teachers to those of the Magistrates, District Superintendents and other Police officers, as has generally been the case in Dacca and other Districts in Bengal. He would warn all against such a danger, and apprehended there were signs of such a tendency visible in Behar among the students. He pressed upon the teachers the importance and necessity of maintaining the strictest discipline, and appealed to the guardians to strengthen the hands of the teachers. He then thanked the President for the interest which he always took in the education of his co-religionists. The officiating Circle Inspector then made a short speech bearing testimony to the interest taken by the President in general educational matters and complimented the Secretary. A vote of thanks was then proposed to the chair and the meeting dispersed. The European gentlemen present were asked to some light refreshments which they accepted. Nawab Syud Velayet Ali Khan, C. I. E., and the Secretary of the School also thanked the chairman.

Last night, the Evening Party given by Syud Fazley Imam Khan Bahadur, in honor of Mr. Quinn, came off. Almost all the European gentlemen and ladies of the station were invited. A select number of native gentlemen were invited on account of insufficient accommodation. The party was a great success on the whole. Refreshments were served to all the guests, both native and European, and there was a very good display of fireworks prepared locally which was appreciated and admired by the guests. Nothing was left to make the guests comfortable. For about 3 hours the party lasted and there was very good and desirable intercourse between the natives and the Europeans who mixed freely and talked on interesting subjects. Mr. Quinn had a kind word for every one and he was the great centre of attraction throughout. The Syud must be congratulated on the success of his party. It would be better if the natives were also invited by European gentlemen to similar parties tending to increase good feeling between them and better understanding.

BEHAREE.

THE PATRIOT'S HERO-WORSHIP AND HEROISM.

Reis is dishd and no mistake. It has been eternally damned by the Prince of darkness. Sir Oracle of the Press has thundered anathema and maranatha at it. The "erratic" Editor will, it is feared, hardly survive the blow, dealt, though it is, by a man and brother. Man did I say?

Ay, in the catalogue he goes for a man.

As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs,

Sloughs, water-rugs and demi-wolves, are clept

All by the name of dogs.

The offence was, of course, as dire as the castigation administered is severe. Since its very birth, Reis has been a thorn in the side of the publicans and sinners. The fond hope that it would ere long die a natural death could only render the first two or three years of its existence somewhat tolerable. But as soon as the Patriots of the Period realized that, striking though it was, it was a power—a veritable David that would make not a few Goliaths bite the dust—they laid their heads together for devising some plan for making short work of it. But alas!

The best-laid schemes o'mice and men
Gang aft a-gley
And lea'e us nought but grief and pain
For promised joy.

Despite their snarling, grumbling and gnashing of teeth, Reis throve apace, "going from strength to strength." And it soon became so immensely powerful as to usurp the function of the grim monster Time,

To unmask falsehood, and bring truth to light.

It chose satire to be its weapon and made a point of running amuck and tilting at Saints, savages and sages, Reises, Rayyets and even the protégés of the Patriot, whenever they were caught tripping. The devils in disguises as well as the unco-patriotic scamps quaked. They feared their days were numbered. The miserable have no other medicine than hope, and they laid the flattering unction to their soul that with growing age it would see the error of its ways and come round. They might as well have hoped to gather grapes from thorns and figs from thistles. What is bred in the bone will stick to the flesh. It is more possible for a leopard to change his spots than for a 'perverse' journalist to get rid of the pernicious penchant for unmasking the dissemblers and charlatans. That a man who punishes every one according to his desert will raise a host of enemies against him, is but natural. For "Punish every one according to his desert," says the bard of Avon, "and none shall escape whipping," and for man to pocket an affront--for in that light will a transgressor regard the chastisement inflicted with a view to his correction--is out of the question. This, I suppose, is the only solution of the problem as to why Reis stinks in the nostrils of the swinish multitude. But the multitude, as said by the Earl of Roscommon, is always in the wrong and consequently to be dispraised of it is no small praise. The unpopularity of a paper is, I should think, often the true test of its intrinsic worth. "Woe unto you," says the Prince of Peace, "when all men shall speak well of you."

Thus much may serve by way of proem
Proceed I therefore to my theme.

Ever since the shaky, sycophantic hero of the birch was kicked up to the position of editor, much as a donkey was created a consul of the Empire by Tiberius, I have given up reading the Patriot. Not that I would seem to imply that a newspaper of the Patriotic class requires any colossal intellect, profound scholarship and extensive observation in its editor. Far from it. Any Jack, unblest with brains and guiltless of all knowledge of science, literature, politics or the arts, may, with the assistance of certain quantities of brass, gall and wormwood and quintessence of nonsense and a big bellows to blow up the sins of the big swells, successfully conduct such a paper. It was only yesterday that a friend drew my attention to the now famous Patriotic leaderette that has canonized "the precious old fogey" and done for the veteran Doctor to the great glee of the men of motley. The Patriot will never want a hero

When every Gazette sends forth a new one, neither will it ever yield in its enthusiasm for hero-worship. It knows like the illustrious sage of Chelsea--though in an altogether different sense--that great men are a profitable company. But that it should come to this! That the Gazette should become so barren as to necessitate the Patriot's going to fresh woods and pastures new in quest of a hero! But if the Patriot had to make a departure from its almost lifelong practice in the selection of its hero, it has lighted upon one to whom even the worthies of old are not fit to hold a candle.

* * Nature made but one such man
And lost the perfect mould.

Yes, he is our Nestor and more--our Nestor, Gamaliel, Coryphæus, admirable Crichton, Bayard and the rest all in one. The Patriot, however, is content to compare him only to the first two. But to be serious, is not the cacothetic scribbler run mad? But malaproposum is so much in the line of the Patriotic paper that I wonder that it has not yet used that lucky simile "as headstrong as an allegory on the banks of the Nile" with reference to Dr. Mookerjee, the arch blasphemer. Certain words and phrases are so much in favor with the Patriotic editor that he will be irresistibly led to use them, in season and out of season, no matter whether their application is apt or otherwise. It may be that he finds "great support" in them much as the old woman in the story used to do "in that comfortable word Mesopotamia."

The Patriot is nothing if not original. A man must needs be a Nestor provided he has attained the three score years and ten of the palmist and is in the good books of the B. I. A. But does not Sir Patriot know that when the age is in, the wit is out and that

It is not growing like a tree
In bulk doth make men better be
Or standing long an oak, three hundred year
To fall a log at last, dry, bald and scar?

But not content with desecrating the name of Nestor, the sapient Sarbadhikari compares the fossilized flunkey to the distinguished Jewish rabbi--Gamaliel. Can anything be more sacrilegious? Does he not know that a Gothamite and a Gamaliel are as different from each other as chalk from cheese? But however overweening an opinion the model man of the Scott's Lane journal may have of himself, he has never dreamt even in his wildest dream that a comparison will ever be instituted between him and Nestor and Gamaliel. Verily, nothing but the unexpected happens. He rose one fine morning and found himself famous. But as a candid friend I ought to tell him that the toad's highest idea of beauty is his toadness and the small snob's highest idea of manhood is the great snob; and so

Though Patriot worships at his word

He is but but a coof for a' that.

The wretched scribbler would not only rescue his idol from total destruction but would also demolish the iconoclast. He forgets however that Pygmies are pygmies still, though perched on Alps, and that none but a non compos mentis would ever attempt to draw out a leviathan with a hook.

Vessels large may venture more,

But little boats should keep near shore.

Throwing as much mud as possible over the good name and fair fame of the veteran Knight of the quill ans par et ans repré in the hope that some would stick, the Patriot calls him eccentric, perverse, and what not. It is a matter of congratulation that it has spared the epithet "isosceles triangle" and thus saved the Dr. from annihilation. Reis, as I have already said, is care to the general. But pearls are pearls still though trampled upon by swine. Though bats may refuse to fly in the light that does not diminish the splendour of the luminary. A man who is a consistent upholder of all that is good and worthy, who is too fond of right to pursue the expedient and

Who will flatter neither Neptune for his trident

Nor Jove for his power to thunder, stands little chance of being appreciated by a wretched specimen of humanity who is only too ready to sell his birth-right for a mess of pottage, whose guide philosopher and friend realizes in Iago his ideal of honesty.

The concluding lines of the leaderette are characteristic of a patriotic paper:--"No judgment ought to be formed upon the national character basing it upon the aberrations of an eccentric journal." Certainly not. If judgment is to be formed upon the national character of the native, it ought undoubtedly to be based upon such patriotic writings as these:--

"We can better lose a hundred Mulhar Raos than a single Northbrook." "Mandalay has fallen; King Theebaw has surrendered; the entire kingdom of the Lord of the Golden Umbrella is now an appanage of our gracious sovereign. It is time for general felicitation, and we congratulate our Queen Empress on this rich and extensive accession to her dominion, on which the sun never sets."

Oh, wad some power the giftie gife us

To see oursel's as others see us!

THURIEL'S SPEAR.

THE "MAHOMEDAN MISSIONARY" IN DACCA.

On reading your paper of the 13th instant my attention was directed to the letter of your Dacca Correspondent "Alpha," and I was much amused at the account in it of the antecedents, qualifications and avocation of a Mahomedan Missionary who has been for some time making a great fuss among the schoolboys of some of the Eastern districts. It is a great mistake that anybody should be tempted to write upon a subject of which, or regarding a person of whom, he knows nothing or next to nothing. The desire of seeing themselves in print is so great among our youngmen, that they care not to enquire before committing themselves. Let any person come in whatever garb he likes and let him create a fuss, and the young men of the present generation will honour him with all their power, and it is not unoften that I see some of our old men also following suit and making fools of themselves. A stranger particularly should always be received with caution, but there is no harm in paying any one the tribute that is justly his due.

Holloway's Ointment--Sores, Wounds, Ulceration, and other diseases affecting the skin, are capable of speedy amendment by this cooling and healing ointment, which has called forth the loudest praise from persons who had suffered for years from bad legs, bad breasts, piles, abscesses, and chronic ulcers, after every hope of cure had long passed away. None but those who have experienced the soothing effect of this Ointment can form an idea of the comfort it bestows by restraining inflammation and allaying pain. Whenever Holloway's Ointment has been once used it has established its own worth, and has again been eagerly sought for as the easiest and safest remedy for all such complaints. In neuralgia, rheumatism and gout, the same application, properly used, gives wonderful relief.

The writer of the letter seems to be as innocent of the antecedents of the so-called Moonshee Hasan Ali of Bhagalpore as the latter himself is of Arabic and Persian. As the religious cloak is always a very mysterious thing for imposing upon the public, so it is used in every country and community for profitable wordly purposes and it has always been found successful to deceive the people. History and the experience of every person are full of instances in which very clever persons were marvelously influenced by imposters. To give at once a passport and importance to himself this gentleman calls himself a "Mahomedan Missionary," instead of a Waez (preacher). "Master" Hasan Ali has changed several colours within the last 20 years. He is a native of Bhagalpore town and is a "half caste" Mahomedan. His father is a Marwari and his mother a Mahomedan woman of the town--Bhagalpore. He learnt a little English here and afterwards went to Patna where he became a schoolmaster. He was at one time believed to be a Brahmo, then he was considered a Nechari and up to this time he is looked upon as a Nechari by those Mahomedans who know him thoroughly, although he disclaims it now. His mother tongue must be that corrupt Urdu which is spoken at Bhagalpore, but he has acquired a practical knowledge of it by reading Urdu newspapers and such Urdu books as he could understand. He can now speak Urdu in the strain and with the accents of converted native Missionaries and that is even too much for the schoolboys of Dacca, Pubna and Calcutta. He cannot speak correct and polished Urdu. As for his classics, he can hardly read two lines of Arabic and one paragraph of Persian correctly, not to speak of writing in those languages. He has read, I believe, up to the First Arts and his English is ordinary. With all these qualifications, of which he is himself aware, he passes unblushingly among the ignorant classes as a learned Moulvie and a profound Oriental scholar, on the principle of "fools rush in where angels fear to tread." It is a great insult to the Mahomedan religion and community to call him a Mahomedan Missionary or a Moulvie in the literary sense. While at Patna he did not confine his avocations to the teaching of boys, but he extended his private mission so much in some families that in order to safeguard the religious tenets of young boys it was found necessary to close the doors against him, and he was afterwards always received and regarded with much suspicion by the orthodox Mahomedan families. Finding that his Nichari tendencies did not benefit him much, he thought of "fresh fields and pastures new," and became a Missionary. Certainly he has been more successful in his new profession as far as his personal comforts are concerned. You know, Mr. Editor, how men of this class are treated by the Mahomedans. He went one day to preach in the Chauk Masjid here, but he was stopped very rudely, and if some good and respectable people had not interfered he would have been very badly treated. The Dacca Mahomedans are very keen about their religion, and have always been a terror to all classes of theological imposters. If Munshi Hasan Ali (as he is called for the sake of politeness) had really been an honest person, he would have at first taken the opportunity of contradicting untrue and groundless statements about his knowledge and learning, &c. Our young schoolboys now want everything, even their religion, through some English channel, and therefore the mere name of Missionary has peculiar charm for them. I have heard that the Mahomedans of Clark Bazar were very much irritated and they had collected a bundle of sticks to drive the Munshi Sahab off their mosque.

There is no harm in any person preaching good things to the boys on moral and other subjects. But religion is a subject which should not be trifled with in this way. If Mr. Hasan Ali would speak on such subjects which he knows or can gather from Urdu or English books, I would not object. But certainly he should not try to mislead people by making any false impressions upon them. It is not an easy thing to pass for an Oriental scholar at Dacca where there are still some scholars of whom Bengal may well be proud.

The late Moulvie Karamut Ali, our most popular and venerable Waez, carried from Bengal about 35 lakhs of rupees, and his worthy son Hafez Ahmed Sahab is now moving and living like a prince in East Bengal. Poor Hasan Ali has also got a living by becoming a Missionary to the schoolboys which must be more paying and more consoling to him than his schoolmastership and Private Secretaryship to certain ignorant Reises of Patna.

If Master Hasan Ali (as he is known at Patna) makes another attempt to preach in our mosques here, I think he will have to rue his experience of Dacca. Mr. Clark ought to watch his movements and remember the riot between the Hannafis and Wahabees which had caused a commotion at Dacca.

WELL INFORMED.

Dacca, the 16th April 1889.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Sealed tenders are invited and will be received by the Vice-Chairman up to noon of Wednesday the 8th May 1889, for undertaking the repairs to several mehters' barracks consisting of tiled huts. Separate rates must be submitted for each description of work. The covers to be superscribed "Tender for repairs to Mehters' Barracks."

The Commissioners do not bind themselves to accept the lowest or any tender.

JOHN COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.

26-4-99.

NOTICE.

Sections 77-80 of Act II (B. C.) of 1888.

All persons keeping carriages and draught or riding animals within the Municipal limits of Calcutta as defined in the Act, are hereby reminded that the carriage and horse-licenses they may at present hold, whether issued by the Commissioners of the Town of Calcutta or of the Suburbs of Calcutta, expired on the 31st March last, and that applications for licenses for the half year April to September, 1889, should be made to the undersigned before the 1st of May next. An application for a license should give a description of all carriages and animals liable to the tax owned by or in charge of the applicant, and should be accompanied by the amount of tax payable according to the rates mentioned in the schedule given below. Any person who becomes the owner, or takes charge of any carriage or animal after the first of May, should, within a week of his becoming owner or taking charge, make a similar application for license. Whoever owns or is in charge of any carriage or animal without the required license shall be liable to a fine not exceeding three times the amount payable in respect of such license, and not being less than one and half times such amount.

By Order,
R. CHATTERJEE,
License Officer.

1st April, 1889

SCHEDULE.

	Per half-year.	Rs.	A.	P.
For every four-wheeled carriage drawn by two horses	...	12	0	0
If more than one such carriage, then for every such carriage after the first, two-thirds of the above rate	...	8	0	0
For every four-wheeled carriage drawn by one horse, or pony or mule, or a pair of ponies or mules under thirteen hands	...	6	0	0
For every two-wheeled carriage drawn by one or more animals	...	6	0	0
For every horse (not a race horse), pony or mule	...	6	0	0
For every race horse	...	12	0	0
For every pony or mule under thirteen hands	...	2	0	0

I declare that the above is a correct description of all carriages and animals liable to the tax, belonging to me or under my charge, and kept within the limits of Calcutta as defined in Act II (B. C.) of 1888.

Signature Residence
Stabling

NOTE.--Carriages, the wheels of which do not exceed twenty-four inches in diameter are exempted.

NOTICE.

Sections 87-90 of Act II (B. C.) 1888.

All persons exercising any of the trades, professions, or callings mentioned in Schedule 2 of the above Act within the limits of the Municipality of Calcutta, as defined in the said Act, are hereby reminded that the licenses they may hold under Section 76 of Act IV (B. C.) of 1876 expired on the 31st March last, and that they should take out their licenses for the official year 1889-90 without delay. An application for license should mention the profession, trade or calling of the applicant, all his places of business including yards, godowns or factories and the monthly valuation under Chapter V of the Act or the rent of each separate place of business. If, in consequence of any change in his profession, trade or calling or place of business, or for any other reason, a person considers himself entitled to take out a license in a lower class than in the previous year, or to be altogether exempted, he should present an application to that effect to the Commissioners before the 1st of July next, failing which he shall be liable to take out a license as in the previous year, notwithstanding the change in his profession, trade or calling. Whoever exercises any trade, profession or calling without a license on or after the 1st of July next, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding three times the amount payable in respect of such license, and not being less than one and-a-half times such amount.

By order,
R. CHATTERJEE,
License Officer.

1st April, 1889.

NOTICE is hereby given that, under sections 94-96 of Act II (B. C.) of 1888, the registration of Carts, Hackeries and other wheeled Vehicles, with or without springs and not included in the definition of Carriage in the above Act, for the first half of the official year 1889-90, shall be made at the Office of the Commissioners of Calcutta on the 1st of April 1889, and on each successive day during the half year, holidays excepted, and that a fee of Rs. 4 will be required for each registration.

By order,
R. CHATTERJEE,
License Officer.

1st April, 1889

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas

or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

A SPECIAL GENERAL MEETING of the Commissioners of the Town of Calcutta, under Act II. (B. C.) of 1888,

WILL BE HELD AT THE TOWN HALL,
on Thursday, the 2nd May, 1889, at 3 P.M.
BUSINESS TO BE BROUGHT FORWARD.

1. The Chairman to lay upon the table report for the quarter ending 31st March, 1889.
2. To consider the revised rules for conduct of business at General Meetings as passed by the Bye-laws and Rules Sub-Committee, at their Meeting on the 16th April.
3. To approve the proposed rules for the protection of wild birds and game.
4. Prince Mahomed Buckhtyar Shah to ask—(1) for a list of the ghee vendors prosecuted during the quarter January to March of this year, together with the result of the cases and the amount of fines imposed; and (2), whether, in the opinion of the Chairman and Health Officer, the Food Inspectors do all that it is in their power to do to put down the adulteration of ghee, as it is very difficult to procure pure ghee.
5. To confirm the proceedings of the Town Council at the Meeting held on the 30th March, 1889.
6. To confirm the proceedings of the General Committee at the Meeting held on the 13th April, 1889.
7. To confirm the proceedings of the Water Supply Extension Committee at the Meeting held on the 18th April, 1889.
8. To confirm the proceedings of the Bustee and Town Improvement Committee at the Meeting held on the 22nd April, 1889.
9. Vital statistics for the month of March, 1889.

JOHN COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.
24th April, 1889.

WANTED.

Three or four qualified temporary Sub-overseers, experienced in earthwork, and expert at levelling.

Salaries from Rs. 40 to Rs. 55, and, where a horse is necessary, horse allowance.

Apply, stating salary that will be accepted, to
THE DISTRICT ENGINEER,
Bhagalpur

District Engineer's Office,
Bhagalpur, 15th April, 1889.

FOR SALE

Price	Post free	Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt	Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound	Rs. 5-8

Mossful Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN
Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late
NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR.
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State
Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"
1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following: [Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river. [Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye: [Extract.]
The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course. — [Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting: [Extract]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books, &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

LOVERS OF GOOD TEA

Are strongly recommended to try our Flowery Orange Pekoe with Rose-like Aroma, @ Rs. 2 per lb.

T. HILL & CO.,
Adjoining Courtman Theatre,
Calcutta.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co. "Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "SCINDE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 26th instant.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessel should be sent to the Company's Godown at Juggannauth Ghat not later than Thursday the 25th idem.

CACHAR LINE.

For particulars of the sailings of this line please apply to the undersigned

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.
The Steamers of this Service leave DhUBRI daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special bi-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, and Debrooghur on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A tri-weekly service is maintained between Naraingunge and Panchooingunge for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MAC NEILL & CO.,
Agent

12, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

BEETHAM'S

GLYCERINE - AND - CUCUMBER

For INDIA and HOT CLIMATES this recently patented emollient makes an INVALUABLE IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and REFRESHED in the HOTTEST WEATHER Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, REDNESS, FRECKLES, TANNING, and RENDERS the SKIN DELICATELY SOFT, SMOOTH, and WHITE

It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY, IT PREVENTS IT FROM BECOMING COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN and WIND more effectively than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the HEAT and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers M. BEETHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."*All who suffer find sure relief fromLITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM*The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system

Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENTTHE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS, They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA.
(Opposite the Police Court.)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

*No EXTRA CHARGE.BERIGNY & CO.12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, showing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusli Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lockets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutta, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

OBTAINED

Thirty-three Prize Medals and First Class Certificates and were specially appointed by the Royal Commission for the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in 1886, where not a single case of illness occurred amongst the native artisans there employed.

Authorized by the Government of India; and largely used by the Calcutta and other Municipalities.

Sanctionedby Her Majesty's Board, of Trade.

Used in the Royal Households, by Her Majesty's Government Establishments, by the Corporation of London, Parochial Vestries, Smithfield and Billingsgate Markets, Peninsular and Oriental and other Steam Navigation Companies, the Railway Companies, Principal Hospitals, &c.

Agents:—DYCE, NICOL & CO.,

3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press

THE

FALL OF MANDALAY,
BY
ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime subscribers may register their names with

Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

298A, Upper Circular Road,
CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

In consequence of the difficulty and delay in getting together reliable matter for the guide portion of the work and the preparation of numerous illustrations which must be executed in England, some delay necessarily will arise in the execution of the work. But intending subscribers should not delay in registering their names at the above address.

DIPPIE & Co.,

Agents and Correspondents for the author

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION

CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,—

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET*(PRINCE AND PEASANT)WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

*Review of Politics, Literature, and SocietyRATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	Rs. 12
Half-yearly	...	7
Quarterly	...	4
Monthly	...	Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy,	...	0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. {

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1889.

} No. 373

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

A HYMN.

[From the French of Lamartine.]

THERE is an unknown language spoken
By the loud winds that sweep the sky ;
By the dark storm-clouds, thunder-broken,
And waves on rocks that dash and die ;
By the lone star, whose beams wax pale,
The moonlight sleeping on the vale,
The mariner's sweet distant hymn,
The horizon that before us flies,
The crystal firmament that lies
In the smooth sea reflected dim.

'T is breathed by the cool streams at morning,
The sunset on the mountain's shades,
The snow that daybreak is adorning,
And eve that on the turret fades ;
The city's sounds that rise and sink,
The fair swan on the river's brink,
The quivering cypress' murmured sighs,
The ancient temple on the hill,
The solemn silence, deep and still,
Within the forest's mysteries.

Of Thee, oh God ! this voice is telling,
Thou who art truth, life, hope, and love ;
On whom night calls from her dark dwelling,
To whom bright morning looks above ;
Of Thee—proclaimed by every sound,
Whom nature's all-mysterious round
Declares, yet not defines Thy light ;
Of Thee—the abyss and source, whence all
Our souls proceed, in which they fall,
Who hast but one name—INFINITE.

All men on earth may hear and treasure
This voice, resounding from all time ;
Each one, according to his measure,
Interpreting its scenes sublime.
But ah ! the more our spirits weak
Within its holy depths would seek,
The more this vain world's pleasures cloy ;
A weight too great for earthly mind,
O'erwhelms its powers, until we find
In solitude our only joy.

So when the feeble eye-ball fixes
Its sight upon the glorious sun,
Whose gold-embazoned chariot mixes
With rosy clouds that towards it run ;
The dazzled gaze all powerless sinks,
Blind with the radiance which it drinks,

And sees but gloomy specks float by ;
And darkness indistinct o'ershade
Wood, meadow, hill, and pleasant glade,
And the clear bosom of the sky.

D. M. M.

"HE PURGETH IT."

NATIONS need sometime suffering : when our mood
Is soft, emasculate, and fearing pain ;
When indolence and torpor chill the blood,
And insolence and bluster fire the brain ;
When, puny sons of mighty sires, we deem
Our fathers' stature greater than our own,
We cannot wear their armour ; and we dream
Heroic dreams, the life heroic flown :
Then, oh ! come loss, come suffering—only shame
Be absent ! come, and to our souls discover,
Ere the reluctant day of grace be over,
Lost manhood's greatness, now inert and tame !
Virtue's foundation strong is to be bold ;
The nobler metal iron is, not gold !

—Spectator.

A. G. B.

SONNET.

TO THE LIBERAL UNIONISTS OF 1887.

YE, who, to Virtue and your Country vowed,
Reject, denounce dishonoured party ties,
And side by side with ancient enemies
Confront the Jacobin onset blind and loud
Nor snared by sophist tongue nor clamour-cowed,
England's brave sons, pursue your high emprise
So much the more, the more the unjust, the unwise
Rain on you fire from faction's low-hung cloud.
Against you march Revolt and Rapine's brood :—
That sect its scope remoter knows not yet :
In France its axe is red with brothers' blood :
Firm as a flint your face 'gainst such is set.
Old friends change faith : to old convictions true
Ye change but place. Changelings are they, not you.

—Spectator.

AUBREY DE VERE.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers.—Daily experience confirms the fact which has triumphed over all opposition for more than forty years, viz., that no means are known equal to Holloway's remedies for curing bad legs, bad breasts, sores, wounds, diseases of the skin, erysipelas, abscesses, burns, scalds, and, in truth, all maladies where the skin is broken. To cure these infirmities quickly is of primary importance, as compulsory confinement indoors weakens the general health. The ready means of cure are found in Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which heal the sores and expel their cause. In the very worst cases the Ointment has succeeded in effecting a perfect cure after every other means had failed in giving adequate relief.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

WE find among the Mss. on our table, a well written communication dated the 29th March, on Mr. Spencer's balloon ascent from the Maidan, condemning his foolhardiness and asserting, on personal testimony, against the aeronaut's own denial that he had been goaded to the mad enterprise of starting without his parachute by the mockings and taunts of the crowd of high and low spectators around him. The letter would certainly have appeared if it had not been mislaid. We beg our correspondent's pardon.

IN honor of the Queen's birthday, there will a state dinner and Levée at the "Viceregal Lodge," Simla, on Friday, the 24th May. The Birthday Ball comes off on the 30th.

THE Prodigal has gone home. The Bombay Government would not reimburse Mr. Crawford for any portion of his expenses in the Enquiry on his conduct. He will doubtless kick up a row in the Mother Country. He is sure of the sympathy of the speculators, great and small, with which it abounds. And the Times will thunder at poor Lord Reay.

THE jute trade still languishes. The Calcutta Jute Manufacturers' Association have decided to work less hours still. From the 4th July, the mills will produce jute goods ten per cent less. In other words, they will work nine days instead of ten in a fortnight.

THE Lieutenant-Governor returned from Chittagong by the S. S. Kistna on Monday evening.

ONE Kali Kahar—a punkah-puller in the Bank of Bengal—picked up at Howrah a third class ticket to Gya. He is a knowing man and meant to utilize the find. He presented it to the ticket seller and wanted a refund of the value, saying that he had changed his mind and would not go to Gya that day. At this moment, the real owner of the ticket turned up and complained of the loss of his ticket. Kali was made over to the police. He confessed his guilt to the Magistrate who sent him to jail for three months.

THE Sultan has strongly protested to Mukhtar Pasha against the application, by Arabic journals in Egypt, of the titles King and Kafa which are the exclusive distinction of the Sultan, to the Khedive.

M. VAMBERY has permission from the Sultan of Turkey to examine the secret archives in the Imperial Library at Stamboul.

THE remains of Lord Ely were burned not buried at Woking. Under orders of the Bishop, the church service was not read till after the cremation.

As a prevention against fires in public offices, the Government of India, we are told, has addressed a circular to Heads of Departments suggesting the appointment of "Fire Clerks" in each office. These officers should be teetotalers.

THE Special Sub-Registrar of Khulna has been appointed an ex-officio Notary Public for the Khulna District.

MR. E. G. COLVIN, Officiating Political Assistant of the second class, has been posted as First Assistant to the Governor-General's Agent in Baluchistan.

THE 14th May is the last Tuesday mail day. The Saturday mail begins from the 18th, that is, next week, there will be two mail days, Tuesday and Saturday.

DR. K. McLeod, bound for home, having resigned his seat on the Calcutta Municipal Board, Dr. J. O'Brien has been appointed a Commissioner.

THE Viceroy strays out of Simla 12 miles to Naldhera, from Saturday to Monday. He visits the Sipi fair and the Simla races on the 20th and 30th June.

MR. HENVEY goes home this month. Mr. Martindale, the First Assistant, acts as the Agent to the Governor-General for Central India.

THE Madras Government not supporting it, the Government of India have declined to sanction the bonus of Rs. 50,000 recommended by the Madras Railway Company, to Mr. Fitzgerald Church, their late Chief Auditor.

AS might be expected, the Parnell Commission is supplying matter for criminal prosecution. The false position to which the Times was driven, naturally led that journal to attempt to regain lost ground, if possible. It prosecuted its own witness Patrick Molloy for perjury. It was he who furnished the Times' solicitor with all kinds of seriously incriminating evidence against the Parnellites. When called on, however, to depose before the Commission, he denied ever having given any information to the Times and urged that he was not a Fenian or an Invincible and was not employed in the Phoenix Park murder case. The Times undertook to prove in this perjury case that Molloy's deposition before the Commission was not true. The Times established its case, and Molloy was sentenced to six months' hard labor.

MR. H. A. D. PHILLIPS, of Rajshaye, promptly takes leave for a couple of months, and Mr. W. C. Macpherson, of Mozufferpore, will relieve him. We hope this will prove a respite, however brief, for many in the district—a respite from their place on live coals.

THE Lieutenant-Governor has sanctioned the construction of a new sluice in a tuccavi embankment on the left bank of the Cossye river at Srirampore, in the district of Midnapore, at a cost of Rs. 40,677, to be borne by persons interested in the work.

THE Arms Act continues to disturb the natives. We thought it was time enough for Government to understand the inconveniences of the law and specially its utter uselessness in Bengal as an engine of power. What a pity the Government should rest its prestige on such laws! Here are the latest additions to the Bengal rules under the Indian Arms Act XI of 1878:—

"5 (a). By section 30 of the Act, a search under the Code of Criminal Procedure, in the course of any proceedings instituted in respect of an offence punishable under section 19, clause (f) of Act XI of 1878, must be conducted in the presence of some officer specially appointed by name, or in virtue of his office, by the Local Government. All Magistrates and Police Officers not below the grade of Inspector, and, in the Chittagong Division as well as in the districts of Darjeeling and Julpigoree, all Magistrates and Police Officers not below the grade of Sub-Inspector, are hereby appointed under this section.

13. All Magistrates and Police Officers not below the grade of Inspector, and, in the Chittagong Division as well as in the districts of Darjeeling and Julpigoree, all Magistrates and Police Officers not below the grade of Sub-Inspector, are hereby empowered to detain arms or ammunition under clause 2 of section 6 of the Act."

The relief intended by these rules will be only nominal, we are afraid. Who among the natives can resist the demand—legal or illegal—of the police—of whatever grade or degree—and who will incur the risks of a refusal?

FROM the 1st day of June 1889, the First Calcutta and Second Calcutta Divisions of the Public Works Department shall form a part of the Western Circle of superintendence.

WHAT is a language leave? We read in the Calcutta Gazette that "Mr. H. Barlow, Assistant Engineer, Buxar Division, is granted language leave for one month and 20 days, with effect from the 15th May 1889 or such subsequent date as he may avail himself of it."

THE Travancore Correspondent of the Madura Mail describes the annual procession of Padamnabha—the guardian deity of the Ram Raja's Land, as it is called in Hindostan:—

"Sunday the 14th (April) was the Arat or the 10th day of the Pangyuni festival in Trivandram. The festival went off as usual with very great clat. The Arat procession was certainly a sight worth seeing. The gay, sprightly, lightsome character of the scene may very well be imagined when we remember that the state elephants with howdahs and flags, the state horses beautifully caparisoned, two long rows of the Nair Brigade troopers in their gay uniform, the famous Nair brigade band, the sepoys of the Nair Brigade in their gaudy red coats, the Government Officials and their Highness the Maha Raja and the 2nd Prince formed part of the gorgeous procession of the three gods Padmanaba, Narasimha and Krishna, whose gold and diamond jewels flashed brilliantly in the evening sun."

WE believe there is some foundation for the statement that there will soon be heavy reductions in our local High Court. Not only will there be a paid officer in the Administrator-General's office, but the pruning process will extend to the Appellate Side by the abolition of the post of Deputy Registrar, when Mr. J. H. Belchambers retires, next month. The salary of the Head Assistant, English office, Criminal Department, will also be reduced to Rs. 200 and that of the Superintendent, Section writers' Department, to Rs. 100, as originally proposed, leaving the charges made by Job writers to be estimated by a counter, on approved security. Other changes in the copying staff have been also advised, a number of Section writers being done away with.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE English mail of the 19th April discloses signs of exhaustion of the great Gladstonian Faction. The tactics of the party have been pretty much "used up." The collapse of the formidable charge of the Times against Mr. Parnell in respect of the notorious letters, clinched as it was by Sir Charles Russell's great speech in defence of the Irish Leader, was a momentary windfall in its favour, but the ministry soon recovered from the shock. The able administration of Mr. Balfour is producing its just fruits in the gradual contentment of the great body of the Irish population. Mr. J. W. Russell, the Irish Member and apostle of temperance, is doing the Government yeoman's service by exposing the calumnies of the enemy and exhibiting, by well-collated and authenticated facts, the great advance being made by the Conservative Administration in tranquillising the agitated and torn land. Then the results of the two by-elections of Central Birmingham and Rochester, showing the growing popularity of the Government, have come with crushing effect on the malcontents. At Rochester, the Gladstonian, the Hon. Edward Knatchbull-Hugesson (heir-apparent of the Conservative Lord Brabourne), defeated the Conservative Alderman Davis by a narrow majority of 75 only. At Birmingham, the Government made up by a marvellous majority of 3,060 votes in favour of Mr. Balfour, who delivered a most adroit and effective speech. The Premier overflowed in thanks to the Central Association of the town.

Lord Hartington, speaking at Sunderland, while congratulating Mr. Parnell that a certain letter attributed to him had proved a forgery, reminded his hearers that that was but one of the charges against him. He expressed his belief that a great many of the Irish Nationalists were hostile to the Empire, and thought that, if the Commission threw any light on the relations between them and the avowed enemies of England in America and the Colonies, the Inquiry would not have been labour lost.

Lord Rosebery's speech at Norwich seemed to show symptoms of awakening of Mr. Gladstone's followers from the influence of the charmer. He admitted that the Grand Old Man had come upon the country too suddenly with his crude measures of Home Rule, and suggested that, when the country returned a Home Rule House, the Government should appoint a Commission of constitutional lawyers and permanent officials to determine the details of a scheme. This is, in other words, admitting the truth of the famous epigram that Mr. Gladstone is an old man in a hurry.

THE cross-examination of Mr. Parnell in the Commission bearing his name, is over. He made certain admissions and condemned certain proceedings of the Fenians and the Invincibles. He denounced the speeches of Mr. Dillon and Mr. O'Brien and the advocacy of all physical force. He admitted making a misleading statement in the House of Commons to prevent the passing of the Coercion Bill in 1881, to the effect that Secret Societies in Ireland had ceased to exist. There was a sensation in consequence. At a later stage, Mr. Parnell asked the Commission to confine his statement in the House to Ribbonism. The account books of the Land League are opportunely missing.

THEY are still at it—the Deceased Wife's Sister Marriage Bill. But many of the Peers are yet unable to "digest" it. The House of Lords has just, on the second reading, rejected the Bill legalising such marriages by 147 against 120 votes. The Lords ought to be sent out to India.

THE House of Commons is more concerned at the morality of the excise system in India than at the ethics of the opium trade with China. Mr. Samuel Smith is not disposed to let the grass grow under his feet. Having, on the 30th April, obtained the verdict of the House condemning the fiscal system in India as promoting intemperance and misery among the people, he followed up his victory with another motion, on the 3rd May, disapproving of the opium trade between India and China coupled with a proposition for re-imposition of the cotton duties. But this time the fates were not propitious. The Commons by this time probably thought they were going too fast and far in their interference with the policy of the responsible Government of India, and the motion was negatived by 165 against 89 votes. The first Resolution (of the 30th ultimo) with a covering despatch from the Secretary of State is on its way to the Viceroy.

LORD CROSS invited those interested in the wheat trade to a conference at the India Office. They met on Wednesday, but came to no definite resolution. It was ascertained, however, that the shippers and millers were in favour of limiting the admixture of impurities to two per cent., whereas the Indian Committee of the London Corn Association were for a non-interference policy. Lord Cross expects good out of this conference as likely to lead to some feasible method of cleansing Indian wheat.

HIS friends in England have anticipated Mr. Crawford. Mr. Baumann, member for Peckham, has announced his intention to move in the House "that the conduct of the Bombay Government in respect to the trial of Mr. Arthur Crawford, has been unfair and vindictive and calls for the censure of the House of Commons." Mr. Crawford is bound to make a desperate effort to recover caste and to pacify his creditors.

THE Paris Exhibition has been opened. On the 5th instant, the President, before the members of both Houses and the principal officers of the army, unveiled the Tablet at Versailles commemorating the opening of the States-General in 1789, with an eloquent speech asserting that France had broken finally with the one man power.

THE Armenians are causing trouble to the Porte. A great atrocity against a defenceless family has stirred this loyal and peaceful community to honourable indignation. The Koords at Much Kamach, it is said, first outraged and then burned a young girl in the presence of her parents. The Armenians petitioned the Grand Vizier Kiamil Pacha, and followed up with a demonstration of 500. They demand reparation from their sovereign, and threaten to pray to Russia to annex the Province.

The Turkish Government are showing lamentable imbecility in dealing with the matter. Instead of making inquiry and giving redress and punishing the Koord savages, they have resorted to the official trick of pretending to be alarmed at the designs of the injured Armenians. An insurrection is apprehended, and many arrests of Armenians have been made. A search has been ordered, in churches and convents at Van, for clues.

The Turkish mission to Zanzibar has been countermanded.

If the "Dacoits" still disturb the peace of Upper Burma, our Government feels itself strong enough to disperse with the Hloodaw, the Consultative Body of the Ministers of the late Ava Kingdom, which was set up as a blind between it and the people, to keep up a show of the continuity of the old régime. That body has been dissolved from the commencement of the present month. The several members will receive pensions according to the satisfaction they could give the British Agents in Burma. Kenwoon Mengyee will draw Rs. 740 a month, Taungyun Mengyee Rs. 400, and Pin Atwinwoon Shwedike Atwinwoon and Tabayun Woondouk, each Rs. 200. The records are to be taken down to Rangoon.

THE Hon'ble Mr. T. T. Allen has entered the following protest in the Select Committee on the Mahomedan Burial Board:—

"I decline to sign the report. The Bill introduced into the Council was for the appointment of a Muhammadan Burial Board. It is not competent to a Committee, to which that Bill was referred, to substitute for it a totally different Bill as has been done. The title of the Bill has been changed without authority, and matters altogether outside the burial of Muhammadans have been added."

The members who have appended their names to the report are Sir Henry Harrison, Sir Alfred Croft, Dr. Mahendralal Sircar and Shahabzada Mahomed Furrokh Shah. They were evidently more anxious for the thoroughness of the measure entrusted to their charge than for the law which ought to govern their action. Strictly speaking, no doubt, Mr. Allen is right. At the same time, the Hon'ble Legal Remembrancer forgets that the legislature is but a department of the Government to confirm its decrees. The rules, if any, for the conduct of business or the conduct of members, are more honored in the breach than in the observance thereof. If Mr. Allen be in earnest, he should follow up his protest in Council, and if he acts throughout in the spirit which breathes in his protest, the Government will learn to mend its ways and be more constitutional. Or, possibly, he will find his own legislative days numbered. We will remind him of a passage in the history of this official Chamber. All the members of the Select Committee and the Council were opposed to the elective portion of the municipal law which has just been superseded by a new measure. Yet, after the Select Committee had reported on the bill, and against the elective principle, the Lieutenant-Governor of the day came to the persuasion that the Corporation should be in part a representative body, and, at his suggestion, the same Committee sent up an amended bill altering the constitution of the municipality. The members made no stand against the Government policy and took no steps to mark their resentment at their treatment at the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor. They pocketed the insult and tamely submitted to Government dictation.

715 students have passed the First Examination in Arts, namely, 16 in the first, 128 in the second, and 571 in the third division. The Hooghli College stands preeminent, returning the first boy in the first division. The Presidency College comes after it, followed by the General Assembly's Institution, the Bangabasi College, the Patna College, the Rajshahye College, the Dacca College, and the L. M. S. Institution, Bhowanipore. This, in order of merit. As regards number, the Presidency College gives 7, the Hooghli College 3 and the remaining six institutions one each. The Ripon College and the City College are conspicuous by their absence. Only one Bengali lady has passed in the second division.

THE Municipal Commissioners must be very busy indeed. They are holding meetings every week. They met last week, and this week, and meet again next week. At the first, the chief discussion turned on a proposition to deprive the Chairman of the last word when he makes no specific resolution. An amendment was moved to that effect, reserving the final word to the mover of a resolution. It was not carried though, for the Chairman had the last word in the present matter and he carried the meeting by his persuasive eloquence. Sir Henry Harrison was not so successful this week. Not that he was less persuasive or less eloquent, but that his Secretary, in his zeal to serve the occupant of the chair, committed an open indiscretion which virtually decided the poll on the question of the day—the Kotrung brick-fields.

THE Kotrung—like the Dhurmtolla market—has, for sometime, been a burden to the Municipality. It was decided to get rid of it anyhow. It was advertised for sale or to let. But no good offers were received, and the Commissioners knew not what to do. They at last authorized their Chairman to enter into negotiations with particular parties. The Chairman concluded terms with one and then was disposed to offer the lease to another, but, in consultation with the expiring Town Council, he decided for the first comer, put him in possession of the fields and received a quarter's rent from him. He evidently relied on his powers, under the new law, to ignore the general body of Commissioners when he happened to agree with the select few of the General Committee, and would not wait for their confirmation of the proceedings of the Town Council or the General Committee. This the Commissioners would not submit to, and they asserted their right to veto the action of the Chairman. The Chairman was confident of his success, for he was averse to refer the question back to the General Committee, and he had not calculated wrongly. For, when the matter was put to vote, the show of hands was in his favor. A poll was then demanded which went against the chair. We believe this turn is all due to the Secretary Mr. Cowie. He was detected tampering with the Commissioners for their votes in favour of the Chairman. He was immediately taken to task. He admitted the part he was playing. There was a proposition to exclude the Secretary from the polling business. The Chairman admitted the Secretary was wrong but did not deserve that severity. The point was not pressed, and Mr. Cowie called out the names of the Commissioners. The result now proved different, and thus the Chairman lost the day.

THE missionaries are showing a liberal spirit towards the just aspirations of the people. The Rev. Mr. Slater lately delivered a remarkable address to that effect at Madras. And now we are glad to find, from a London letter in the Hindu, that in England,

"at a very big Missionary meeting in Manchester, Mr. Jenkins devoted the greater portion of his remarks to the Congress. The Madras meetings rather than the session at Allahabad attracted his attention, probably for old acquaintance sake. He commented upon the significance of the men who from all parts of India composed it; he considered the result of their deliberations to be worthy of the best consideration of the Government of India. He cautioned that same Government not to listen to those advisers who would counsel that the Congress should be pooh-poohed. A pooh-pooh policy, he reminded his hearers nearly lost England the Indian Empire at the time of the mutiny. His sympathy was with the men who wished to be released from some of their leading-strings. He uttered a shrewd truth, which many Anglo-Indians might lay to heart, when he said: 'Men of the order of those who composed the Congress could not be pooh-poohed and set aside. Some of them were of excellent rank, others were foremost examples of culture, and all of them were able exponents of some phase of the intellectual revolution.' Such testimony, voluntarily given, cannot fail to do good in this country. If missionaries in India generally were as sympathetic and as far-seeing as Mr. Slater and returned missionaries turned their opportunities to as good account as Mr. Jenkins has done, the relations between English and Indian subjects of the Queen would be greatly improved."

Per Contra, the same writer reports:—

"While a Jenkins at Manchester was saying good words of the Indian people, a Jenkins in London was doing the reverse. I refer to the article in the Overland Mail of last week, which doubtless has already been copied in the anti-Congress papers and, I hope, in the Congress-supporting papers too. The Editor of the Overland Mail, it is well known, is Mr. Edward Jenkins, ex-M. P. for Dundee. When in Parliament Mr. Jenkins was among the few friends of India then in the House. Now he is in the other ranks. Why he has changed sides, I do not know, anyhow he has changed sides and is resisting the Congress reforms. Almost single-handed is he thus acting. On the present occasion he has apparently gone a trifle too far."

Mr. Edward Jenkins is one of the most brilliant men of our generation, and we are glad to find him engaged in active journalism and specially on one of the few journals in England devoted to India. He is a man of genius who, by his first work, took the public by storm. "Ginx's Baby" is a gem of purest ray serene. It is worthy of Rabelais. Nothing like it had appeared in England since Swift. Mr. Jenkins' wit, terrible to its butts, might have repelled others but for its essential and eminent humanity. In fact, his wit often broadens into fine humour. The whole has its root in warm affections and intense sympathy with the unfortunate and the oppressed. Nor is his pity exclusive. He is capable of feeling for the Indian coolly in the Colonies as well as the neglected Briton in the desert of the great cities of his own country. Whatever view he may take of any particular movement of our countrymen, it were an injustice to a man of such gifts and of such antecedents to suppose that he is not prepared to help us in all our legitimate efforts.

SIR Alfred Lyall is engaged on a life of Warren Hastings for Macmillan's "Men of Action" series. He is a most accomplished penman and ought to write with a grasp which the mere litterateur might aspire to in vain. The book will be interesting as showing the literary power lost to the world and expended in India on subtle minutes on village sanitation and brilliant despatches on the political economy of the khariff and the rabi. He will probably write with the bias of one despot for another—the progenitor of the Order. But he will also write with complete sympathy. We hope he will be able to throw additional light on the Benares and Oudh episodes in the career of his hero. The Hegirah from the Holy City was a stirring incident which ought to call forth all the author's pictorial power. We hope he will not fail to do justice to the intrepidity of Hastings' Bengali factotum Canto Baboo.

THE writers on the Indian press are commonly deficient in the ear for versification. The Madura Mail, in recommending a volume of Notes on the English Text for Matriculation in the Madras University, remarks :—

"Young's caustic epigram

'Commentators all dark passage shun

And hold their farthing candle to the sun'

can by no means apply to the authors of these notes."

The writer, treating as he does of an academical subject, ought to have seen that the lines quoted scanned. But he did not care to see that they were grammatical. Young in his satire, "The Love of Fame," says—

How commentators each dark passage shun,

And hold their farthing candle to the sun.

As regards the thought, the complaint is common to all ages and almost every literature. A later English poet, himself also a satirist, James Crabbe, in "The Parish Register," has apparently borrowed from Young and expatiated on the theme, thus :—

Oh rather give me commentators plain,

Who, with no deep researches vex the brain ;

Who, from the dark and doubtful love to run,

And hold their glimmering tapers to the sun.

The same thought occurs in Persian and Arabic. The most notable remark that we can recall, however, occurs in Sanskrit. In a rare work, which we saw in the possession of Mastaram Babaji, a learned Panjabi religious mendicant, whom we met in Upper India just twenty years ago, named Bhojavritti, of which we procured a copy from the original MS., there is a passage in the Introduction which describes the class of frivolous commentators with accuracy and just discrimination. Without troubling printer or reader with a transliteration, we give a close translation :—

That which is very difficult is passed away with the remark it is very easy of comprehension, that which is very easy is expatiated upon, dwelling on sanidhas and roots irrelevant and useless, and by a mass of improper or irrelevant words in improper places, spreading error among mankind, all commentators are wont to hide the real thing [or drift] from the audience [or readers].

THE Madura Mail has a good Travancore Correspondent. In his letter of the 22nd ultimo, he treats of many interesting topics bearing on the regeneration of the people. First, he speaks of the new Sanskrit College at Trivandrum and its new Principal. Though recognising the latter's learning, he is not satisfied with the appointment of a man whose method of teaching is antiquated. He has a more serious objection to the college itself as a caste school, at which Brahmans only will be admitted to study. That was a matter of course in an orthodox Hindu state governed (under the Maharaja) by Brahmans. Even in British territory, much the same exclusiveness holds. The Government Sanskrit College at Calcutta (which has always been a British settlement) admitted only Brahmans and Vaidyas. If the College is now open to other classes, it has long ceased to be a distinctively Sanskrit institution. It is now a cheap English seminary with a Sanskrit staff and a Pandit Principal, but for many years it was under a European head. Nevertheless, the remarks of our contemporary's correspondent are worth attention. He begins vaguely, however :—

"Our pundits, of course, will never for a moment even dream of having for their pupils persons of low caste. But the most conservative and orthodox among them will not have the slightest objection to Sudras sitting at his feet and drinking of the holy fountain of Sanskrit lore."

That is a suicidal passage, the two parts destroying one another. But that is a momentary slip, and the writer soon delivers himself with clearness and sense.

"Why Malayalis, who as a nation are highly intellectual and acquire proficiency in Sanskrit with great rapidity, have been thought disqualified for admission, I do not well see. It is idle to say that custom does not allow them to study the Shastras ; for it is not true. The only part of Sanskrit literature which they are not allowed to study is Vedic literature and perhaps also Panini's Sutrams. But what objection could one have to their attending the literature class? In this 19th century of broad views and advanced notions, one would have looked for more catholicity of aim in an enlightened Government. 'The model state' should have extended the right hand of enlightenment to all that would willingly have grasped it."

That is the counsel of enthusiasm, not of statesmanship, and we hope the rulers of Travancore will not listen to it. Knowledge is too precious a pearl to be thrown to swine to trample upon. At any rate, some preparation is needed to fit a man or class to receive knowledge so as to be able to make proper use of it, for self and others.

There ought to be a social preparation before a particular class is endowed with the franchise of knowledge. The peculiar constitution of Hindu society, indeed of Indian society in general, specially demands caution, if a social bouleversement is to be averted. The results of British administration and the effects of Christian philanthropy ought to be a warning to self-governing native communities. There is a time for everything, and a discrimination too. At any rate, whatever may be done ought to be done with open eyes—with comprehension of what is likely to be brought in its train or to follow.

THE same correspondent gives the following news of the Travancore Legislative Chamber, with his criticism thereon :—

"There was a sitting of the Legislative Council lately in which the discussion on the Civil Procedure bill was resumed. I observe one general mistake in all the draft bills published by Government for the information of the public. The bills are drafted in His Highness' name. His Highness ceased to be the lawgiver with the organization of the Legislative Council, and I do not see how bills introduced into the Councils by Members on their own responsibility can be worded as if they were regulations emanating from His Highness."

That is a frivolous objection, and not very well informed. Here, in a remote Hindu kingdom, is a fanatical Red who cannot bear the very sound of the "one man power!" He cannot tolerate the very forms of a monarchy. He belongs to the school of the Revolutionists who in France abolished God. The writer does not pretend that there is any practical inconvenience from the wording of Travancore legislation as an emanation of the Maharaja. In point of fact, there is positive convenience. What is the value of the statutes of a new fangled Chamber in an almost theocratic society, unless the Rama Raja himself accepted them and commanded his people's obedience to them? The Maharaja is sovereign—the fountain of all authority—and will remain, so long as Travancore remains Travancore, all constitutions notwithstanding.

The Madura Mail's Trevendram Correspondent concludes his notice of the Travancore Legislature with this piece of information :—

"Curiously enough they have published along with the draft bill of the Civil Procedure Code an amendment bill too."

That is a mere accident, we suppose. The two drafts will doubtless be incorporated into one.

MR. P. HORDERN having retired from the service, Mr. J. Van S. Pope, M. A., Inspector of Schools, Eastern Circle, Bengal, becomes Director of Public Instruction, Burma. Mr. Hordern failed as a professor in Bengal, where he distinguished himself by his war against the cawing tribe. He probably suspected that they had found him out and hooted him in derision. So his ire was up and never was down. Herein too he failed. He would have liked to birch them with all a pedagogue's fury, unfortunately he never could get at them. He had not the secret of Dedalus to be able to fight at close quarters. They fluttered about over his head in mockery from their situation of vantage in the air. He could only stamp his foot and tear his hair and at best revenge himself on his class. So the enemy kept cawing and cawing away at him, till he retired from the field and Bengal. Such was Hordern. But, then, he was a nephew—of the Bishop Metropolitan, and was provided with promotion in Burma, where he was pitchforked into the head of the Education Department. Mr. Pope is a superior man, who has succeeded both in instruction and inspection. He is a hereditary educationist, being a son of a wellknown missionary in the South, who published one of the best schoolbooks—the Text-book of Indian History, a capital work.

THE Bombay Presidency has done more for preserving the memory of our ancient art than any other or all the other Presidencies combined. The Archaeological Department there is more artistically inclined than that of any department. It is not content to discover antiquities and fix their dates. It takes photographs, models, drawings, and prints them by way of a record for all time. Thus, Mr. Burgess, the obscure schoolmaster of Bengal, who suddenly blew into an antiquarian and virtuoso in Bombay, and was employed as Government archaeologist in that Presidency, issued several deeply interesting and accurate books of illustrations accompanied by letter-press. The liberality of the wealthy of Bombay has nobly come forward to furnish the sinews of war, when the Government grant on these luxuries was exhausted. A series of massive folios have been produced illustrating and describing the antiquities of Gujrat, Maharashtra, Bejapore, Mysore—sumptuous and costly works paid for by the native merchant princes of Bombay. Nor are the princes territorial backward, but equally alive to the great interest attaching to the past of their common country. The present accomplished Gaekwar is specially enthusiastic. He has had a work on the Antiquities of Dubhai in Gujrat prepared by Mr. Burgess, now Director-General of the Archæological Survey of India, and has been privately printed for him by Messrs. George Waterston and Sons of Edinburgh. The most notable illustrations are the Baroda and Hira gateways and the Kalika Mata Temple. The illustrations are drawings from photographs. We understand that six have been richly bound for the Gaekwar's presentation. The binding is thus described:—

"They are in red morocco, richly tooled. Three of them have been treated after a Persian design suggested by examples of Persian decoration in the Museum of Science and Art. The front cover, inside an elaborate border, is divided into curiously shaped panels, which are filled in with an intricate floral device. At the top of the cover are Gaekwar's Arms, which consist of a shield bearing the device of a Mahratta horseman, the shield being flanked by climbing elephants. On a scroll beneath is a motto 'My saddle; my Kingdom.' The other three volumes also bear the Gaekwar's Arms, but the tooling is less ornate. On the whole these volumes are a splendid example of the binder's art. The whole edition consists of 200 volumes, and will be bound in half-morocco."

JUST as we are going to press, we learn that Dr. Sooraj Ball has received orders to quit Cashmere at once, and that the venerable patriot of Bombay Rao Sahib Vishwanath Naryan Mandlik Bahadoor is dead.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1889.

A TRIO OF OFFICIAL BLACK SHEEP.

PHILLIPS—BEAMES—HALL.

IF there is anything that can cause the Government of India more than another to be looked upon as obnoxious and offensive by the native community, it is the cruel administering of justice and tyranny exercised by men who, we had reason to believe, were above suspicion, holding exalted positions of trust under Her Imperial Majesty's commission unhappily for the communities over which they are placed, to the virtual prejudice and apparent ignoring of British rule. Men not blindly but with their eyes open lending and identifying themselves with proceedings in anger and displeasure which cannot be characterised in any other terms than those of absolute public disgrace.

It is with unmixed feelings of regret, we feel called upon to denounce, in the very strongest language, the numerous cases of this character which have recently cropped up. To do otherwise, we should fail lamentably in our duty as public journalists and exponents of public rights.

The most recent Magisterial notoriety is a Mr. H. A. D. Phillips, Magistrate of Rajshahye, and editor of the Calcutta Review. In this dual capacity, he has succeeded in immortalising his name in a way no true Englishman will envy him for. As a Magistrate, by his own acts and conduct, he has proved himself, without the slightest outside aid, wholly unsuited for the position he was placed in. Now, whether this Mr. H. A. D. Phillips, who is quite unknown to the writer, be permitted to retain his chair at the editorial table of the Calcutta Review or not, there should be no two opinions about his unfitness for the Magisterial bench. His conduct should be visited with the severest censure the Government of India has at its command, and an example made of men, who by nothing short of imposition could have attained to such positions. If Dame rumour speaks correctly, he is at this moment being sued in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye and the Munsiff's court at Nattore, for damages and wrongs done in more than two instances. If the Government of India permit such high-handed vagaries to be performed in its name, it is little wonder, we have every other day men setting themselves up in open defiance to our Judges of the High Court, men who could never have risen, had they remained at home, above writing a six and eight penny letter and that in all probability not oftener than two or three times a week. It has been said Mr. Phillips would succeed well at the bar. Admitting such an assertion to be correct, Europeans do not, as a rule, enter into litigation just to please Barristers, and from the vile epithets and insults that he has heaped from time to time upon the Native community, his patronage from that source might be set down at nil. No, Mr. Phillips should retain the editorial chair of the Calcutta Review, and be content to cater to the depraved instincts of readers after his kind. He will do less harm there a great deal than on the bench or at the bar.

It is simply idiotic to imagine Mr. Phillips could command prominent notice as a newspaper or periodical writer outside of India. His vindictiveness is, has been, and always will be, so marked, that he will earn a name for himself in doing the Review very material injury in expressing his political views which, from all accounts, are of a vile and questionable character, and have, in a way he little dreamt of, made him of some little notoriety. With the removal of his name from the Civil list, he will, if let alone, drop into obscurity and pass away with much less clat than did Mr. Spencer the aeronaut.

There is a possible easy way of vindicating the conduct of such wrong-doers, as Mr. Phillips, by closing our eyes to the demoralization they are working in their official capacity. But what of the majesty of the Law? From motives which will readily be understood, as journalists, we prefer to witness the chastisement of insolent servants, who, taking advantage of the position which, by a gross mistake, they have been placed in, ride high shod over all they come in contact with. Happily for India, there are still some honest upright Englishmen, who notice with pain the persistency with which the Government of India retains men on the Civil Service list, after they have spared no pains in qualifying themselves for ignominious and summary dismissal. Such a man is Mr. Phillips. It is now high time Government was taking a determined stand against such unsuitable material being deported to India for the Civil Service. How many cases of high-handedness and corrupt practices have lately come to light, the most appalling of the whole being the downfall of Mr. Crawford of the Bombay Commission? It is impossible for any upright Englishman to sympathise with a man who has, for years, continued a system of mal-practices of the description Mr. Crawford was convicted of, and the Bombay Government, after Sir Phillip Wodehouse's rebuke, was very blamable in permitting him to remain in the service. It is hard, no doubt, and a pity. None will have a keener feeling of the situation than Mr. and Mrs. Crawford themselves, after a life-time spent in India, to return home under a load of infamy and disgrace. It is all the more painful, when the Government of India deals with such offences by administering various measures of punishment. It is not many months ago, when a member of the Bengal Civil Service was guilty of an offence similar to that Mr. Crawford was summarily dismissed for. But our Bengal Civilian was very much more fortunate. He was simply shunted on for a few months, to the scarcely less exalted office of a Divisional Commissioner, and then, when the public outcry had had time to hush, he was again enthroned in the same Board of Revenue (the stepping-stone to the Lieutenant-Governorship) from which he had been only a few months before deplaced, with censure, for borrowing money from those in a subordinate position to himself. For this or something akin to it, Mr. Crawford is dismissed. Possibly, climatic influences may have something to do in the matter. To say the least of it, there must have been a gross miscarriage of justice in the case of the Bengal Civilian, to permit him to get off so cheaply.

There is another official, belonging to a different fraternity, who has lately succeeded in making himself conspicuous as a wrong-doer. We refer to Dr. Hall, Superintendent of the Naini Jail, Allahabad, who, while he had the unlucky Captain Hearsey in his clutches, constituted himself accuser, judge and executioner. It is very easy to understand how men of Dr. Hall's stamp abuse the power they wield within four walls, where they are veritable monarchs of all they survey. It is most unfortunate in India that the Superintendence of Jails is made a dual appointment, that of medical officer and Superintendent. This is neither just to the tax-payer nor the prisoner, least of all to the latter. The two appointments should be distinct and separate, as it is impossible for a medical man to make a good Jail Superintendent. His attention reverts to fifty things a day, the least not being his private practice. We hold there should not be two opinions as to the impracticability of Government officials holding in India dual appointments, either of which gives the official practically unrestricted power over a body of men, as in the case of Dr. Hall, or over a large provincial district, as in the case of Mr. Phillips. Such appointments are particularly objectionable where the men holding such appointments are utterly destitute of the most ordinary rudiments of fairness.

The cowardly attack by Dr. Hall on Captain Hearsey and insult to Mrs. Elliot, while Captain Hearsey was in his power, is the natural outcome of absolute ignorance, a want of good breeding and worse education. The same is applicable to a, shall I say, gentleman like Mr. Chesney, whom Captain Hearsey horsewhipped, and served him right? The term half-caste is a most objectionable one, and no gentleman ever makes use of it. It may be, and probably is, in common use amongst lower orders of society, but we are not supposed to be reviewing this class now, Dr. Hall and Mr. Chesney being or at least supposed to be educated men, although that alone does not constitute either a gentleman, which title they have forfeited any claim to, always provided they ever had a claim to such respect. Had they but thought it was our early intermarriages in India that produced, naturally and honourably, the Eurasian! There are Eurasians and Eurasians. The Eurasian gentleman is the descendant of the Fathers of many who were gentlemen by birth and education, and, did their progenitors live now, they would certainly warm the backs of Messrs. Hall and Chesney, if they did not do considerably more.

The apathy with which Government has evidently viewed the conduct of Dr. Hall, is past understanding. It was thought the Viceroy would notice so gross an outrage on society, having little hopes in any measures being adopted by the Local Government, which, from of old, has some reason to regard the victim as an inconvenient bore. At any rate, since the notorious Laidman case, the prejudice of the official community is sufficiently well known to give us hopes from that quarter. We must confess our disappointment of Lord Lansdowne in this particular instance, as we looked for nothing less than Dr. Hall's dismissal, accompanied by His Excellency's marked displeasure.

Captain Hearsey's letters to the Statesman last month, very justly aroused the whole community, filled it with indignant sympathy, and called forth an endless tirade, all of which notwithstanding, under the influence of Balloon on the brain, Captain Hearsey's case has been quite lost sight of. It is, however, unlikely Lord Lansdowne had not seen, from the Statesman, the brutal, cruel and cowardly insult offered Captain Hearsey and, through him, the whole Eurasian community, amongst which number gentlemen of Dr. Hall's own profession, many who have risen to such a position as he never can look forward to. Witness the principal medical officer of the Madras General Hospital, a Eurasian, a gentleman and ornament to society.

We have refrained all this time from noticing Captain Hearsey's complaints of the treatment he was subjected to at the hands of Dr. Hall, not so much that we looked forward to hear of any extenuating circumstances in the conduct of the Superintendent of the Naini Jail, but that some enquiry would have been instituted. But this is evidently only another notorious incident of the callousness with which the authorities ignore the right to complain or seek redress and relief from high-handed and tyrannical officials. Has the term "departmental enquiry" become obsolete? If it has, we have a just right to know that it has: the elasticity of the official conscience at any rate has not become obsolete towards its wrong-doers. It is certainly significant that the attention of Government has not long ere this been directed to the subject. We have before us a number of letters all bearing on the matter, vehemently and in strong terms denouncing as cowardly the unprovoked attack on Hearsey when he was not in a position to resent it. There is every probability, had he been on the other side of the Jail wall, Dr. Hall, with Chesney's well-merited experience before him, would have thought twice before he called Hearsey a "half-caste." It must be held that it makes the case very much worse, than if they had been standing on equal footing, and indelibly stamps Dr. Hall as a coward and bully. He is known in Calcutta as such, his attempt to bully Dr. McLeod is still fresh in the memory of the profession of the metropolis. Medical men the writer has spoken with on the subject, the only surprise they express is, that nothing had cropped up before. Now, if this is the man's character, what cruelty and tyranny may he not have exercised over prisoners who had and have not the means at command Captain Hearsey has to make public their grievances? As far as he dare go in cowardice to insult a man who, in his official capacity, he was in duty bound to care for, he did. He has grossly misused his official power, in all probability to please his friend Chesney. He has forfeited all claim to rank as a respectable member of his profession.

From Captain Hearsey's first letter to the Statesman of 7th March last and his dialogue with Dr. Hall, it may be inferred Hall is a Scotchman. It may not be generally understood in India that an Englishman to be understood is allowed to speak once, an Irishman twice and a Scotchman till he is understood. It must not be inferred there is any probability, that Hearsey did not allow Dr. Hall to speak till he was understood, and that Captain Hearsey did understand the gratuitous unprovoked insult he was compelled to submit to, but the writer being himself a Scotchman is anxious the readers of Reis and Rayyet should know there are not amongst Scotchmen, as among other nationalities, a variety of characteristics. The writer is a native of that part of Scotland where not angels fear to tread but Jews, and can say without fear of contradiction there are but two characteristic qualities in a Scotchman. Either he is good or he is bad. If the former, he is the essence of goodness,—witness our amiable chairman of the Chamber of Commerce Sir Alexander Wilson, Kt. If he is bad, he is without ceremony classed as d—d bad,—witness, Dr. Hall.

Before closing this article, we would draw attention once more to the impracticability of medical men filling the dual positions of Superintendent and medical officer. These should be entirely distinct and separate, and doctors should have no connection with the Jail Superintendence. In common there is evil only in such an amalgamated office, and the union is only prompted by motives of false economy. Another and not less crying evil is the power of a Magistrate held by Jail Superintendents. This is a function which gives the Superintendent power to commit cruelty to an unknown degree. Punishment, except for the most trivial offences, should not be inflicted by any Jail official. An honorary Magistrate should visit the jails once or twice a week, to enquire into and punish delinquents and breakers of jail rules. Dismissal alone is not sufficient punishment to meet the case of Dr. Hall. We hope it is not too late for Government to cause immediate and searching enquiry to be made in the interests of justice, and deal without fear or favor punishment for an offence of the most inhuman character.

ZITO.

THE MAHOMEDAN LITERARY SOCIETY.

THE Mahomedan Literary Society of Bengal is now one of the recognised institutions of the land. Next to the British Indian Association, it is the oldest society in the country. It has completed a quarter century of existence. Not long ago, it celebrated the Festival of its Silver Jubilee. Its first meeting after that event was necessarily an occasion of more than ordinary interest. The proceedings were of a character to arrest the attention of outsiders. It was a numerously attended meeting, held at the Calcutta Medressa, at 7½ O'clock on the evening of the 24th April, presided over by Prince Mahomed Ruheemooddeen, of the Mysore Family.

A resume in Urdu of the last quarter century of the Society's work was read by Moulvie A. F. M. Abdool Hufiez.

A number of Resolutions were then moved and carried, offering the cordial and grateful thanks of the Society to the officials who had given material assistance to it by their continued patronage, countenance and support,—to the members of the Committee of Management, especially the above named President, and the two Vice-Presidents, Princes Mirza Jahan Kadar Bahadur and Mahomed Nusseerooddeen Hyder, who had always evinced a great interest in the well-being of the Society,—to the Founder of the Society, Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadur,—to the chief surviving co-adjutor of the Founder from its foundation up to the present moment, during which period he had delivered numerous lectures on subjects of practical interest, Moulvie Mahomed Abdool Rowoof,—and to the distinguished Mahomedan noblemen and gentlemen who had, on various occasions, during the period of the existence of the Society, delivered lectures and addresses in Persian and Urdu on numerous interesting and useful subjects, such as Sir Syud Ahmad Khan Bahadur, K.C.S.I., Nawab Ahsunollah Khan Bahadur, Shumsool Ulama Shah Abdool Huck of Cawnpore, Moulvie Abdool Ghuffoor Khan Bahadur, Moulvie Fareedooddeen Ahmad Khan Bahadur, Sahibzadah Abdool Azeez Khan and Hafiz Mahomed Hatim. These expressions of thanksgiving were matters of course, perhaps. But there was a distinct departure from the practice of Europeans and of native societies after European models, in a separate motion, which was solemnly and unanimously carried, for offering prayers for the benefit of the souls of some of the most prominent Mahomedan gentlemen of the time who had taken an active part in the foundation of the Society in 1863, and who had for many years assisted the Founder of the Society with their hearty co-operation, as well as by reading learned and interesting discourses on a number of important subjects, namely, the late Moulvie Mahomed Wujeeh, Kazi Abdool Baree, Hafiz Ajeeh Ahmad and Moulvie Abdool Hukeem—as well as for that of the souls of the late Priuce Mahomed Azamooddeen, Moulvie Haji Karamut Ali of Jounpore, Hafiz Wuheedoon Nubbee Khan Bahadur, Syud Shah Ulfat Hosain, Mahmoodood Dowlah Moonshee Sufder Ali Khan Bahadur, Moulvie Abbass Ali Khan, Moulvie Duleelooddeen Ahmad Khan Bahadur Ihteram Jung, Moulvie Obydoolah, Shaikh Asadoollah Shirazi, Mirza Rajab Ali Beg Saroor, and Hukeem Syud Ahmad Mirza, who were some of the eminent scholars and poets, who had, at different meetings of the Society, during the last 25 years, read discourses of great learning, merit and usefulness. To us, we confess, this was the most interesting and, we fear not to add, instructive, business of the evening. It was thoroughly indigenous and shows the abiding seriousness of the community of Islam. We wish Hindus, Parsees, Jews and Christians might take a leaf out of the book of our Mahomedan fellow-subjects.

The next most important incident at the meeting was the acknowledgment of the records of goodwill and appreciation of eminent European friends of the Society. The following letters to the Secretary were read at the meeting :—

“Belvedere, February 4, 1889.

My Dear Sir,—The Lieutenant-Governor desires me to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of a pamphlet, entitled ‘A Quarter Century of the Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta,’ forwarded to him by you two days ago. His Honour has read with much interest this record of the Society's unfailing energy and continuous success, and hopes that the Society, that has done so much good work in the past, may live for many years more to promote the useful objects for which it was originally founded.—Your faithfully,

P. C. LYON,
Private Secretary.

Camp Meerut, March 24, 1889.

My Dear Nawab.—I am much obliged to you for your letter of the 16th instant, and for the interesting pamphlet which accompanied it. It was a great pleasure to me to attend your Conversazione on the 28th January last at Calcutta, and I can understand what a satisfaction it must be to you, as the founder of the Mahomedan Literary Society, to see the ever-increasing interest which is taken by your co-religionists in the wonders of science. The large number of gentlemen that attended the last Conversazione shows conclusively how popular such meetings are, and there can be no doubt of the goodwill that is engendered by such social gatherings. It is not, however, only on the score of education that the Mahomedan Literary Society has my sympathies, but also because I recognize how good and powerful an influence it exercises in the cause of loyalty and order.

I trust, therefore, that you will express to your colleagues, and accept yourself, the assurance of the deep interest which I shall always take in the Mahomedan Literary Society.—Believe me to be yours sincerely,
FRED. ROBERTS.

Cherwell, Edge, Oxford, March 26, 1889.

My Dear Nawab,—I thank you for your kind letter of the 5th instant. I read with very great pleasure the record of your twenty-five years of excellent work, and I congratulate you on your celebrating your 25th anniversary. The progress made by the Mahomedans during the past quarter of a century is alike honourable to themselves and hopeful for India. It seems difficult to realise that only twenty years ago the Patna trials were going on. I believe that the changes in Mahomedan thought and feeling, and also in regard to the more just views which Englishmen entertain towards Islam and your community, are in no small measure due to the efforts of yourself and your friends. With best wishes for the continued prosperity of the Mahomedan Literary Society.—I am sincerely yours,

W. W. HUNTER.”

These are all valuable testimonies, all equally warm with kindness, each more important than the preceding.

Meer Gholam Moostafa then read a number of extremely interesting letters in the pure Persian language, called the Darri, composed by himself.

After thanks being voted to him as well as to the chair, the meeting dissolved at 11 P. M.

THE NUISANCE CASE IN COURT.

THE want of adequate amusements in this trying weather is occasionally compensated by the occasional condescension of our grave and reverend seigniors. The Nuisance Case in the High Court was signalised by a desperate farce in the High Court. Desperate in every sense. The Prosecution would not go on with the case, but the Judge would not listen to any such suggestion. The Advocate-General, in the exercise of his powers, would enter a nolle prosequi, but the court would not permit any such nonsense. It had apparently taken the pains to arrive at a decision, doubtless a worthy decision, and it would not be balked of its opportunity---of displaying its justice and wisdom and zeal for the welfare of the citizens in general. But let us give the instructive scene in the words of the reporters :---

“Mr. Phillips (Standing Counsel).---With reference to this case, the Advocate-General, I understand, does not desire to prosecute.

Norris, J.---I shall not allow the case to be withdrawn.

The Advocate-General.---Under the Code I have the power to do so.

Norris, J.---I do not know that this is a case in which you should appear ; it is a private prosecution.

The Advocate-General.---The parties do not wish to prosecute.

Norris, J.---If I have the power I shall not allow it to be withdrawn. I shall not allow the inhabitants of Calcutta to be poisoned by any body of men living. If I am obliged to allow it to be withdrawn by law, of course that is another matter.

The Advocate-General.---Your Lordship sees what the section lays down. It says : ‘At any stage of any trial before a High Court under the Code, before the return of the verdict, the Advocate-General may, if he thinks fit, inform the Court that he will not further prosecute the defendant upon the charge.’

Norris, J.---What does the prosecutor say ?

The Advocate-General.---Mr. Beeby consents, and, under these circumstances, I am entitled to enter a nolle prosequi.

Mr. Beeby here interposed by stating that he, speaking on behalf of himself, consented to a withdrawal of the charge.

The Advocate-General.---The other people concerned do not seem to take any interest in the matter.

Norris, J.---I cannot help seeing what passes in the public prints of the day, that in the immediate neighbourhood of this tank a person has been---

The Advocate-General.---With your Lordship's permission before I enter a nolle prosequi, I wish to state that I have visited this place twice myself, last night being the last occasion, and the nuisance which existed, if it ever did exist, is now at an end. The whole of the ground has been filled up with earth to the depth of two feet nine inches, and there is only a little bit of a hole left which is now being filled up, and which will be finished by this evening.

Norris, J.---That may be so far as this one item is concerned, but what security have the public that the opinions of the qualified medical authorities, including the Sanitary Inspector, will be carried out by persons who may be eminently qualified to fill the offices of Chairman and Vice-Chairman to the Corporation, but who know little about the sanitary condition of the city ? What guarantee is there that they will follow or act on the advice of the Sanitary Inspector whose duty it is to advise and to see that human life is not recklessly imperilled ?

The Advocate-General.---The answer upon that subject is that your Lordship has heard only one side of the case.

Norris, J.---I have read the whole of the depositions.

The Advocate-General.---The Corporation did not go into their case at all, therefore the Chairman is not in that sorry plight of being so ignorant as your Lordship seems to think.

Norris, J.---If I am bound to allow a nolle prosequi, I must grant your application. I am bound not only not to go beyond the law, but I shall be the first to obey its terms cheerfully. But I cannot help thinking that it is a misfortune that this prosecution has been abandoned in this way.

The Advocate-General.---I can only tell your Lordship that what I have done has been done after full consideration, and if it is a misfortune it affects my judgment as well as that of the Chairman.

Norris, J.---After what has fallen from the Advocate-General, and as he desires to enter a nolle prosequi, it must be filed and handed in according to the regular way and entered on the record.

Mr. Phillips.---Of course your Lordship will consider whether there is any bar which would rather stultify it being entered on the indictment.

Norris, J.---Oh yes.

Prior to the rising of the Court the following ensued :

Norris, J.---Now I am ready to try this case.

The Advocate-General.---I propose to enter a nolle prosequi under the powers I have.

Norris, J.---Is anybody instructed for the prosecution ?

The Advocate-General.---On the part of the Government I am not going to prosecute, and I have told the private prosecutor if he chooses he can do so. On this Mr Beeby said “You had better enter a nolle prosequi.”

Norris, J.---I must go step by step. First of all ascertain if any counsel are instructed to prosecute.

The Advocate-General.---Mr. Phillips does not prosecute. Send for Mr. Beeby.

Norris, J. (On Mr. Beeby entering the Court)---Have you instructed any one to prosecute in this case ?

Mr. Beeby.---No, my lord.

Norris, J.---Upon what ground do you enter a nolle prosequi, Mr. Advocate-General ?

The Advocate-General.---I have done so under the section 1 quoted ; I am not bound to mention any grounds. I withdraw under the discretion given me under that Section.

Norris, J.---I must ask if you have read the depositions.

The Advocate-General.---I have read them and given advice in the matter. I have considered the subject, and I have come to that conclusion. I am not bound to disclose my grounds.

Norris, J.---You decline ?

The Advocate-General.---Certainly.

Norris, J.---This was a case sent up for trial by the Presidency Magistrate, on a charge against the Corporation of Calcutta of nuisance. The prosecutor before the Magistrate was Mr. Beeby, and he now tells me that he does not propose to prosecute, and has not instructed counsel. I learn, I must say with profound astonishment, that the Advocate-General of Bengal declines to give a Judge presiding at this Sessions the reasons which have led him, in the exercise of his discretion, to advise the Government, to enter a nolle prosequi. I have read the depositions carefully, and may say that in the face of the depositions there appears to me an ample case of gross nuisance, a nuisance endangering the health and lives of Her Majesty's subjects in Calcutta. I, of course, cannot interfere with the exercise of the discretion of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of Bengal if he chooses, in the exercise of his discretion after consulting with the Government, whom he has advised, to enter a nolle prosequi. Of course a nolle prosequi must be entered.

The Advocate-General.---I only wish to say---

Norris, J.---I don't desire any further discussions.

The Advocate-General.---I only desire---

Norris, J.---I desire no further discussion, neither do I invite it. Let a nolle prosequi be entered on the back of the indictment.”

The Advocate-General has worthily maintained the dignity and independence of the English Bar. In fact, there has been no disappointment in the matter. Each has acted like himself.

MOORSHEDABAD.

Moorshedabad, the 5th May '89.

Moorshedabad has been particularly unfortunate this year in point of sanitation and general prosperity. Since the advent of the hot weather, cholera has been making fearful ravages throughout the length and breadth of this district. The cause of such annual visitations is not far to seek. It is the foul water of the river which stealthily poisons the system, and unless steps are taken to provide the people with pure drinkable water, all measures to ensure better sanitation of the place will fail. It is therefore incumbent on the authorities to convene a public meeting of the inhabitants to concert measures for removing this dire want as also to collect subscriptions for the purpose. A small portion of the wealth of this rich district expended in this direction will produce a vast quantity of good to the people. The amount thus collected may be spent in one of the following ways : (1) the removal of the sandheads at Suti the place from where the Bhagirathi branches out ; (2) the cutting of an outlet from the Pudia in connection with this stream to keep a continual flow of water in it ; (3) the commencement of waterworks as in Calcutta, Dacca, and Bhagalpur ; and (4) the excavation of tanks and wells in different quarters of the city as required by the circular letter of the Sanitary Commissioner. It is hoped that this appeal on behalf of suffering humanity will not go in vain.

Fires are every day breaking out in some parts of the city. The number of houses burned down to date is about four hundred but mostly of those who live from hand to mouth and can not in these hard days have more than one meal per day. It is said that the fires are due to incendiarism. The police must be on the look out to arrest the culprits.

It is gratifying to learn that our much respected townsman Mohunt Gopal Das Maharaj of Jafarganj akra has, this year, too, with his renowned liberality and sympathy for the distressed come forward to help the needy by giving them straw, bamboo and ropes for the reconstruction of their thatched houses and have also supplied them with food and money sufficient to support each family for a fortnight. Be it said to his credit that his liberality has given shelter and relief to the annual sufferers from fire. His charity is well known. He distributes alms every day to the poor and feeds no less than three hundred mendicants and pilgrims both morning and evening besides large hordes that occasionally seek his hospitality. He is also conspicuous for taking active part in movements of public utility.

With the rise in the price of the food grains, crimes of all sorts have made their appearance. The northern wards of the city are being infested by thieves and budmasbirs.

At a meeting of the Technical School Committee held on the 29th ultimo presided over by Nawab Zainulabdin Khan Bahadur, Moulvie Mahmud-ul-Nabi, Sub-divisional officer, Lalbag, was elected Secretary, Technical School, vice Baboo P. C. Mazumdar resigned. As the institution is in a miserable condition, it is hoped that the new Secretary will devote his time and energy to impart to it a healthy tone and improve its financial condition.

The weather is terribly hot and want of rain is greatly felt.

R. K. DAS.

ISLAM AS A LIVING POWER IN EAST BENGAL.

Since the break-up of the established Government after the battle of Plassey in 1757, there has been a silent reaction in another direction. As a political power, Islam was extinct in Bengal; her political supremacy was gone; but as a religious force it was not dead. Silently it continued to mould the minds of the common people. It is doing the same. It is as strong now as it was during the best days of the political supremacy of Islam. Without any organised missionary effort, without any funds at its disposal, and without any recognised particular spiritual head, it has outlived and triumphed over the attacks of Christian missionaries on the one hand and the Brahmo revival on the other. Whether the Christian missionaries and their numerous agencies confess it or not, it cannot but be confessed that they have drawn away very few of the genuine followers of the Prophet of Arabia, during the course of almost a century, from these parts of Bengal. The Brahmo revival is only of recent growth, and the day is far distant when followers of Islam would stoop to adopt its teachings. Ignorant and humble as these people are, they enjoy a greater felicity in their unquestioning faith than their neighbours of other creeds, being calm and content as regards their spiritual welfare and salvation. They adhere strictly to the fundamental principles of the religion taught them and observe all its rites and ceremonies with exactitude, and they have nothing to disturb their minds. Metaphysical subtleties are above them; polemics with other religionists they avoid. They are happy in the consciousness that their religion is the best in the world. This is not the place for propounding religious dogmas. One or two social aspects may, however, be mentioned. Not the least noteworthy is the social equality that Islam offers to all followers without any distinction of rank, wealth or even learning. Islam receives and embraces all alike. Men like Canon Taylor have drawn the attention of Christian missionaries to the fact. The late Keshub Chunder Sen was no less emphatic in his testimony. If one desires to find Islam in its primeval simplicity, in its unadulterated form and in its simple grandeur, let him come to one of the districts of East Bengal and he will have ample opportunities to satisfy his critical faculty. As far as the followers of the Prophet are concerned, there is no fear of Islam being superseded in these parts. On the other hand, it is gaining new followers every day. It has been observed that there is a political danger to the Government in this revival of Islam. Let such alarmists be comforted. No such danger is ever likely to give any kind of trouble to the Government or to any body. The danger rather lies in another quarter. The overzealous missionaries who go about preaching against the religions of the people, had better take warning; for, if any danger is to arise, it would be owing to indiscreet attacks on gods and Prophets by these preachers. A Bengal mob, though calm and quiet, is always sensitive on the subject of religion, and apt to resent insults to the objects of popular veneration.

A.

A MARRIAGE ILLUSION.

Narail, May 6, 1889.

A curious event has taken place here. Some one here has married in haste and is now repenting at leisure. An old Brahman, who had counted 50 summers and who had hitherto observed the vows of celibacy, having got tired of the long monotony of his "single blessedness," suddenly took a fancy to take to his bosom a young sweetheart. No sooner thought than done. To gain his object he mortgaged his immovable property and, after raising a sum, went away to Calcutta, that great mart of fairies, to try his luck there in wife-hunting. There, through the malign influence of his evil stars, he fell into the hands of some consummate swindlers, who showed him a bouri of sweet sixteen. At the first sight he became enthralled by her charms and, without a second thought, he engaged himself like a true and henpecked husband to carry out the commands of that gazelle-eyed perr. His Senility then proceeded home with his newly-got better half and there seemed to recover once more his long lost youthful gaiety; in short he became a metamorphosed old boy. To the man time ran on merrily, but the lassie began to show signs of melancholia. The girl one day threw off her mask, evidently tired of the restrictions of conjugal life and more especially those of the Purd. The old man discovered too late to his utter bewilderment and confusion that he had hitherto been cherishing a harlot of the Calcutta Streets. Now that the charm is broken and the spell removed, the man is enjoying the fruit of his own folly. He has been excommunicated from society.

CHARU CHANDRA MITRA.

MUNSHI HUSSAN ALI.

The perusal of the letter of "Well-informed" in your issue of 27th April last has pained me much. Your correspondent may be well informed; but I regret to observe that he is not well polished. I wonder that you should think it fit to insert such a letter in your paper.

I do not know how Moulvie Hussan Ali has offended him. The only fault the Moulvie has committed is that he preaches God's truth as taught by Islam. He was a schoolmaster, and a Brahmo---unpardonable offences according to the fine ethics of your correspondent---and for which he would hand him over to Mr. Clark. If your correspondent knew Hussan Ali well, he would not have been so uncharitable in his remarks. I only wish that Islam would send a few more missionaries of the type of Moulvie Hussan Ali. The result at any rate, would be the decrease of "well-informed" correspondents.

AN ADMIRER OF HUSSAN ALI.

The 5th May, 1889.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Notice is hereby given that the lease and occupation for the term of three years, beginning from 1st June 1889, of a plot of land for carrying on the business of skinning the carcasses, boiling the carcasses and drying and crushing bones of animals collected from the Town of Calcutta and such like processes, will be put up to public auction at the Municipal Office, at noon of Monday, the 20th May 1889.

2. The purchaser will be required to sign an agreement and to deposit as security a sum equivalent to two months' rent, as soon as his bid is accepted, and thereafter the rent must be paid on the 5th day of each and every month following that in respect of which the rent is due.

3. The plot of land, which is of reasonable dimensions for the intended business, is situated at the east end of what is called the "Central Channel" running through the square mile, the property of the Corporation at the Salt Water Lakes.

4. The arrangements proposed by the lessee for carrying on his business will be subject to the approval of Municipal Commissioners.

5. The contract will include all cattle and carcasses brought to the platform from the portions of the Suburbs which have recently been amalgamated with the Town as well as from Town proper.

JOHN COWIE,

Secretary to the Corporation.

6th May, 1889.

INTREPID AERONAUTS

Are strongly recommended, before making their ascents, to take a cup of our Orange Pekoe Tea at Rs. 1-3 per lb or our Pekoe Souchong at Re. 1 per lb, which are very stimulating and have a delicious flavour.

T. HILL & CO.,

Adjoining the Corinthian Theatre, Calcutta.

In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas

or 6 copies for a Rupee,

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS

OF THE

Bengal Bonded Warehouse Association

FOR THE

Half-year ended 30th April, 1889.

1. Your Directors submit for examination and approval the accounts of the Association for the half-year ended 30th April, 1889.

2. On the 31st October last, the uncollected rent-bills amounted to Rs. 12,454-10-7; during the subsequent six months bills were issued for Rs. 55,585-14-6; of these two amounts Rs. 55,943-0-5 have been realised, leaving Rs. 12,097-8-8 outstanding.

3. The divisible surplus amounts to Rs. 33,755-2-0. Your Directors propose to set apart as usual the sum of Rs. 2,000 to the credit of the Repair and Building Fund.

4. Two of your Directors, the Hon'ble Rajah Doorga Churn Law, C.I.E., and Mr. D. Cowie, retire by rotation, but offer themselves for re-election.

5. The Hydraulic Lifts continue to work well and satisfactorily.

6. After deducting the sum to be set apart under the Act for repairs, the divisible balance will be Rs. 31,755-2-0. Of this amount your Directors recommend that Rs. 30,000 be applied in payment of a dividend of Rs. 15 per share, and the balance Rs. 1,755-2-0 be carried to the next half-year's account.

A. E. HARRISS.
D. C. LAW.
DAVID COWIE.
M. M. SAIN.
W. J. M. MCCAW.

Calcutta 8th May 1889.

At the Half-yearly Meeting of Proprietors of the Bengal Bonded Warehouse Association held at their Office, 102, Clive Street, Calcutta, on Wednesday, the 8th May 1889, at noon.

PRESENT:

D. Cowie, Esq.; J. A. Crawford, by his Attorney, D. Cowie, Esq.; A. E. Harriss, Esq.; the Honorable Rajah Doorga Churn Law, C.I.E.; Joy Gobind Law, Esq.; W. J. M. McCaw, Esq.; G. H. Kiernander, Esq.

1st. Proposed by The Honorable Rajah Doorga Churn Law, C.I.E.

Seconded by A. E. Harris, Esq.

That Mr. David Cowie do take the Chair.

2nd. Proposed by Mr. D. Cowie.

Seconded by Mr. G. H. Kiernander.

That the Report of the Directors be received, and the Accounts passed as correct.

Carried.

3rd. Proposed by Mr. Joy Gobind Law.

Seconded by Mr. J. A. Crawford, by his Attorney, Mr. D. Cowie.

That the divisible surplus of Rs. 33,755-2-0 be appropriated in terms of the 3rd and 6th paragraphs of the Directors' Report, and that a Dividend be declared of Rs. 15 per share payable on and from the 15th instant.

Carried.

4th. Proposed by Mr. G. H. Kiernander.

Seconded by Mr. Joy Gobind Law.

That the Hon. Rajah Doorga Churn Law, C.I.E., and Mr. D. Cowie be re-elected Directors.

Carried.

With a vote of thanks to the Chair, the Meeting separated.

DAVID COWIE,
Chairman.

Bengal Bonded Warehouse Association.

99TH DIVIDEND.

The Dividend for the Half-year ended 30th April 1889 of Rs. 15 per share will be payable on and from the 15th instant.

S. E. J. CLARKE,
Secretary.

Calcutta, 8th May 1889.

FOR SALE

Price Post free Rs. 6
Cloth Gilt Rs. 6.
* Cloth Bound Rs. 5-8.
Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most captivating description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no ungard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress

he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homœopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books, &c., &c., for sale at their Homœopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE
NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "BARODA" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 10th instant, and the Steamer.....for Cachar on Tuesday the 14th idem.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godown at Juggannauth Ghat not later than the previous day.

DHUBRI & DEBRIOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBRIOGHUR DESPATCH
SERVICE.

A special tri-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, and Debrooghur on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH
SERVICE.

A tri weekly service is maintained between Naraingunge and FenchooGUNGE for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,

Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

BEETHAM'S

GLYCERINE - AND - CUCUMBER

For INDIA and all HOT CLIMATES this sweetly scented emollient Milk is INVALUABLE
IT KEEPS THE SKIN COOL and REFRESHED in the HOTTEST WEATHER,
Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, REDNESS, FRECKLES, TAN, etc., and RENDERS the SKIN DELICATELY SOFT, SMOOTH and WHITE.

It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY and WRINKLED, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN and WIND more effectually than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BITES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin, this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers M. BEETHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system
Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,
After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs
Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.
For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,
Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court,)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Locketts, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutta, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' SANITARY COMPOUNDS

In the various shapes of

Liquid, Powder, Soap and Ointment

are invaluable in the Indian climate.

They are perfectly harmless, non-poisonous, and non-irritant.

They have proved efficacious in skin diseases. They cure wounds and ulcers. Even Lepers have found them valuable.

To the rich and the poor, the healthy and the sick, they are alike welcome.

They destroy the virus or contagion of small-pox, measles, typhus and typhoid fevers.

They cleanse your homes and clothes and purify the air. They keep your body clean, teeth strong and skin pure. Your bed free from bugs, your drains inodorous, and closets free from bad smells.

They may be used with safety and with happy results in sick-room, kitchen, and every other part of a house.

Preparing for the Press

THE FALL OF MANDALAY, BY ZITO..

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime subscribers may register their names with

Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

298A, Upper Circular Road,
CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

In consequence of the difficulty and delay in getting together reliable matter for the guide portion of the work and the preparation of numerous illustrations which must be executed in England, some delay necessarily will arise in the execution of the work. But intending subscribers should not delay in registering their names at the above address.

DIPPIE & Co.,

Agents and Correspondents for the author.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,—

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly	... "	... " 7
Quarterly	... "	... " 4
Monthly	... "	... Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet,"

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. }

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1889.

} No. 374

MRS. BROWNING'S SONNET INSUFFICIENCY.

When I attain to utter forth in verse
Some inward thought, my soul throbs audibly
Along my pulses, yearning to be free
And something farther, fuller, higher, rehearse,
To the individual, true, and the universe,
In consummation of right harmony !
But, like a dreary wind against a tree,
We are blown against for ever by the curse
Which breathes through nature. Oh, the world is weak—
The effluence of each is false to all ;
And what we best conceive, we fail to speak.
Wait, soul, until thine ashen garments fall !
And then resume thy broken strains, and seek
Fit peroration, without let or thrall.

SUFFICIENCY—A REPLY. (By an Indian Poet.)

There are many beside me and many above me,
I stand not alone as the Nightingale sings !
But the love that inspires me doth shadow all things,
And raise me above thee in this that I love thee,
And love thee so, dear, that I only can love thee
Nay, what canst thou more for me if thou wilt love me,
Crush with thy burden these burdens of mine,
Wash my salt tears sweet with tears of thine.
Nay, hold me fast, love me true, let nought deceive thee.
I love thee so, dear ! that I never can leave thee.

To—

Of powers on earth that make or mar man's life,
Is chiefest woman. Conscience, honour, truth,
Ambition, love of peace or love of strife,
Religion, chance that comes when life is smooth,
And turns its course awry, or fear of death,
Are all most potent arms of destiny ;
But woman crowns them all. From her a breath,
A tone or token, touch, or glance of eye
O'ermasters all. O ! Woman ! thou art Fate
Without Fate's blindness. Not divine art thou,
Yet surely nearest God in form and state
Of all his works.

And when He carved your brow,
Sweet friend ! and lit your eyes with light of day,
He shed on you his most divinest ray.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Travellers to and from distant climes would do well to bear in mind that these changes and the altered diet and surroundings of their lives entail manifold risks to health. Occasions are sure to arise in which they will need a remedy such as these renowned Pills and Ointment, and no traveller by land or sea should ever fail to have a supply at hand. Then he may truly be said to have a physician always at his call for the various emergencies of travel. Chills and fevers should be promptly treated, and the printed directions should be carefully studied at the commencement of any illness, for Holloway's remedies can be safely used in all climates.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

"ALT. Punjab will rejoice to learn," says the Lahore Tribune of the 11th instant,

"that Babu Pratulchandra Chatterji, M.A., B.L., Pleader, Chief Court, has been offered and has accepted the appointment of Judge of the Chief Court for three months, vice Sir Meredyth Plowden, who proceeds on leave on the 14th instant. Babu Pratulchandra joins his post on the 15th. The right of Indians to seats on the Chief Court Bench was first recognised by that high-minded and truly Christian ruler Sir Charles Aitchison ; but the ignoring of that right since the lamented death of Pundit Ram Narayan had raised doubts as to whether his successor was not opposed to such liberal policy. Those doubts have now been dispelled, and we, on behalf of all Punjab, thank Sir Broadwood Lyall for this appointment, though temporary, of an Indian gentleman to the Chief Court Bench."

We need hardly say, we concur, in every word. The same paper adds :—

"As so many as four Judgeships are going abegging, we think another appointment might have been given to an Indian gentleman—Lala Madan Gopal, M. A., Barrister-at-Law, would have been an excellent choice."

Jaishi Ram, from Dharmasala, writes to the same journal, proposing another—

"Lala Lal Chand, M. A., Pleader, High Court Allahabad, and Chief Court Punjab, who has now practised for about 10 years in the highest Tribunals of the N.-W. P. and the Punjab with marked ability and success ; whose College career was most brilliant, whose life has been most pure and virtuous."

∴

FROM an analysis of Examination results, the Tribune comes to the conclusion that

"while in Bengal 50 to 60 per cent of candidates pass, in the Punjab 17 to 27 only pass. In the B. A. only 47 per cent passed. A few years more of this wholesale slaughter will achieve the end which this policy has evidently in view—the closing of higher education."

The writer was not aware of the educational Bartholomew's Day which has since taken place in Bengal. Our tyrants have outheroded the Herods of the Punjab.

The Punjab students have memorialised the authorities. Their fellow-victims of these Provinces may adopt the hint.

∴

THE Tribune says :—

"Though Reis and Rayyet says that we made a mistake when in a recent issue of our journal we called the Malabar and Travancore Spectator an Anglo-Indian journal, we venture to think that it is our contemporary who is mistaken on the point. Last year when we advertised for a Sub, a European applied for the post from Calicut, and in his application he told us that he was then Editor of the M. and T. Spectator. He was appointed our Sub-Editor, and from him we learnt that the Spectator was owned by an Anglo-Indian gentleman. We still believe the paper is Anglo-Indian. Has not our shrewd contemporary noticed the Anglo-Indian use of the term 'Native' in the Spectator ?

Pending some possible explanation from the city of the Zamorin, that settles the matter. But where is the clever Madras formerly connected with the People's Friend, who took up the Malabar journal and gave it its present designation and all its importance ? In any case, we should be sorry to lose him.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

THE Indian Witness, a missionary journal, says that

"the Boys of Rugby School support a mission school at Masulipatam, South India, and it is stated that they now propose to support a mission work in the East End of London."

Poor lads!

THE following news has been going the round:—

"The ex-governor of Senegal, who after leaving four negroes on a desert island to protect the French flag, forgot all about them, so that they died of starvation, has been fined in Paris £6 for each negro thus left to perish."

Thereupon, the righteous organ of Neo-Brahmoism, the Liberal—

"Alas, £6 for a negro! Does it absolve the man in the sight of God?"

That is more than we men of the world pretend to know. Why does not our contemporary out with it at once?

THE Dresden Tageblatt reports the following remarkable litigation:—

"A rich man from Saxony, whose wife was dangerously ill, promised to give the doctor half his fortune if he would only cure the lady. The patient recovered under the doctor's treatment, and the husband sent a large sum of money as the fee. The doctor, however, refused to accept the sum offered, and claimed half the manufacturer's fortune. The latter showed no inclination to part with the moiety of his fortune of 2,000,000 marks or more, and the physician is now seeking satisfaction in a Court of Law."

The plaintiff is a veritable leech! As old Bishop Hall says—

No horse-leech but will looke for larger fee.

As for success, again cries the Bishop—

Groat's worth of health can amie leech allot?

NOTHING comes amiss now-a-days:—

"Large quantities of corn husks are now used in Austria for making coarse cloth and very tough and durable paper."

THE English papers report that Sir Alfred Lyall was offered and has refused the Governorship of Cape Colony. For a retired Indian with literary resources, there is nothing like a seat on the India Council.

It is said that Bateman, in his Great Landowners of Great Britain, puts the Duke of Westminster down as her Majesty's richest subject. His Grace is, according to a recent return of millionaires, worth £16,000,000. His annual income is set down in the return at £3,00,000.

It is highly honourable to the Amir of Bokhara, that he has made a stipulation with Russia that no spirituous liquors should be introduced in Bokhara, except for the use of the Europeans there.

LAST year, there were, in London, no less than five hundred children under ten years of age, taken into custody as "drunk and incapable."

PEOPLE in general have no idea of the great value set in Europe on works of art, letters or curiosity. The prices sometimes given for them appear fabulous. There is at least one book for which a sum of 250,000 francs (£10,000) was paid by its present owner, the German Government. That book is a missal, formerly given by Pope Leo X. to King Henry VIII. of England, along with a parchment conferring on that sovereign the right of assuming the title of 'Defender of the Faith,' borne ever since by English kings. Charles II. made a present of the missal to the ancestor of the famous Duke of Hamilton, whose extensive and valuable library was sold, some years ago, by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge. The book which secured the highest offer was a Hebrew Bible, in the possession of the Vatican. In 1512, the Jews of Venice proposed to Pope Julius II. to buy the Bible, and to pay for it its weight in gold. It was so heavy that it required two men to carry it. Indeed, it weighed 325 lbs., thus representing the value of half a million of francs (£20,000). Though much pressed for money, in order to keep up the 'Holy League' against King Louis XII. of France, Julius II. declined to part with the volume."

UNDER power and jurisdiction—by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means—in relation to Her Majesty's subjects and others within the dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar, Her Majesty the Queen in Council has ordered:—

"Where it is shown by evidence on oath, to the satisfaction of the Consul-General, that any British subject or British-protected person is disaffected to Her Majesty's Government, or has committed, or is about to commit, an offence against the Principal Order (the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884) or is otherwise conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in Zanzibar, or is endeavouring to excite enmity between the Sultan or people of Zanzibar and Her Majesty, or intriguing against Her Majesty's power and authority in Zanzibar, the Consul-General may, if he thinks fit, by order under his hand and official seal, prohibit that person from being in Zanzibar, within the limits specified in such order, during any time therein specified, not exceeding two years."

The punishment for disobedience of the order is imprisonment for two years, without prejudice to the operation of the order of prohibition. The offender is also liable to removal or deportation.

CALLED to it by the death of his wife, the Hon'ble Colman Macaulay has sailed back for home on seven months' furlough immediately on his return to this country. Mr. Cuthbertson, the Officiating Under-Secretary, in addition to his own, acts as Financial Secretary to the Bengal Government till the return of Mr. Cotton who will undertake those duties and make them over to the permanent Secretary.

BABOO Aubinash Chunder Mullick has taken up the duties of the First Personal Assistant to the Commissioner, Mr. Smith, of the Presidency Division. Baboo Prankumar Dass, Deputy Magistrate and Deputy Collector, is Gazetted as the 2nd Assistant, in place of Baboo Amar Nath Bhattacharjee on leave. Was not Baboo Tamey Kumar Ghose appointed to one of these posts?

THE Secretary of State having sanctioned the appointment, Mr. E. V. Westmacott, C.S., has been Gazetted, under Section 33, Act VII (B.C.) of 1878, Commissioner of Excise throughout the territories administered by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, with effect from the 4th April 1889.

THIS week's Calcutta Gazette publishes the Proposed Rules under the Inland Emigrants' Sanitation Act I. (B.C.) of 1889, which was hurried through the Bengal Council and has been assented to by the Viceroy. The matter being urgent, the Rules will be taken up for final consideration by the Lieutenant-Governor on the 20th. Objections or suggestions must reach the Government by the 18th.

LOCAL Auditors on the staff of the Examiner of Local Accounts in Bengal, have been exempted by the Lieutenant-Governor from service as jurors or assessors in criminal trials held in any district in Bengal.

FOR facilitating the registration of rayyets' leases, &c., the following rules, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor, have been added to the Rules framed under Section 69 of Act III of 1877 (the Indian Registration Act.)

76A.—Any person having occasion to procure the registration of any considerable number of instruments in the same form, such as leases, agreements, or bonds, shall be allowed to deposit in any registration office any number, not less than 50, of printed or lithographed forms of such documents.

76B.—Provided that these forms must be printed or lithographed lengthways on hand-laid paper of medium size. Blank spaces must be left in the body and at the foot of the instruments to fill in names, amounts of money, areas, boundaries, and any other variable particulars. A margin must be left of one inch on the left-hand side for binding. No margin is necessary for copying endorsements, as in the case of other registers, but the forms must contain a blank space of not less than one side of a half sheet of the paper on which the endorsements shall be copied.

76C.—Before use, such forms must be bound into volumes, and paged in the Registration Office, and a certificate be written of the number of pages contained in the volume. One volume shall be kept for each depositor, and his name be noted outside. The volumes shall be numbered and treated in all other respects as volumes of Book I or Book IV, as the case may be.

76D.—On the presentation of a document being an exact duplicate of any form deposited, and being executed by, or in favour of, any one of the depositors, it shall be copied into the volume appropriated to that depositor's forms: that is to say, the blank spaces in the form deposited shall be filled up so as to make it an exact copy of the deed presented.

76E.—As an exception to the general rule, priority may be given to the registration of documents presented under these rules. If possible, the document should be returned to the presenter before he leaves the office."

MR. G. H. Simmons has been re-appointed a Port Commissioner and Vice-Chairman of the Commissioners.

THE third Criminal Sessions will commence on Monday, the 17th June next.

THE Indian Planters' Gazette's Calcutta Currency officer says:—

"People who have been long in India do not as a rule faint when they see a coolie with nothing on but a dhooti. It is quite another thing, however, when a native person who no doubt believes he is a gentleman drives in an open carriage right through the crowd of carriages at the Eden Gardens with his body bare to the waist.

"I regard an exhibition of this sort as a positive and deliberate insult to European ladies. The police on duty should have turned the fellow out till he had put on more clothes."

This "native person" should have been turned out, but not by the Police. The less Police, the better in all cases. Why will not English persons themselves warn such nude people off, and if they prove insolent give them a drubbing? The Baboo Dhooti should be mercilessly suppressed as a public costume. The man who exhibits his nakedness on the course is a barbarian, deserving of no mercy.

THE Tribune learns that Bakhshi Ram Dass Chibber, second Master of Bishop Cotton School, Simla, has been honored with being appointed Persian tutor to Her Excellency Lady Lansdowne.

THE Saturday Mail begins to-day.

GAREH and Co, builders and contractors, sued J. R. Bellhios for Rs. 547-7-3, the balance of account for timber sold, and Rs. 227-8-9 interest. The balance was admitted. The contention turned on the interest. The defendant denied that there was any stipulation for interest, in fact, it was distinctly understood that it was not to be charged. The plaintiff swore that it was agreed that interest would run. It was an oath against oath. Mr. Sconce, the officiating Chief Judge, Small Cause Court, decided in favor of the plaintiff, saying "The practice of the trade was to charge interest, and defendant had offered no testimony beyond his own in support of his statement that he was not to pay interest."

Is the practice so universal that it should be accepted in every case without proof?

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Lieutenant-Governor left yesterday for the hills by the ordinary mail train.

THE Court of Archbishops has decided against the Bishop of London. It is of opinion that the Archbishop of Canterbury has jurisdiction to try the Bishop.

THE Shah of Persia is on his European tour. His Majesty has arrived at Tiflis en route to St. Petersburg.

A GRAND personage in Hyderabad has dropped. Maharaja Narendra Pershad, grandson of the famous Chundoo Lal, is dead. The head of the Hindu interest in the State, he was associated with the late Sir Salar Jung in the Regency, and was, on the latter's death, for sometime the Senior Administrator, and virtually all in all. He did not do, however. The popularity of the deceased minister and the interest of his family as well as the strength of the Hindustani element proved too much for an enfeebled old man without genius or modern culture to cope with. It was during the latter period, that Sir John Gorst was invited from England, at an enormous fee, on a professional visit, to advise—on nothing, and maintain the Maharaja at the head of affairs. That object failed, and latterly, Narendra Pershad being assailed in respect of the fee paid from the Treasury, he stopped inquiry by allowing it to be written off against him, and it has been repaid out of his salary. A wealthy noble, he was, we believe, above the taint of personal avarice or corruption in office.

THE Third Prince of Arcot, Azim Jah, died on Thursday at the age of 65.

THE Deccan Mining scandal still hangs fire. The Secretary of State has not yet been able to make up his mind as to which of the two alternative schemes he should sanction. One thing is certain, though, Mr. Watson declines to give up £150,000 of the concession money.

THE House of Commons has rejected, by 284 votes against 231, Mr. Dillon's motion for disestablishment of the Church in Wales. The motion of Mr. Picton for abolition of the duty on tea has shared the same fate. The votes in this case were 215 to 120. Lord Hartington, speaking at Bury on the 15th, exhorted all parties to join and settle the Irish land question. There was no peace for the country while the question raged.

At the Queen's Bench Division, Mr. Justice Stephen delivered the judgment of the court (for himself and Mr. Baron Huddleston,) declaring that women could not be elected to fill Municipal offices, since, had the Legislature intended to bestow upon them such a right, and to make an exception to a general rule of long standing, it would have done so in perfectly plain terms, and not have allowed the matter to rest "on ambiguous language, and to be inferred from combining together forty or fifty different Acts of Parliament." This judgment is subject to liberty to appeal, if exercised within one week, by Lady Sandhurst. The decision is considered satisfactory by the public. It can be upset on technical grounds only. It has hitherto been accepted that though women can vote at Municipal elections, they are not eligible for seats on the Town Councils. As regards the School Boards, the right to sit was conceded to them in express words. Under the circumstances, Parliament could scarcely have intended to create an anomaly so glaring as that which would be produced were they allowed to become members of County, but not of Municipal, Councils.

A BILL has since been introduced into the House of Commons declaring the eligibility of women to be elected and to act as County Councillors and Alderwomen. It is intended to make the law retrospective, without, however, interfering with any express judicial determination. There is little chance of success for the measure. In any case, there is none for Lady Sandhurst. The Bill is in the hands of Mr. Bernard Coleridge. Whatever the reception of it by Parliament, he is sure of the good graces—such as they are—of the blue-stockings and political petticoats. He will be if not the ladies' man of the day, at least the frights—if any body envies Mr. Bernard Coleridge.

BEFORE going to press, news comes by cable that the judgment of the lower court has been upheld on appeal.

THE result of the Entrance Examination is very poor indeed. The percentage of success is about twenty. About 7,500 students appeared and only 1,475 have passed, namely, 211 in the first, 581 in the second, and 683 in the third or last division. The ages of the students, as printed in the Calcutta Gazette and reprinted in the Gazette of India, vary from 5 years to 91 years and ten months! The precocious lad is a town development of the Hindu School. The nonagenarian hails from Barisal, belonging to the local Zilla School. Crediting these to the wickedness of Mr. Edward Morris Lewis and his assistant d—ls in the Bengal Secretariat, we come upon a figure which brings us to a halt. The Rungpur Zilla School returns a boy of only 12. Master Asutosh Roy must be a too-much-knowing boy to have passed successfully in the second division. We find many others below the age of 16. The withdrawal of the restriction of age must have been a great stimulus to early education. We are assured that a boy once passed at the still lower age of 11. In glancing over the list, it strikes us that the mofussil schools shew a better result than our town institutions. This is not the first time though that Calcutta has been beaten in the race. Notwithstanding the wholesale massacre of the innocents, a mofussil school—the Brojamoan Institution, Barisal, has brought out all the students except one successful—returning as many as nineteen. Only two ladies, Olga Schmidt from the Loretto Priory, Hazaribagh—and Margaret Amy Young—a Private Student—have passed in the first division. Eleven are shewn in the second, and four are returned in the third. The Bethune Collegiate School has passed only three in the second division. One old Calcutta academy, which has for the last 31 years been figuring in this examination, is completely ignored this year. The school had sent up two dozen boys, some of them very promising, and the school authorities are, we understand, in communication with the University on the subject. We hope they will determinedly probe the matter to the bottom. They may just succeed in bringing to book open secrets to the great relief of the public.

At the end of this month, the Maharaja of Kappoorthala, accompanied by two of his officers and his doctor, will visit Cashmere. Preparations had been ordered by the ruler of Cashmere for his reception on a grand scale. But Kappoorthala would have none of it, none of these mummeries. He has prevailed on the Cashmere Durbar to give up all thoughts of pageantry and profusion. He wants to see and enjoy and learn, and this can be done only by going in a quiet, unostentatious way. He insists on being treated as a private visitor.

WE are authoritatively informed that Mr. Boehm has commenced the bronze statue of Lord Dufferin. The portrait of Lady Dufferin has been entrusted to Mr. Shannon. The marble bust of Her Ladyship, to be placed in the Lady Dufferin Hospital, will be taken in hand in the autumn.

THE insane proposal to increase the pay of the superior municipal officers, on the plea of the new areas added to the town, has been knocked on the head. At their meeting of Monday, the Commissioners, almost to a man, rejected the proposition from the chair that the augmentation of the city gave the officers a prima facie claim for augmentation of salary. Such of them as might have to bear additional travelling expense, would, however, be remunerated to that extent. The town has been saved a great scandal, and we congratulate the Chairman and the Commissioners on the return of good sense. Sir Henry Harrison did not press his motion on the Commissioners and asked them, if they were not now disposed for any increase, to reject the proposition totally, leaving no room for future applications on that behalf.

THERE is a feeling in the municipality against Mr. Harrington's offer to burn the Calcutta refuse. He offered an experiment at his own cost, provided the municipality entered into a contract with him for ten years, in case the experiment succeeded. A committee was appointed to arrange the preliminaries and a contract drawn up. As usual in this municipality, there was a Pandit raid. At the last moment, Messrs. Garlick Brothers offered to do the work more expeditiously and cheaply. The Engineer of the Corporation recommended the second as the better method, and the Chairman asked the Commissioners to reconsider in the Committee the first offer along with the second. Some of the Commissioners freely expressed themselves against any such innovation on the present disposal of the refuse, considering the destructors a nuisance by themselves. Before the experiment, that is a premature opinion, bred of ignorance and alarm at all innovation.

THE Hon'ble the Legal Remembrancer carried his protest in the Select Committee against the Mahomedan Burial Board Bill to the Council itself. It was weak in the extreme. The Bill was not sent back for reconsideration, but verbal amendments were carried to meet his objection by addition of certain words to the name and style of the Bill.

THE Fisheries Bill has passed through the Council. It was emasculated in the final stage. Dr. Rashbehary Ghose moved and carried an amendment which struck at the root of the Bill. The original object was to nullify the recent rulings of the High Court that fishing in private waters was not an offence under the Penal Code, which had been hitherto treated as theft and punished accordingly. The learned Doctor pointed out that nothing was an offence when the intention was not dishonest and that the Penal Code recognized that principle of law. The Advocate-General in charge of the Bill with a lawyer's instinct accepted the amendment and the Lieutenant-Governor himself voted for it. It was carried by 6 against 5. The exception runs in these words:—"Provided that nothing herein contained shall apply to acts done by any person in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right, or shall prevent any person from angling with a rod and line or with a line only, in any portion of a navigable river." In one sense, it was a superfluity, but in a country where Magistrates are so little informed and consider their opinion as law, it is well that the exception has been embodied in the law itself, that there may be less excuse for the courts to go astray.

THE Pratikar, of Berhampore, writes feelingly on the inefficiency and evil of the Police. Our contemporary quotes, with warm thankfulness, the remarks made in a late issue of the Englishman admitting the inadequacy of the pay of the subordinate officers, as compared with the enormous power for mischief reposing in their hands. Not that our native brother has any personal interest in enhancement of pay, but that he therein sees the root of the Police inefficiency. He is right. How can an utterly uneducated man, say a Head Constable on Rs. 10 a month or a Sub-inspector on Rs. 50, perhaps risen from a Head Constable on Rs. 10 or a constable on Rs. 6, be expected to rise superior to the temptations in his way? It is out of the question. As we have always said, make a clean sweep of the present diseased carcass and reconstruct a new and pure body untainted by previous training or traditions and officered by men of some decent education.

The best thing of all is, of course, to abolish the old-world nuisance altogether, root and branch, now and for ever. But that is too advanced a conception to be readily received yet by our thinkers, official and non-official.

THE same provincial paper protests, with equal power, against Sir Stuart Bayley's answer to the address at Chittagong not to expect any assistance in the matter of roads, &c., from Government, on the plea that the revenues are inadequate for these luxuries, for which they must tax themselves again. The Pratikar speaks in the following strain:

"The rate at which the people of this country pay taxes, over and over again, times without number, making good every Rupee, down to annas and pies, leaves the Government no room for saying that the revenue is not sufficient to meet all the wants of the country. After paying all these taxes, after paying cess for roads and cess for public works, after being relieved of the last farthing to pay taxes, are the subjects to be again required to make roads, bridges, &c., by subscription among themselves? Truly, life is not worth living for them. Verily, it is a case of swimming across after paying for the boat. A country which was the favoured sanctuary of the Goddess of Wealth, is now, thanks to European science, converted into the very home of perpetual famine. Between exhaustion of soil and over-exportation, the people are reduced to cry aloud in distress. The Government will do nothing to relieve this poverty and these miseries. You must do it for yourselves, though, of course, you must pay a sufficiency of taxes and all manner of demands. Yes! pay taxes for roads and bridges, pay taxes for preventing famines, and then make your own roads and bridges, and, if famine overtakes you, smack your lips in quiet, or, at the worst, quietly give up the ghost."

That is, no doubt, an exaggerated statement, and its political economy is questionable. But it would be uncandid to deny the truth that underlies it. The faith of Government has not been so scrupulously kept as our loyalty might wish, and the worst effect of the present financial tightness is to lead the authorities to make light of their promises and pledges.

THE Morning Post writes:—

"Candidates for the Forest Department take warning. Nobody lives long in it, according to the Englishman, which advocates improved pension rules on this very ground. An impecunious Government may, however, reply that if the foresters die off before they can enjoy the fruits of long and faithful service, the necessity of any pension rules, leave alone improved ones, is not very apparent. The Government is mean enough for anything."

Except, of course, towards its well beloved cousins of the Civil Service. Happy is Bureaucracy in India—a Happy Family. Nothing comes amiss to it. The greatest calamity to the Empire may be a godsend. Drought, inundation, progressive barrenness of soil, absolute famine itself, or war, raises the wind in its favour. Anything and everything may be an excuse for putting money in the purse of the Celestials.

Are we drawing a fancy picture? Just look at the St. James' Gazette. At a time of financial embarrassment like this, when the cheese-paring of Government is bringing distress to numerous households, and economy in many directions is being carried to the stoppage of down-right improvements and necessary public works, and the hurt of administrative efficiency, the Indian Civil Servants are clamouring for increase to their slender salaries. But the most wonderful thing about the suggestion is the occasion for it—the ground on which it is advocated. One would have thought that the Service would at the present juncture have the decency to suspend its pretensions. Since the administration of Lord William Bentinck, when the covenanted officials were caught in the act of flagrant bribe-consumption in the shape of costly Daluchs, the Indian Civilians have never been in worse repute. At a time when a great Civilian in Bengal and another no less eminent member of the Service in Bombay have been condemned on unquestionable testimony of breach of law and honour, and the latter of even corrupt practices, it required Heaven-born assurance, not to say "cheek," to put forward a claim to enhancement of the already fat pay the members of the Service are allowed to draw, and to support it by the evidence of their own guilt. It is admitted that Mr. Crawford borrowed money of his subordinates and the people in his jurisdiction wherever he went, but, poor man, what could he do? He was so scantily paid, that he could not make both ends meet. And then those "globe-trotters"—they are coming in shoals now to India and they must be housed and fed and treated with the best champagne, to keep the traditions of the Service. If the poor Civilian is not to rob or receive bribes or even to borrow, the fat Indian peasant must come to the rescue. Such is the irresistible argument! Could there be a stronger case for increasing the pay of the Indian Civil Service all round?

THE following gossip is from the "Home Notes" of the I. P. G.—

"The Marquis of Ely, who died abroad recently, and whose remains are to be brought to England for cremation, enjoyed the distinction, in company with the Duke of Roxburghe (then Marquis of Bowmont), Earl Cowper, the Marquis of Hartington, and the Marquis of Lorne, of being placed on the list of selection when Her Majesty decided to bestow the hand of the Princess Louise on the scion of some English noble house rather than on some obscure and impecunious German princeling. It was well known in Society at the time that Lord Ely and Lord Cowper, to bar even the possibility of their being so nearly allied to Royalty, without a moment's delay became engaged to be married, while the Duke of Roxburghe's father flatly declined the honour for his son, and Lord Hartington was then, as now, not a marrying man."

These revelations are sufficiently strange. So it was not the Queen that descended to give her daughter to one of her subjects, but the subject that obliged his sovereign by accepting her offspring. The truth is that, in the West as in the East, genuine noblemen rather fight shy of connection with royalty, just as some proud untitled gentry do not ally with the ennobled parvenus. Among the Plantagenets,

Hapsburgs, and Guelfs, whose thin bloods crawl

Down from some victor in a border brawl!

our Queen, however, is of ancient and illustrious lineage. Yet an alliance with royal families is ab initio irksome and even degrading in some way or another, and sure to prove an intolerable burden in the end.

REPORTING the death of Rao Saheb V. N. Mandlik, our young contemporary of the Calcutta Chronicle writes:—

"A remarkably public spirited man, a profound lawyer, and the proprietor of a well-edited and influential journal, the Native Opinion, his loss would be regretted by whole India."

That reminds us of a passage in Mr. R. C. Dutt's book on the Literature of Bengal, which originally appeared in the Rev. Lal Behari Dey's Bengal Magazine, in which a well-known author in Bengali is thus noticed—"Baboo Ranga Lal Banerjee is a poet and a Deputy Magistrate." Literature, like history, repeats itself. Or else, the celebrated characterization of Robert Boyle would have been the first and last instance of that form.

The learned reader scarcely needs to be reminded, that an attempt was made to fix on Pope an instance of bathos by his far from contemptible victim, Colley Cibber. But, although the latter's parody on the Poet's lines on Lord Mansfield in his Imitations of Horace has been praised for its felicity, Pope is not really chargeable with the nonsense attributed to him. On the contrary, the original passage is very fine, and even tender. It is mere vindictiveness that could make fun of it. However, Cibber's couplet is not bad, though it has no right to distinction as an example of "chaff" against the great author who has made him immortal as the butt of his satire. We quote it as a warning against sinking:—

Persuasion tips his tongue, whene'er he talks,
And he has chambers in the King's Bench Walks.

BYRON called stars the poetry of Heaven, and the brilliant Anglo-Indian bard and essayist David Lester Richardson, with equal truth, called flowers the poetry of the earth. Since then, the appreciation of flowers and beautiful plants has advanced enormously. Science, however, has looked upon flowers with an equivocal eye. Though ready to describe them with minuteness and to determine their tribe and caste, it nevertheless regarded them with a sneaking distrust. The idea has long prevailed that flowers were not good for the health. Men and specially children were reported to have died from sleeping in an apartment in which flowers were left. Not so in the East. There, flowers and perfumes have always been looked upon as efficient auxiliaries of medicine in the cure of the ills that flesh is heir to. At length, Europe is coming round to Asia—in every sense and all matters. So far from flowers being the horrible deadly little charmers that the West was wont to consider them, they are gradually being recognised as capable of affording not only moral enjoyment but also physical comfort. And scientific men go so far as to discern the specific virtues of breathing certain flowers and scents in subduing particular complaints. The following is going the round of the press throughout the world:—

"A. M. Ungerer believes the flowers and the perfumes distilled from them, have a salutary influence on the constitution, and may be regarded as a therapeutic agency of high value. He says that residence in a perfumed atmosphere forms a protection from pulmonary affections, and arrests the development of phthisis. He adds that in the town of La Grasse, where the making of perfumes is largely carried on, phthisis is rare, thanks to the odorous vapours exhaled from the numerous distilleries."

THE Darjeeling correspondent of the Englishman lately told a capital dog story:—

"Soon after dark a dog, sometimes of one colour and sometimes of another, would, without previous bark or warning, spring on to a poddar's platform, now in this part of the bazaar and next in that, and grab all the gold mohurs or rupees it could in its mouth, and then dash away with its prize into darkness. Men with sticks were stationed all over the bazaar, but the thefts went on all the same, and the dog could neither be hit nor caught. The bazaar began to be abandoned, and the poddars to close their shops at dusk. The Cantonment Magistrate was at his wit's end, and communicated his trouble to the Officer commanding the Cavalry Regiment, who agreed to send him 3 dozen mounted men for an hour or two every evening. The dog was chased more than once, but always got away in the direction of the barracks. At last the troopers were ordered to use their pistols, and the poor doggie, black on this occasion, was bowled over while dashing away after one of his raids. On examination the black dog turned out to be a white one belonging to a soldier in one of the Regiments. The man was arrested, and most of the money, to the value of hundreds of rupees in gold and silver, stolen by the dog, was found in his box. He made a clean breast of it, and explained that he had trained the dog to commit these thefts. The Court-Martial admired his smartness and intelligence, and gave him six months for his roguery."

There is nothing new under the sun, however, and we are constrained to deprive the ingenious British private of his pretensions to originality. If the whole story is not a mess-table myth, the trick related is an old one in India. There are traces in Sanskrit literature of animals being put to a variety of curious uses unknown in these vainer times. The art of degrading the noblest of our dumb brethren to a disciple of St. Dismas still exists, we are afraid. At any rate, before the opening of the railway it was a common thing for thieves to employ dogs to rob the native passengers at Shergotty, mostly poor pilgrims to Gya. They lurked in the neighbouring bush and sent out their dogs into the sheds at night where the tired travellers lay stretched on the floor with their heads on their respective bundles of change of wear and all their little effects. The dog breathed on the sleeper and sometimes licked him and, to make sure that he was fast asleep, softly scooped out the bundle without awaking the owner and carried it to his master waiting outside and returned for repetition of the operation. This was a well-known nuisance, and travellers on the Grand Trunk Road in that part were warned by their friends.

THE English papers contain a story of how a military gentleman had dreamed he would be winner of the late Lincoln Handicap. He formed the resolution of trying to find out the winner by an earnest course of dreaming. He told his idea to his friends and became their butt. But he had faith and set himself to dream. And he dreamed no dream so to say. Thrice in the night of the preceding Monday, he dreamed the same No. 13 as the winner. He believed in his reveries and he backed the "Wise Man," the horse No. 13. That horse won, so that the backer had dreamed to good purpose.

"Such stuff as dreams are made of!" doubtless, many will exclaim. But no! The matter is not to be dismissed with a shrug of incredulity. We for our part see nothing inherently improbable in that account. The boast of science is all bosh before the mysteries of the consciousness. The pride of science itself has been humbled from her own advancing enlightenment. The scepticism of the Eighteenth Century has been succeeded by a more reverent disposition. It is no longer so common to hoot what we cannot easily explain as heretofore. Within the last few years, the English Society of Psychical Research are patiently enquiring into the phenomena of dreams, including the very class to which this dream of the turf-man belongs. A large body of evidence has already been collected bearing upon the point in question. It seems now admitted that dreams are not necessarily mere illusions, that in many cases they convey true messages, sometimes even prophecies. The difficulty is about their modus operandi and their rationale.

THERE is off the coast of New Guinea a small group of islands called the Lousiade group. Since the discovery of the goldfield at Sudest, they have attracted the notice and longing eye of the new colonists, and they are being vigorously prospected. The few natives scattered over them will doubtless be quickly stamped out, for there is not room enough for them to retire to in the interior. Considering the character of the wretched lot, it is difficult to sympathise with their summary extinction. One of the group, in especial, Rossel Island, bears a horrible reputation. About "thirty years ago a Portuguese vessel, with 300 Chinese on board was wrecked. All hands got ashore, and the white crew left in the ship's boats for Timor Island to get assistance, leaving all the Chinese on the island. The crew were absent about two months, during which time the natives of Wolla had made prisoners of the Chinese, fenced them in, and afterwards taken them to Rossel Island, where they killed and ate them at the rate of three per day. On a vessel coming from Timor to rescue the castaways, it was found that only three of the unfortunate Celestials were left of the original 300."

It was all very well for Dryden to moon about his "noble savage," or for Rousseau and Raynal and others to dream of the virtues and happiness of primitive barbarism. We know better. An ounce of the miseries of civilization is worth more than a ton of the glories of the starving tribes who roam about in woods, in trembling terror or vindictive ferocity, always in desperate struggle with Nature. The savage is only a savage.

NOTWITHSTANDING all the activity of science during all these centuries, the art of medicine remains in almost its primitive inefficiency. We refer, of course, to Established Medicine. For, some unrecognised medical schools in the West have made considerable progress, and here in the East we have from time immemorial at work systems which, however defective in anatomy and physiology and weak in chemistry and surgery, are unquestionably rich in therapeutic resources and specially in drugs. In the absence of a real advance in the art of healing, the world is from time to time amused with barren scientific theories. Although Swift's elaborate imaginative satire has been discredited by the great strides made by science in our times and the marvels really achieved, yet the description of Laputa, as containing a core of universal truth, may still be studied with profit. The microscope had not been invented in the great Dean's time, or else Captain Gulliver would surely have been introduced to a Professor of Microscopy, who would have anticipated as well the genuine discoveries as the stark vagaries of these days. To us, at any rate, these cat-eyed seers into the invisible are going at a terrible rate. They are always coming upon —mares' nests. They have a wonderful eye for punctuation, and an extraordinary pénchant for assessing its syntactical value beyond all rational bounds. Not but what they may see the commas and colons, semicolons and full points, only we see no reason for the importance they attach to these living minutæ. We distrust them on a priori grounds. Had these imperceptible intruders into our system, of which millions and billions are floating in the air or creeping on the ground about us, been such terrible enemies and absolute destroyers, poor encompassed humanity would long since have perished, without leaving a single wreck behind.

We do not despise the efforts of science in this direction, we only wish scientific men should observe more caution, and the public should not be bullied into unconditional surrender of their reason at the sound of science. A little patience will be good to both sides.

Already, within four years, Koch's cholera theory has been shelved, and Pasteur's mad dog is having its day since. And now another threatens to elbow him out.

The craze of the day seems to be to attribute all diseases to living punctuation. Professor Verneuil derives the dangerous convulsions attended with lockjaw, known as tetanus, from a bacillus communicated by horses. He has been at it for several years, and announced his discovery in 1885. He seems to have failed to attract much notice, but subsequent researches have, as usual, only confirmed him, and he again boldly proclaims it—for what it may be worth.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1889.

THE PERSECUTION OF DEATH.

THE NECROLOGY OF THREE WEEKS.

WE are in sackcloth and ashes. Death has, of late, been particularly busy in our household and among our circle of friends, far and near.

Insatiate archer! could not one suffice?

Thy shaft flew thrice; and thrice our peace was slain,
And thrice, ere thrice yon moon had filled her horn.

"Thrice," did we say? It flew four times and more, and in quicker succession, within less time than the space of three moons. And the relentless hunter shows no signs of "sad satiety." In about three weeks' time or so, he has bagged a variety of noble game, felling several of our dearest and best. And he is at it still. No doubt, destruction is his allotted mission, but there is a propriety in everything, and the sterner the vocation, the more is the need for moderation and pity. It is true,

This world a hunting is,
The prey, poor man; the Nimrod fierce, is Death;
His speedy greyhounds are,
Lust, Sickness, Envy, Care;
Stuff that ne'er falls amiss,
With all those ills which haunt us while we breathe.
Now, if by chance we fly
Of these the eager chase,
Old age with stealing pace
Casts on his nets, and there we panting die.

But the great Tyrant, to whom all must, sooner or later, succumb, might at least distribute his havoc, so as not to cause a paralysing panic or absolute despair among those he meant to spare for the time. The executioner of Nature might well be expected to take and give breath to his victims. There is no use, to be sure, in crying over spilt milk, yet one cannot help a natural emotion. It is all very well to bid us,

Let the dead past bury its dead,
Act —act in the living Present,
Heart within and God o'erhead!

But our dead is the dead present, not past. God overhead is God the most worshipful Almighty and Allrighteous, to whose decrees we must submit. The heart within is lacerated, however, and it will tarry over the open grave, to drop the involuntary tear, even though it be but a useless tribute. The necessity of repeating the sad office, without a sufficient interval for recovery of elasticity, becomes a real grievance. Nor do we see any immediate prospect of relief. There is, at this very moment, in Calcutta, a dear soul on the rack. The struggle has been going on for full two months, but it cannot be prolonged much farther. The end is certain. The oil of life has been consumed, and only the wick remains to be burnt out. It is a question of days, and soon the land, already in mourning for so many recent losses, will lose another son of rare worth—one of the most valuable lives in Bengal.

✓Among the Brahmanocracy of Bengal, no names are so well known as Banerjee, Chatterjee, and Mookerjee. They constitute the progeny of three of the five illustrious sages, who, some ten centuries back, were invited from Upper India to emigrate and civilise Bengal. The number of those who claim these patronymics is very large, and accordingly there are all sorts and conditions of men in their ranks. Yet, it is unquestionable that, among the bearers of these names, are to be found the flower of Hindu worth in the Province. Confining ourselves to the Chatterjees, they deservedly hold some of the best offices open to the sons of the soil. One is a Judge of the Metropolitan Small Cause Court, and another, who is Sub-Judge at Alipore, is one of the ornaments of his Service. Indeed, the Judicial and Executive Services and the learned professions are crowded with Chatterjees, Banerjees and Mookerjees. The Chatterjees have the proud distinction of giving Bengal her greatest living author. They are just now, however, in a bad way. The evil eye of the Fates is on them. Death is having his sanguinary Saturnalia among them. Within a few days—by one shot as it were—he has brought down to the ground more than one of their best members. And the greatest Chatterjee has been the greatest sufferer. Baboo Bankim Chunder Chatterjee, the great Cham of Bengali literature, has been left brotherless. He has at one time to mourn for two brothers, one following the other with fraternal haste to join him! One, a retired public officer, was of no public distinction besides, but he was to him a good brother all the same. The other is a public loss as well. Baboo Sanjib Chunder Chatterjee was a well-known literary man, as the editor, after his surviving brother, of the famous periodical the Banga Darsan, whose publication was an era in Bengali literature, just as the establishment of the Edinburgh Review, in 1802, was in English literature. He was a man of fine taste and of great conversational powers. As the centre of a circle of Bengali authors and aspirants, he exercised a guiding, chastening influence. He was averse to work and wasted his opportunities, thus leaving few cognisable permanent marks on his generation. But he was a good writer, chaste, pellucid, flowing. His prose is a model of vigorous idiomatic writing, without vulgarity as without affectation. He had uncommon powers of narration, and it is a pity he did not engage himself on a serious history. His historical essay on the famous Claimant of the Burdwan Raj, Pratap Chand, will always be read as a fascinating story delivered with equal spirit. For once, he took pains and hunted up all the traces of a fading tradition.

Bengal has suffered another lamentable loss, in another eminent member of the same clan. Baboo Tara Prasad Chatterjee was only a Deputy Magistrate, and not perhaps the most successful as such, but his worth was out of all proportion to his professional status. Not that he was what in familiar parlance is called a "duffer," but he was far from a "brick," either. He was not remarkable for management, specially the management of superiors. He was too modest to show himself off, and the chiefs of the Administration are too occupied to discern light buried under a bushel. He was well versed in knowledge—in all sorts of knowledge—perhaps, he had too much of it for his limited sphere, and appeared sometimes to be overburdened by his possessions. He wanted decision, seeing too much not to be dazed. And his keen sense of justice made him halt in presence of conflicting claims. He was, in fact, too good

For human nature's daily food.

But he was a man of high intellectuality and wide culture. He showed the promise of his after-life in his boyhood, while he was a charity boy in the Baraset School. He was sent thence with a scholarship to the Calcutta College, where his career was distinguished. He was one of the first batch of graduates of the University, and one of its best through all time. As Bankim Chunder, so Tara Prasad simply took his Bachelor's degree and passed out to the world. They both belonged to the pre-

University period and system, and were connected with the University almost by accident. The Calcutta University at best is a board of examiners only—a mere name with scarcely a local habitation, and certainly without an academic atmosphere. When these Chatterjees finished their education, such things were out of the question. Yet, none of the hundreds of graduates of all grades, who fill the Calendar, surpassed them in academic accomplishments or in the true academic spirit. Tara Prasad was indeed more of a Pandit than a Government official. Yet it is remarkable, and speaks volumes of the baseness or crass ignorance respecting the country of high officialism, that, while every ignoramus and imposter who haunt the antechamber of Power are permitted to degrade the gown of learning, Tara Prasad was never called to the councils of his alma mater, any more than Bankim.

Tara Prasad's gifts were a good deal neutralised by a constitutional diffidence, and so he has left no productions to speak of. But he wrote tersely and like a scholar, in both Bengali and English. He was en rapport with the highest thought and science of the times, and his contributions to the press, few and far between, were among the most valuable. He was one of the original band of writers with which the Banga Darsan started. He wrote the series of papers on Positivism which first introduced the vernacular reading public to the mysteries of the philosophy of Auguste Comte. He was one of the writers on the Bengalee before it became a receptacle of twaddle. An article of his, in the Bengal Magazine, on White Brahmans attracted some notice. His latest contribution was his account in Bengali of a trip to Ceylon, published in the Navajiban magazine. It is a most interesting and valuable series, whose republication would enrich Bengali literature.

He was, in fine, a type of the best Bengali manhood—no man of action but a pure-minded honourable man of thought, shedding the very best influence on all around. He was not without his mistakes and trials in his service career, but in no instance, we believe, was his honour in question. In private life, he was gentle and innocent as a lamb. At a time when blatant pretension and fuss is all the rage, it was something to have the example of such sterling worth.

On the other side of the country—in the Western Presidency—Death has reaped in a single victim a very considerable harvest. The Grand Old Man has fallen. For, the late Rao Sahib Vishwanath Narayan Mandlik was unquestionably the oldest and most distinguished of all our public men, on this side or that. There may be one or two senior in age, but they are comparatively obscure, or have not reached quite his stature. Narayan Mandlik was no Pandit confined with his pothis in a corner, nor shy politician nursing his public spirit in secret, nor publicist condemned all life long to air his eloquence and political information and wisdom through anonymous journalism, or on the non-official platform, but a recognised public man. He was a representative and leader of the people, known and accepted as such. He was not only sure of a hearing, but was even invited to say his say. As much as a man of the soil could lawfully aspire in a British dependency, he had aspired and had succeeded. He had attained to as near a statesman's status as is open to a pure Indian. He was not to be suppressed or passed over. He was not the man to keep himself, or to be kept, in obscurity. He had no unmanly hesitation or maudlin modesty. He knew what he was, and would be himself. Having a good opinion of himself, he expected others to share it. Believing in his claims, he took every opportunity to advance them. He was, however, no vulgar braggart, pressing himself forward in season and out of season, but a Brahman gentleman and man of the world, disciplined in the school of an alien service. In fact, without a fine judgment and a native tact, he could not have risen so steadily as he did. The British constitutionally dislike and distrust intrusion, and in India their national character, from undue indulgence among a subject population, is apt to develop into extreme hauteur and touchiness. Any undue aggression might have sealed the Brahman's chances for ever.

He was not only venerable in age, but imposing in presence, fair and attractive in person, and august in personality—in fine, the Grand Old Man. He was a king among men. Successful according to his countrymen's political status, he was the one native of Bombay best known throughout the Empire, perhaps our chief politician after the death of the late Kristo Das Pal. In some important respects, he was the Bengali's superior. He was a politician without a stain—sans peur et sans reproche. He raised the profession of politics, if it can be called one. He was, however, no common demagogue or agitator, but a patriot all the same—a grave thinker on public affairs, speaking and writing with a responsibility and the weight of a well-earned position. A scholar and mathematician, a profound Hindu jurist and lawyer in general, well-grounded in principles and apt in details, thoroughly acquainted with the country, enriched with experience in various offices in different districts and provinces, he raised the tone of public discussion. Such a man is rare in any country, and rarer still in this, where we suffer from dearth of genuine talent and specially of adequate information.

He was not perfection, to be sure. His very excellence and accomplishments had degenerated into vice. His tastes and pursuits were confined. His learning was only professional. The devotion to a single department which enabled him to produce results necessarily cramped him. His affections were probably not warm—certainly his sympathies were not wide. He never cared to cultivate the graces. His habits were simple, but they were all primeval. At home he was a Hindu of Hindus—of the old school, with just the surroundings absolutely required of his position in mixed society. He lived in a fine beautifully situated house, elegantly furnished, stored with a very good professional and political library, but he hardly seemed capable of enjoying these enviable advantages, except the last. He no doubt started like the rest of us as a reformer. But he early changed, and soon matured into a thorough Conservative. As he advanced in years, he was less and less capable of sympathising with the aspirations for domestic and social freedom of the younger spirits and the bolder sages (like, say, Ranade.)

He was not popular. Such a man can never be—one of strong individuality untempered by ardent sympathy. He was perhaps too stern and aggressive. But he was thoroughly respected for his sincerity and his independence. This latter quality was shown under peculiar disadvantages. For, though he was a Legislator, he was but a minor servant of Government, and, though he was rich, he was not regardless of money. He was a patriot and, both in Council and in the humbler sphere of the Municipality, he served the public with uprightness and patient diligence. The death of such a man is a loss to the Empire.

His career, like that of Kristo Das Pal, is a mournful commentary on British Rule. He was one of our best men—one of the ablest and noblest subjects of Her Majesty's worldwide Empire. And he succeeded, as much as he was permitted. For he was respected of both the nation and the Government. Yet, what did his success amount to? He closed his blameless life and brilliant career as Government Pleader of Bombay—a minor provincial law officer. Under a Bajee Rao III, he would in all likelihood have been Premier. Under any other European Power in the East, he might have been in the Ministry, if not in the Cabinet.

Within the same brief period, we have sustained another and no less serious loss. On the 25th April, in England, died Colonel R. D. Osborn. He was the leading English publicist on Indian affairs. His brilliant pen was always devoted to the good of the Indian people and the British Empire. His death leaves us poor indeed!

DENATIONALIZATION OF MAHOMEDANS.

It is much to be regretted that the Mahomedans in Bengal are losing their national vitality. The activity they are displaying in educational matters is bringing ruin to the cause of Islam. Their forward move in the race of intellectual progress is a retrograde one from the national point of view. In fact, as a nation, once proud and highly honored, the Mahomedans are rapidly going down from bad to worse. They have thrown themselves out of the frying pan into the fire. Their desire for worldly gain and wealth made them renounce their national identity and faith. At first they were unacquainted with Western science and arts and now they are ignorant of their national literature and the doctrines of Islam. Following the example of the Christians, they are trying to bring about a change in the Mahomedan constitution which has been based on the principles laid down in the Koran. They think that, by non-performance and non-observance of the religious rites and ceremonies, one cannot lose his nationality, nor is it incumbent on a judge or jurist or a leader of society to be the follower of any faith or the faith of his party. These English educated Mahomedans are not aware that the English constitution is quite different from and in opposition to that of ours. The Koran is our worldly and heavenly guide. Our constitution is based on it and the Hadis. We cannot adopt non-Mahomedan constitution nor can we make any irreligious change in that of ours. One who attempts to bring about such a change or even considers it practicable, at once ceases to be a Mahomedan. Such Mahomedans are no better than Giaours.

Most of the Mahomedan Barristers, M. A.s., B. A.s., B. L.s., and a large number of undergraduates of the present day are not Mahomedans in the strict sense of the term. In their manners and dealings, they consider themselves free from all sort of religious obligations. They do not care for religion nor have they any respect for Islam. They want to pass for a Mahomedan without possessing the required qualifications. From these deceivers and pretenders, the Mahomedans as a nation cannot derive any good, nor can they be proud of these apostates winning distinction and honor. By the elevation of one or more of these apostates to the highest Bench or the Legislative Councils of the realm, there will be no ground for the Mahomedan community to be proud of. The number of irreligious and corrupted Mahomedans is increasing year after year. Finding themselves unable to pull harmoniously with the followers of the holy Prophet, they formed themselves into a body politic, assuming a name well suiting their deceiving propensity. For the sake of brevity, I do not wish to deal with the internal and external constitution of this body. Those who are personally acquainted with the prime movers of this political association, need not require to be told that they are not the followers of the Prophet and have no regard for Islam.

Now the question is Why do the young Mahomedans go astray from the path of their forefathers and bring ruin to the cause of Islam? For the simple reason, that they receive a most defective education. To be more explanatory, it is necessary to take a retrospective view of Mahomedan education in Bengal. In 1829, or about half a century after the foundation of the Calcutta Madrasah, the English department was opened in this Mahomedan institution to enable the Mahomedan boys to avail themselves of Western education and to learn the language of the rulers. The English-reading students then used to attend the Arabic classes as well, for the sake of their national classics, without a respectable knowledge of which a Mahomedan was not considered a gentleman. After a period of about 25 years' trial, it was found that the plan of giving pure Western education was not conducive to the success of the new department, and, in consequence, in the year 1853, it was converted into an Anglo-Persian one, with the object of imparting elementary English education up to the Junior English Scholarship standard, and a sufficient knowledge of Persian language and literature. But since that time the educational authorities never made any attempt to adapt this institution or other institutions of the kind and the system of education there, to the needs of Mahomedan life or the peculiarities of Mahomedan society.

Nawab Abdool Lutef Bahadoor, C. I. E., the pioneer of Mahomedan (Western) education and the advocate of the cause of Islam in India, has supplied us with ample materials in the short account of his assiduous and indefatigable "efforts to promote education especially among the Mahomedans" to conclude that he had always been busy in bringing to the notice of the authorities the cause of the Mahomedan institutions under the direct control of the Government and the system of education there not being in accordance with the requirements of Mahomedan life or the peculiarities of Mahomedan society. And whenever he got opportunities he suggested means for the rectification of the same and for putting Mahomedan education on a useful and sound basis. Had the wise suggestions of the Nawab Bahadoor been adopted, the Mahomedans would not have been so backward in the race of intellectual progress, nor the result of Western education would have been detrimental to the interests of Islam in India, specially in Bengal. When he began to inculcate the usefulness of Western education among his co-religionists, the Nawab must have thought that the time would soon come when the apathy of the Mahomedans to English education would disappear from this land and the Anglo-Persian department of the Calcutta Medressa and its Branch School would flourish with the children of the Faithful, and other similar institutions would be founded by energetic Mahomedans in different parts of the country. Anticipating a happy outcome of his endeavours, in planning his scheme for national reorganization, he thought and naturally calculated that this new desire for Western education would diminish the ardour for the national classics, and fearing the bad effect such a state of things would produce and in the hope of avoiding the pending evils, he tried his best to make the Anglo-Persian Department of the Calcutta Medressa suitable to the needs of the Mahomedan society, and to put the Arabic Department in such a condition that the Mahomedans could easily master their national classics and turn out useful members of society and a help to Government. But alas! the unkindliness and the indifference of the head of the Educational Department became a stumbling block to the healthy progress of Mahomedan education.

Though the Calcutta Medressa is a Government institution, its constitution is not of public utility. It is a sectarian one like the Sanskrit College. It is solely intended for the Mahomedan youth. It is, therefore, much to be regretted to find the demoralizing and denationalizing effect of the education here imparted.

It has already been mentioned that there were two objects in view when the present Anglo-Persian Department was first started, viz., imparting English education and Persian language and literature. The last object, which is of first importance to the Mahomedans as a nation, is miserably lost sight of. Owing to the defective system of training, the students are very imperfect in that language. Unlettered Mahomedan boys come to the Medressa and begin to learn the alphabets of this language as well as those of the English. In the junior as well as in the senior classes, little attention is paid to the Persian and the Vernacular. In the absence of proper training, the Urdu, the Lingua franca of the country, has become as difficult to them as any other language. They cannot write a couple of sentences in that language correctly. Nor have they any aptitude for reading any Urdu or Persian book.

It is a pity that no encouragement is given to them at the Medressa in this direction, nor can they get any substantial help at home for want of means. Our poverty has made us out incapable of bearing the double cost of educating our children at school and at home. We can ill-afford to engage the services of competent English tutors to help them in preparing their class lessons, and on account of this the foundation of the mental culture of our young is not sound. This defect is telling very heavily on the success in life of the Mahomedan youth in general. Our financial circumstance does not permit us to employ theologians to give religious instructions to our boys at home, nor is such kind of training allowed in the Medressa, consequently Mahomedan boys have no opportunity to learn the doctrines of Islam. This compulsory ignorance of religion deprave the minds of our school-going boys of the present day to such an extent that they do not know the difference between a Sunni and a Shia. It is getting hard for the headmasters of schools to give a correct return of the Sunni and Shia students.

If this state of things continues, the Director of Public Instruction will in a few years be obliged to do away with the "Sunni and Shia columns" in his "annual return." The Calcutta Medressa, the centre of the Mahomedan education in Bengal, and where about a thousand Mahomedan boys are learning Western education, is a true picture of the above. Now can be better imagined than described the moral and religious condition of the boys in the mofussil.

As to the observance and performance of the religious obligations and duties, the English-educated Mahomedans, old and young, saving very few, never repair to mosques for the performance of daily prayers, nor are they ever seen at the congregation of the Faithful on Fridays. The youngsters are ashamed to go to any place of worship, for they do not know how to perform the ceremony. They do not know which is lawful and which is not. They eat and drink anything they get, without the least fear of committing sin, and utter anything they like without the slightest apprehension of becoming Kafir (infidel). In this connection I may mention that, in some quarters, it is hoped that when the youngsters finish their academical course and enter the world they would themselves learn the doctrines of Islam and become useful members of the Mahomedan community. To allow boys to grow old without religious instruction, is a suicidal policy, and the hope thus entertained is as good as to throw a man overboard who does not know how to swim and expect that he would surely reach the shore in safety. Literally, these men are throwing their children into the ocean of atheism and irreligiosity, in the absurd expectation of their coming out pious men.

Such being the religious state of affairs, can any sensible man expect that the cause of Islam will receive any help at the hands of any of these English educated men? Instead of becoming a useful member of the Mahomedan community, his mere retention of the name given to him at the time of Ikka is a shame and reproach to Islam.

Without going further into the subject of demoralization and denationalization of the Mahomedan youth, I beg to draw the attention of the Government and the Mahomedan Literary Society to the facts I have recorded here, and earnestly request them to adopt proper and prompt measures to remedy the crying evil, by reorganizing the Anglo-Persian Department of the several Medressas in Bengal to meet the requirements of the Mahomedan society, and by putting the Arabic Department on a useful and sound basis. Thinking that the educational authorities in Bengal cannot reasonably object to making the necessary changes, I beg to suggest that in junior classes English be taught as a second language and other prescribed subjects be taught as the through the medium of the Urdu, and the Persian be considered principal subject of study. Arrangements should also be made to enable the students of the Anglo-Persian Department to attend the Arabic classes in the literature hour, and the Arabic students to attend the A. P. Department in the English hour. The Calcutta Medressa being a sectarian institution, religious instruction should be encouraged and time should be fixed for the same as it is the case in the Christian institutions. By drawing up a plan on this line of teaching, I am sure, the existing evils will greatly be minimized if not thoroughly remedied, and the rising generation will become useful members of the community and loyal and submissive subjects of Government in accordance with the teaching of the Koran and the Hadis.

KHAJA KHEZIR.

5th May 1889.

THE CRAWFORD COMMISSION.

LORD CROSS'S DESPATCH.

India Office, London, 29th March, 1889.

My Lord,—I have considered in Council the letter of your Government, No. 8, Revenue, dated 1st instant, forwarding a copy of the Report of the Commission appointed, under Act 37 of 1856, to enquire into certain charges of the corrupt receipt of money and of improperly borrowing money on account. Mr. Arthur Travers Crawford, C. M. G., of the Bombay Civil Service, and Commissioner of the Central Division of that Presidency, together with a copy of the report of the proceedings and the evidence.

2. The Commission find Mr. Crawford is not guilty on the charges of corruption, but your Excellency in Council is unable to accept their conclusions in their entirety, being of opinion that the evidence establishes beyond all reasonable doubt that Mr. Crawford did accept illegal gratifications for showing favour or forbearing to show disavour in the exercise of his official functions. You observe, moreover, that Mr. Crawford is shown to have borrowed largely in contravention of the rules of the service, and you give it as your opinion that he is, under the circumstances described by you, disqualified for the service of Government.

3. With regard to the charges of corruption, whatever might have been my opinion if I had been called upon to decide this matter upon the printed evidence alone, I feel bound to attach great weight to the fact that they have been enquired into by a very strong Commission, the members of which, during a sitting of no less than 67 days, had the advantage (which neither the Government of Bombay nor the Secretary of State could have) of seeing and hearing the witnesses, and that in their opinion none of the charges of corruption are established. That being so, I am not prepared to overrule the Commissioners as to any of these charges, and I have decided not to disturb their finding on them so far as it concerns Mr. Crawford personally.

4. As to that part of the case, however, which relates to improper borrowing of money, the conclusions at which the Commissioners have arrived are most unfavourable to Mr. Crawford.

5. The Commissioners find that between the 12th of February, 1887, and the 19th June, 1888, Mr. Crawford borrowed from certain natives of India, within the division of which he was in administrative charge, various sums amounting to about Rs. 66,000.

"The thirty-third charge consists of two parts: the first part charges Mr. Crawford with having borrowed money from certain persons—native-born subjects of her Majesty—within the division of which he was in administrative charge. Mr. Crawford, when pleading to this charge, admitted having borrowed from several persons mentioned in the charge, and no other cases were established.

"It was necessary to call evidence only to show the amounts borrowed, and that the lenders were at the time of lending within the Division of which Mr. Crawford was in charge.

"It was shown that Mr. Crawford borrowed from Santapchand Navalchand, carrying on business in Poona under the firm of Sobhachand Mankchand, the following sums: Rs. 9,000 on the 10th September, 1887; Rs. 3,000 on the 10th January, 1888; and Rs. 5,000 on the 7th May, 1888.

"He borrowed from the Poona firm, Kenning Amarchand, Rs. 20,000 on the 13th February, 1887; Rs. 2,500 on the 8th September, 1887; and Rs. 6,000 on the 12th March, 1888. He borrowed from Sorabjee Cowasjee Captain, of Poona, Rs. 8,000 on the 10th December, 1887, and Rs. 6,000 on the 9th June, 1888. He borrowed from the firm of Jastap Panamchand Rs. 4,000 on the 29th October, 1887."

(Page 119 of Report.)

or, indeed, of the due performance of his public duties anywhere.

6. The Commissioners say in their report:—"During the whole time that he has been Commissioner of the Central Division, as well as before that time, Mr. Crawford has been continually borrowing money in Bombay, Poona, and elsewhere. He has kept no accounts, and has, we are satisfied, no real knowledge of his pecuniary position. The prosecution, under charge No. 33, showed borrowings within the division in 1887 and 1888, amounting to Rs. 66,000, of which there is some evidence to show that about Rs. 40,000 came to Mr. Crawford's hands in cash; but, on the latter point, we cannot speak with certainty. Of these loans not less than Rs. 40,000 is still due for principal. For the defence, borrowings have been shown to the nominal amount of about Rs. 1,50,000. Most of the transactions proved belong to the later part of the time over which they extend and a very large part to 1888. There is strong reason to think that, as Mr. Crawford says, these transactions are very far from exhausting his borrowings. We can form no opinion as to how far these borrowings resulted in actual cash paid to Mr. Crawford, and how much was of the nature of renewals: nor do we know how far the cash that he did receive had to go to pay off earlier loans by other persons and how far it was available for his own use. Amid all this confusion two things seem to us to stand out clearly. Mr. Crawford was in a state of extreme embarrassment. This is plain from the disproportion between his income and his expenditure. It is shown also by the fact that he had to employ several agents to raise money for him and to borrow in several different places, and by the further fact that in 1888 he was borrowing at a rate of interest of 24 per cent, per annum. For the purpose of raising loans and dealing with his creditors, Mr. Crawford employed several agents, and one of the agents so employed was Hanmantrao Raghavendra, the man who is alleged to have been a general agent to obtain bribes. He was employed to deal with the Poona lenders.

All who know anything of this country can understand that Hanmantrao was thus placed in a very dangerous position. One who is intimate with, and is supposed to have the ear of, any dispenser of patronage is naturally an object of attention on the part of candidates for appointments. If such a person be corruptly inclined, he has always a chance of making his position a means of obtaining money, and the danger was especially great in the case of a man who, like Hanmantrao, was Mr. Crawford's agent for raising money. We think it clear that what might have been feared happened in the present case. We think it is shown that that mixture of corruption with some degree of extortion, which in this country springs up so readily and spreads so rapidly if the circumstances be favourable, was prevalent round Mr. Crawford. Nor do we see any reason to doubt that Hanmantrao took an active part in it. However, so far as Hanmantrao is concerned, the responsibility of placing him in a position in which he could improperly obtain money rests upon Mr. Crawford.

Again it is said in the Report, page 15:—"Another point we have had to consider in its bearing on the general case is the extreme disproportion between the share of Mr. Crawford's pay available to him for his own use and the amount he is shown to have expended including his remittances to the Comptoir d'Escompte and to Messrs. Watson & Co., as well as his personal expenditure. The suggestion was that the difference must have been obtained corruptly, but he had another source of supply in extensive borrowing. We have already given the facts and figures so far as they could be ascertained. Our opinion is, that down to the date of his suspension—16th July, 1888—Mr. Crawford was still in a stage on the road to ruin at which he found it possible by borrowing, not only to satisfy or silence old creditors, but to meet his current expenditure as well. The bearing of the evidence as to Mr. Crawford's pecuniary position upon the charges of corruption appears to us to be this: a man so embarrassed as he was is under a greater temptation than other men. On the other hand, we cannot but think that in the mind of any man of Mr. Crawford's antecedents, and holding the position he held, there must be a wide gulf between the most reckless borrowing and actual corruption."

7. That this part of the case is not put by the Commissioners in a light by any means too unfavourable to Mr. Crawford is shown most clearly by the evidence given by Mr. Crawford himself in the course of the trial of Hanmantrao and also before the Commission of Inquiry.

8. Having given this unfortunate matter my most careful consideration, I have no choice but to agree with your Excellency in Council that Mr. Crawford is disqualified for the public service and to order the removal of his name from the list of Bombay Civil Servants.

9. I desire to say that I fully appreciate the efforts which have been made by your Excellency in Council to ascertain, under painful and difficult circumstances, the truth regarding the many serious charges of corruption which have been the subject of this inquiry. The information placed before your Government was such as to render it necessary that an inquiry should be held in order to maintain and vindicate that purity in the administration of public affairs which has been so marked a characteristic of the Civil Service in India.

10. This despatch, as will be perceived, refers only to the charges against Mr. Crawford, so far as they affect him personally. Other questions have arisen incidentally which your Excellency in Council is treating separately, and which will be considered by me hereafter as soon as I shall have been put in full possession of your opinion regarding them.

11. I authorize the publication in such manner as you shall think proper of this despatch, together with your letter to which it is a reply and the Report of the Commissioners.—I have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient, humble

Servant,

(Signed) CROSS.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co. "Limited."

ASSAM AND CACHAR LINE NOTICE.

This Company's Steamer "CASHMERE" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday the 17th instant, and the Steamer.....for Cachar on Tuesday the 21st idem.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godown at Juggannauth Ghat not later than the previous day.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special tri-weekly service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrioghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, and Debrioghur on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A tri-weekly service is maintained between Naraingunge and Fenchogunge for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents.

1-2, Clive Ghat Street, Calcutta.

NOTICE.

The undermentioned lots of surplus lands, the property of the Commissioners of Calcutta, will be put up for sale by public auction, if not previously disposed of, at the Municipal Office, on Monday, the 17th June 1889, at 1 P.M.

Lot No.	Nature of land.	Area more or less
		Bs.	Ks.	Chs.	S. ft.
1	Land on the east of premises No. 65-1 Mirzapore Street	2	12	36
2	Land on the east of No. 2 Putoatola Lane	1	5	39
3	Portion of Old Dhurumtollah Market, tenanted land, originally lot No. 20	10	10	38
4	Land on the south of No. 116 Cornwallis Street	4	15	0
5	Land on the east and north of 116 Cornwallis St.	7	1	28
6	Land on the east of No. 120 Cornwallis Street	5	40*
7	Land on the east of No. 121 Cornwallis Street	6	9	5*

N.B.—*These lots to be sold to the adjoining owners at reasonable prices.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

- The Commissioners' limit will be kept in a closed cover, and the highest bidder above this limit is to be the purchaser; if any dispute arise as to the last or highest bidding for the lot, the same shall be put up again and resold.
- A deposit of 25 per cent. on the amount of the purchase-money is to be made by the purchaser immediately upon the lot being knocked down, and in default thereof, the premises to be immediately put up and resold at the risk of the first purchaser.
- The title to the property will be a conveyance from the Commissioners.
- The residue of the purchase-money shall be paid within 15 days of the date of sale; and in case of default in payment of such residue, the purchaser shall forfeit his deposit, which shall be received and taken as and by way of liquidated damages. The sale to such purchaser shall be wholly at an end, and the Commissioners shall be at liberty to resell the same without any reference to such first purchaser but at his risk.
- The Commissioners will, if required, furnish a deed of conveyance, such conveyance being prepared by the solicitors of the Corporation at the expense of the purchaser, who will likewise have to bear the cost of the stamp duty and registration, and of any attested copies of deeds or covenants to produce those that may be required.
- The Commissioners will enter into no other covenant than that they have done no act to encumber.
- The plan of the several lots may be inspected at the Municipal Office from the undesignated.

JOHN COWIE,
Secretary to the Corporation.
The 13th May 1889.

In the goods of Bany Madhub Tagore deceased of No. 3, Mooktaram Baboo's Street, Calcutta.

An application has been made by S. M. Gribala Dabee, of No. 66, Pathumaghatta Street, in Calcutta, the only daughter of the deceased abovenamed, for grant to her of Letters of Administration with Will annexed in the above goods.

FOR SALE

Price Post free Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound Rs. 5-8.
Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,

BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able paper, the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who, being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr.

Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course:—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books, &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

INTREPID AERONAUTS

Are strongly recommended, before making their ascents, to take a cup of our Orange Pekoe Tea at Rs. 1-3 per lb. or our Pekoe Souchong at Rs. 1 per lb., which are very stimulating and have a delicious flavour.

T. HILL & CO.,
Adjoining the Corinthian Theatre,
Calcutta.

BEETHAM'S

GLYCERINE - AND - CUCUMBER

For INDIA and all HOT CLIMATES this sweetly scented emollient Milk is INVALUABLE
IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and REFRESHED in the HOTTEST WEATHER,
Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, REDNESS, FLEAS, TARS, etc., and RENDERS the SKIN DELICATELY SOFT, SMOOTH and WHITE.
It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY and WRINKLED, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN and WIND more effectually than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BITES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin, this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers M. BEETHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system
Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,
After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs
Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages.

For children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,

Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment

OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi. Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Locketts, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelsmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutta, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

TRUE TO ITS NAME,

JEYES' "PERFECT PURIFIER"

Is the best disinfectant and exterminator of all objectionable odours and infectious diseases. It cleanses the roads, purifies the atmosphere and disinfects the drains, keeps the sick-room pure and healthy.

EQUALLY USEFUL TO ANIMAL AND POULTRY,

It keeps a cowshed pure and sweet. It improves the coat, destroy vermin, keeps fly off, stamps out all infectious diseases.

It is a specific for foot and mouth disease. It kills all unpleasant smell without setting up another smell of its own.

It kills fleas, red lice and vermin of every kind in Poultry, Pigeons, Cattle, Horses, Dogs, Cats, &c. Effectually cures Gapes, Roup and Comb Disease in Poultry.

IT IS GARDENER'S FRIEND AS WELL.

It destroys moss and weeds on gravel pathways and exterminates worms from lawns.

It is a valuable destroyer of all kinds of ants. It kills green fly, red spider, thrips mealy bug, removes worms from the soil in pots, &c.

Agents: DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press
THE
FALL OF Mandalay,
BY
ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime subscribers may register their names with

Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

298A, Upper Circular Road,
CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

In consequence of the difficulty and delay in getting together reliable matter for the guide portion of the work and the preparation of numerous illustrations which must be executed in England, some delay necessarily will arise in the execution of the work. But intending subscribers should not delay in registering their names at the above address.

DIPPIE & Co.,
Agents and Correspondents for the author.

DR.
J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,——

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly	... "	... " 7
Quarterly	... "	... " 4
Monthly	... "	... Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy,	... "	... " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1889.

No. 375

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

LE ROI D'YVETOT.

(From the French of Beranger.)

THERE was a King of Yvetôt once,
But little known in story ;
To bed betimes, and rising late,
Sound sleeper without glory :
With cotton night-cap, too, instead
Of crown, would Jenny deck his head—
'T is said,
Rat tat, rat tat, rat tat, rat tat,
Oh, what a good little king was that !
Rat tat.

Snug in his palace thatched with straw,
He ate four meals a day ;
And on a donkey, through his realm,
Took leisurely his way,
Frank, joyous, from suspicion free,
One dog alone his guard to be,
Had he.
Rat tat, rat tat, rat tat, rat tat,
Oh, what a good little king was that !
Rat tat.

One single onerous taste was his—
A somewhat lively thirst ;
But the king who heeds his subjects' good,
Must heed his own the first.
A tax at table to allot,
Direct from every cash he got
One pot,
Rat tat, rat tat, rat tat, rat tat,
Oh, what a good little king was that !
Rat tat.

Since maidens of good family
With love he could inspire,
His subjects had a hundredfold
Good cause to call him sire.
Four times a year the roll was beat :
His men at targets to compete,
Would meet
Rat tat, rat tat, rat tat, rat tat,
Oh, what a good little king was that !
Rat tat.

He sought not to enlarge his states,
To neighbours kindness showed,
And, model for all potentates,
Took pleasure for his code.

Thus had his people shed no tear
Till, dying, they in grief drew near
His bier.
Rat tat, rat tat, rat tat, rat tat,
Oh, what a good little king was that !
Rat tat.

And still of that right worthy prince,
Oft is the portrait shown,
The sign of a famous drinking house,
Through all the province known,
And many a fête-day crowds will bring
To tupples there before "The King,"
And sing
Rat tat, rat tat, rat tat, rat tat,
Oh, what a good little king was that !
Rat tat.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

YESTERDAY, Her Majesty reached the Biblical age allotted to humanity
Long live the Queen !

THE Birthday was observed in India, as usual. There was the State dinner and Levee at the Viceroyal Lodge, Simla, the parade of troops in Fort William, and the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation held a Garden Party at his residence in Kyd Street.

KING Humbert is on a visit to Berlin, accompanied by the Prince Royal Victor Emmanuel and Signor Crispi. There was a grand review of troops. The review over, their Majesties and the principal Generals lunched together. Toasts were drunk to the armies of Italy and Germany.

REUTER reports the rejection in the House of Lords of Lord Meath's
Bill declaring women eligible as members of County Councils.

THE Volks Zeitung is to be prosecuted for "insulting the King's majesty." It appears that this German paper had published an article reflecting on the late Emperor William. The present Emperor William has declared that he is "at one" with the policy and aspirations of his grandfather ; hence, whosoever insults his grandfather insults him. Thank God, we are subjects of another Teutonic sovereign ! It were well, however, if our colleagues on the Native Press laid the lesson of the incident to heart.

Native Opinion of the 16th instant circulates a good likeness of its eminent proprietor, whose recent death is being mourned throughout India, with this inscription at foot, "The Hon. Vishwanath Narayan Mandlik, C.S.I. Born 8th March 1833—Died 10th May 1889." It is a print from a chalk-drawing from evidently a cabinet size photograph. We hope the Bombay firm which has executed it will advertise it for sale, being confident that it will meet with a ready demand in all the Presidencies and Provinces of the Empire.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

THE Government still shirks any question about Upper Burma. Replying to Mr. Bradlaugh, the Under-Secretary of State for India denied, in the House of Commons, that there was widespread discontent and distress in that newly-acquired country, and that, therefore, there was no occasion for any investigation. The redoubtable junior member for Northampton is not likely to let the matter drop. Meanwhile, the Government should seriously consider the situation and prospects in Upper Burma, which, though conquered, is far from subdued. For ourself, we can only repeat what we said before. There is but one effectual solution of the difficulty—a native régime, under British protection, or even tutelage.

That idea is, of course, gall and wormwood to the almighty Bureaucracy and the whole brood of British place-hunters, in esse and in posse. But what is the use of a statesman from the flower of the English nobility at the head of the Government in India, if he will not rise superior to the Services?

MR. LABOUCHÈRE has not been successful in his motion for abolition of hereditary peers. The House rejected it by a majority of forty-one votes. It is too early in the day to think of depriving Great Britain of its nobles. The Englishman may like to see a bold man "pitch into" the Peers, but he dearly loves a lord for all that, and loves to be one above all things.

GENERAL BOULANGER has arrived in England. He has taken a fine house in London for six months, showing that his future movements are uncertain. He is a great friend of Lord Randolph Churchill, but otherwise he does not seem to be popular. He lately visited the House of Commons. Another distinguished stranger's advent is announced—that of the General's black horse.

NOTHING escapes party vindictiveness in Europe. They have discovered the political pedigree of the most noted Frenchman of the day. The Star has gone to the pains to find out that so far back as 1794, among the eighty-five political criminals who were beheaded on the guillotine, St. Just, and Couthon, was that of one Brigade-General S. B. Boulanger. He was only thirty-seven years of age and had once been pronounced innocent by the Convention. He was again charged with "conspiracy against the liberty and safety of the French people," with "agitation for the production of a civil war, the destruction of the Republican Government, and the subjection of France to a new tyranny."

THIS is Mr. James Payn's deliverance, in the Illustrated London News, on Maharaja Dhuleep Singh's letter to Her Majesty demanding the "Koh-i-noor" or its price.

"The Eastern mind is too full of gorgeous imagery to have much room for humour. The jokes of an Indian potentate are always of a practical kind, and generally take the form of punishment, 'something lingering and humorous,' such as 'boiling oil.' But when he has been 'under the influence of Western civilization' z. c., has learned to wear a top-hat, drink champagne, and bet on the races, he naturally improves in this respect. The Maharaja Dhuleep Singh is an example of it. He has written a letter to the Queen, really full of fun, though it must be owned, rather cynically expressed. Finding that his endeavours to stir up rebellion against her in his native State come rather expensive, he has applied to her for the sinews of war. Money, it seems, he doesn't expect, but he would feel obliged—no; he doesn't even go so far as that—he requests her to return him his Koh-i-noor. It is no more his than it's mine; but that's a detail. He wants it. 'Therefore, believing your Majesty to be that most religious lady whom your subjects pray for every Sunday, I do not hesitate to ask for this gem, or else that a fair price be paid for it out of your privy purse.' If I might venture to suggest a reply to this modest request, it would consist of an extract from a species of literature very familiar to the Maharaja—'Vivat Regina. No money returned.'

That is a poor joke and a worse argument. This cavalierly treatment of a question of meum and teum is more worthy of a cavalier of industry than of an Englishman of letters, who would go to court if one of his tales of fiction were adapted to the stage and put on the boards, without payment to him, and who complains that his books are reprinted, without his permission, in another country beyond the ocean.

THE "Inland Emigrants Health Act (I., B.C., of), 1889" received the assent of the Viceroy on the 7th and came into operation on the 15th May 1889, when it was first published with such assent in the Calcutta Gazette. The local Government was anxious to pass this law for the better sanitation of emigrants, during their passage through Bengal to the labour districts in Assam. But does the law itself improve matters? There is nothing in it which can have any immediate operation. It only defines certain words, such as Agent, Dependent, Emigrant, Emigrate and Labour districts, and then leaves to the local Government to frame rules about the routes, depôts and rest houses, mode of travel, food, water supply, clothing, medical treatment, disposal of the dead, &c., and all to give effect to the purposes of the Act. The only enacting portion properly speaking is the provision that breach of the rules to be made by the Local Government is punishable with a fine of Rs. 500 and an additional fine of Rs. 50 for continuing the breach. It supposes an expenditure of public money in the event of default on the part of an agent to comply with any rule, and then authorises the officer making it to recover the amount without limiting it with simple interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. yearly, under the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1880. That is the whole law, if law it can be called. No true legislative assembly would set over such a Bill of dates. The tendency of modern legislation in India has been to leave everything to bye-laws and rules under an Act and to empower the Government to frame or sanction those bye-laws. This may be convenient, but it is not legislation. There may be a precedent for the law under notice, but then the work of legislation is reduced to sanctioning in anticipation the orders of the Executive. The Government would have shown a greater respect for the legislature of its own creation, by submitting for sanction the rules it proposes to make.

O for a Barnes Peacock to maintain the integrity of our legislative councils!

FROM March last, a very interesting little addition has been made to the Indian Press in the Kayastha Gazette, "a weekly Journal devoted to Kayastha Interests published every Wednesday at Bankipore, Patna. It is the organ of the local Kayastha Association. It shows considerable vigor and is thoroughly worthy of the support of the great community whose mouthpiece it is and of the consideration of other communities. But in order to command influence, it must show more enterprise. It is too tiny a thing, being equal to a single leaf of the standard native weekly. This may be prudent to begin with, but it cannot be satisfactory to any side concerned. It is a disappointment to the reader and a embarrassment to the contributors. The more readable such a paper is, the more interesting it proves. The editor himself is so pressed for space that he frequently uses supplements which are always an irritation on readers, and a positive nuisance when, as in the Kayastha Gazette, they are not uniform in size with the paper. Instead of a couple of narrow strips, of two columns each, the management might at least give two additional pages of the usual size, with three columns to the page. For the national policy, under the circumstances, is to enlarge the size of the periodical.

With regard to the literary standard, we wish our contemporary had not so early in its career made a plunge into Kayastha polemics. But somehow the recalcitrant job came subject of Kayastha origin seems too fascinating to the scribes of the scribes of Hindoo society, and between the English-speaking modern Editors of the Kayastha Gazette and the young Baboos of the Calcutta Gazette, they are hammering away at the question: Are the Kayasthas Kshatriyas? For ourself, we prefer to mind our own business and preserve the unimpaired integrity of our proboscis. Whatever the strictness of the case on the special issue, it is matter of history, though unfortunately a history that is not generally cultivated, that the Kayasthas throughout India have often wielded the sword with a more or less success. But the pen is the peculiar weapon of this people and a formidable one, and we better keep ourself out of its range.

Meanwhile, we are ready to learn. The Kayastha Gazette mentions a book called Kayastha Itinerary, said to be very popular in Upper India, which seems to be the Kayasthas' va-de-mecum and chief weapon in the controversy. We have never come across it. The Gazette's citation is vague in fact, we suspect the writer himself is far from familiar with it, but we presume it is in Hindi, if not in Kayastha characters. What, then, is its proper name? And where is one to get a copy? The writer speaks in general terms of "numerous books and pamphlets" in which the subject of Kayastha origin has been "ably and fully discussed." We know there are many books and pamphlets in Bengali from the old Kayastha Kaustubh downwards, and we are aware that there have been many similar publications of late years in Upper India, but these latter are not known in this part of the country which is deeply interested in the subject. We would ask our contemporary to supply the public with the bibliography of the Hindi side of the literature.

ON the 30th March, we reported the painful occurrence of a young mother burying alive her own child—to cover her shame. She was tried for murder at the last Howrah Criminal Sessions, last Monday, found guilty and sentenced to transportation for life. She pleaded not guilty, alleging that the child had accidentally slipped into the tank and was drowned. She could not confess her guilt—in more senses than one—but the Jury knew what it was and found her guilty and the Judge passed the lesser sentence for murder fixed by law. Both the Jury and the Judge acted under the law. They had no choice in the matter. Ought not the law to view more leniently such cases? With the evidence of her illicit love, the girl could not live in society, and she did the unnatural act for mercy to herself and the child. Indian society has not yet grown to tolerate illegitimacy. No law can suppress that feeling, and the Penal Code should be more in accord with the popular sentiment.

THE Indian Planter's Gazette lately, in its Home News Notes, wrote :—

"The attitude of the Opposition all along on the question may well be summed up in the words of Pope's sneer at Afficus :—

'Willing to wound and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault and hesitate dislike.'"

The quotation is all right, except perhaps for the omission of a comma after "fault." But the "words of a sneer" where only "sneer" is meant and would have been quite enough, is a lapse into the penny-a-liner's temptation, that mars the production of a respectable pen. And why "sneer" at all? That is a misbecoming description of an elaborate historic attack by one great contemporary on another—one of the finest damning likenesses, with all the scars on—nought extenuated and everything set down in malice perhaps—in the whole British gallery of literary portraits. As for "Afficus," it is a bad hand or—the devil!

VERILY he is a devil and the printing establishment a Pandemonium! Between him and his worthy ally the proof-reader, they have, in the Indian Daily News, succeeded in giving an old English worthy a Mongolian patronymic. Our contemporary quotes Sir Henry Wotton. Is he any relation of the Marquis Tseng or one of the Burmese traitors? If a Celestial may receive from Western liberality or ignorance—a Marquisate, a Knighthood or even a baronetcy may well fall to an Omrah of the Golden Foot; for Wotton is unmistakably Chinese. Luckily for the credit of the writer, the lines he quotes are famous in English literature. We have a bone to pick with him on them, however. We are neither partymen nor extremists. Still less are we worshippers of that contemptible fetish which, to the shame and misfortune of our countrymen, has been blindly accepted at the hands of a knot of wire pullers for adoration—Marquis of Ripon. Although we embraced the Local Self-Government Resolution and still believe in it, we have never concealed its imperfect working or even its disastrous result wherever such has happened. Nevertheless, we cannot allow any sinister sneer at the principle to pass without reproof. We regret to find the Indian Daily News open to this charge. Our contemporary writes :—

"When Lord Ripon and his quosone following started the idea into life, they acted under the impression that great things would follow—that the people, grovelling under the yoke of irresponsibility, would find in their handwork the sesame to national independence. So far, their anticipations have proved a dead failure."

That is not a fair description of the matter, either in its origin or its outcome in its personal or its public aspects. The Ripon Government did not start the idea. It was nothing new. It existed before the Marquis landed on these shores. It was as old as the race. There was no originality in the measure. It was at best a revival and a development. It would seem that the Viceroy had at first formed some extravagant expectations

THE London Correspondent of the Indian Planter's Gazette speaks of a new book by Mr. Henry C. Burdett named "Prince, Princess and People," which seems to have created an unusual interest in "Society." It is devoted to our future King and Queen, and is intended to show the arduous nature of the social and public duties of Royalty in chrysalis.

WE have not seen it, but we suspect it to be a plunge in obsequiousness and snobbery. Nor are we disposed to respect the literary capacity of the writer. Our contemporary's Correspondent quotes a passage as a favorable specimen of Mr. Burdett's work, to wit :—

"The quotation," adds the Correspondent, "being of the beautiful lines—

'He mourns the dead
Who lives as they desire.'"

Mr. Burdett is not evidently an over-modest man, speaking as he does as an expert.

THE Indian Daily News, in its opening leader of Thursday on the rejection by the House of Lords of the Bill to legalise the admission of women to the County Councils, quotes Mr. Goldwin Smith's attack in the St. James's Gazette against political women and says :—

"Evidently, the rejection by the Upper Chamber of Lord Meath's Bill will command the hearty approval of at least one Englishman, who will not regret that the sprag has been applied to the wheel of women's political progress at a stage short of the female suffrage he so greatly dreads."

Many readers, in India at all events, will be struck by the word "sprag." One ordinarily expects "spoke" in the connection. Why then, "sprag?" That is a local term for a young salmon. It is also a local word for a nail, and it is doubtless in this sense that our contemporary has used it. But this local usage is ignored by the best authorities. And why a local word where a universally recognised and known word was ready to hand? Which part of Britain does the writer hail from? The information might fix the geography of "sprag" as synonyme for "spoke."

DR. ERASMUS DARWIN, the scientific Poetaster who begat the savant of that ilk of our day—The Darwin, in fact, of all time—sang of the Sexuology of the Botanical Kingdom. The wits of the Anti-Jacobi quizzed the poor bard with their Loves of the Triangles. A greater poet has since charmingly sung the Loves of the Angels. But no man of song has yet worthily treated of the Loves of the Schoolmaster and Schoolmistress. Old Roger Ascham's Schoolmaster is a prose Essay and almost a professional treatise. And poor Shenstone's Schoolmistress—which, by the way, the author originally put forth as a burlesque in the Spenserian stanza—though a respectable poem has no love in it. The author of Dr. Syntax has only allowed his hero the liberty of a kiss twice in the course of his peregrinations. In this neglect of literature to pourtray the pedagogue's tender passion, it is something to have the following characteristic love-letter, which is now making the round of the press. It is from a swain armed with the ferule (instead of the crook) popping the question in right pedagogic fashion :—

"Madam,—If there be yet no proposition towards a conjunction with you, be pleased to admit of this interjection of my respects. I do not pronounce adverbium, that I desire to be adjective to you in all cases, for I positively declare that, comparitively speaking, I should be superlatively happy should I agree with you in all moods and tenses. I hope you will not think me singular at desiring to have a plural number in my family, for I am too masculine to be neuter with regard to the femines—the substantive good of earth. Therefore do not decline this conjugation, though I am not the first person, the second person, nor the third person, who has solicited you to be subjunctive to love. I presume you will not be in the imperative when I am in the potential. It will make a participle of happiness if you will engage your voice to be passive hereafter. Instead of syntaxes, believe that I will pay all the debts of duty, so that we need be afraid of no accidence. My whole income shall be dative to you for the present, nothing shall be accusative of you for the future, and your sweet name be ever my coative, till cometh death, the great ablativ of all things to turn our policy into a prosodie."

MR. LAMBERT as Deputy Commissioner of Police drew Rs. 1,500 a month. As full Commissioner, he is allowed Rs. 2,000. On the separation of the two offices of Chairman of the Corporation and Commissioner of Police, the Bengal Government suggested the pay of the head of the Calcutta Police to be fixed at Rs. 2,000 rising to Rs. 2,500 with free quarters. The Government of India was for Rs. 1,500—2,000 and recommended accordingly to the Secretary of State. Mr. Lambert naturally enough thought he deserved more, and the local Government of Sir Stuart Bayley, obliging to a fault to a protégé of his deceased official Gamahel, did not hesitate to move the superior Government to reconsider the pay as originally proposed. The India Government, with a better sense of the fitness of things, has, we understand, declined to reopen the question, and we think rightly. With free quarters, the present pay of the Commissioner of the Calcutta Police comes up virtually to Rs. 1,750—2,250, if not more. Whereas,

Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Bengal, is allowed Rs. 1,500 and the Inspector-General draws only Rs. 2,500. They have no separate house allowance. The pay of the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, is less than Rs. 2,500. There has been no addition to the jurisdiction, to raise even a plausible claim to increased allowances. Hardly any additional responsibility has been thrown on Mr. Lambert, and there is no better detection of crime in Calcutta. The thieves flourish as ever. We speak from personal knowledge as the Police know.

NOTWITHSTANDING the announcement, in the Englishman, of Mr. Amin Ali's elevation to the High Court, we can scarcely believe that the Government had, with open eyes, committed such a serious mistake. If the fact be as our contemporary represents it, all we can say is, that Government have invited trouble. They may do just as they please with Hindus, but Mahomedan orthodoxy is not always insulted with impunity.

The time has no doubt come for a Mahomedan Judge on our High Court. Hitherto, no such appointment could be made on the ground that there were no eligible men. Luckily, no such plea holds now. We were ourself under the same impression with Government and the Judges, but we have since found reason to change it. Inquiry has discovered to us, and will discover to the authorities, more than one suitable man in the Bengal Provinces. There is at least one senior Pleader practising under the eye of the Court who has sufficient knowledge of English and general information, whose life is pure, who is a Believer and correct Mussulman, without being a bigot, who has all the liberality and accommodating spirit of a man of the world, and who is the greatest Mahomedan lawyer in the Calcutta Court, really versed in the original sources of the law of Islam, and who is the only lawyer in it who cites the original authorities in the original tongue and translates them there and then.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1889.

LORD STANLEY ON FACTORY LEGISLATION FOR INDIA.

ON the 25th February last, in the House of Lords, Lord Stanley of Alderley asked the Secretary of State for India whether his statement at Oldham, on the 25th January, was correctly reported, adding that, on the 5th November last, the Manchester Chamber of Commerce passed a resolution, by a majority of 10, recommending that the British Factory Acts, so far as they related to women and children, should be extended to British India, and that Mr. Stuttard, the seconder of the resolution, since expressed himself, by letter through the Manchester Courier, in the following terms: "Surely it will be better for the physical welfare of the Hindoo to remain in agricultural employment and give us plenty of cotton, rather than be attracted to the ranks of mill operatives." There were in that Chamber of Commerce, however, men who had had Indian experience and who knew the position of things and understood well what hidden influence was at work. It is due to these members to acknowledge the simple truth that, themselves interested in Manchester's supremacy, they nobly stood the test. True to their colours, they would not conceal the truth. To this honest minority, we are indebted for the exposure of this clap trap philanthropy of the rest of their brethren. Although the Resolution was carried by 28 votes, it was supported only by those who were conspicuous in displaying their ignorance of the condition of things under which the Bombay mills worked.

The object, for which, we were told, the Resolution in question was promulgated by the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, was simply humanitarian. Our brethren of Lancashire, out of their profound sympathy with the Bombay operatives, were urged by a strong desire to reduce the hours of labor in correspondence with the Factory practice at Home. Such, if we could believe it, was this slippery transparent Resolution, supported by men wholly ignorant of the existing system of things guiding labor in this country. Incapable of judging of the probable fitness of their suggestions, they obtrude their offices when these were neither needed nor sought for, alleging as a reason for their intrusion that they were acting purely in the interests of the Indian operative, while, in reality, the motive was to check rival competition by the Indian manufacturer!

We are indebted solely to Lord Stanley for unmasking this nest of philanthropic selfishness at Manchester, and drawing from the members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Manchester press their true motives. The result has since been a timely explosion of the absurd pretence set up by the men of Lancashire. Had the cause of humanity alone moved the Chamber of Commerce at Manchester, why should they amuse themselves in removing a grievance where none existed? What brilliant opportunities still exist for a humane body of men such as the Chamber of Commerce of Manchester profess to be, Lord Stanley well pointed out, emphasizing the neglected calls from the Assam Tea districts, the great mortality amongst coolies en route to the Tea gardens of Assam, and inefficiency of cooly hospitals in Assam.

Had the Government of India conceded what the men of Manchester wanted, it would have failed terribly in its duty to the Indian manufacturer. It would have concealed the most important fact that no complaint had ever been made by the Bombay operative. We have no desire to throw cold water upon or damp the spirits of any body of philanthropists, but we certainly have a decided objection to its being made a Tommy Noodle of, for the amusement of men who speak on matters of which they possess no knowledge, and, to serve their own avaricious ends, misrepresent facts, wilfully prevaricate and pervert the truth.

At a meeting of the Bombay Mill-owners, held on the 19th December last, the Manchester Chamber of Commerce was completely check-mated in its tactics. It was stated at that meeting that better than two-thirds of the hands employed in Lancashire were women, while in Bombay the work was performed by men. It is not denied that the working day is longer in India than in Lancashire by 4 hours and 13 minutes in the longest day, and two hours in the shortest, but the working hours are restricted to daylight, and the operatives in no instance kept nor can they be kept to their work in India as they are in Lancashire or any part of Europe. While, on the other hand, it takes four hundred operatives in India to turn out what one hundred operatives will do in England.

Lord Stanley of Alderley, in his speech, observed:—"For sometime in India there has been a limitation of hours of labor for females and children, notwithstanding the hours are longer there than at home; the natives of India love to dawdle over their work, and cannot be kept teeth and nail to it as the Lancashire operatives are kept to it. There never has been any complaint of long hours, since the work is so very much lighter on the whole, from four times the number of hands being employed in India over that necessary to the performance of the same amount of work by one hundred hands in Lancashire or any other similar manufacturing district in Europe."

Lord Stanley pointed out the absurdity and inconsistency of a Chamber of Commerce which professed free-trade opinions, seeking protection for one British interest alone, not from the foreigner, but against our Indian fellow-subjects. The impropriety of Lord Cross encouraging such hopes was highly culpable. It cannot even be pretended in its behalf that it was a mistaken attitude adopted in ignorance or inadvertence. It were almost superfluous to comment upon such conduct—it were frivolous to attempt to palliate it: justification is out of the question. It was both undignified and unworthy, if not a fencing with truth, on the part of the Noble Viscount, while the notorious fact stared every man in the face that party leaders found themselves so cornered that unresistingly they moulded their private opinions to the demands of Parliamentary exigencies, and instrumentally forwarded and promoted their own party interests as to unrestricted imports. Many reasons may be adduced to show why the Secretary of State should not have played fast and loose with the Manchester Chamber of Commerce. It was highly unbecoming in the responsible Minister of the Crown to have a feeling in common with these interested agitators, not the least objectionable feature of the business being his unceremonious treatment of Lord Lansdowne, who, on arrival in India, assured the public he would do his utmost to encourage native industries. Lord Cross has not the candour to admit Government obligations to give India justice, but on an electioneering bout will sympathize with the Oldham voters. Against this reasoning, the Secretary of State for India cannot answer "No." Viscount Cross, when speaking at Oldham on the 25th January, being himself a Lancashire man, made it a convenient season, surrounded as he was by his own countrymen and friends, to give expression to his thoughts and intentions, a demonstration as unnecessary as it was useless. But though injudicious and ill-timed, it served its end, by denoting, if proof were wanting, how little regard is shown by the Home Government for our condition in India. When the country gave up so large an amount—nearly a million of money—on cotton duties, purely on the ground that they protected native industry against English, we were justified in looking for an equivalent in some shape as a reasonable off-set by permitting free competition. But the present administration of the Government of India, to make good unexplainable deficits, after our excessive generosity, saddle us with an increased salt tax, and reimpose the infamous income tax, which had to be abolished in consequence of its arbitrary and despotical working. Such shamelessness was before, it is now, and it will ever be, a positive danger to the State.

There is no piece of jobbery, political or other, which Lord Salisbury, Lord Cross and Mr. Maclean would not undertake to serve their own ends, either individually or collectively. The Bombay Gazette of the 28th February 1876, while Mr. Maclean occupied the editorial chair of that journal, said, "Give Manchester what she wants or go." In the same language, Lord Salisbury addressed the Viceroy of India. In plain, unvarnished English, thirteen years ago, both Lord Salisbury and Mr. Maclean, without deliberation, without weighing or examining the reasons for and against such a measure, would have sold India's interests to Manchester. This Lord Cross would do tomorrow, if he had the courage to venture on such a campaign, disavowing and renouncing any knowledge that when he became Secretary of State for India, he also became the guardian and trustee of the interests of the people of India, that desiring to be just he would think of them before thinking of Lancashire. We take the advantage of Lord Salisbury and Mr. Maclean's own word and convict them out of their own mouths. Can there be anything more undignified and damaging to the reputation and honor of the Premier of England, than giving expression to such language?

With regard to Mr. Maclean, we should have been surprised had he turned up in any other light than the enemy of India, a country he is indebted to for the position he now holds, and the very means that keep body and soul together. It is men of Mr. Maclean's stamp who do much to injure India's interests. He is an Anglo-Indian, one of those cynical nobodies, who, either in the cause of justice or injustice, can make their voices heard, do much harm and little good. Honest and truthful English statesmen, in their attempts to deal justly with us, have men of Mr. Maclean's stamp to contend with. Such men do a great amount of injury, they misrepresent facts, deliberately and coolly give utterance to monstrous untruths. It is this spirit of injustice that influences and warps the opinions of people at home. Mr. Maclean never was in touch with the natives of India. But for our holding India as a field of enterprise for European energies, these men would have lived and died unknown outside their own limited petty walks in life.

We have looked in vain for a satisfactory answer, from the Secretary of State for India, to the question of Lord Stanley of Alderley, but the reply of Lord Cross was of the customary stereotyped evasive character. Lord Stanley's question was perfectly plain, unaccompanied by any high-flown expressions, "Was the noble Viscount's statement at Oldham on January 25th correctly reported?" Lord Cross, replying, said—"the noble Lord did not ask him whether he made the statement but assumed that he did so." We are of opinion Lord Stanley assumed nothing, and but for the omission of the word "made," furnished an opportunity for Lord Cross to fence with truth, which, in his usually spirited manner, he made the best of, but at the best he failed miserably in convincing Lord Stanley that his speech at Oldham was incorrectly reported, and we are convinced that the Secretary of State for India's expressions did convey, and carried the construction Lord Stanley placed upon the noble Viscount's speech, that it was not the health and lives of women and children he cared a fig to protect, but that the Lancashire manufacturers he felt bound as the Secretary of State for India to protect against Indian manufacturers.

Lord Cross, continuing, said—the noble Lord further asked whether steps had been taken to see the coolies of Assam and Bengal were properly treated. What Lord Stanley did say on this point was that, if the Government of India conceded the Manchester request, it would lay itself open to a charge of hypocrisy for taking thought of humanity at Bombay, where none was needed or asked for, while the calls of humanity from Assam Tea Gardens and Bengal coolies were being neglected. Replying, Lord Cross said, an act had been passed sometime ago in connection with this subject, and he found that great improvement had been effected by the Act. For the better information of the Secretary of State for India, we give an extract from the last Assam Gazette. According to the mortuary returns, the cholera epidemic seems to be unusually busy in most of the Assam districts during the month of April. In Sylhet alone there were 635 deaths from cholera, 53 in Cachar, 9 at Goalpore, 10 at Darrang, 31 at Sibsagar and 10 at Lakinpore. The total deaths numbered 750 and averaged 25 deaths per day. The above fearful mortality compels us to ask Wherein lies the great improvement which the Secretary of State for India found in the better protecting of cooly emigration to Assam?

While we write, a gentleman from Bombay, who has had some 15 years' experience in the labor market there, and has an intimate knowledge of the Mill-owners' question, and to whom we have read a portion of this article, agrees in every word we say, but informs us, and we consider it our duty to add as well, that although the mill operatives do not complain of the labor hours and that these are not excessive, there is room for, and should be, some Government supervision over the paymasters. The information our friend lays before us on this point is certainly of sufficiently startling a nature to attract the attention of Government. The amount of speculation that is carried on by those intrusted to pay the operatives, is alarming to a degree, and we regret to have to say Europeans are also not above fraudulently appropriating a portion of the operatives' pay, by a convenient want of small change.

We sincerely trust this may attract Lord Stanley's attention, and that something may be done to secure the operative the full benefit of his earnings.

ZITO.

THE FUTURE OF THE SUBORDINATE EXECUTIVE SERVICE.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY has issued a judicious Resolution on the recruitment for the Subordinate Executive Service. The Resolution deals, in the first place, with claims of candidates for appointment in the service, which are already recorded in the Secretariat, and which have more or less been recognised by the Government. It then proceeds to lay down a scheme for the future recruitment of the service, which is expected to be a final settlement of the question. In both these respects, Sir Stuart's treatment of the subject, whatever may be its fate as to finality, is characterized by a fair regard for all the personal interests concerned as well as the interests of efficient administration. The subject has always been beset with difficulties, and every successive Government of Bengal has dealt with it in its own way, and laid down its own scheme of appointment. But, although there have been continual changes of system in past years, one thing seems to have escaped attention all along, namely, the necessity of restricting selected candidates to the requirements of the service. Whatever methods of recruitment be adopted—competition pure and simple, or combined with nomination—the list of those selected by such methods should be scrupulously restricted in number with reference to the capacity of the Government for providing them with employment. That capacity is, of course, a known and limited quantity. The average number of vacancies in the Subordinate Executive Service, occurring in each year from ordinary causes, is only 8, while the restrictions of a definite cadre make it impossible for the Government to augment the number of appointments constituting the Service. This being so, the Government could not entertain a large number of applications from candidates for employment, without being guilty of creating hopes which it had no adequate means of fulfilling in a reasonable period of time. This very guilt has, however, been incurred under the natural operation of the different systems of appointment which have prevailed under past Governments, and Sir Stuart Bayley is now obliged to expiate it frankly. He points out that, no care having hitherto been taken to restrict the number of names registered in the Secretariat with reference to the number of appointments likely to be available within a reasonably definite time, it has become inevitable that he should now cut down the list to such a number as he could well provide for. This was inevitable sooner or later, and it must be accepted to be a better arrangement than the present system of long deferred hope and heart-sickness. In justice to past Governments, it may, however, in passing, be remembered that, whatever circumspection might be employed in limiting the number of selected candidates, by an almost inevitable law, that number has a persistent tendency to increase. Shake off as firmly as you may, there are impracticable protégés who will stick. The exercise of patronage has its attractions as well as its temptations—its sweets and its bitters, and, however strongly you may resist the temptations, the thing has a way of asserting itself which is invincible.

After reviewing the changes of system for appointment to the Service in past years, Sir Stuart Bayley observes: "Each change has given rise to a fresh set of claims, and has thereby enhanced the difficulty of satisfying the claims already on record. The registers of candidates for appointments in both branches of the Subordinate Executive Service are overloaded with names, some few promises of appointments have been given; many vague expectations of obtaining appointments have been formed, and to some extent recognised; and distinct conditional pledges of promotion for good service have been only imperfectly fulfilled." The state of things is thus highly unsatisfactory. The list of candidates for appointment by nomination has been continually receiving accession of new names, till at the present time it contains no less than 84 names. To this have to be added 42 Sub-Deputy Collectors who, under the terms of Sir George Campbell's scheme of Native Civil Service Examination, are entitled, for their success in the higher grade of that examination as well as for subsequent good service, to promotion to the rank of Deputy Magistrates. This constitutes a number of claimants out of all proportion to the number of appointments available in each year. The average number of vacancies and the restriction of a fixed cadre, limit the patronage to an exceedingly small compass, so that the question of satisfactorily dealing with the claims, which have already received a more or less recognition, becomes one of extreme difficulty and delicacy, while there remains the further question as to the future. Something must be done to check the admission of future claims, so as not to repeat the mistake of the past.

Sir Stuart Bayley's Resolution deals with the subject in a manner that, so far as the future is concerned, will prevent the accumulation of claims on the part of candidates, and of pledges and obligations on the part of Government such as has occurred in the past. There will be no examination in 1889, appointments in the present year being given partly to Sub-Deputy Collectors with the best claims and partly to candidates in the registered list in the Secretariat, so as to absorb and dispose of as many of existing claims as possible. In 1890 and 1891, there will be examinations held to which, besides new candidates, the rest of registered candidates will be admitted, under favorable terms as to University distinction and age. After the latter examination, the register of candidates for appointment by nomination kept in the Secretariat will be regarded as closed, and appointments will be made by a combined system of competition and nomination, care being taken that the number of candidates obtained by such competition and nomination does not swell up as in the past.

We fully approve of Sir Stuart Bayley's decision to retain the principle of nomination in the present circumstances of things. We quote his remarks on this subject : —

"Notwithstanding the attempts made by successive Lieutenant-Governors to organise the recruitment of the Subordinate Executive Service on a permanent footing, Sir Stuart Bayley is compelled to express a doubt whether the question has yet been finally disposed of. Several radical changes of system and various temporary expedients have been tried and found wanting. Each change has given rise to a fresh set of claims, and has thereby enhanced the difficulty of satisfying the claims already on record. The registers of candidates for appointments in both branches of the Subordinate Executive Service are overloaded with names; some few promises of appointments have been given; many vague expectations of obtaining appointments have been formed and to some extent recognised; and distinct conditional pledges of promotion for good service have been only imperfectly fulfilled. In any scheme that is to be final, the principle of competition must occupy a prominent, perhaps the most prominent, place. But competition alone will not meet all our wants. We have to consider the diverse character of the population with which we are dealing, and to guard against a single race or class obtaining a virtual monopoly of the service by which a large proportion of the everyday work of administration is done. At the present time, and probably for many years to come, the immediate effect of recruiting the Subordinate Executive Service on an exclusively competitive basis would be to debar Mahomedans, natives of Behar, and natives of Orissa from any reasonable chance of obtaining appointments. Not only would this be unfair in itself and contrary to established policy, but it would tend to encourage feelings of race jealousy and antagonism, which have already begun to show themselves, and which might at any time give rise to serious difficulties. It is as true now as it was when Sir Richard Temple wrote his Minute of the 22nd September 1875, that 'there may be many good reasons, besides the winning of a place in an examination, for appointing native gentlemen to the higher grades in the public service.' Social or representative position, family connexions, distinguished University attainments, meritorious service in other branches of the administration—these are some of the qualifications which may give a claim to appointments by nomination."

The desire of the Government by means of judicious selections to encourage the progress of less advanced races and tracts, and sometimes to satisfy the claims of individuals, will commend itself to all practical and right-minded men. Nomination, by doing justice to claims which a Government cannot afford to overlook, will usefully supplement the competitive examinations which must be the chief method of recruitment. Sir Stuart has also shown his regard for the efficiency of the Service by insisting upon a high standard of University acquirements for admission to these examinations. The examination for the Subordinate Executive Service will be of the same standard as that of the Statutory Civil Service, which is threatened with absorption into the Provincial Service.

The future being thus provided for, Sir Stuart Bayley had a still more difficult task in dealing with the past. He had to decide about the claims which have been more or less acknowledged in the past, namely, those of the candidates borne on the Secretariat register and of the Sub-Deputy Collectors above referred to. The matter being one in which much interest is widely felt, we give the Government decision on this point in the words of the Resolution :—

"The list of candidates for appointment by nomination to the upper branch of the service shows 84 names, many of which have been on record for several years.....Following this principle, the Lieutenant-Governor has after the most careful consideration selected from among the list of Sub-Deputy Collectors who passed the Native Civil Service examination, twenty-two officers whose claims to promotion to the superior branch have been placed on record in the Secretariat, and will be dealt with in order; those who are special Deputy Collectors being promoted as occasion may offer to be probationary or officiating Deputy Collectors, and being seconded by Sub-Deputy Collectors whose claims have similarly been recognised.

The list of candidates for appointment by nomination presents far more serious difficulties.....Careful scrutiny of the papers of each individual case has, however, enabled the Lieutenant-Governor to distinguish two classes of candidates—those to whom specific promises of appointments have been made by his predecessors, and those who, though holding no specific promises, have nevertheless indisputable claims upon Government in virtue of University distinctions, of good work done in other departments, of their social or representative position, and of important services rendered by members of their family to the Government, and have been given to understand that these claims have in some measure been recognised. From among these there have been selected for appointment this year, should vacancies permit, the names of six gentlemen, three of whom appear to have received assurances of a more or less definite character approaching to specific promises, while the other three have independent claims of a high order to the special consideration of Government."

We have already expressed our approval of the proposed curtailment of the registered list. It will no doubt be unpleasant to many, but the rude awakening from a practically illusory state of hopefulness would have come sooner or later. Better it should come sooner, that they may betake themselves to fresh fields and pastures new.

The rules of the examination, which will be held in future from the year 1890, will be settled in communication with the Government of India, and published afterwards. Selections made upon results of these examinations will be regulated by the number of vacancies likely to occur in the year, and if the whole of the number so selected are not provided with appointments, the names of those who remain unemployed during the year will be carried forward to the list of successful examinees for the subsequent year, a proportionately smaller number of outside candidates being declared to have passed for that year. A small number of appointments will, of course, be made by direct nomination.

THE ANNUAL HARE SRADII.

No Bengali with any pretensions to education or public spirit, we hope, needs to be reminded that the first day of the next month is the anniversary of the great Scotch philanthropist David Hare. On the 1st June 1842, at the age of 67 years, Hare was suddenly cut off by cholera, to the intense grief of all Bengal. For, in that almost unlettered watch-maker the country lost its Father of Education. No man, native or alien, has ever, before or since, been so truly mourned, with demonstrations loud, yet deep. High Caste Hindoos who unceremoniously flee from even a dead relation as from a dangerous stinking pollution, bore with loving alacrity the corpse of this poor Altehhia mechanic to its last resting place. And those who were not allowed the distinction of chief mourners pressed forward in successive crowds to touch the feet of the dead Briton, in the teeth of Manu and all the makers of Sastras and against the frowns of all the three hundred and thirty millions of the Hindu Pantheon.

This day next week is the forty-seventh anniversary of David Hare's death. The public meeting annually held in his memory has, for some years, been appropriately held in the Hall of the Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science, founded by the energy and self-sacrificing zeal of our illustrious countryman Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar. This year's meeting too will be held there, next Saturday, at 4 in the afternoon. We hope, specially after this timely notice, to see a large attendance and appropriate demonstration of national gratitude to the First and Greatest Enlightener of India. What native, be he Hindu or Mussulman, Bengali or Sikh, Parsee or Pathan, who will not respond to such a call? There will be business too, on the occasion—the appointment of a Committee. And a feast of reason, if not also a flow of champagne, will be offered into the bargain, in the shape of an Address on Technical Education by our leading man of science Dr. Sircar himself. That ought to conquer the normal Bengali inertia and the faint-heartedness of any one of us. And shall we add the crowning consideration—admission free?

Apropos to the subject, we have much pleasure in laying before our readers the fine little poem written by our own Gamaliel, the late Major Richardson, better known in Anglo-Indian literature by his initials, "D. L. R." It is the best thing ever published on the subject, reviewing the life and character of the Philanthropist and showing the estimation in which he was held by native and European. This Poem was once in every mouth in Bengal, but it is now so forgotten that it does not occur in a Life of Hare published by one of his contemporaries—the late Peary Chand Mitra.

LINES TO THE MEMORY OF DAVID HARE.*

TO BE RECITED BY A HINDU.

O'ER the vast waste of waters—from a land
Small but renowned—a proud undaunted band,
Stirred with the thirst of conquest and of gold,
Came—traded—triumphed! History never told
Of monarch-merchants—heroes wandering far—
A stranger tale of traffic or of war.

But can the busy mart, the battle field,
The dearest wealth—the brightest triumph yield?
Ah no! e'en now our generous rulers claim
A prouder guerdon and a purer fame.
Though gold was gained and martial glory won,
They knew their noblest task was not begun.
They held our lands, but could not hold our hearts,
Till, changing force for kindness, arms for arts,
They proffered the rich wisdom of the West,
And poorest minds with priceless treasures blest!

In this divinest duty many a heart,
With holy zeal, hath well sustained its part—
All these our guides—an honor to their land—
To our's blessing—grateful love command;
But in the glorious list, beyond compare,
In types of light, behold the name of Hare!

Ah, warm philanthropist! ah, faithful friend!
Thy life devoted to one generous end—
To bless the Hindu mind with British lore
And truth's and nature's faded lights restore—
If for a day that lofty aim was crost,
You grieved, like Titus, that a day was lost.
Alas! it is not now a few brief hours
That fate withholds—a heavier grief o'erpowers
A nation whom you loved as if your own—
A life that gave the life of life is gone!

Yet oh! my countrymen, why weep in vain?
If aught may cause an earth-freed spirit pain,
'Tis when it sees in fond hearts left below
An unresigned and unavailing woe.
Be sighs above the grave breathed forth no more;
The gods are deaf when men the past deplore;
But let a friend's true merit best be proved
By imitative zeal in acts he loved.
His memory thus with loftiest lessons rife
May well complete the purpose of his life,
And while our Hindu youth Mind's blessings share
They'll learn to venerate the name of Hare!

PATNA.

Patna, May 14.

Patna has been in a state of panic, for the last two weeks. Fearful rumours are afloat about murders and dacoits. Sensational reports are flying about like wild-fire. Everybody is suspicious and consequently on his guard. He starts at his own shadow. Terror seems to have seized one and all. They have got grave reasons to explain their conduct. They have not pinned their faith on mere marvels. Dread realities have caused this alarm. I don't mean to say that all the rumours current in the bazar are "stubborn facts," of course there is a mixture of actual reality and popular belief, and you can sift the one from the other. Three murders have occurred within this short time, some of them dreadful enough to make one's blood curdle in his veins. Actual cases of travellers being waylaid by armed ruffians, have been reported from the interior of the district. Such is the rumour that the dacoits have "pitched upon" Patna as offering a very nice field for one of their "marauding" expeditions. And what is more, all the notorious districts are emptying their ruffians, who are swarming in here from all sides, to carry out their nefarious plans. To crown all, the "big men" of this place are putting their dwellings in a regular state of defence, which lends an air of probability to the popular belief. Guns are fired every night to scare away the burglars and to frighten the dacoits. The common people when they see these preparations only shake their heads mysteriously and declare that something awful is about to happen. I have made these remarks to bring your readers up to date regarding the state of affairs up over here.

* Written at the request of several Native gentlemen.—D. L. R.

Of the many rumours current here, the most sensational and one that is talked about everywhere is a story connected with one of the many murders mentioned above. It excites ones interest all the more as the heroine is a Hindu woman. It is a tale of courage and fidelity. There is a halo of romance about it. It shows how even the meek, timid and much-abused Indian wife can be, as it were, goaded to desperation when she finds her honor at stake. The story runs thus. A bridegroom was returning with his young bride, the fame of whose charms spread far and wide, and, as ill luck would have it, reached the ears of the native Sub-inspector in charge of the nearest police station. The police, as we know, are almost a power in small villages. Everybody is at the beck and call of the "Daroga Sahab." His will is law. No body dare disobey him. He is "the monarch of all he surveys." His authority is undisputed. The girl had excited his evil passions. He must have her at any cost. She must be sacrificed to satisfy his beastly lust. He was determined to catch Opportunity by the hair as she passed him by. The night was dark. As the bridal procession passed by an out of the way place, the "police wallahs" who were on the look-out came down on the party. The bridegroom was accused of kidnapping the bride. In vain did the men who formed the bridal party declare that they were lawfully married, in vain did the bridegroom himself say that the girl was his newly married bride, the "police wallahs" turned a deaf ear to their entreaties. The Police suspected crime. The case could not be decided at that very moment and on that very spot. They must be taken to the thanah and if what they said proved true they could be set free the next morning. In short, the newly-married couple were locked up in two different cells. Now comes the most sensational part of this story. The bride's state of mind can be better imagined than described. Separated from her husband, locked up in a cell, she was now in the clutches of a set of villains with whom even her honor was not safe. The "Daroga Sahab" on the other hand was of course in high glee. His plan had succeeded. The girl was now in his power. Success was now certain. He had only to make one more effort. With visions of victory in his head, he entered her cell. She saw the danger of her position at once. Her honor was in peril. She must keep it at any risk, though she might die in the attempt. Death, she thought, was better than disgrace. Despair gave her courage. An idea flashed in her mind. Was it not better to throw the scoundrel off his guard? There was a faint glimmering of hope. Her mind was made up. He was armed. She met him with a smiling face and told him that he would be more welcome without his weapons which were enough to frighten a tender girl. His passion had got the better of him. He was no more master of his own actions. He did as he was told to do. As soon as he had put down the weapons, quick as thought, the girl flew at his sword. There was a rush—a blow—and a fall! In the twinkling of an eye, her tormenter lay dead at her feet. The tables were turned. Just retribution had overtaken her persecutor. It was a terrible revenge. A woman had stained her hands with blood, to save her honor.

It is said and with much truth, that these troubles and crimes are due to scarcity which is making progress in these districts. One can see easily that these rumours have also much to do with the failure of the crops which is working dreadful havoc among the poor. The prices of corn have been raised very high by the corn merchants. These men, who are generally of the Bania class, and whose insatiable desire for wealth is proverbial, always find such a nice opportunity of making money with delight. To them famine is nothing but fortune in a dreadful form. Popular dislike of these men is very great. It is only to frighten these men into terms that the "budmashes" of this place are fomenting the popular excitement and circulating these rumours. The distress is increasing. Grain has gone up higher than its usual rate, depriving many of their daily bread. These poor wretches when they find starvation staring them in the face, are naturally driven to these crimes.

RIP.

DENATIONALIZATION OF MAHOMEDANS

A REPLY.

One could afford to pass over the earlier cogitations of your correspondent "Khaja Khezer," at most costing him a pshaw or two. But the rather frequent visitations of this pretender to the name of that immortal are more than can be tolerated. "Khaja Khezer" should learn that we live in an age, when the railways and stage coaches have pre-eminently superseded the interference of that species of guides. He is bitter against English education and the Mohamedans who have received it because, indeed, to him they appear to be indifferent to their religion. Such a feeling would, at first sight, seem to have emanated from a strong religious zeal, but judging from some of the ill-concealed personal allusions in his correspondence I cannot help doubting his disinterested motive. While he warms up with the teachings of the Islamic scripture and holds the "English educated Mahomedans" guilty of their non-observance, he does not tell us wherein lies the connection between such individual transgressions and the welfare of the community. Even taking for granted his crocheted anent the impiety of the "English educated Mahomedans" it is difficult to see how it has helped to bring about the "denationalization" which "Khaja Khezer" wishes to remedy by reorganizing the Anglo-Persian departments of the Madrasahs. When he advocates the learning of English, why does he object to the means by which that end could be achieved with perfection. It is a miserable wish that seeks to know a thing and yet not to know it well. A student of Arabic would learn the language better and with greater facility if he lived in Arabia and among its people. And would he not return to his country with a flowing abbi, turban and kamarband, cat with his servants out of a bowl of hodge-podge and promenade the streets with a chibouque in his mouth? He would as readily denounce, O thou modern Khezer! thy silken chapkan of rainbow hues, thy stuck-on one-side gold laced domelike caps and thy wide-skirted inexpressibles, as he would abhor thy eternal pán-chewing and spitting the refuse thereof in all imaginable directions. This novel imbibor of ál-e-hayát (water of life) would have us believe that Islam consists in the wearing of a particular costume or the eating in a prescribed form, and that it depends for its profession upon the membership of certain societies and the worship of "Khaja Khezer's" idol. I am here strongly tempted to test his eulogistic effusion with reference to that same idol, his ideal "pioneer" of Mahomedan everything, but I resist and leave my silence to speak for itself. Except this "indefatigable" promoter of all that "Khezer" needs he would have none rise to the Bench or the Council. Coming from an immortal, this proposition has a weight worthy of Lord Cross's consideration. Happily, however, that nobleman is far beyond the reach of the fawning flatterers and the vindictive scandal-mongers of this description. What more idiotic than to deny that these "English educated Mahomedans" infuse spirit into the rising generation and shed a refreshing influence upon the old? In obtaining English education they have only acted upon what Bacon strove hard to prove, namely, "Knowledge is power." Even taking English education to be hostile to the injunctions of the Mahomedan faith, it is like strengthening our own camps with the knowledge of the secrets of the enemy's. Looking at it from that point of view, the English education gives thought a larger scope and the mind a more independent turn. The ideas no longer pace the limited area of the few books written in an unfamiliar language; but they move about and keep up with the times. Mere liturgic and religious instruction will only produce Mianjis and Moskies—and, maybe, a few more "Khaja Khezers" and his patrons. But to raise the community from the mire of indolence that it now lies in, requires an energy that no amount of Anglo-Persian Departments will ever inculcate. If this body of "corrupted Mahomedans" have not been able to feed ignorance and support indolence, they have, at least, wished them well. They have not done them harm in the guise of a friend, nor kept them down with a "promoter's" mask. It is not they who have poisoned the ears of the Government when it wished to do justice to some merit or reward a talent. On the contrary sincere attempts have been made to ameliorate the secular condition of the Moslems in a way that would best suit the age and the country they live in. Without the extrinsic "qualifications" of a Mahomedan, the want of which "Khaja Khezer" deplures, there yet beats a truer Moslem heart under a lounge coat than within the folds of a bright green silk chapkan. Faith and principle are the chief elements of Islam. Both are psychological facts of which "Khaja Khezer" can have no certain knowledge. This cowardly attack and vile denunciation are, therefore, meaningless. He grudges the "English educated" even the retention of their names, thinking, perhaps, that his short-sighted and chin-shaven idol and its offspring deserve it better. It "is a shame and reproach to Islam," says the wise Khezer. The propriety of a downright abuse is open to question; but this is scarcely a fit place. I fully sympathize, however, with the suggestion of a better system of religious instruction for the Mahomedan youths. This, after all, is a well meant object, but I fear our good Khezer has chosen a bad line of action. Such sweeping declamations respecting a body or a community invoke a great doubt on the bona fides of the writer. "Khaja Khezer" is either un-informed or mis-informed. In either case he should follow the golden precept of Polonius, "give every man thine ear, but few thy voice," &c.

ABSIT INOVIDIA.

* This letter, we regret to say, is in wretched taste, and all the more lamentable as coming avowedly from the English son of a returned with finished education and manners from the filial. We give it insertion because that was due to the provoked party. But if the Khaja is six, his assailant is just half a dozen and no more. But no more of this bother!—
Ed. R. & R.

OFFICIAL VAGARIES AT RAMPORHAT.

Permit me, through the medium of your much esteemed and valuable newspaper, to bring to the notice of the authorities and the public the irregular and arbitrary way in which things have, of late, been allowed to take place in the above sub-division of the district of Beerbhoom. But, before introducing the subject matter of the present correspondence, I should like to introduce your readers to the antecedent circumstances which have, in some measure, misled a portion of the inhabitants to rise and conspire against an innocent man, in order to enable them to understand clearly the reasons for which the latter had unfortunately been subjected to gross insults. In the jurisdiction of the subdivision is Taluk Mallarpur, originally belonging to the Burdwan Raj, but at present owned in pumi by Mahanta Gopal Das of Jaffraganj, Moorshedabad, in whose possession it came about 18 years ago. As a rule, a change of master led to a change in policy, and a fresh survey of lands, followed by an assessment of rent, was made with the sanction of the district authorities, which passed off quietly in almost all cases, even the Sontals gladly submitting to it owing to the unusually low rate at which they were allowed by the new proprietor to hold lands notwithstanding that strings of opposition were being pulled from behind by a person of high position and respectability who thereby wanted to serve his own interests. Dissatisfaction began to show itself. In a village named Damra, owning more lands than he paid rents for, one Isan Chunder Ghoshal boldly obstructed the survey, alleging them to be rent-free, such as Debutter, Sebutter, Lakshraj, &c. He, however, produced no documentary evidence to establish his claim. He found his followers in two of the Mandals of the village who were big tenants and through whom he influenced the people all round to flock to his standard. Thus at the head of a vigorous band, he began to preach crusades against the new proprietor and to harass his men by every means that lay in his power, even by the institution of criminal cases against them when occasion required, resulting though ultimately in his own discomfiture. A good opportunity to further strengthen his party was at last found. In May last, the younger brother of a railway servant sent to the said Isan Ghoshal for some mangoes which were to be sent as presents to a European railway official. The Ghoshal, acting with extreme shrewdness, had them plucked from the trees of the Mahanta's garden which lay close by. The trespassers were arrested and handed over to the police with the mangoes stolen. They were, on trial, convicted of theft and punished with rigorous imprisonment, Isan Ghoshal having for 12 days suffered confinement in the lock-up was afterwards acquitted. Mr. W. Montriou, the Sessions Judge of Beerbhoom in his appeal judgment remarked that the case disclosed a plan of opposition to the new Zemindar. The host of enemies which this suit created now swelled Isan's gang. These, under the patronage and counsel of a former European manager of the estate and of the Railway servants and officials thus provoked, some of whom had in their evidence before the Civil Court admitted their bearing grudge against the Mahanta, raised a new standard of rebellion. They instigated the Sontals to petition the Lieutenant-Governor against the Mahanta and so misrepresented matters as to bias the mind of the sub-divisional officer against him. The Mahanta has been depicted by the petitioners as a great tyrant. But he is known throughout the country for his pious habits, his extensive benevolence and law abiding conduct. During the last famine, when relief works were opened by the Government throughout the province, the rayets of his Zemindary enjoyed the exclusive privilege of his bounty in being provided with the necessities of life. Moreover remission of rent for the disastrous year was also granted to them. Labouring under the wrong impression imbibed from his predecessor and from those around him that the Mahanta was a bad man and ought to be put down, the Magistrate of Ramporehat has done all he could to bring the poor man to grief. Failing to satisfy his whims, he at last issued a summons against the supposed oppressor calling upon him to submit, within a week, all the Jama bandee papers of his Zemindary. As the time allowed for the purpose was insufficient to get the required documents ready for transmission, the Mahanta, through his pleader Baboo P. C. Lahory, representing the difficulty, prayed for an extension of time. This circumstance so enraged the Magistrate that he not only disallowed the prayer but threatened to issue a search warrant directing the police immediately to take possession of all the papers in his Catchery. The Magistrate did not stop here. He hauled up the Naib on a charge of rioting, and, on the evidence of persons who had, as above stated, formed themselves into a clique against his master and who could really be said to be the prosecutors, fined him Rs. 1,000 and ordered him to be bound in the sum of Rs. 2,000 and to offer two sureties for the same amount. To avoid further disgrace and falling into the clutches of his enemies, the Mahanta has removed all his principal officers from the Zemindari, leaving it to be preyed upon by the discontented folks. It is a pity that such high-handedness of big officials is allowed to pass unnoticed!

Ramporehat, 19th May, 1889.

A SYMPATHISER.

In the goods of Bany Madhub Tagore
deceased of No. 3, Mooktaram Baboo's
Street, Calcutta.

An application has been made by S. M. Gimbala Dabee, of No. 66, Pathuriaghata Street, in Calcutta, the only daughter of the deceased abovenamed, for grant to her of Letters of Administration with Will annexed in the above goods.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co.
"Limited."

ASSAM LINE.

This Company's Steamer "BENGAL" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday, the 24th inst.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessel, should be sent to the Company's Godowns at Jugganauth Ghat, not later than Thursday, the 23rd idem.

CACHAR LINE.

We have now resumed our main line sailings to Cachar for which cargo will be received until Tuesday evening.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the Mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special Tri-weekly Service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday, and Debrooghur on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A Tri-weekly Service is maintained between Naraingunge and FenchooGUNGE for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents,
1-2, Clive Ghat Street.

Calcutta, 18th May, 1889.

FOR SALE

Price Post free RS. 6.
Cloth Gilt RS. 6
Cloth Bound RS. 5-6

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGA

PIWERN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman. The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers: those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who, being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mid-age, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlightening description. He says in one of his letters, and Mr. Mookerjee is correct, and when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch of his way on the river. [Extract]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course. — [Extract]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a fair account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract] The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view is a rare one, by the way, for he is given even to punning; but he is also a dilettante in the highest degree. "A naked Whiteman" haunts his imagination; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight "such had such far-reaching long eyes." But he is nothing if not anthropological, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in. The Pioneer, Dec, 1887.

ST. LEONARD-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books &c., &c., for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

INTREPID AERONAUTS

Are strongly recommended, before making their ascents, to take a cup of our Orange Pekoe Tea at Rs. 1, per lb. or our Pekoe Souchong at Rs. 1 per lb., which are very stimulating and have a tonic effect.

F. HILL & CO.,

10, Hare Street, Calcutta.

Calcutta

For Full particulars of the various diseases to which this Emulsion is adapted, and of the numerous testimonials in its favor, apply to the Sole Agents, SCOTT & BOWNE, Ltd., 1, Abchurch Lane, London, E.C. 4.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF PURE FISH LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES.

SOLE AGENTS: SCOTT & BOWNE, LTD., 1, ABCHURCH LANE, LONDON, E.C. 4.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT, THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

LITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system
Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs
Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained.

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re. each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world.

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,
Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases, it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.
12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, shewing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says:—"The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi. Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Locketts, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelsmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Sanikutla, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

OBTAINED

Thirty-three Prize Medals and First Class Certificates and were specially appointed by the Royal Commission for the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in 1886, where not a single case of illness occurred amongst the native artisans there employed.

Authorized by the Government of India; and largely used by the Calcutta and other Municipalities.

Sanctioned

by Her Majesty's Board of Trade.

Used in the Royal Households, by Her Majesty's Government Establishments, by the Corporation of London, Parochial Vestries, Smithfield and Billingsgate Markets, Peninsular and Oriental and other Steam Navigation Companies, the Railway Companies, Principal Hospitals, &c.

Agents:—DYCE, NICOL & CO.,

3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press

THE
FALL OF MANDALAY,
BY
ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime subscribers may register their names with

Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,

298A, Upper Circular Road,
CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

In consequence of the difficulty and delay in getting together reliable matter for the guide portion of the work and the preparation of numerous illustrations which must be executed in England, some delay necessarily will arise in the execution of the work. But intending subscribers should not delay in registering their names at the above address.

DIPPIE & Co.,

Agents and Correspondents for the author.

DR.

J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London.

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital.

Address,—

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND

Review of Politics, Literature, and Society

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly " 7
Quarterly " 4
Monthly Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 3, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII. }

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JUNE 1, 1889

} No. 376

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

JOHN BRIGHT.

DEAD—no, not dead—the darkness of the grave
Shrouds thee indeed, invisible below,
And hushed those tones of passionate pure glow,
Foes of the sophist counsels which deprave,
Free champions of the weak and of the slave,
Sound not for one dim hour of tearful woe.
To-morrow shall our human world re-know
That voice, enduring as the earth and wave.
For thine was the deep eloquence of soul,
Which, like the steed owning one kingly hand,
Obedient to its master's sole command,
Held the mute spell-bound gazers at control,
With that swift fusion of the heart and mind,
Parental of those thoughts which shake mankind

E. H. R.

"LIVE TO DO GOOD."

BY GEORGE W. BETHUNE.

LIVE to do good ; but not with thought to win
From man reward of any kindness done :
Remember Him who died on cross for sin,
The merciful, the meek, rejected One ;
When He was slain, for crime of doing good,
Canst thou expect return of gratitude ?

Do good to all ; but, while thou servest best,
And at thy greatest cross, nerve thee to bear,
When thine own heart with anguish is opprest,
The cruel taunt, the cold averted air,
From lips which thou hast taught in hope to pray,
And eyes whose sorrows thou hast wiped away

Still do thou good ; but for His holy sake,
Who died for thine, fixing thy purpose ever
High as His throne, no wrath of man can shake .
So shall He own thy generous endeavour,
And take thee to His conqueror's glory up,
When thou hast shared the Saviour's bitter cup.

Do nought but good, for such the noble strife
Of virtue is, 'gainst wrong to venture love,
And for thy foe devote a brother's life,
Content to wait the recompense above ;
Brave for the truth, to fiercest insult meek,
In mercy strong, in vengeance only weak.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

NEWS comes all the way from Europe to the effect that Sultan Murad Khan, Chief of the Kunduz Usbegs, has emigrated, at the head of about three thousand Usbeg families, to Bokhara territory, for the purpose of joining Ishak Khan, with whom he is on close terms of friendship, at Samarkand.

THE Chiefs of Hunza and Nagar have invited a British officer to visit their territory. It is said that Captain Durand and Dr. Robertson will shortly go there

WE read :—

"Shahzada Abdul Malik Khan, of Tora, now at Abbottabad, has sent a pair of murghizarin (golden fowl) as a present for the Ameer of Afghanistan, with some other curiosities, through Naib Muhammad Ashur, Bokhari, his servant. The man left Peshawar for Cabul on the 9th May."

Abdur Rahman has, no doubt, a zoological penchant. But his chief weakness is pecuniary. At this moment, the British goose, which lays any number of gold mohurs in a month, would be more welcome to His Highness.

THE Advocate informs the public that Raja Shiam Singh, of Bijnor, was to have left, on the 28th of last month, for Paris to see the Exhibition, returning after spending six months in Europe

THE same paper reports that "Mr. Alexander, Collector of Etawa, has earned the gratitude and thanks of the Mahomedan community in general by giving a donation of Rs. 300 for the repairs of a mosque." Is he a Mussulman, or is the mosque any architectural curiosity?

MR. JUSTICE CHUNDER MADHUR GHOSH has taken a month's extension of his furlough of one month and fifteen days. He has grown sick of the Lewis Jubilee Sanitarium and Reis and Rayyet. The ungrateful man !

AFTER all, the Advocate is glad to learn that Sir Rana Shanker Buksh Singh has contributed Rs. 25,000 and the Raja of Bhunga Rs. 20,000 towards the funds of the Institute in honor of Sir Auckland Colvin.

AT a meeting, at Benares, on the subject of the scheme of drainage, it was resolved to ask the Government to reduce the rate of interest to 3 per cent. and fix ninety-nine years for repayment of the loan.

COLONEL S. T. TREVOR, R. E., having retired, Mr. E. J. Martin has been confirmed as Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the Public Works Department.

IT is said that Mr. W. Rockhill, formerly Secretary of the American Legation at Peking, is at this moment travelling in Thibet. He dresses and behaves himself as a Thibetan and speaks the language fluently.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

THE Lieutenant-Governor has very properly commuted the sentence of death passed upon one Mithu, of Bithoor, near Cawnpore, and confirmed by the N.-W. P. High Court, to one of transportation for life. The man had murdered his wife for infidelity.

THE Nattore Ferry Case—Raja Jogendro Nath Roy vs. Mr. H. A. D. Phillips—has come up to the High Court. It will be taken up by Messrs. Justices Tottenham and Bannerjee, next Wednesday. Mr. Bannerjee appears for the Raja and Mr. Phillips for the Civilian.

A EUROPEAN, by name Stewart, was brought up before the Chief Magistrate, for riding a tricycle on the Secretary's Walk, in the face of the Police order prohibiting it. The defence urged that a bicycle or tricycle was not a carriage, as was held in Williams vs. Ellis, 5, Queen's Bench Report. The prosecution contended that, in the case cited, it was decided that a bicycle was not a carriage for purposes of toll, and referred to Taylor vs. Goodwin, 4, Queen's Bench Report, where such vehicle was held to be a carriage and a person who gets upon it is considered to drive or ride it. Mr. Marsden was of opinion that a tricycle is a carriage within the meaning of the Police Act, Sec. 66, clause 8, and simply warned and discharged the accused, as it was a test case.

THE Belfast Ulster Echo accused Mr. Labouchere of having aided Pigott in his escape. There was an action for libel. It has, however, been settled. The Echo withdraws the charge, apologises for it, pays all the costs as between solicitor and client, and hands Mr. Labouchere a cheque for £100 for the fund for Pigott's children. It is very good of English charity that it does not forget the poor urchins in indignation against the father's sins. Pigott himself was not so base as he was poor.

THE following is going round the press as a great curiosity:—

"A Rangoon correspondent writes to a contemporary that two legal gentlemen in Upper Burmah, whose united ages are said to amount to 120 years, have recently married two young ladies who barely make up 40 years between them!"

We don't see anything extraordinary in it at all. The gentlemen may be each about 60 years of age, and the ladies about 20 years each, and such unions are common enough. The former may indeed be congratulated on having done a stroke of business in the matrimonial line—made a bargain—whatever may be thought of the taste of the latter. But after all, mere age is not the only or the chief factor in the matter. It is possible that the bargain is just the other way. The prospect of being a "virgin widow" with a fine jointure from an old valetudinarian of a husband who leaves the world and all his estate and effects, after a brief nominal married life, must be fascinating to many sirens.

Are these gentlemen and ladies polyandrists that their union is lumped together by this Rangoon Correspondent? They are in a country in which the relations between the sexes are of a primitive order. Why does not the writer enlighten the public on the mysteries of married and quasi-married life among the British in Lower Burma? He has a large and scarcely cultivated field there.

HERE is a prospect for our still struggling Tea industry! It appears that in America,

"the eating raw tea is now said to be the latest fancy which has found favour with the go-ahead residents of the United States. The habit, it is alleged, is gaining ground everywhere, and is far more pernicious than taking alcohol to excess, for its effects are more marked upon the nervous system, and ultimately prove more injurious to those addicted to it. The raw leaves, when taken in large quantities, produce a sensation of pleasurable excitement and exhilaration, like other stimulants; and then a wild form of intoxication, transcending anything experienced by those addicted to ardent spirits and strong drinks."

We hope that is no Yankee Doodle for the sale of the dotard Eastern Hemisphere. Cousin Jonathan is go-ahead all round—even in Abkari. Here is a new field nearer and dearer home for Messrs. Caine, Samuel Smith and Boozing Philanthropy!

AT Comtesse de Kersaint's last ball, there was a complete revolution in the masculine dress. "The black swallowtail and long trousers gave way to coats of bright hues, with gold, silver and even diamond buttons. The waistcoats were in satin, some of them being exquisitely embroidered, satin knee breeches, black stockings, and low shoes with rosettes. The gentlemen's garb entirely eclipsed that of the ladies'.

though the toilettes of the latter were charming enough to turn the heads of the most blasé."

By and by, as civilization advances, they will all be Eastern.

THE longest railway—without a curve—is the New Argentine Pacific from Buenos Ayres to the foot of the Andes. For 211 miles, there is not a single curve, no cutting or embankment deeper than two or three feet. The line is ultimately to be extended over the Andes to Chili.

FROM the 15th instant, piece-goods and textile fabrics imported into Simla will be taxed, by the local municipality, at one per cent ad valorem.

A FEW days ago, the roof of the dining room in the Roman Catholic Presbytery, at Amritsur, came down with a tremendous crash. The resident chaplain had just passed through the room. The fall is attributed to the havoc by white ants.

THE negotiations about emigration from India to the Dutch East Indian Colonies, have fallen through.

THE Czar has just imposed on all goods, entering Russia from Persia or British India, a duty of 2½ per cent. ad valorem.

THE Shah of Persia is expected in England by the middle of this month. In London, the royal apartments in Buckingham Palace have been set apart for His Majesty's residence.

THE Parnell Indemnity Fund has come up to nearly £37,000, the unexpended balance in hand being about £17,000. Like Great Britain and Ireland!

THE following interesting personal account of the American humourist famous under the pseudonym of Mark Twain, we clip from one of our exchanges:—

"The career of Mark Twain, the American humorist, reads like a romance. He has been in his time compositor, pilot, clown, gold-digger, reporter, and private secretary. Even now, rich and famous as he is, he declares that the happiest days of his life were when he was a pilot on board a Mississippi boat. Mark Twain is humorous only on paper. In his taciturnity he is a Yankee of Yankees, and will sit for hours in silent contemplation with a cigar between his teeth. His humour is only an elaborate effort after all. He toils like a slave at endeavouring to be droll, and it is only after a fourth or fifth revise of his proofs that the pure gold of his fun becomes apparent."

THE High Court has ruled that—The practice of designating Subordinate Judges and Munsifs, where more than one is appointed to a District or Munsifi, as "1st Subordinate Judge," "2nd Subordinate Judge," and "1st Munsif," "2nd Munsif," and so on, according to seniority, will be discontinued. In future, in all such cases, each officer will be described in the proceedings instituted in his Court by name, with the addition of his title "Subordinate Judge of—" or "Munsif of—" and without any further distinction. And, where there are more than one Court of any class at any station, such Courts will be designated 1st, 2nd and 3rd Courts, but without any reference to the seniority of the Judges presiding therein.

THE Englishman, the day before yesterday, came out with a review of a Catalogue of Books relating to the East collected by Mr. Archibald Constable, a gentleman on the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway, about to retire, and now offered for sale by Messrs. Thacker, Spink & Co. But the Catalogue itself is not yet out, and our contemporary's contributor is evidently an insider. Meanwhile, many of the books have Holloway's Pills. Pure Blood.—When the Blood is pure, its circulation calm and equable, and the nerves well strung, we are well. These Pills possess a marvellous power in securing these essentials of health by purifying, regulating, and strengthening the fluids and solids. Holloway's Pills can be confidently recommended to all persons suffering from disordered digestion, or worried by nervous fancies, or neuralgic pains. They correct acidity and heart-burn, dispel sick headache, quicken the action of the liver, and act as alteratives and gentle aperients. The weak and delicate may take them without fear. Holloway's Pills are eminently serviceable to invalids of irritable constitution, as they raise the action of every organ to its natural standard, and universally exercise a calming and sedative influence.

been sold. From the writer's account, we find a great number of interesting and rare books in Mr. Constable's library. We extract the cream of the information :—

"The collection of voyages to India is its great feature, and the list of these is, of course, headed with Marco Polo, Schiltberger, and Mandeville. Then come quaint old Coryat with his 'Cruities,' Linschoten (1598) the first book printed with engraved maps, and the first book that showed the source of the Nile, long before Speke, Burton, and Stanley were dreamt of. Then follow a host of old travellers of whom we can but mention the name :—

Van den Broecke (1648).	Ovington (1696).
Pinto (1653).	Flyer (1698).
Terry (1655).	Care (1699).
Della Valle.	Lullier (1706).
Roe (Sir T.).	Chardin (1711).
Sandys (1669).	Catton (1715).
Olearius Mandelslo.	Symson (1715).
Baldæus (1672).	Carter (1719).
Dapper (1672).	Leguat (1721).
Vincenzo Maria (1673).	Hamilton (1724).
Heibert (1677).	Cope (1754).
Tavernier.	Mogime (1763).
Struys (1684).	Grose (1772).
Mocquet (1690).	Duperron (1776).
Havart (1693).	Gentil (1780).
Benier.	Forster (1790).

In addition, we find the grand collections of voyages by Astley, 4 vols., Churchill, 8 vols., Pinkerton 2 vols., Valentyn 5 vols., Purchas, Dapper, the publications of the Hakluyt Society, the very scarce 'Begin ende Voortgan' of the Dutch East India Company (1646), and a fine series of the 'Respublicæ' issued by the Elzevirs from 1630 to 1649.

The old histories of India appear in equal force. Goes, Dapper, Guyon, Heidenfeldt, Heydt, Maffei, Rennell, Tiefenthaler, Van Hoorn, Erasmus Franciscus, and a multitude of others are to be found. Mahomet and Mahometanism are represented by a collection of sixty old books, curious editions of the Koran, Lives of the Prophet, etc., which, if once broken up, would be extremely difficult to get together again. Another very interesting section is that devoted to the old accounts of the Jesuit missionaries in the East. In looking at this collection of annual reports, if they may be so called, one cannot help admiring the organisation of this Society, which so early as 1550 appears to have printed for public circulation accounts of its doings in the furthest parts of the world.

Mr. Constable, not content with the written accounts of the voyages, has had the courage to invest in the old atlases. It is true that they form the best authorities for the history of geographical discoveries, but their cumbrousness militates against bringing them out to India. Nevertheless, here we have Blaeu's Atlas, 4 vols., Jansson's Atlas, 10 vols., Mercator's Cosmography, Vander Aa's Atlas, Thornton's Sea Atlas, D'Anville's Atlas, and that magnificent work by Jomard 'Les monuments de la Géographie, ou Recueil d'anciennes Cartes Européennes et Orientales.'

Without having ever seen him in the flesh, we had noticed Mr. Constable, about twenty years ago, as an intelligent inquirer into the antiquities of the country and a collector. Although he has not cared to spill printer's ink, his library shows what rich use he has made of all these years. It would be easy to point out its deficiencies, nevertheless its importance and value are beyond question. It would be a pity were it to go out of the country or be dispersed. The collection ought to be kept for India.

THE late Major Evans Bell sacrificed himself for the good of India. It is satisfactory, therefore, to learn that an Indian Prince remembers the services done by the Major. Our Princes have special reason to be grateful to his memory, and none so much as the enlightened ruler of Mysore, who owes his throne and his country its recovered independence to poor Bell. The Maharaja of Mysore has done well and like a good Hindoo, in assigning a pension of £180 per annum for the widow and daughter left penniless. The widow will draw the pension during her life and the daughter till she attains the age of 25 years.

MR. DOSABHOY FRAMJEE, a Bombay Presidency Magistrate, has been taken in as the Chief Minister of the Jamnagar State.

THE Revd. Mr. H. Lorbeer, of Ghazipur, thinks the Tincture he was led to prepare "by different calculations and by some passages in the Bible" is an efficacious cure for snake-bite. He has tried it on fowl, dogs and men.

MOULVI Ahmad, Professor in the Presidency College, has been appointed Chief Moulvi to the Board of Examiners. He will hold this office in addition to his Professorship. There were many candidates for the post, and under the circumstances we are glad to be able to congratulate the public on the good appointment made, and Moulvi Ahmad on his success. The latter's claims, hereditary and personal, were superior to those of any other applicant. Son of the most learned Arabic scholar of his day in Bengal (the late Moulvi Mahomed Wajih, Chief Professor of the Calcutta Mahomedan College), Moulvi Ahmad is a good scholar in Persian and Arabic and in English and a young man of modesty as well as parts. It is a pleasure to look on the noble presence and quiet dignified bearing of this Mahomedan of blood, softened by the graces of the East and improved by the knowledge of the West.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE meteorological lion of the season is the Tornado of Tangail. The Dacca District seems marked for this blow. Last year, the Sodom of East Bengal was laid low, and last week, there was a recurrence of the visitation in the same neighbourhood. Tangail suffered most. 139 persons are reported killed, 242 received injuries, of whom 73 are seriously hurt. The destruction of property has been proportionate. The country craft have been swept away. The Lieutenant-Governor promptly telegraphed his sympathy, and measures were at once taken to give relief to the sufferers.

THE weather throughout the Bengal Presidency has been, generally speaking, much the same—dusty, breezy, and even windy, with a little rain occasionally. There is, in consequence, distress in certain parts, specially in Durbhanga and in Diamond Harbour, but the general health is good.

The rabi harvest in Upper India is nearly over. Indigo, sugarcane, and other summer crops are being irrigated. The food supply is sufficient, and prices generally steady. The condition of the cattle is satisfactory. The periodic cholera still prevails in Benares, Ballia, Gorakhpur, Fyzabad, Rae Bareilly, Allahabad, Moradabad, Kumaun, and Aligarh; and small-pox in some districts. The general health, however, is reckoned good.

NOTWITHSTANDING the rosy report of Mr. Bolton, the accounts of great distress from Diamond Harbour continue to pour in. In Durbhanga, the prospect is gloomy indeed. The officials are pressing the great landlords to dig tanks for the people, but in seasons of drought tanks are useless beyond supplying work, and money would be thrown away on them, for the most part. The Maharaja and his brother are doing everything in their power. The latter who had been living in Calcutta has gone to the spot.

WITH respect to forecasts of food supply in Bengal, it is important to know the situation in the East. The Lower Megna Districts are the great granary of Bengal, not only supplying the wants of the rice eating population of the Western parts of the Province, but exporting besides a great quantity to Calcutta, for shipment beyond the seas. The great factor in the question of scarcity is Backerganj. It is the production and distribution of produce of that District that most influences prices. We have accordingly been at the pains to procure from Backerganj the latest report on this important subject by the Collector, dated the 11th of last month. That officer writes :—

"The most important article of export is rice. It is exported mostly to Calcutta and partly to Dacca, Faizpore and Jessore. A considerable portion of the Bhola Sub-Division was inundated in October last by a high tide which did considerable damage to the paddy crop, so that the outturn in that sub-division was about 10 annas. Consequently the quantity of rice exported this year from that sub-division was much less than in the previous year. The outturn in the other parts of the district was fairly good, and as the price of rice in consequence of scarcity elsewhere rose to a high figure, the quantity exported from the Sudder and Patuakhali and Perozapore sub-divisions exceeded considerably that of previous years. The quantity of rice exported from the district this year has been estimated to be double of the previous year, but in the absence of any real statistics it is impossible to say whether the estimate is any way near the truth. Possibly the value may have doubled and not the quantity."

The above is not as specific as we could wish, nevertheless it is valuable as the most reliable information by competent and responsible authority. From the condition of things in our chief rice-growing District, as disclosed in this Report, we may well anticipate a rise in price, but there is no ground for serious apprehensions.

A CIRCULAR is said to have been issued to the Police to watch the movements of religious mendicants and travelling saints—fogis, Fakirs and Durweshes. This seems a corollary to the famous Circular which made the Mirror and its following so furious against everybody concerned, from Mr. Veasey up to Lord Dufferin and the Secretary of State himself, to wit, the Circular of 1887, which enjoined on the Police particularly to note and report the political meetings and movements that occurred around them. We believe this time the officials are not in danger of a similar inundation of printer's ink or black bile vomit, or other blacking. The capacity for hypochondria and vituperation was exhausted on that occasion, until our Surrender Nots and No Renders discovered, to their amazement and apparent mortification, that the world did not come by its end, that the Jails were not filled with the subscribers of the Indian Mirror and the Ben-alee, that the Congress boys were still permitted to spout their nonsense in the graving commons of the remotest villages, that poor Mr. Veasey was not even an imitation Fouché. Others, under such a discomfiture, would have been truly and deeply ashamed, but evidently this was not our amiable friends' first escapade. This time, therefore, although the note of animadversion continues—that is a matter of course, patriotism being synonymous with opposition to Government and abuse of the authorities—the voice is feeble. So there is no danger to peace, unless indeed some one of our numerous globe-trotting friends should seize the opportunity for noise and put a question in Parliament on the subject.

As if to answer it by anticipation, news comes from East Bengal to the effect that a Mahomedan mendicant has been going from village to village, proclaiming the advent of the millennium. According to this prophet, the Victorian régné was determined on the last day of the Indian month of Vaisakh, which expired on the 13th May, and the reign of the Imam Mehdi commenced on the next day. If he contented himself with merely preaching such a dangerous doctrine, in the midst of the excitable Ferazi fanatics in which the District abounds, it would have been bad enough. But he is not only a missionary but a man of action too. He is putting his views into practice. The Mehdi has not yet entered appearance, meanwhile his John the Baptist has commenced to take possession in his name. He leads a body of followers—fanatical Mahomedan marauders—with whom he goes about plundering. He has, in this manner, plundered the market at Narsingdi. The Police were furiously attacked, but succeeded in capturing half a dozen of the rascals, though the leaders escaped.

THE fête of the Centenary of the great French Revolution has been a fiasco, except in the scenic way. The monarchs of Europe could not well be expected to contribute to enthusiasm in favour of the Red Ideal, and Germany regarded the ceremony as a menace to herself in especial. So the official representatives of the Powers—the Ambassadors—kept away, though there were plenty of unofficial sightseers from all countries, and much to see and enjoy. Paris herself too seemed to remember the Reign of Terror and smiled coldly on the business.

AMONG others, the British Ambassador, Lord Lytton, was absent. Upon this fact, an obscure Member of the House of Commons found ed a motion for reducing the pay of Lord Salisbury, the Premier. There are many fools in the House, but this madman beats them all. The motion was lost, of course, but so unreasonable and unscrupulous is the spirit of party, that the G. O. M. is reported to have given his qualified support to it, and there were over a hundred members to vote for it.

COLONEL SIR HENRY YULE will shortly retire, and already many are canvassing to succeed him. But a telegram to the Englishman deals the death-blow to the hopes of the high and mighty Omeas. It says that no new appointment will be made, but the office will come under retrenchment, a bill being introduced in the House of Commons reducing the number of the India Council.

THE Quakers, with their usual honesty, have raised the true issue on the question of the Indian Opium Monopoly. Mr. Rowntree has just presented, from the members of the Society of Friends in Yorkshire, a petition to the House of Commons praying that England should wash her hands of the iniquity of the Opium Trade, the English people making up the consequent loss to the Indian revenue.

IN 1886, the Government of India established six scholarships. These were, in rotation, placed at the disposal of the Universities of Calcutta,

Bombay, Madras and the Punjab, there being two scholarships in each year. Accordingly, in 1887, the Madras and the Punjab Universities elected the scholars. In 1888, those of Calcutta and Bombay had the selection. A new University has now been started and Allahabad has preferred her claim. It has now, therefore, been decided that, from the year 1889, each of the five Universities shall participate in the scholarship in the following sequence—

Allahabad and Madras	1889
The Punjab and Calcutta	1890
Bombay and Allahabad	1891
Madras and the Punjab	1892
Calcutta and Bombay	1893

M. BONNET, from Paris, has taken charge of the French Settlement at Chandernagore as its Administrateur Principal.

THE fiat has gone forth, and soon it will be a fait accompli. The Proclamation of Annexation Petty has appeared in the Gazette, to the consternation of our Empire City. It is true the sword had long been impending over the head, but our people do not give themselves unnecessary trouble by anticipation. Now the blow has at length been struck, involving the property and occupation and position and prospects and happiness of thousands, there is anxiety in every face.

THE new central road from the Hooghly Bridge to Sealdah, connecting the Strand Road and the Upper Circular Road, is to be taken up in hand immediately. A strip of land, 8,650 feet in length and 170 feet in breadth, measuring 90 bighas of the standard measurements, has been declared under Act X of 1870. Ninety bigahs of land, in the heart of a single town, is no joke. It may be a pleasant dream to ambitious Ediles, but it is a serious matter to those whose lands have been Gazetted. Here it concerns—in every sense—the better part of the permanent residents of the best part of the metropolis. We wonder not that Europeans can scarcely grasp the full significance of so much house property demolished in an Indian town. In England, the whole might be owned between half a dozen or a dozen wealthy men, who have their true homes far away in the country. Here, as many thousands may have proprietary rights or their homes on this land.

It would be interesting to know, how much of this land will be occupied by the road and how much will be resold to recoup the cost.

It is vain to cry over the past, however. We only hope an able officer will be appointed to the business of taking up the lands, demarcating the different properties and assessing their value and the compensation for them—a strong just man who will do the right in a considerate spirit, but without fear or favour.

SUPERSTITION is not by any means the monopoly of Eastern Princes. If anything, it is rather the speciality of the Royal Caste. It is matter of history that the greatest and most enlightened sovereign of Europe in the Nineteenth Century—the Alexander the Great and the Justinian combined of the Age—Napoleon the Great—was an inveterate fatalist. And now, by recent accounts, we find the chief of contemporary European Potentates, the Emperor of Russia, as exemplary a believer in the occult arts of palmistry, anthroposcopy, onychomancy, and the rest as any poor Marhatta or Dogra Raja—

Some twenty years ago the present Czar, at that time then-apparent to the Russian throne, had his fortune told by a gipsy woman, whom he met by accident while out shooting. The gipsy, totally unaware of her casual client's exalted rank, examined the palm of his hand à l'anton arton, and prophesied many things to him, among others that he should not survive his forty-sixth birthday. It is stated that all her forecasts have been realised, one after another greatly to the disquietude of Alexander Alexandrovich, who is notoriously superstitious. The Czar entered his forty-fifth year on the 10th March, and has appeared to suffer more than usually severe depression of spirits since his birthday anniversary. His consort whose health has been delicate for sometime past, is said to be deeply distressed by the gloomy state of the Emperor's mind, brought by brooding over the gipsy's dismal prophecy.

Suppose the Kaiser of Germany called a Congress of the Powers to consider the question of the fitness of the Czar to rule the extensive Empire of all the Russias, with a view to the appointment of a Council of Regency presided over by the Ambassadors of the Great Powers, the Czar being allowed an adequate civil list and perhaps the courtesy of a seat on the Council!

THE American papers report a biological curiosity. A young Canadian French lady, Mademoiselle Josephine Bedard, lives only on water, and has so lived for more than seven years. Her pretensions were put to the test. By mutual agreement, the sceptics got her father to lock up Josephine in a room. She was provided with every convenience and comfort. Only there was no food, and no means of procuring it or way of its being introduced to her. She was allowed drink however, but only of water. Of old Adam's Ale, she had any quantity. Thus confined, she remained for fifteen days, during which period she had taken nothing but water. Yet she was none the worse for her incarceration or her prolonged fasting. It is said that the gentlemen who imposed on her the rigorous trial, were convinced, then scepticism having been followed by astonishment. The lady is of average size and height, weighing 125 pounds. Plump, of a symmetrical figure, crowned by an intellectual head, with bright brown eyes and coal-black hair, though short, Mademoiselle Bedard is a beauty. She is intellectual too, inordinately fond of study, and passes all her time in it. Yet she does not disdain amusement, and takes her part in all parties got up for the purpose in the neighbourhood. Strong and well-built, she keeps splendid health. She has no complaint of any kind, and has never had a headache. In fact just the girl to marry.

We in India have no occasion to start at such a phenomenon. Such cases have been known, though at long intervals. Some twenty years ago, there was in the Nuddea District a poor woman who lived only on bathing.

THE Anglo-Indian papers report that the Government is considering an application from the Maharaja of Kooch Behar to construct a railway, for a distance of about thirty miles, which will connect his capital with the existing Railway system. The Cooch Behar line may be regarded as begun. The departmental dilly-dally, if any, is only a saving of appearances. "Considering," indeed, a foregone conclusion. "An application from the Maharaja" is not the whole truth, either. It is a mere formality. The plaintiff and the Court are virtually identical. The State has no money to invest in such an expensive permanent luxury as a railway, and Cooch Behar has hardly possibilities of trade to pay the interest on borrowed capital. There are debts enough already, and these are a flea-bite compared to the liabilities about to be incurred. Nor does His Highness any more than his people want a railway. But it will be a great convenience to the hunters and globe-trotters. The State has already been exhausted in the worship and feed of the gods and Brahmins. The proposed line will be the camel's last straw, we are afraid.

THE Birth-day Honor List was published at Simla in the evening of Friday the 24th May last. It did not reach the metropolis till the morning of Tuesday the 28th May. Could not the Gazette extraordinary be published simultaneously at Simla and Calcutta? Herein we feel the abolition of the Press Commissionership. We annex the List.

STAR OF INDIA

To be an Extra Knight Commander

Colonel Henry Yule, C. B., Royal Engineers

To be Companions.

Colonel Edward Lacon Ommanney, Bengal Staff Corps, Commissioner and Superintendent of the Peshawar Division, and lately Political Officer with the Hazara Field Force.

The Honourable Henry Edward Stokes, Madras Civil Service, Member of the Council of the Governor of the Presidency of Fort St. George.

INDIAN EMPIRE

To be Knights Commanders

Maharana Shri Wakatsinghji, Raja of Lunawara, in the Rewa Kantha.

John Ware Edgar, Esq., C. S. I., Bengal Civil Service, Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

To be Companions

Major Charles Henry Ellison Adamson, Madras Staff Corps, Deputy Commissioner in Burma.

Henry William Bliss, Esq., Madras Civil Service, Member of the Board of Revenue, Madras.

Naoroji Nasarvanji Vadia, Justice of the Peace for the Town of Bombay.

Brigade-Surgeon Isidore Bernadotte Lyon, Bombay Medical Service, Chemical Analyser to the Government of Bombay.

Khalifa Saiyid Muhammad Hasan Khan, Wazir-ud-Daulah Mudab-bir-ul-Mulk, Minister of the Patiala State.

John Walker Bayers, Esq., Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Manager and Engineer-in-Chief of the Burma State Railway.

Her Majesty the Queen and Empress of India has been pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood on Richard Charles Oldfield, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, retired, lately Puisne Judge of the High Court of the North-Western Provinces.

NAWAB SAHIB AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION.

Fazunissa Chaudhri of the Hossehabad family, of the district of Tipperah.

RAJA AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION

Babu Nan Nalayan Singh, Zemindar of Rangurh, in the district of Hazaribagh.

SHAMS-UL-ULAMA AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION.

Maulvi Syad Imdad Imam, of Neora, in the Patna Division.

DIWAN BAHADUR AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION.

Rao Bahadur T. Raja Rama Rao, Deputy Collector and Manager of the Ramnad Zemindary, in the Madras Presidency.

KHAN BAHADUR AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION

Mehran Khan, retired Mir Khan, late Inspector of Police, Upper Sind Frontier District.

Behrangjee Jhangjee Rajkottala, Municipal Commissioner and Honorary Magistrate at Karachi.

Mirza Kulb Ali Khan, late Sub-Judge of Unao, in the N.-W. Provinces.

Khabita Syad Muhammad Husam, Foreign Minister of the Patiala State.

Venayek Rao Ganesh Samarth, Treasury Accounts Officer of the Tonk State.

Ardeshir Dorabji, of the Superintending Engineer's Office in Rajputana.

Sheikh Elahi Bux, retired Hospital Assistant of Ajmere.

Burjorn Dorabji Patel, Merchant, Quetta.

Mir Hufat Husam, Kumhar, under the Senapati of Baroda.

Assistant Surgeon Sheikh Ata Muhammad, Vice-Consul, Hodeida and Camaran.

RAO BAHADUR AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION.

Varada Rajagopala Chariyar, B.A., B.L., Registrar of Madura in the Madras Presidency.

S. Appu Sastri, B.A., Manager of the Native School at Kumbhakonnum in the Tanjore District of the Madras Presidency.

C. Venkoba Chari, Subordinate Judge of Madura in the Madras Presidency.

C. Purushottamayya, District Munsif of Bellary in the Madras Presidency.

Vakil Hucharao Achut Harhar, Vice-President of the Belgaum Municipality in the Bombay Presidency.

Narayan Vishnu Bapat, late Curator of the Government Central Book Depot in Bombay.

Lulloo Lachman Singh, Senior Member of the Dholepore State Council and Dewan of the State.

Jeysinghoo Angria, Sir Suba under the Baroda Darbar.

RAI BAHADUR AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION

Babu Jadonath Haldar, Police Department, N.-W. Provinces.

Pundit Ishai Das, Confidential Clerk to the Commissioner of Peshawar.

Pushotam Das, Settlement Officer of Bilaspur in the Central Provinces.

Tikaram Seth, Honorary Magistrate, land-holder, and banker of Narsinghpur in the Central Provinces.

Bishen Sarep, Deputy Magistrate of Kekri and Officiating Extra Assistant Commissioner of Beawar in Amere-Merwara.

Sirdar Kupal Singh, Contractor and Honorary Magistrate of Rawalpindi.

Sardar Supan Singh, Contractor of Rawalpindi.

Babu Gush Chander Rai, Superintendent of the Press of the Office of the Private Secretary to the Governor-General.

KHAN SAHIB AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION.

Cowasji Kakhusru, 1st Grade Clerk, Commissariat Department, Bombay.

Ramzan Abdula, Contractor at Karachi.

RAO SAHIB AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION.

Ramji Govind, Senior Hospital Assistant in the Bombay Presidency.

Pranshankar Tripurashankar, of the Revenue Establishment of the Ahmedabad District in the Bombay Presidency.

AHMUDAN GAUNG TAZEIK YA MIN AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION.

Maung Shwe Waing, Extra Assistant Commissioner, Rangoon.

Maung Myat Pu, Extra Assistant Commissioner, Tharrawaddy.

THUYE GAUNG NGWE DA YA MIN AS A PERSONAL DISTINCTION.
Maung Po O, Myook of Western Pagyi.
There are several noteworthy things in this List, but space fails us.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JUNE 1, 1889.

JUDICIAL ZOOLM.

A TYPICAL CASE.

A CURIOUS case of land spoliation has just come to the writer's hand. The case occurred some months ago, but is nonetheless deserving of ventilation and the serious attention of the Lieutenant-Governor. I have said the case is a curious one. From its nature and character, it may not unreasonably be characterised one of Indian zoolm. It certainly seems to the writer that a flagrant act of injustice, one indeed amounting virtually to confiscation, has been permitted under color and all the formalities of law.

It appears that a Brahman named Rakhal Chunder Tewary owned some valuable land situated in the Metropolitan District, within two miles of Fort William. Wanted for the new Hoogly Wet Docks at Kidderpore, the land in question, with many others, was, under the formidable Land Acquisition Act, declared by Government in the Gazette as required for a public purpose. That is a characteristic piece of Indian legislation. By this simple official announcement, without demonstration of the public purpose, a man might be ousted of his own,—deprived, if any officials chose, of his property, his ancestral estate, his dear home with all its associations, his very temple of worship, and his gods bundled out. Under this implacable law, the poor Brahman was dispossessed. The Law of course does not sanction Loot pure and simple. It knows better. It provides for payment and compensation. But it provides this in such a way that it is difficult for the owners to get their dues—for the poor and friendless, next to impossible. If the law leaves any opening for them, the executive are always able to block it up. Abundant proof of this may be seen in the bafflement of the persevering Tewary's efforts to obtain redress.

The Law provides for a Collector to acquire the land required. It also provides for a reference to the Judge of the District who, with the aid of two Assessors appointed by the Government and the party aggrieved, decides the matter. There is no appeal to the regular Courts, when the Judge agrees with one of the Assessors. So a Collector was appointed to value the land. The appointment of a special agency is common to both England and India, but with this difference that the one occurs in Europe, while the other takes place in Asia. The writer's meaning in this may be taken for granted as understood, i.e., the chances are 10 to 1 the assessor at home will be compelled to make an honest assessment, while the chances in India are 1 to 10 the assessor will do just as he likes. The case under review practically illustrates this. A most unfortunate official was told off to the duty of assessment. He is an officer of experience, but the records of the court in numerous cases leave no doubt as to his unfitness for the delicate task of doing justice between numerous clamorous claimants, in respect of landed property of various kinds. Tewary was one of many owners, who, dissatisfied with the Collector's assessment and offer, went to court. Nor did the special judiciary prove more satisfactory than the executive. Baboo Nanda Lall Sircar, pleader of Baboo Rakhal Chunder before the Additional Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, arguing the case on behalf of his client, took objection to the appointment of the assessor on behalf of Government, on account of his intimacy with the Land Acquisition Collector—a Deputy Collector of Alipore, in this instance—but the Judge not only disallowed the objection, but also disallowed all questions put by the pleader to the assessor on the subject of his unfitness to act as assessor, on the legal grounds of intimacy with the acquiring Deputy Collector. Why, in the first instance, was Baboo Nanda Lall Sircar's objection disallowed, and why were his questions to the assessor disallowed? The injustice of the Judge is unquestionable and the legality only questionable. The sequel will show the marvellous simplicity of the Judge in playing into the hands of the Government assessor and the Land Acquisition Collector; he was guilty of the grossest impropriety, if nothing more. From the documents before the writer, it would appear that shortly before Rakhal's case, several other similar cases had been decided, and the records of those cases were naturally to form the basis on which compensation was to be awarded to the Tewary. Notwithstanding it had been established by evidence, on the part of both Tewary and Government, that the former's lands were not only materially superior land but of greater value and might be valued at Rs. 80, Rs. 100 and Rs. 125 respectively per cottah, they were assessed at only Rs. 6, 15, and 20, per cottah, while a favored protégé who had not objected to the Assessor was awarded for land in the same village and adjacent to Rakhal Babu's Rs. 15, 20, 30, 50 and 60. In this favoured protégé's case, the Deputy Collector offered to pay him for very inferior paddy land Rs. 6 per cottah, which the Deputy Collector himself represented as very inferior land and yielding but very poor crops. Yet for this very same land the officer on revision, the Additional Judge, awarded Rs. 15 per cottah. The question that suggests itself to the writer is, How of two parcels of land, both equally fertile and lying in juxtaposition to each other, the one owner is awarded compensation, ranging from 100 to 300 per cent. over the other?

Compensation cases sent up for assessment should be estimated with due regard to their dual value both as rayyetti and proprietary lands. But in the case under notice, the assessor, (whose appointment was objected to) assumed Baboo Rakhal held only a rayyetti interest, awarding for his lands at the rates of Rs. 6, Rs. 15 and Rs. 20 per cottah, his more fortunate neighbour being compensated at the rates of Rs. 15, 20, 30, 50 and Rs. 60 respectively. It is quite clear, under the circumstances I have revealed, that Rakhal was denied proprietary right without being told why or wherefore. That such a state of things should be allowed to exist for 24 hours without being enquired into by the local Government, is incomprehensible. The total value of Rakhal's rayyetti interest was computed at Rs. 4,212. Now follows the most infamous Zemindari black-mailism the writer has known during a residence of nearly a quarter of a century in India. Under the patronage and sanction of Mr. Bradbury, the Additional Judge, was paid to the Zemindars, as value of the Zemindari interest, the sum of Rs. 1,063—a trifle over one-fourth the amount of compensation awarded to Rakhal. Loudly did Baboo Nanda Lall Sircar, pleader of Baboo Rakhal, protest against such an illegal and absurd apportionment of the award. He cried in the wilderness.

It is hard to believe that any Government officer would lay himself open to the suspicion that must naturally attach to such proceedings. It is evident more regard was shown for the claims of the Zemindars than for justice to Rakhai. The courts being closed to him, the aggrieved Tewary can now only look up to Government for protection from what may be called by no other name than Judicial Zoolm.

ZITO.

THE BOHEMIAN TEMPLE IN HATHIBAGAN.

BIENNIAL or triennially it may be, but it is with genuine pleasure that we open our columns to record the progress of the Native Stage in the metropolis. And it is pleasanter still to note that during these months, covering a year and a half, the Native Stage has improved with giant strides. This cannot be said, however, of the Bengal Theatre. Apparently without any ambition since the death of its aristocratic founder, beyond the financial—and even this but moderate by reason of its limited capacity for accommodation—the Bengal has mostly cared for improved jātrās for the delectation of its constituency. The Bengal, indeed, has a constituency of its own, a constituency as loyal as it is liberal. But altogether the concern is honest, business-like and even respectable after a fashion. Meanwhile, the fancy of a young millionaire to have the carte blanche to enter the green-room and lord it over actors and actresses, added another theatre to the town. Thus arose the Emerald, two years ago, with furious blowing of trumpets, in the old habitation of the Star Company. As for the latter, they were first ejected and then beheaded, the compensation whereof being Rs. 30,000 for the ejection and almost as round, if not an equal, sum for the head. We published the details of this transaction in our opening number of last year. However much we might then wish for its success, the Emerald has somehow managed to dwindle down under the most favorable circumstances. Neither the money from the Seal treasury which flowed like water for a time, nor the efforts—we dare say the best efforts—of Baboo Grish Chunder Ghosh, the most competent manager available, was of any avail to check its degeneracy. Despite money, despite genius, despite the best “stars,” despite flashy advertisements, a dazzling wardrobe, costly sceneries, electric lights and what not, the Emerald Theatre of the rich hobbledehoy has never prospered. There was evidently something rotten in the State of Denmark. The new house began very well for some months with old dramas like the Nil Darpan and Nabin Tapashini and Sita's Exile, superbly mounted and altogether most powerfully cast. In the last play, Baboo Ghose himself appeared as Rama. The public had some really good acting and the public attended in strong numbers to fill its coffers. They had such a happy time of it—both manager and master, but all to no purpose, and soon change came o'er the spirit of the dream. Meanwhile, undazzled by all this éclat and triumph, the ejected Bohemians were silently laying the bricks, one over the other, in Cornwallis Street, Grey Cross. They devoted themselves entirely to their new hope so that it might not prove a costly whistle. In six months, a structure rose, from among lowly huts, towering up its proud head against the sky—the best and prettiest play-house in India, an ornament of the city and perhaps a blessing to the Corporation. The monster edifice has been built after a method which has harmoniously blended several European and Indian styles inside and out, and said to have cost the proprietors about a lac and a half. The beautiful architecture and decoration of the new Star Theatre deserve all the more praise if, as is said, they are the joint design and work of a Native layman and a humble Native architect.

The Star Theatre re-opened, and the old company made their début in the new place. The new play on the new boards was Nashiram. A good story highly seasoned with spiritual aspirations dear to the people, it drew for a time, as long, that is, as the novelty of the new house lasted, and then it would not “draw.” The reason was evident. The public had had enough of Haribole! Haribole! and would have none of it any more. Even the “gods” had become sick of it, and no mistake. The empty benches were eloquent once more and held up grimaces in place of cheers for the best efforts of the struggling artistes. Now came the struggle for life, which at length gave birth to the realistic school of the Bengali drama. The popular novel Sarmalati was caught hold of in the emergency, and Baboo Amrita Lal Bose, the new manager, turned out a play from a half of that book. He had indeed to work hard at it, but “Now or Never” must have been the motto that whetted his ardour, judging from the imminent ruin that stared him in the face. Baboo Grish Chunder Ghosh at the Emerald was also engaged in rehearsing a new play at this juncture, which was put upon the boards on the same night that Sarala was announced at the Star. But Bose, his lieutenant, out-Ghosed Ghose in this matter. Whatever be the master's talents, the capricious public would not be propitiated. “No more Haribole, bus!” was the cold response at the Emerald, to all the efforts of the author, the actor or the manager. And the rage was for “Sarala,” powerfully written and adapted to meet the demand of all, from the captious critics of the front row to the “gods” in the gallery. This was the hit that sealed the doom of Seal's Theatre in Beadon Street.

The first of its kind and acted with new vigor and energy, “Sarala” had an unusual run and proved a financial success beyond the highest expectation of the proprietors. But it is now too late, we think, to mention its excellences or shortcomings. It would be better perhaps to speak of the new piece of the same school by Baboo Grish Chunder Ghose—who has since rejoined the company—and which has just been produced at the new Star Theatre. Prafulla has sustained the reputation which its author has already established for himself. It is a weird tragedy, relieved though with no end of comicalities and drolleries, in new situations, in a natural way. Evidently, that Baboo Ghosh's study of human nature has been both deep and wide. The story, taken from real life, is short though not simple. Jogesh Chunder Ghose is the head of a respectable kayastha family of three brothers, two wives and the mother. Reduced to great poverty, Jogesh, the eldest of the brothers, raised the family to comfort and wealth, by sheer dint of thirty years of honesty industry. In the opening scene, he has just laid down the harness to retire, and asks his younger Romesh, whom he has brought up as an attorney, to draw out a deed of allotment, as per memorandum he has jotted down, dividing his whole self-made fortune into three equal shares among the three brothers. This done, he talks with his good wife cheerfully of the time of ease and rest which has at last arrived, over a refreshing glass, when enters trembling Pitambar, his faithful sircar, in frightful hurry, and reports the sudden failure of the Bank in which Jogesh's lacs were deposited. The blow throws the man into mad despair, which could only find solace in the bottle and glass on the table. The fruits of thirty years of hard labor dissolve under one wave of Fate's wand! Oblivion, oblivion!—the man drowns himself in the oblivion of drink. The attorney brother, the villain of the play, takes time by the forelock, supplies Jogesh with more drink than he can stand, gets him to sign, while in this insensible state, a false deed of mortgage of all his real property, contrives to put the youngest Suresh in jail on a false charge, and then, “in the interests of his client,” the false mortgage turns Jogesh, his wife and his little boy out of the house. This does not affect Jogesh who has sunk into the lowest depth of the drunkard. He robs his wife of the little all that remains with her. She drops down homeless on the public road and dies from the effects of a fatal kick received from her husband while struggling to rescue from him the last means of sustenance. The plot has now thickened deep. The homeless, foodless and motherless little boy, enticed into the hands of the ruffian uncle, through the agency of a mad imbecile, Grandpa Madan, is locked up in an unfrequented apartment in the old house, and there left to die the cruel death of hunger and thirst. But the best laid schemes of mice and men gang aft a-gley. Prafulla, the villain's wife, a simple woman who has already found out the rascalities of her husband, manages to break into the boy's prison and saves him just in time but, alas, at the cost of her own life! Here dies also the mother turned mad by the reverses and the desolation in the house brought on by Romesh, who is at last overtaken by fate, and arrested by the Police upon the grim scene of his dark deeds at the instance of the liberated Suresh and Mulluck Chand Dhu-dhuria, Zemindar, the false mortgagee. Thus closes the woeful plot of a drama, which has been powerfully written and played with vivacity and vigor that belong only to the seasoned members of the Star Company alone. But the principal characters claim some mention in detail. Jogesh is represented by Baboo A. L. Mitter with far greater than his usual ability. The fallen man of the bottle is faithfully delineated. His rollicking speeches on honesty and his mystic comparison of his old with his new self are rare pieces of good acting. His chief fault is the unnaturally comparative composure with which he receives the first news of his ruin. He must either look stunned or extremely excited, the latter being more suitable to the idea he has himself adopted. Baboo A. L. Bose's Romesh is up to his mark. The coward rascal, who has sold himself to law to be its own, is played with a delicacy of art which, at several points, more than encroaches upon the bounds of the real. The wheedling Jogesh into signing the false deed, the escape of "disgust," the attempt to argue the honest elder brother into dishonesty, the moral attitude of the hypocrite before the police, the anatomy of his face after the murder and the arrest, are exhibitions which might do credit to any leading artist in England. He only wants finish here and there to be faultless. Suresh (Baboo Kashi) was well rendered. This young actor promises better things. Baboo M. N. Chowdhury's Pitambar is simply marvellous. The actor thoroughly enters into the character and is lost. As much can be said of Kangali Churn (Baboo Kundu) the attorney's clerk, though it is a more difficult part. Grandpa Madan (Baboo N. M. Chuckerbutty) is well acted towards the end, though the same cannot be said of the first portion, where he is more affected than natural. Bhajahari ("Captain Bell") scouts criticism. He would be a treat for Mr. Labouchere. Among female characters, Uma Sundari (Srimati Gangá) is a development of dramatic character on the Native stage requiring power of a high order to delineate. And when we say that Srimati Gangá was quite equal to the nervous responsibility, we say only the bare fact. In Act III, scene I, and the sonnambulism scene, she gave us acting which made her at once occupy the highest position she could claim. Never was such acting attempted or witnessed in Calcutta. Perhaps, the little hurry in her speeches will yet mend in time. Gynadá (Srimati Kiran Kumari) is a very well sustained character, spoilt by a little affectation at places which spoils our full enjoyment of it. This lady artiste ought to look inward for inspiration, so that the fountain of her own fancy might have freer play. She makes up these shortcomings at the death scene and the one before where she almost unconsciously rises to the height of nature. Jagamani (Srimati Toonna) is clever in her way, but cleverer by far than our expectation or her own. And, now, what shall we say of the title role—Prafullá? Srimati Bhuni as the heroine is a surprise we could never think was in store for us. Once in her element, this actress has suddenly developed wonderful powers. She gave us the picture of a simple-hearted Hindu wife in her native eloquence. She has left nothing to be desired, whether in her naivete or her vivacity. The little boy, Jáláb, is played by a real artiste in embryo. Of minor characters, the Bank Dewan, the Police Inspector and the Janadar claim notice, though the others are of more than tolerable merit. The sceneries themselves are worth the money paid at the door. Dasu Baboo is second to none in stage management. And altogether "Prafullá" at the Star is a brilliant success.

S.

BOOKS.*

The reader may remember Baboo Mustafi as the compiler of a useful collection of English idioms, colloquialisms, proverbs and short sentences done into Bengali, which we noticed last year. He has followed up with these little elementary books for the use of schools or schoolboys, one being a Guide to elementary Physical Geography and another a Guide to the rudiments of science in general. The method in both is the same—these are simply catechisms. We confess it is not to our taste. Indeed, it has gone out of fashion, and deservedly and properly so.

At one time, it was the rage and the schoolroom was deluged with your Magnall and your Joyce and other similar and worse bores

*A Guide to Physical Geography, containing about 400 Questions with Answers, &c. By M. Mustafi, B. A.

A Guide or Stepping-Stone to Elementary Science, intended for the students preparing for the Entrance and F. A. Examinations. By Manmatha Mustafi, B. A.

ad infinitum. The plague invaded the East of course, and under the auspices of Charles Frevlyan and the educational philanthropists, old--then young--Raja Kali Krishna poured upon the country no end of Catechisms in English and Bengali and sometimes in Hindi. But the world has long since wearied of this jejune machinery. The books before us seem to be symptomatic of a revival. We hope it will be nipped in the bud, the more so as it is likely to encourage that tendency to Cram which is the bane of modern education.

Apart from our objection to the form, the books seem to be carefully compiled in their subject-matter, from the best authorities.

The title pages have been crowded apparently for the sake of effect, regardless of propriety, neatness or accuracy. The get-up could scarcely be elegant under printers in too great a hurry to put their imprimatur on the title page or its back. But the character of the contents is different. The teaching is unexceptionable--the science abreast of the knowledge of the day. It may be doubted whether little native boys will understand the subject matters, obscured by technical terms, but that is not the compiler's business. There is a rage for elementary science, and he supplies good crammers in it, which may be set by heart, if not understood.

DACCA.

Dacca, May 24.

The District of Dacca seems to labour under a fatality. It must be periodically visited by terrific winds. While the horrors worked by the last year's disastrous Tornado are still fresh in our memory, report reaches us of heavy storms devastating some part or other of Bikrampur. Only the other day a water-spout was seen in the river Pudda--the very name of which strikes terror into every heart. It was followed by a heavy storm which swept away all that lay in its course. But the damage done was confined to only a few villages on the banks of the mighty river. Much property was destroyed and several persons were wounded.

But on the 19th instant, a calamity of a rather serious nature befell the inhabitants of western Bikrampur. There were indications of an approaching storm at sunset; and as soon as it was dark, clouds gathered overhead, the thunder pealed and the lightning flashed. A high wind began to blow and it was readily changed into a heavy storm. Rain and storm, accompanied with outbursts of thunder, lasted for nearly half an hour. It seemed as though Satan had been let loose to lay waste the whole of western Bikrampur. In the mofussil, people generally live in huts and sheds, and their miseries may be better imagined than described. As it was just after nightfall, men were returning from their day's labour, and some of them lay dead on their way home. Innumerable trees were blown down, a great number of people were killed and wounded, and several thatched cottages and houses roofed with thin iron sheets were brought down to the ground. We do not yet exactly know the number of deaths from the late disaster.

The whole of Naraingunj is in a ferment. There is a H. C. E. School, supported chiefly by the Municipality. The Secretary to the School is a big official, and the Headmaster a wonderful product of the Calcutta University--a jumble of antique crudities. Complaints of a serious nature were made against the headmaster from time to time, that he deliberately wounded the religious feelings of his boys and indirectly instructed them to set aside all caste distinctions; his style of teaching was quite unsatisfactory and his attitude towards the pupils, their guardians and the other teachers, haughty and overbearing. Mr. C. A. Martin, the then Inspector of Schools, recommended the dismissal of the headmaster, but the Secretary was inexorable and he backed him with his might and main. Now the guardians of the boys were driven to the painful necessity of setting up a new School, wherein to teach their boys after their own fashion. Baba Dino Nath Sen, the acting Inspector of Schools, has passed rather ungenerous remarks upon the new institution, and he seems to have made up his mind to check the growth of the movement in progress. We have full confidence in the ability of Babu Dino Nath Sen; but we are afraid he has not formed a very happy conclusion this time. The movement was set on foot by the guardians themselves, and the boys had very little to do with it. We hope, however, that after a time, matters would settle themselves in the right direction. After all, we cannot bring ourselves to believe that the Secretary has acted very wisely on this occasion. His indignation at this or that teacher of the school may be construed into veiled sympathy with the misconduct of the headmaster, who is said to have resigned his service in disgust.

The old School has been dragging on a dead-alive existence, the daily attendance of boys being from 40 to 50, while in the new School it is from 120 to 130, and it promises to be a flourishing institution.

The rains have set in early this year. Fields of paddy crops have been flooded over and all the hopes of husbandmen are at an end. The price of rice has already risen too high; it is selling at Rs. 3-8 to Rs. 5 a maund. We do not know what fate awaits the famine-stricken population of Bengal.

THE STACK RESOLUTION.

GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL.

(POLICE.)

Dated Calcutta, the 6th February, 1889.

Read Letter from the Inspector General of Police dated 17th January 1889 and its enclosures regarding an enquiry held by Colonel L. W. Samuells, Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum, into certain charges preferred by Samundar Khan against Mr. J. C. Stack and his servants. Letter from Mr. Stack to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police dated Calcutta 27th January 1889.

The criminal case referred to in the above papers is still pending in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum and consequently the Lieutenant-Governor cannot deal with it in any way at present. But in the course of the enquiry facts have come to light affecting seriously the official character and conduct of Mr. Stack, lately Officiating Superintendent of the Police of the district, that it seems desirable to dispose without delay of this part of the affair, especially as the conclusion regarding it arrived at by the Lieutenant-Governor cannot be in any way affected by the result of the criminal case. Sir Stuart Bayley has now before him a complete record of the preliminary enquiry made by Colonel Samuells, including the demi-official correspondence between him and Mr. Stack, and has also perused the version of the facts and the explanation of his conduct given by Mr. Stack himself in his letter to the officiating Inspector-General, Police, dated 27th January 1889. Reports on the subject have also been received from Mr. Stack's official superiors--the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum, the Commissioner of the Chota Nagpore Division and the officiating Inspector-General, Police--the Lieutenant-Governor has therefore had all the information and assistance necessary for him to come to a decision on the conduct of Mr. Stack. The conduct of the subordinate police officers concerned is being enquired into and will be dealt with by the Inspector-General.

2. The details of the investigation and of the facts as have been hitherto ascertained, may be summarised as follows:--

On October 23, 1888, Samundar Khan, a Kabuli, presented a petition under Sec. 366 of the Indian Penal Code in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum, in which he accused eight persons of having abducted and concealed his daughter, Wazirun Bibi. Among these persons were Joseph Christian, a head-constable; Guhia Ghasi, a constable; Daniel Christian, Mr. Stack's cook, and father of the head-constable Joseph; and Tarachand, a Syce on Mr. Stack's establishment. In this petition the complainant states that his daughter was taken from his house on the night of the 17th October by some unknown person; that he had made many enquiries and had found that his daughter had been concealed in the houses of Daniel Christian and Tarachand Syce, but that when he went to the house of the latter and found her there, he was ill-treated by the neighbours and driven away. He declared that it had proved useless for him to apply to the Police and that he had consequently been compelled to have resort to the Magistrate's Court, and to ask for the examination of witnesses and for a proper search to be made for his daughter. The statement of the complainant was not then taken down, but the officiating Deputy Commissioner, Mr. Renny, recorded the following order, dated 23rd October, "As a case has already been instituted before the Police, forwarded to the District Superintendent for enquiry. I trust no effort will be lost in trying to trace the missing woman." And Mr. Stack, on receipt of this order, paid the petition on to a subordinate on the same date with the remark, "To Court Sub-Inspector Abdur Rahaman for a searching enquiry, as the complainant seems to have no confidence in the Town Police."

Sometime after this the Kabuli being dissatisfied with the progress made, put in a further petition to the Commissioner of the Chota Nagpore Division in which he distinctly accused Mr. Stack of having abducted his daughter and also clearly stated that he had seen the girl in the house of Tarachand. He further alleged that for two days after the presentation of his first petition he had been confined in his house by a guard of eight men--four in uniform and four without--set over him by the District Superintendent of Police to prevent his going out.

3. On receipt of this order from the Commissioner, Colonel Samuells, who had just received charge of the office of the Deputy Commissioner from Mr. Renny, forwarded the petition at once to Mr. Stack for any explanation he might wish to offer. Mr. Stack returned it with a demi-official letter on November 13th the day after he had received it. In this letter he characterises the petition as "outrageous" and goes on to say--"I know nothing whatever about the missing girl, and have had everything I could do to trace her without success. I do not even know anything about the alleged procuress Mookta or Mukoda, whom I first heard of in connection with this case, and who appears to be quite a child, the daughter of a Sonar living in Baribazar, with whom I have never had anything to do. I do not believe either that my servants have had anything to do with the matter." The woman Mookta was mentioned as an accused by the complainant in both his petitions. The remainder of the letter is filled with a description of the violence of the Kabulis in their attempts to find the daughter, and with a story purporting to be a true account of the reasons why the girl had run away from Samundar Khan. It was also insinuated by Mr. Stack that the petition writer who drew up the petition put in before the Deputy Commissioner had reasons for being incensed against him, and that the whole story had been concocted for the purpose of forcing him to exert himself to find the girl and thereby clear himself. Colonel Samuells then proceeded on November 15 to examine the complainant Samundar Khan, his witnesses Yar Mahomed Khan and Jum Khan, and also the petition-writer Ram Ridoi Ghose and a Mukhtear Chintamani Mahti, who was the first Mukhtear engaged by complainant. These two last witnesses declared that Mr. Stack's name was not mentioned by Samundar Khan when he dictated his first petition, and the complainant himself said he had not mentioned the Sahib's name because he had no "pucca suspicion" against him. The complainant and his witnesses deposed before the Deputy Commissioner that they believed that the girl was now with Mr. Stack, as they had heard that she had been seen with him in certain Kol villages by some Mundees.

4. These Mundees were sent for at once by the Deputy Commissioner, and their depositions were taken down by him on the 17th November. The Mundee of a village named Sundi Sununia said that a party of three men, a woman and a girl had passed through his village and after staying at his house one night had gone on to Khengra. He made no mention of M. Stack. The Mundee of Khengra deposed that Mr. Stack and a girl with a party of other men came to his house one morning and rested and ate there and that the Sahib left with the girl on an elephant at 4 p.m. He stated that they had recognised the Police Sahib by his piebald horse, and that he would recognise the girl if he saw her again.

Colonel Samuells gives the following report of the action taken by him immediately after this last statement had been recorded. "A day or two after I had recorded the Mundee's statement, Mr. Stack returned to Chyebassa from holding an enquiry into an alleged case of dacoity in the district, and as he assured me positively that he had nothing whatever to do with the Kabuli girl and could account for his journey to Khengra, I thought it would be as well to send for the Mundees again and examine them in Mr. Stack's presence, and I informed Mr. Stack of my intention to do so."

On the 20th November, however, the Deputy Commissioner's Chaprassi returned saying that the Mundees were not to be found, and that the Police Sahib had sent for them from their houses. On this report being sent to Mr. Stack for his explanation, he answered demi-officially on the 21st that the head-constable Joseph Christian had of his own authority sent for these men in order to clear his own character from some imputations he had heard that they had made against him and had wanted to produce them before him (Mr. Stack), but that he had refused to have anything to do with them. The men were eventually brought again before the Deputy Commissioner on November 25 and examined by him in the presence of his Sheradadar only. They then stated that they had been fetched from their houses by P. C. Christian, a son of Daniel (Mr. Stack's cook and a brother of head-constable Joseph), soon after their return from the court, and that they had been brought to Mr. Stack, who had asked them not to say anything about the girl having been seen with him.

5. On the same day (25th November) Colonel Samuells received information from the Rev. Father Stockman that the bearer of Dr. Manoh, the Civil Surgeon of Singhbhum, whose house was occupied by Mr. Stack, had complained to him that Mr. Stack was keeping a girl shut up in a room, into which he would allow none of the servants to go. In consequence of this statement, Colonel Samuells searched Dr. Manoh's house on the 26th, but found no girl there. The bearer (Raski) was subsequently called before the Deputy Commissioner, and he deposed to having heard a girl's voice in the day room when Mr. Stack was in the room, and to having been forbidden access to the room by Mr. Stack.

6. On this day (26th November) Joseph Chintamani, one of the accused in the original case, was produced with a mistress of his named Muniam. They both deposed that the (Muniam) was the woman seen at the Mundee's village, but they contradicted each other on several material points. The Mundees and the Mahout of the elephant were called and declared that the woman Muniam was not the woman they had seen with Joseph and the District Superintendent of Police.

7. On the 27th November Colonel Samuells wrote demi-officially to Mr. Stack asking him to send his Syce, Tarachand, and his cook, Daniel Christian, to his chutcherri at 3 p.m. Mr. Stack did not answer the letter, and neither of the men appeared. Colonel Samuells having received information that Tarachand had gone on leave the day before and that Daniel had gone out with camp equipage into Motussil, wrote officially to Mr. Stack on the same day asking for an explanation as to whether his information was correct, and reminding him that he was bound to inform the Deputy Commissioner previously of all tours he might propose to make. Colonel Samuells also in the same letter called for a further explanation as to certain points mentioned in Samundar Khan's explanation. Mr. Stack replied officially next day, saying that he had no intention of disregarding the departmental rules as to the submission of tour plans to the Deputy Commissioner, and adding, "I have strong reasons for objecting to entering into any further official correspondence on the subject at present." Colonel Samuells then wrote a further official letter to Mr. Stack, in which he formally called on him for explanations with regard to—

- (1). The alleged placing of a guard on the Kabuli's house after he had filed his petition to the Deputy Commissioner.
- (2). The evidence of the Mundeas and the Mahout.
- (3). The statement made by Rassick, bearer to Dr. Manook.
- (4). The non-production of his servant Tarachand and Daniel. In the same letter the Deputy Commissioner asked what action had been taken with reference to the affray at the house of Tarachand.

8. On the 2nd December Mr. Stack answered these letters in an official letter, and at the same time wrote a demi-official letter on the same subject. He answered the enquiries made in the following manner:—

(1). He stated that in consequence of his fear lest the infuriated Kabulis should wreak summary vengeance on the girl when found, he had stationed two policemen in plain clothes to watch them, but that he had in no way interfered with their movements.

(2). He declared that the woman with him on the journey from Khengra was Joseph's wife, and that he had visited Khengra suddenly because he had suspected Joseph of being there with the Kabuli girl. On his satisfying himself that the girl really was Joseph's wife, he had made no report of his action in the matter.

(3). He totally denied that he had any girl with him in Dr. Manook's house, and said he had only shut up the room in which he kept his money.

(4). He alleged that Tarachand Syce and Daniel Christian had run away and that he had not heard of them since.

He further submitted the police diaries of the enquiry into the alleged unlawful assembly, and declared that the persons accused had only acted within their rights in preventing the forcible entry of Kabulis into their houses by night.

In the demi-official letter he emphatically denied that he had told the Mundeas not to say anything about the girl, and insinuated that in reporting the story that a girl was being concealed in Dr. Manook's house, Father Stockman was actuated by malice.

9. On the 10th December Colonel Samuells reported the whole matter to the Commissioner of the Division, with the expression of his opinion that there were grave grounds of suspicion against Mr. Stack of having been concerned in the abduction of the girl.

10. On the 1st January this report was forwarded to the officiating Inspector-General of Police by the Commissioner of the Division, who came to substantially the same conclusion as Colonel Samuells.

11. In the meantime Mr. Stack had been suspended and summoned to Calcutta by the Inspector-General of Police. On his arrival he at once and of his own accord made a statement in which he admitted the truth of the suspicions that had been raised against him and acknowledged having been keeping the girl in hiding during the whole of the enquiry. This was reported at once to the Lieutenant-Governor by Colonel Knyvett and Mr. Stack was called upon to reduce his statement and admissions to writing and to submit any further explanation that he might wish to offer. In answer to this the Officiating Deputy Inspector-General of Police has received from Mr. Stack the letter, dated 27th January, giving what Mr. Stack declares to be a full account of the actual facts of the case.

[To be Continued.]

CALCUTTA MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

LOAN NOTIFICATION.

1. The Commissioners of Calcutta are empowered, with the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, given on the 28th January 1879, under Section 334 of Act IV. (B. C.) of 1876, to open a Debenture Loan for Rs. 5,00,000 on the security of the rates, taxes and dues imposed and levied under the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act, 1888.

2. The Debentures will have a currency of thirty years from the 1st July 1889 and will bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable on the 30th June and 31st December of each year.

3. The form of the Debenture-bonds will be that given in the twelfth schedule of Act II. (B. C.) of 1888.

4. No debenture will be issued for any sum less than Rs. 500, and above that amount debentures will be issued only for even sums of Rs. 100.

5. Tenders for the whole or any part of the above-named sum of Rs. 5,00,000 will be received by the Secretary to the Corporation up to 2 o'clock P. M. of the 19th June.

6. Each tender must be made out in the form annexed to this Notification, and enclosed in a sealed cover addressed to the Secretary to the Corporation, and superscribed "Tender for Municipal Loan of 1889-90."

7. Each tender must be accompanied by Government Promissory Notes, currency notes or cheques for not less than 3 per cent. of the amount tendered.

8. When a tender is accepted, the deposit, when made in currency notes or cheques, will be held as a payment in part of the amount tendered, and will bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the 19th June, provided that the whole amount tendered is paid up in the manner hereinafter prescribed; but no debenture will issue for the sum so deposited so long as the entire amount of the tender is not paid.

9. The deposits on tenders which may not be accepted, will be returned on application, and no interest will be payable on such deposits. If an allotment after being made is not taken up, and the full amount allotted is not paid as hereinafter prescribed, the deposit will be forfeited.

10. The rate at which a tender is made, must be specified in rupees, or rupees and annas; a tender in which the rate is not so specified, will be rejected as null and void.

11. The rates stated in a tender must not contain any fraction of an anna. If a rate containing a fraction of an anna is inserted in any tender, such fraction will be struck out, and the tender treated as if the rate did not contain such fraction of an anna.

12. The amount of the accepted tenders must be paid into the Bank of Bengal in the following instalments:—

50 per cent. on 1st July 1889.
25 " 31st ditto.
25 " 31st August 1889.

Parties whose tenders are accepted will have the option of paying all or any of the instalments before the dates specified above, and will receive interest from the date of such payment.

13. Anticipation interest will be paid on all instalments from the respective dates on which such instalments are paid into the Bank of Bengal, to the 31st December 1889.

14. Tenders will be accepted in the order of rates tendered, beginning with the highest rate. In the case of two or more tenders at the same rate, a pro rata allotment will be made (if the tenders are accepted), but no allotment will be issued if the amount distributable on any tender is less than Rs. 500.

15. Tenders will be opened by the Loan Committee of the Commissioners at 3 P.M., on the 19th June 1889.

JOHN COWIE,

Secretary to the Corporation

25th May, 1889.

FORM OF APPLICATION FOR DEBENTURES.

I hereby tender for Rs. _____ per cent. Loan for 1889-90, and agree to pay for the same subject to the conditions notified at the rate of _____ Rupees _____ annas for every hundred Rupees allotted to me.

I enclose Government promissory notes, currency notes or a cheque for Rs. _____

Signed

Dated

The 3rd Ordinary Monthly Meeting
OF
THE COMMISSIONERS OF CALCUTTA,
under Act II. (B. C.) of 1883,
WILL BE HELD AT THE TOWN HALL,
on Thursday, the 6th June 1889, at 4 P. M.
BUSINESS TO BE BROUGHT FORWARD.

1. To confirm the revised rules for transaction of business by the General Committee and other Committees as passed by the Bye-laws and Rules Sub-Committee at a Meeting held on the 30th April 1889.

2. To consider the conditions for leasing the Kotrung brickfields by auction proposed by the General Committee with reference to the objections preferred by Baboo Mohendro Lall Dass.

3. To elect a member of the Tank Filling Committee, vice Dr. McLeod, resigned.

4. Dr. Bhoobun Mohun Sircar to move that a new Committee be appointed to enquire into and report upon the cause of the continued contamination of the filtered water supply in Ahireetola Street.

5. Baboo Juggannath Khanna to move that the Bank of Bengal be appointed to conduct the work of the Loan Branch, at such remuneration as may be agreed upon, similarly in the case of the Port Trust.

6. To confirm the proceedings of the General Committee at Meetings held on the 27th April, 4th, 11th and 21st May 1889.

7. To confirm the proceedings of the Market Committee at a Meeting held on the 1st May 1889.

8. To confirm the proceedings of the Suburban Improvement Committee at Meetings held on the 23rd April, 6th and 20th May 1889.

9. To confirm the proceedings of the Complaint Committee at Meetings held on the 22nd April, 8th and 22nd May 1889.

10. Vital statistics for the month of April 1889.

JOHN COWIE,

Secretary to the Corporation.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

SEALED TENDERS FOR SUPPLY OF 9 lakhs cubic feet of well pugged and well burnt Jhama Khola will be received by the Vice-Chairman, and will be opened by him in the presence of tenderers who may wish to attend, at 2 P.M., on the 14th June 1889.

2. The Jhama Khola is to be broken so as to pass freely in all directions through a ring 2½ inches in diameter, and to be delivered in equal monthly instalments and stacked properly at the Municipal Depôts at Bagbazaar, Nimtollah, along Circular-road, Nemuk-Mehal Ghat, on the Tolly's Nullah at Alipore, and at Ballygunge.

3. Each tender may be for 10,000 cubic feet or in multiples of that quantity, and earnest-money of Rs. 100 for every 10,000 c. ft. to be tendered for, is to be enclosed with each tender.

4. The tenderer whose tender is accepted must sign a deed of contract, duly stamped and registered at his own expense, within 15 days after the acceptance of his tender.

5. The Commissioners do not bind themselves to accept the lowest or any tender.

6. Any further information required can be obtained on application to the undersigned.

UDOY NARAIN SINGHA,

Superintendent of Stores.

The 27th May 1889.

*In Pamphlet, Price 4 annas
or 6 copies for a Rupee,*

ARMY REORGANIZATION

With special reference to the Question of

A Reserve for the Indian Army.

By Capt. ANDREW HEARSEY.

Apply to Reis & Rayyet Office, Calcutta.

Rivers Steam Navigation Co. "Limited."

ASSAM LINE.

This Company's Steamer "BENGAL" will leave Calcutta for Assam on Friday, the 31st instant.

All cargo for shipment by the above vessels should be sent to the Company's Godowns at Juggannauth Ghat, not later than Thursday, the 30th idem.

CACHAR LINE.

We have now resumed our main line sailings to Cachar for which cargo will be received until Tuesday evening.

DHUBRI & DEBROOGHUR MAIL SERVICE.

The Steamers of this Service leave Dhubri daily immediately on arrival of the Mails from Calcutta, and are connected with the E. B. S. Railway for booking of traffic through to river stations.

GOALUNDO AND DEBROOGHUR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A special Tri-weekly Service of Steamers is maintained between Goalundo and Debrooghur, the steamers leaving Goalundo on Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday, and Debrooghur on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

NARAINGUNGE AND CACHAR DESPATCH SERVICE.

A Tri-weekly Service is maintained between Naraingunge and Fenchongunge for passengers and light goods traffic.

All particulars as to rates of freight and passage by all the above Services to be had on application to—

MACNEILL & CO.,
Agents,
1-2, Clive Ghat Street.

Calcutta, 25th May, 1889.

FOR SALE

Price	...	Post free Rs. 6.
Cloth Gilt	...	Rs. 6.
Cloth Bound	...	Rs. 5-8.

Mofussil Orders supplied by Value Payable Post.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,
BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

Formerly Minister to the late

NAWAB FARIDDOON JAH BAHADOOR,
(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal,
Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

Apply to Manager, "REIS & RAYYET"

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,
CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which fling away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following: [Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlightening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman. October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes." But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ENGLAND.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE FOR BOYS.

University masters, specially suitable for Indian Children. Indian References. For Prospectus, address Principal.

C. RINGER & CO. have in hand the largest stock of Homoeopathic Medicines, Medicine Cases, Medical Sundries, and Books &c., &c. for sale at their Homoeopathic Establishment, 10, Hare Street, Calcutta. Catalogue, free on application.

INTREPID AERONAUTS

Are strongly recommended, before making their ascents, to take a cup of our Orange Pekoe Tea at Rs. 1-3 per lb. or our Pekoe Sonchong at Re. 1 per lb., which are very stimulating and have a delicious flavour.

T. HILL & CO.,

Adjoining the Cornhill Theatre,

Calcutta.

BEETHAM'S

GLYCERINE - AND - CUCUMBER

For INDIA and all HOT CLIMATES this specially scented emollient Milk is INVALUABLE. IT KEEPS the SKIN COOL and REFRESHED in the HOTTEST WEATHER, Removes and prevents all SUNBURN, REDNESS, FRECKLES, TAN, etc., and RENDERS the SKIN DELICATELY SOFT, SMOOTH and WHITE.

It entirely prevents it from becoming DRY and WRINKLED, and PRESERVES the COMPLEXION from the scorching effects of the SUN and WIND more effectually than any other preparation. The IRRITATION caused by the BITES and STINGS of INSECTS is wonderfully allayed by its use. For imparting that soft velvety feeling to the skin, this delightful preparation has no equal! Sold by all Chemists.

Sole Makers M. BERTHAM & SON, Chemists, Cheltenham, England.

CALCUTTA AGENTS: SCOTT THOMPSON & CO.

"IT RECOMMENDS ITSELF."
All who suffer find sure relief from

LITTLE'S ORIENTAL BALM

The Greatest Pain Cure Extant.

It has driven out from the system
Acute Rheumatism and Rheumatic Gout,

After years of semi-helplessness and suffering; while in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, FACEACHE, SPRAINS, it is the surest and safest remedy for these complaints in their severest and most chronic form.

Its magic effect in affording instantaneous relief in

Neuralgia in the Head, Face and Limbs

Is almost too remarkable for CREDENCE.

Are you subject to HEADACHES and the tortures of TOOTHACHE? A single application will relieve you.

In Sore-throat its power has been so rapid and complete that it is universally recommended as

The Marvellous Sore Throat Cure.

Try this wonderful Medicine and let the result speak for itself.

The Oriental Balm is used by the best Physicians in the world in their practice. It has been pronounced a blessing in thousands of homes. By its intrinsic virtue, it has achieved a wide-spread popularity which no similar preparation has ever before attained

Sold in Bottles at 1 Re each.

Obtainable of all respectable chemists throughout the world

Agents in Calcutta: Smith Stanistreet & Co. R. Scott Thompson & Co. and Bathgate & Co. Limited

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS
Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS,
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and
are invaluable in all Complaints incident to Females of all ages
For children and the aged they are priceless

THE OINTMENT
Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds,
Glandular Swellings and all Skin Diseases. It has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment
OXFORD STREET (late 533, Oxford St.,) LONDON.

12, LAL BAZAAR, CALCUTTA,
(Opposite the Police Court.)
THE CALCUTTA
HOMŒOPATHIC PHARMACY.
THE
EARLIEST & STILL MOST EXTENSIVE
DISPENSARY IN ASIA
OF PURE HOMŒOPATHY ONLY,
WHICH
INTRODUCED TO THE EAST THE
TRADE IN
INDEPENDENT HOMŒOPATHY
and maintains to this day
THE DIGNITY AND INTEGRITY OF
THIS
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

B. & Co. beg to draw the attention of their constituents and the public to the neat little turned

WOODEN CASE

in which every phial of medicine that goes out of their Establishment is packed.

These cases while they ensure the bottles against breakage will also be found very convenient and useful.

No EXTRA CHARGE.

BERIGNY & CO.

12, Lal Bazaar, Calcutta.

READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Strong, accurate, pretty, open-faced Nickel silver short winding Keyless Railway Regulators, of small size, jewelled, enamelled dial, bold figures and hands, showing two times with tempered machinery and dust tight cases for only Rs. 7-8 per V. P. P. with spare glass, spring, box and guarantee. Warranted to stand rough usage. Can be easily repaired. Have no appearance of cheapness about them. Others sell at double our rates. Mr. A. R. Mehta from Bandora says: "The 7-8 watch I purchased from you two years back, gives correct time as yet." Acting Superintendent, Government Farm, Khandesh, says:—"A watch maker has valued your Rs. 7-8 watch for Rs. 15." Mr. J. Sutcliffe, R. W. Fusi, Regt., Lucknow, says:—"Some valued it at Rs. 15 and were completely surprised when I told them it only costs Rs. 7-8." Pretty Canadian Gold Chains, Lockets, Pencils, complete shirt Studs and Rings set with chemical diamonds, rubies, &c., at Rs. 2 each. Mr. J. A. Yelmore, Satur, says:—"The best goldsmith of this place values the chain for Rs. 7 and the locket for Rs. 10." Mr. G. Smith, Salt Inspector, Samkutla, says:—"A German valued the diamond ring at Rs. 50 and the ruby at Rs. 30." WESTERN INDIA TRADING CO., BOMBAY

JEYES' DISINFECTANTS:

The best and cheapest Antiseptics,
Deodorizers and Cleansers.
Jejes' Perfect Purifier

supersedes Carbolic and other Disinfectants, being much more efficacious, non-poisonous, non-corrosive, stainless in use, and cheaper. Prevents contagion by destroying its cause. Instantly removes bad smells. It is an almost unfailing cure for Eczema and other Skin Diseases; and is the best known Insecticide. Can be had in the various forms of Liquid, Powder, Soap and Ointment.

JEYES' PERFECT PURIFIER

prevents infection by destroying its cause, killing the very germs of contagious diseases. It removes instantly all noxious smells, not by temporarily disguising them (as is often the case), but by chemical combination, substituting instantaneously for a poisonous a pure and healthy atmosphere, and thoroughly eradicating the evil.

Agents:—DYCE, NICOL & CO.,
3, Commercial Buildings, Calcutta.

Preparing for the Press
THE
FALL OF MANDALAY,
BY
ZITO.

With which is combined a complete and practical Guide to Upper and Lower Burma.

The Author accompanied the last Expedition under General Sir Harry Prendergast, in November 1885, and remained in Upper Burma after the conquest until June 1887.

The work will probably be ready for delivery on an early date; meantime subscribers may register their names with

Messrs. DIPPIE & Co.,
CALCUTTA.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

In consequence of the difficulty and delay in getting together reliable matter for the guide portion of the work and the preparation of numerous illustrations which must be executed in England, some delay necessarily will arise in the execution of the work. But intending subscribers should not delay in registering their names at the above address.

DIPPIE & Co.,
Agents and Correspondents for the author.

DR.
J. N. MITRA, M.R.C.P.,
London,

Gold Medalist in Medicine & Hygiene,
Stood 1st in the FINAL EXAMINATION
CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE IN 1880.

Late Surgeon Superintendent of Quarantine Station, Mauritius, and Surgeon in charge, Mysadul Hospital

Address,—

2, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Bowbazar, Calcutta.

REIS & RAYYET

(PRINCE AND PEASANT)

WEEKLY (ENGLISH) NEWSPAPER

AND
Review of Politics, Literature, and Society
RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Yearly	... in advance	... Rs. 12
Half-yearly " 7
Quarterly " 4
Monthly Re. 1-8
Single or sample Copy, " 0-8

RATES OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Advertisements (three columns to the page and 102 lines to the column) are charged by the space taken up, at the rate of 4 annas a line, each insertion. The lowest charge for any advertisement is Rs. 2, except Domestic Occurrences, the lowest charge for which is Rs. 5.

Special rates for Contracts.

No additional charge for inland postage or peon. For arrears an advance of 50 per cent. will be charged. Foreign postage separately charged at the rate of 4 annas a month or Rs. 5, a year.

Business Communications (post paid) to be directed to "The Manager," and Literary Communications and books and pamphlets (carriage paid) to "The Editor" of "Reis & Rayyet."

OFFICE: 1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street, Calcutta.

Reis and Rayyet

(PRINCE & PEASANT)

WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

AND

REVIEW OF POLITICS LITERATURE AND SOCIETY

Vol. VIII.

CALCUTTA, SATURDAY, JUNE 22, 1889.

No. 379

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

[From Charles L. Graves's The Green Above the Red.]
THE SASSENACH SAMSON.

(To the Air of "The Protestant Gun.")

[Sir Henry James spoke in the House of Sir William Harcourt as a Samson who having lost his hair went with a wig on.]

There are treasures in Ulster as good as our own,
For we're sucking the Orange as dry as a bone,
And this Sassenach Samson,—more power to his jaw!—
Shouts "Hurroo for ould Ireland!" and "Down wid the law!"
Yet four short years ago, ere we cropped his love-locks,
Man alive! sure he dealt us the devil's hard knocks:
But we've hauled down his colours and altered his rig,
And giv'n poor ould Samson a wonderful wig.

'Tis grand to see Blunt standing up for the "Plan,"
Wid himself in the rear and his wife in the van:
There's pleasure in capping a colleen wid pitch,
Or in stripping a bailiff of ivery stitch:
'Tis sweet to give grabbers a taste of cold lead,
To boycott them living and boycott them dead.
But for all these diversions I'd not give a fig,
After seeing ould Samson dressed out in a wig.

I've laughed till I felt I was ready to split
At Gladstone bla'guarding the measures of Pitt:
Or at Sullivan swearing he's fit for to burst
Wid the love of a nation he formerly cursed:
Or at Dillon the dauntless, who lately was seen
Dancing Kitchin quadrilles wid a Protestant Dean:
But of all these performances, little or big,
None aquals ould Samson dressed out in his wig.

LINES BY A "BLIND ADMIRER."

[It was stated in a well-known Russophil evening paper—the Pell-mellikoff Gazetzkyy—on the occasion of Mr. Gladstone's visit to Birmingham in November, 1888, that application for tickets had been received not only from the blind, but the deaf and the dumb. And a bona-fide letter from a "Blind Admirer" of Mr. Gladstone's was quoted in their columns.]

Great leader, whose aquiline optic
Fate wills that I ne'er may behold,
Quit the study of Erse and of Coptic,
Leave Olympus awhile in the cold:
Let thy voice, like the call of a clarion,
Bring balm to the deaf and the dumb:
Swoop down on the Unionist carrion,
And scatter the scum.

We are sick of the sermons of Otto,
Of Harcourt's elaborate jeers;
Thou only, rhetorical Giotto,
Canst argue in absolute spheres.

Too long with Elizabeth's era,
With religious romance hast thou toyed;
Come forth, O consummate Chimæra,*
And boom in the void!

Our love of the truth, pray remember,
Is earnest, but O is it right
To drag her, in chilly November,
Unclothed to the merciless light?
So be true to thy training; be subtle:
Let no one thy meaning divine:
Yea, put forth the craft of the cuttle,
And blacken the brine.

We are weary and faint with pursuing
Humanity's uniform track;
Great Anarch! be up and undoing,
Set the dial a century back.
Hark! in tune to the tocsin of treason
Our infants in unison lisp,
"Come down and redeem us from reason,
Great Will o' the Wisp!"

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

It is in this beautiful fashion that India is served by the Reuter agency:—

"London, June 18.

In the House of Commons last night, Mr. Bradlaugh moved a resolution, disapproving of the Report of the Public Service (India) Commission in the following respects:—

1st.—Proposing to set aside the provisions of 33 and 34 Vic., C. 3, and to annual the rights conferred upon individuals, and privileges accorded to the Indian people by statute.

2nd.—Recommending that opportunity of attaining high service, both in the Covenanted service and above the service by Indians duly qualified, be (contrary to law) largely restricted, and in some cases wholly abrogated.

3rd.—Not carrying out the objects for which the Commission was appointed, viz., to submit a scheme possessing elements of finality, and to do full justice to the claims of the natives of India to higher and more extensive employment in the public service.

4th.—Making recommendations in opposition to the weight of evidence (such evidence being largely selected by the Commissioners themselves).

5th.—Generally putting forward such proposals as involve a serious breach of public faith with the people of India, and ignoring pledges made by Parliament; and that the House is of opinion that her Majesty's Government should forthwith redeem the pledge given by the Secretary of State for India to appoint a Select Committee to inquire into the administration of India.

After some discussion, the House adopted the resolution to appoint a Select Committee."

"London, June 19.

The telegrams regarding the adoption of a resolution to appoint a Select Committee to inquire into the Administration of India is wholly incorrect. No such resolution has been adopted."

* Consummate Chimæra: Cf. the parody upon scholastic disputations by Erasmus. Quæritur "an Chimæra, combinans in vacuo, possit devorare secundas intentiones."

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

MR. JUSTICE NORRIS is decidedly self-conscious. A native witness lately deposing to his brother's lunacy—the witness's brother's not the Judge's lunacy—gave as a crucial instance the fact that the said brother was apt to go at random to the High Court and to Howrah. Mr. Norris smelt a rat in this bit of classical Indo-English. He thought the witness might be aiming at himself. It might, he feared, be so taken, and he took care to stop the ominous impeachment at the very start. He would not speak to Howrah or Dullanda, but he repudiated the suggestion that frequenting the High Court, specially in its Original Side, constituted an unmistakable sign of a demented mind.

THE Army & Navy Gazette thus sums up the situation in the Soudan and Abyssinia—

"The news from the Soudan, and from East Africa generally, reveals a very unsatisfactory state of things. It is plain that the dervishes are moving again for some purpose or other, and, although at present there has not been any serious fighting, what has happened is quite sufficient to keep the Egyptian Government in a state of perturbation. The latest news throws great doubt upon the rumours to which currency was given some days ago, to the effect that the Mahdi had been defeated and killed. It is now clear that the dervishes have practically annihilated the army of King John of Abyssinia, killing the King himself, and this could scarcely have happened if the Mahdi had been dead and his forces dispersed. It may be, however, that the death of King John will forward the pacification of the Soudan. The ruler who has now proclaimed himself King of Abyssinia, and who, by-the-way, claims to be a descendant of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, is said to be a man of energy and capacity, and he evidently wishes to keep on good terms with the Italians at Massowah. If he does, and if the Italians think well to supply him with arms, and with a few military instructors, he would soon be able to keep the dervishes in check. This is a thing much to be hoped for. Anything which will tend to beat down the uprising of Arab fanaticism, which for the last three or four years has been threatening to exterminate every vestige of civilisation in the East Africa as effectually as it has exterminated civilisation in the Soudan, will hasten the time when slavery and all its attendant evils will be at an end."

MR. WALPOLE appealed from the order of the Divisional Court, granting Miss Wiedemann a new trial of her action for breach of promise to marry her. The Lord Chief Justice and Lords Justices Lindlay and Lopes have dismissed the appeal with costs.

IN celebration of the Jubilee or the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Foundation of the Colony of New Zealand, there will be in the City of Dunedin—the centre of the railway system of the southern and most populous island of the Colony—an Exhibition of arts, industries, resources and manners of New Zealand, Australia, and the other countries and Colonies in the Southern Pacific. The principal objects are stated to be to "practically illustrate the development of the resources of New Zealand during the first half century of her existence, in comparison with the progress made by other Colonies, British and Foreign; to stimulate industry and promote Intercolonial commerce; to strengthen the natural ties which connect all the countries in the South Pacific Ocean, and to call attention to their position and potentialities."

The Exhibition will be open to the public on Tuesday, 26th November, 1889 and close about the middle of April, 1890.

HERE is a rich incident in the romance of business.—

"A Mr. H. S. Saunders went one day to Mr. J. Murray Robertson, in London, and asked him for the loan of £500. If he failed, Mr. Saunders said, he would pay back the loan when he could; but, if he made what he expected to do, he promised to give Mr. Robertson half. Mr. Robertson, satisfied that the speculation, in a concession obtained from the Portuguese Government for some mines near Delagoa Bay, was 'good enough,' lent the money. Some weeks afterwards Mr. Saunders returned the £500 lent, and paid Mr. Robertson £15,000, his half share of the £30,000 he (Mr. Saunders) had made!"

We sometimes treat Angels unawares—even in Lombard Street.

SRIMAN Swamin, the Cow Apostle from the South to Northern India, has turned up at Rutlam, where he is a guest of the Nerb of the State, Nobin Chandra Roy. He was to have sampwad the Ruler on the 5th June. We suppose we may take for granted that the Raja has become a disciple of the Swamin—unless Babu Roy interposed.

We see Baboo Nobin Chandra is mentioned, in the Eastern Herald's Rutlam news letter, as "Pandit Nobin Chandra Roy." Since when, and how, this Baboo became a Pandit? A social caterpillar, he has passed through various stages, becoming first a Vaidya (one of the medical caste in Hindu society), then turning a Brahmo, and, having been promoted from the ministerial agency of the administration in British territory to the ministry of state of a native Prince, is now installed as a Pandit. One flight remains for Luck's favoured child before Nirman—which we hope will be long delayed. We mean not the flight but the Nirman. From Budha to Buddha, the transition is easy enough.

It seems that in his late visit to Maulmain, the local non-official community did not come out to receive the Chief Commissioner at the landing. This is attributed to the Commissioner of the Province, Colonel Plant, who, according to the local Advertiser, "is notoriously unpopular (the italics being our contemporary's) and seems to have a genius for maintaining his unpopularity." Not even the Foreign Consuls were present. It is suggested that they took offence at the way in which they were invited—"by a notice in an advertising sheet on the morning of the day on which the Chief Commissioner is expected to arrive." A pretty tempest in a teapot—for want of a little sugar of fact.

ERICSSON, the great Swedish inventor who lived in England and died in America, after a long residence there, will not be allowed to be forgotten, either in his native or his adopted country. We are glad to find that the State of New York has passed an Act appropriating $10,000 for a monument to John Ericsson, to be placed in one of the public squares in New York City. This sum is manifestly insufficient, but additional contributions will doubtless be forthcoming. Already, at least one gentleman is said to be prepared, if necessary, to contribute £4,000 to honour the memory of Ericsson, and doubtless others will come forward with lesser contributions.

Likewise, in the Swedish Diet, Dr. Waldemstrom proposed that the Swedish Government should remove the remains of Ericsson to his native land.

WE are sometimes asked by our friends Why we roundly call one man a knave, another a fool, a third ungrateful. Our reply is always that we know. It would not be proper, if it were expedient, to go into public proof, but we are able to satisfy every legitimate inquiry personally made. For the rest, we may generally say that we always speak and act with a full sense of our responsibility in this life and the next.

BUT why should people living in a world like ours affect surprise at the sound of ingratitude or baseness in any form. Let them lay their hand upon their heart and then complain if they can. Perhaps, ingratitude is the most common form of human frailty. Neither Judges of the High Court nor Generals are exempt from the foul taint. Men of our own cloth are as liable to it as those of any other. Certainly, we have frequently been the objects of this kind of attention, from authors, great and small, as well as journalists.

HERE is an instance of how we are treated. We often see a lengthy advertisement of a Bengali book "Dhatree-Sikhsha or the Midwife's Vade Mecum. By Babu Haro Nath Roy, L. M. S.," to be had of another Babu Roy at the private residence of the Roy Babus. The claims of the book are then set forth in flaming terms and opinions of the Press subjoined. These opinions comprise two notices, one from the Statesman and another from the Indian Daily News. One might suppose that the book had not been appreciated by the Native Press, but such is not the case. The author in his wisdom prefers the praises of a Bengali book by European journalists innocent of any acquaintance with the Bengali language, to the good opinion of Bengali writers. If he has obtained any commercial advantage from his policy, the Bengali public are scarcely to be congratulated on their intelligence. As a matter of fact, although he gives only the European journals' opinions, he gives a list of the newspapers which have favorably noticed his book, headed by the aforesaid dailies, English of the English, and tailed by the vernacular weekly "Sanjivani" and other native papers. Says the one Roy Baboo or the other:—

"The work has been spoken of in the highest terms by the Indian Daily News, the Statesman, the Indian Mirror, the Amrita Bazar Patrika, the Indian Nation, the Liberal, the Hope, the Bangabash, the Sanjivance and other native papers."

Thus between the Roy—al head and tail, the whole Native English Press is included. The whole, with one insignificant exception—that of our humble self. Our existence has been completely ignored. Not that it is unknown in the high regions of medical Bengali authorship. Time was when we were sufficiently well-known. A copy of the book was duly brought to us by the author himself, and care was taken that we did not damn it. But, it seems, we have since lost caste with these superfine Brahmanocrats. The European papers are ipso facto entitled to precedence even at Hindu shradhs, the Mirror is a daily show of wisdom veluti in speculum, the Amrita Bazar simply distils nectar, the Indian Nation is conducted by men from England if not by Englishmen, the Liberal seems welcome for offering sinners the way to Heaven, Hope is hope itself, the vernacular journals themselves are somethings; only Reis & Rayyet is the Pariah!

We might understand a slip. But this is, without a doubt, of malice aforethought. This thing has been going on for a long period. Week after week and month after month, this deliberate insult has been thrown in our face. The insult becomes all the greater from the circumstance that this paper was one of the first to notice the book and the first and last to give an elaborate analysis of it and devote to it a long laudatory review. The advertisement may be withheld from us, but surely we cannot allow our very existence to be burked, by those who have no excuse for forgetting us.

It is useless pursuing the subject, however. None but those behind the scenes can possibly measure the peculiar enormity of the offence involved in this particular instance. And Roy is one of many offenders.

WE regret to learn that Mr. S. E. J. Clarke, the able and energetic Secretary to the Chamber of Commerce, is compelled to proceed on a month's sick leave to Simla. He has a good Assistant in Mr. G. M. Barton however, who will act in the interim in the Secretariat of both the Chamber of Commerce and the Bonded Warehouse Association.

AS an evidence of how the examinations of the Calcutta University are conducted, we read in the Gazette of India of to-day that "the under-mentioned students [Second Division. 5 students from the Ripon College and one student from the Metropolitan Institution.] have passed the B. L. Examination in addition to those notified before." Are these all the omissions in the several examinations recently held?

SOME idea of the height of the successful modern Tower of Babel in Paris may be formed from the following incident:

"When a thunderstorm broke over Paris on Tuesday the men upon the higher platforms of the Eiffel Tower were above the storm-clouds. Every now and then the lightning flashed, and the thunder seemed to shake the tower, but the electric fluid passing through the different conductors, was lost in the specially prepared wells at the foot of the tower."

THE Municipal Debenture 5 per cent. loan of 5 lacs fetched good offers. 113 persons tendered Rs. 39,26,600. 61 tenders for Rs. 26,97,000 were at 105 and upwards, the highest being 108. The lowest successful tender was Rs. 105-13. What is the average rate of tenders accepted?

MAULVI Hashmatulla has been confirmed by the Governor-General in Council in the office of Assistant Magistrate and Collector to which he was appointed by the Government of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh.

IN future, the appointment of Honorary Assistant Surgeons to the Viceroy and Governor-General will be limited to five years.

THE Governor-General in Council has ruled that no boy in the Bombay Presidency shall be sent to a Reformatory school, if under ten years of age, for a less period than seven years; if over ten years of age, for a less period than five years, unless he shall sooner attain the age of eighteen years.

ON and from the 14th June 1889, the duty to be paid on salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, any part of Burma, excluding the Shan States, has been fixed at one rupee for each maund of 82.27 pounds avoirdupois weight, the same as in Lower Burma.

MR. R. J. CROSTHWAITE, C. S., Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, has been taken in as an Additional Member of the Council of the Governor-General for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations, and the new member took his seat on the 13th instant.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P., was taken at Baroda to the old palace in the heart of the city to see the treasure room. He writes:—

"Two huge cheetahs, carefully muzzled, were on the palace steps, used for hunting bucks. The Regalia of Baroda is valued at £3,000,000 sterling. We were first shown the jewels worn by the Maharajah on state occasions. These consist of a gorgeous collar of 500 diamonds, some of them as big as walnuts, arranged in five rows surrounded by a top and bottom row of emeralds the same size; the pendant is a famous diamond called 'The Star of the Deccan.' An aigrette to match is worn in the turban; then followed strings of pearls of perfect roundness, graduated from the size of a pea to a large marble, wonderful rings, necklaces, clusters of sapphires, as big as grapes. The greatest marvel of all is a carpet, about ten feet by six, made entirely of strings of pure and colored pearls, with great central and corner circles of diamonds. This carpet took three years to make and cost £200,000. This was one of Khande Rao's mad freaks, and was intended to be sent to Mecca to please a Mahomedan lady who had fascinated him, but scandal of such a thing being done by a Hindoo prince was too serious and it never left Baroda."

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

IT is a good resolve to weaken numerically the Council of the Secretary of State for India. Accordingly, on the 20th, Sir John Gorst introduced a Bill for reducing the number of Councillors to ten, by not filling up the vacancies as they occur. Next day, it was read the first time.

ON the 17th May last, in answer to Mr. Bradlaugh, Sir John Gorst denied in the House of Commons that there existed any serious and widespread dissatisfaction in Upper Burma. He further said that "the Indian system of taxation has only been extended to Upper Burma in respect of stamps, salt, excise, and income-tax; and that in only a modified form. The Ruby Mines were a Government monopoly before the conquest of Upper Burma. There is no land tax except on Royal lands, always recognised as Government property, and forming less than one-sixth of the cultivated area."

Does that announcement in the House explain the notification in the Gazette of India of the 15th June of the extension to Upper Burma, excepting the Shan States, the Indian Salt Act, 1882, as it is in force in Lower Burma, and the enactment of the Upper Burma Revenue Regulation (III of 1889 in suppression of that of 1887? By the present Regulation "State land" has been defined to "mean land belonging to or at the disposal of the Government, and includes—

- "(a) land hitherto termed royal land;
- (b) land held on condition of rendering public service or as an appanage to or emolument of a public office;
- (c) islands and alluvial formations in rivers;
- (d) waste land and land included within reserved or village forests; and
- (e) land which has been under cultivation but has been abandoned and to the ownership of which no claim is preferred within two years from the commencement of this Regulation."

This does not exhaust the several species of State lands. Any other land may be included in that category, for the Regulation enacts—

"Any land which before the commencement of this Regulation has been or thereafter may be declared by the Collector to be State land shall be deemed to be such land until the contrary is proved.

A claim to the ownership or possession of any land with respect to which such a declaration has been or may be so made, or to hold such land rent free or at a favourable rent or rate of rent, or to establish any lien upon, or other interest in, such land, or the rents, profits or produce thereof, shall be cognizable by the Collector only, and the order which the Collector may make on the claim shall, subject to the provisions of Chapter II with respect to appeal, review and revision, be final."

In other words, all lands are State lands unless proved to be not State lands. A simpler, more understandable, and altogether more honest method would have been the one adopted by Lord Canning when he confiscated the whole Province of Oudh after the mutinies.

The sources of revenue in this Regulation are

- "(a) thathameda-tax;
- (b) rent and land-revenue payable in respect of State and other lands;
- (c) revenue payable on account of precious stones, mines, minerals, coal, earth-oil, fisheries, salt and ferries;
- (d) water-rate in respect of irrigation from channels, tanks or other irrigation-works controlled and wholly or partially maintained by the State, and tolls in respect of navigation in irrigation-channels so controlled and maintained;
- (e) excise in respect of spirit, fermented liquor, intoxicating drugs and opium; and
- (f) every other sum payable to the Government in accordance with law, contract or local usage."

Between this wholesale confiscation and the recent order for the compulsory massing of the rural population into large villages and townships, the pacification of the country has been rendered as nearly impossible as it was possible for human ingenuity to do. O for an Ellenborough to teach the present generation of Indian rulers the true principles of enlightened state-craft!

THE new Cashmere's Council is not giving thorough satisfaction to its creators. The Civil and Military Gazette is inconsolable that "The care of the Maharajah's stud has been taken from the English trainer, who has looked after them well for a long time, and given over to a Baboo. The care of the stud is surely one of those things in which the arrangements made by the Maharajah should be allowed to stand, and beyond the range of interference by the Council."

Yes, the Maharaja's arrangements are wise and irreversible only where he had appointed a European!

AFTER a careful and elaborate investigation, both the Northern and Southern Division Magistrates held that the Phooka process is a cruelty to the cow. A more knowing Honorary Bench has just declared that it is not so. These Asses should be milked in the selfsame way.

SET a beggar on horseback and you know which way he will ride. The legal beggar is not a whit behind. If a briefless lawyer gets a case for the nonce, in court or out of it, he usually makes the most of—and probably does his worst in—it.

MR. APCAR has proved himself more than an advocate in the Kotrung business. He carried his point at the municipal Board and then rushed to print to prove himself a greater hero. The dailies freely placed their columns at his service, and he is proving himself a bore. He is at last forced to admit that he submitted no case to Mr. Phillips whose opinion he made so much of at the meeting.

Alas, poor Yorick—we mean old Johnny!

HERE is an illustration of honour in Burma. Under the head "Legal" appears in a Rangoon paper:—

"Before W. F. Agnew, Esq., Recorder.
G. F. Travers Drapes vs. Moun Bah Oh.

This was an application on behalf of the Petitioner, Mr. Drapes, for revision of a judgment and decree of the First Judge of the Court of Small Causes. In that Court the Respondent, a clerk, had sued his master Mr. Drapes for Rs. 267 on account of arrears of salary for two months and twenty days, and had obtained a decree with costs. This decree Mr. VanSomeren, the petitioner's counsel, sought to have set aside on the ground that the Respondent was disentitled to wages for the twenty days as he had left his employment without notice. Mr. A. J. Kead appeared as counsel for the Respondent. The learned Judge, on hearing arguments placed before him, said that he perfectly concurred in the judgment of the lower court; the petitioner had been guilty of a decided breach of contract in not paying his clerk for nearly three months, and the latter was therefore entitled to rescind the contract at any moment, and to claim upon a quantum meruit. The application for revision would be dismissed with costs."

So woman is not the only weakness of British Burmans or rather the Burman British. We believe Drapes is a statutory gentleman, being a barrister. He is a relation of the Chief Commissioner also. Yet he is not ashamed of moving Heaven and Earth to withhold his poor clerk's just dues. Even when the poor man has got a decree in the Small Cause Court, his exemplary old master takes advantage of his position as a lawyer to force out of his clutches as it were the paltry sum of Rs. 267.

THE incident referred to by Zito in our issue of the 11th May, in reference to Dr. Hall and Dr. McLeod, not remembered by our contemporary the Statesman, was Dr. Hall's attempt to cow Dr. McLeod, another good Scotchman, with a charge of defamation of character, in consequence of certain strictures published by the latter, in the Indian Medical Gazette. Notwithstanding Dr. Hall's bluster, he lost his case. A man who proved himself incapable of moderation with a brother physician of great reputation, is just the man to make a bullying Jail Superintendent.

ONE Ameer Khan was charged by Prince Mahommed Roshun Gohar, of the Mysore Family, with selling obscene books. It appears that the accused called at the Prince's house, and asked him to purchase some obscene books. The latter declined the offer, and kindly advised him not to offer the books for sale to any one, upon which the fellow grossly insulted him. The Prince proved a very Tartar for the enemy. More smart than his fellows, he snatched away the books and sent for the Police. The vendor took to his heels as fast as he could, but he is an old sinner not unknown to the Police, and was subsequently arrested without difficulty. His house was searched by the Police, and more obscene books were discovered. The accused made a rather novel defence. He claimed the advantage of his previous wrong. He had once before been convicted for the same offence, and he argued that he could not be convicted again on it. It was a bold and startling plea—an importation into the criminal law of the theory of res judicata, showing that, under happier—or perhaps unhappier—circumstances, this retailer of literary filth might have shone as a Nisi Prius star of the first magnitude. But at the Suburban Criminal Court of Alipore, this curious technicality was a pearl thrown to swine. The Magistrate was not to be convinced by this reasoning. After explaining the law to him, he sentenced the accused to three months' rigorous imprisonment, and ordered the books to be burnt.

Prince Gohar is evidently a young man of sense and spirit. He has done the public a service of no mean value. Few of us would have taken the trouble to pursue the man Ameer Khan and get him punished as he has done.

HERE is the Mirror's appreciation of value of a remarkable and deservedly successful book:—

"Messrs. Thacker, Spink & Co., the well-known publishers of this city, have kindly sent us a copy of the Law of Mortgage in India by Dr. Rash Behary Ghose. The work, we are glad to see, has passed through a second edition, and it is, indeed, a matter of satisfaction that Dr. Ghose's lectures on this important branch of law were so much in demand that within the short space of 15 years, it has to be republished in a more comprehensive and enlarged form."

The whole is sufficiently like our contemporary, and yet there is something particularly rich and novel. The old man of the sea—as being in it on most questions, except those profound problems touching the clerical and copying departments of public offices, on which he is really great—has assumed a new character. The man of the Mirror is now the Methuselah of the Press. He talks almost like a patriarch before the Flood. It is refreshing in low, swampy, malaria-stricken Bengal, to hear of "the short space of 15 years." Unfortunately, the bathos of the extraordinary "demand" for a new edition of an excellent book within that short space—a demand which is such "a matter of satisfaction," "indeed," to the editor—spoils the refreshment.

As a matter of fact, the book in question had been out of print for the last 12 or 13 years.

MR. P. CHENSTAL RAO, C.I.E., formerly Stamp Superintendent of Madras, having retired from the British Service, has been appointed a paid member of the Maharajah of Mysore's Council. He is a gentleman well-known for ability and probity, and he will doubtless strengthen the Government of Mysore.

SARAH ELIZA ROBINSON has obtained a decree for judicial separation against her husband Mr. Phil Robinson. She deposed that she was married to the respondent in 1876 when he was a war correspondent and leader writer. For several years he was connected with the Daily Telegraph. There were two children of the marriage. He left her in 1883 at Eastbourne with one of the children who was dying. He locked her up in an asylum and administered to her morphia which very much excited her brain. She was also prepared to prove adultery on the part of her husband, and witnesses swore that in 1884 a gentleman and lady describing themselves as Mr. and Mrs. Robinson took passage on board the steamer Drummond Castle at Lisbon for England, passing as man and wife. Mr. Justice Butt was satisfied that there was no cruelty and the petitioner accepted the verdict of judicial separation.

Mr. Phil Robinson was on the Pioneer and raised its literary reputation. He is a man of genius—a genuine humourist. This case is another illustration of the domestic infelicity of all philosophers and literary men, from Socrates down to Bulwer Lytton.

ACCORDING to the Hospital, there is artificial honey in the market. The comb is made of paraffin wax, the "honey" being a mixture of potato starch and oil of vitriol. May Vishnu preserve us from such abominable "sells"! This, we suppose, is "the sweetest honey" which Shakespeare declares "is loathsome in its own deliciousness."

THE Berlin correspondent of the Lancet, Professor Forster, Head Physician of the Royal Eye Hospital in Breslau, has found the short-sightedness in children as not infrequently due to their wearing too tight-fitting collars. What a Zoolin to young and old, man and woman, is the Fetish of Tight-lacing and endless clothes in Europe!

Not that so much covering is needed for comfort, but then the conventional ideas of decency impose the burden on the sons and daughters of Western Civilization. Well may Miss Amelie Rives sing in "An Autumn Dream" contributed by her to the Washington Critic,

The naked hills lie wanton to the breeze,
The fields are nude, the groves unfrocked,
Bare are the shivering limbs of shameless trees;
What wonder is it that the corn is shocked!

Yes, Nature throughout is improper and outrageous, and the poor rude Europe is continually being shocked.

IN reviewing the annual report of the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs for the year 1887-88, the Bengal Government noticed a large number of cases decided against Government, and remarked that some of these cases should never have been defended. It further called for a special report for the purpose of adopting means to secure a more careful examination of the probabilities of success before engaging in litigation and the possibility of keeping stricter watch over the progress of cases when instituted. Another year's report was submitted and disposed of, but the special report called for is not yet.

IN the course of the correspondence between the Governments of Bengal and India, on the subject of the reductions suggested by the Finance Committee, the Bengal Government suggested the selection of Inspectors of Schools from the ranks of the Subordinate Educational Service. In December last, the Superior Government was not prepared to pass orders on the important matter of the Bengal Education Department, but as a measure of precaution and in reply to the Bengal suggestion, gave expression to the opinion that the retention of a sufficient number of Europeans in these posts was essential, and deferred for subsequent consideration the question of the proportion which European should bear to Native Inspectors. In the next month, the Bengal Government again addressed itself to the India Government pressing the consideration of the question reserved, to enable it to make early arrangements for filling casual vacancies. The Lieutenant-Governor is for one permanent European Inspector, and generally has no objection to the general view expressed by the Home Department. There are five Inspectors of Schools in this Province and Sir Stuart Bayley is disposed to think that it is sometimes possible to find native educational officers of exceptional competence, some of them men who have studied in European Universities.

ON the advice of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India, the Governor-General in Council has directed that, in future, a Temperature Chart be used in jails, in every case of febrile disease which is not evidently and without doubt of an intermittent type, and that a copy of the same be invariably attached to the monthly jail returns in all fatal cases of such disease. The chart will shew not only the temperature of the patient, but also the pulse and respiration per minute.

THE Government of Bengal has sanctioned the opening of drawing classes in the Hoogly and Dacca Collegiate Schools, for the purpose of teaching Free-hand and Model-drawing at a cost, including the initial outlay, of not more than Rs. 200 for each class, to be met from the surplus funds of those schools. There being no surplus funds at the disposal of the Hare School, the Lieutenant-Governor, in view of the present financial position, has declined to sanction the formation of drawing class in that institution.

A fee of 4 annas a month is to be charged to in-students and, if it be thought necessary to make a difference, a fee of 8 annas to out-students.

Holloway's Ointment.—Go where you may, in every country and in all climes persons will be found who have a ready word of praise for this Ointment. For chaps, chafes, scalds, bruises, sprains, it is an invaluable remedy; for bad legs, bad breasts, and piles, it may be confidently relied upon for effecting a sound and permanent cure. In cases of puffed ankles, erysipelas, and rheumatism, Holloway's Ointment gives the greatest comfort by reducing the inflammation, cooling the blood, soothing the nerves, adjusting the circulation, and expelling the impurities. This Ointment should have a place in every nursery. It will cure all those manifold skin affections which, originating in childhood, gain strength with the child's growth.

The class is to be held for the present for an hour every alternate day out of school hours. Students will be required to provide their own drawing paper and pencil, models, copies, &c. The classes will open from December 1889, or as soon as possible. If the applicants for admission exceed the accommodation, in-students will have preference.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JUNE 22, 1889.

DEATH OF A TIPOO PRINCE.

DEATH seems as disposed to use his sickle in the Mahomedan society as in Hindu. Last week, we had to record the death of one of the leading lights of Oordoo literature, and to-day we have to announce another departure from the same body for the unknown voyage. A prominent member of the Mahomedan community of Calcutta breathed his last on the night of Monday, the 17th instant. We refer to Prince Mahomed Anwar Shah of Russapaglah. There are so many Princes of this family and so many and so laughable mistakes are daily made in the newspapers and in European and even Hindu society, that we had better define the deceased's position. After the death of the late Prince Gholam Mahomed, who was in our time the only surviving son of the late Tipoo Sultan, Prince Anwar Shah was acknowledged by Government as the head of the Mysore Family. As such, he was invited by the Government of India to attend, and he did attend, the Imperial Assemblage at Delhi in 1877. Recently, there were living two grandsons of Tipoo Sultan in the male line—Prince Anwar Shah, the elder, and Prince Bahram Shah, the younger—and one in the female line, namely, Prince Mahomed Ruheemooddeen. By Anwar Shah's death, the number of Tipoo's grandsons has been reduced to two. He was the richest of the Mysore Princes, after Prince Gholam Mahomed—whose heirs have nearly squandered away the valuable inheritance left by him, in litigation and extravagance. One of the sons of Prince Anwar Shah, Prince Mahomed Bukhtyar Shah is an active young man, who has recently been appointed a Municipal Commissioner for the Town of Calcutta. The other son, Prince Mahomed Wahajooddeen, is an elderly gentleman of considerable ability, who was, for many years, a Municipal Commissioner and Honorary Magistrate in the Suburbs. Besides these two sons, the deceased Prince has left a daughter, who was a few years ago married to Nawab Ahmud Hassan Khan, of Benares, a descendant of the illustrious Shurceutoollah Khan—the Arz Begee of Warren Hastings—who was rewarded with a rent-free Jagheer in Ghazee-pore, for his most valuable services to the East India Company, about the same time when another Jagheer was granted, in the same neighbourhood, to Canto Baboo, the grandfather of Maharani Surnomoyee's husband.

Prince Anwar Shah was a nobleman of genuine kindness of heart and correct conduct. His charity was extensive as well as discriminate, but without ostentation. Without a career, preferring dignified quiet, he did not care to mix in the politics of the day, but he lived a useful and honourable life nonetheless. He was a very good Mahomedan, and performed the pilgrimage to Mecca with the whole of his family. He established an Anglo-Oriental school at Russapuglah for the benefit of both Mahomedans and Hindus, but chiefly for that of the younger members of the Mysore Family, but, after maintaining it for several years, at his own expense, he found that the Mahomedan boys did not sufficiently avail themselves of the benefits of that institution, and he closed it in disgust.

He had the privilege of private entree at Government House, and of exemption from attendance at the civil Courts. He was highly respected by the entire Mahomedan community, who looked upon him as one of their natural leaders. He was also much respected by such Europeans as came in contact with him. He was the owner of several of the best residences in Chowringhee, and many of the highest European gentlemen have at one time or other been his tenants. His treatment of the tenants was always highly honorable. He was never indebted to any body, and he was perhaps the only member of the Mysore Family who never allowed himself to be involved in litigation.

He died at the age of 63. His funeral was conducted in a grand style, and attended by his sons and son-in-law, as well as by Princes Ruheemoodeen, Bahram Shah, Nusseerooddeen Hyder, Furrokh Shah, Hoormuz Shah, and Noorooddeen and almost all the other members of the Mysore Family—as also by Nawab Abdool Luteef Khan Bahadoor, Mr. A. F. M. Almur Rahman, Hajee Mahomed Jaffer Sherazi, Mirza Mahomed Mehdi Sherazi and many others. His remains were buried in the afternoon of the 18th, in the Family Burial Ground at Kashi-bagan.

He has left a splendid patrimony for his sons and son-in-law, and if they only tread in his footsteps, and live as decent, honourable and respectable a life as their late lamented father, they have a brilliant career before them.

Princes in our days, whether in the East or the West, are not the most exemplary class of society. In India, they with the Mahants have become a by-word. But there are exceptions to all rules, and as Gopaldas of Jaffraganj is unique among Mohants, so was Mahomed Anwar Shah among Princes. It is enough for most of his class in India in these times, if they get on without a hitch—praise for them where they attain to decent respectability. Anwar Shah did far more. He lived not only a quiet, dignified life, but also a pure life.

SIR CHARLES DILKE AND OUR SCIENTIFIC FRONTIER.

SHORT winter visits to India have now become an institution in itself. We are regularly being visited by Royalty, great magnates, Members of Parliament, military men, city men, philanthropists and sportsmen. So many travellers to India could not fail to leave their mark on the literature respecting India as well as augment its bulk. A fugitive essay at least if not a book is contributed by every tourist. After each tour, a palaver in print has become almost as obligatory as an address from the hustings on an electioneering bout, so that there can be no reason why Sir Charles Dilke should not have kept up the precedent, visit our scientific frontier and, on his return to England, give to the world his views and impressions upon the security or insecurity of our great Indian Empire.

Sir Charles Dilke was no exception to the ordinary type of globe-trotters we are now fast becoming acquainted with, but he could not resist the folly and error, so many before him have committed, of coming out to India and, in a couple of months, running over many thousand miles of a vast and varied country and, immediately on reaching England, setting himself up as an authority, sending forth his impressions through the press on subjects which men who have been out here a quarter of a century almost fear to touch. True Sir Charles Dilke had two able coadjutors in Sir Fredrick Roberts and Sir Robert Sandeman. But I am compelled to say, much as I respect and esteem His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that he and Sir Robert Sandeman were not the class of men Sir Charles Dilke should have had as touters. My impression is that without official pressure the Commander-in-Chief would not have, in his official capacity, extended to Sir Charles Dilke the leading strings he did, that the whole affair is an official farce, and from beginning to end carries with it the official Simla or Calcutta stamp. The true value of such literary work may be variously appraised. If Sir Charles Dilke were giving expression to his own individual opinion, it would be comparatively valueless, but when such men as Sir Fredrick Roberts and Sir Robert Sandeman parade him over the country, it may be said Sir Charles Dilke is made simply the mouthpiece of his coadjutors' official opinions, thereby deceiving the public at home. Deception is the modest construction to put upon it, as Sir Charles Dilke's writings will doubtless be accepted by many as the impressions of Sir Fredrick Roberts and Sir Robert Sandeman and not his own. Sir Charles Dilke would not be an Englishman if he failed to reciprocate the hospitality of his two coadjutors. Right well has he reciprocated the generosity of Sir Fredrick Roberts and Sir Robert Sandeman. The Fortnightly Review exhibits an amazing record. It is difficult to say how Sir Charles found time in the midst of so much pleasurable society to take the required notes, unless they had been provided for him. He could hardly have ventured to treat us in India to such literary rubbish. A noticeable feature of the articles in the Fortnightly Review is that, besides mischievous inaccuracies, they are brimful of absolute weakness in the lavish compliments Sir Charles pours out to his hosts, not omitting the most diminutive luminary he encountered.

Such puerile demonstrations are neither of interest nor importance. Toned wholly in the interests of Government, they serve only to mislead the public. Nominally only does Sir Charles Dilke assume the authorship of ideas and things which are not his own, and herein lies the mischief that attaches any value to these articles in the Fortnightly Review, the Belooch and Affghan frontiers of India. That public attention at home will at length be directed to our Frontier question admits of no doubt, and it must in the end culminate in explosion of very misleading statements, if at home they are taught to regard our position as practically impregnable.

It requires no presumption on my part to assume that Sir Charles Dilke coined a new name of our Frontier in calling it the Belooch Frontier, when he only means our occupation of Quetta. This Frontier question has been discussed for some years one after the other, and beyond having thrown away millions of money and sacrificed thousands of lives, we are exactly in the same position, if not worse, that we were in when we occupied Quetta prior to Lord Lytton bringing about the war with Amir Shere Ali. Criminally the Government of India is guilty in expending such an enormous amount of money on fortifications and communications, which as a line of attack or defence the best authorities have pronounced are quite unsuited.

Chandahar after a waste of money and men had to be abandoned, as unsuitable, either for attack or defence, and the best living military authorities today repent that we ever abandoned our natural Frontier line of the Indus for the Phantom Beluch Frontier. It is very wide off the mark to say, that because the Khan of Khelat entered into an agreement with us and permitted us to occupy his country, that we were compelled to take up the position. It was not discernible then nor since, by qualified authorities on the subject, that it possessed any military advantages. If Russia ever attempts an invasion of India, it can only be with the connivance of the Afghans and Beloochees.

Sir Charles Dilke while at Quetta had an opportunity, he says, of consulting all the military experts and magnates of India from Sir Fredrick Roberts downwards. To the last-named in especial, he gives the credit of knowing Afghanistan and the Indian army better than any other living man. I am not willing to quarrel with Sir Charles over this flattering testimonial he graciously thrusts upon our gallant Commander-in-Chief, but, from what I know personally of Sir Fredrick Roberts as a soldier not as a liberal host, Sir Fredrick must have enjoyed a hearty laugh over it, and exclaimed "what chaff!" Neither General Chapman nor Sir Fredrick Roberts is infallible and they are just as liable as other human beings to err. It is the opinion of many able military experts, that it is a very great error to push our outposts to the distance we have done and construct good roads to facilitate the advance of Russia at our expense. The line of the Indus is our natural frontier, and beyond that we should not have gone to please Abdur Rahman or any one else. As matters now stand, and the Afghans and Beloochees join the Russians against us, we must fall back upon the Indus, and having once crossed it we now run the risk of committing the military suicide Sir Charles so much dreads. Admitting the Khan of Khelat himself is satisfied we should remain masters in the heart of his country, are the Beloochees themselves equally pleased? I am not prepared to believe they are, they must feel the humiliation of their position, and I am very far out in my estimation, if, when the time comes, they do not with the Afghans and Russians make common cause and drive us back to the Indus beyond which we should never have gone.

For a series of years we have been going on with an endless expansion of territory and tenfold multiplicity of our obligations, and consequent scattering of our forces over India, frittering away our resources and obtaining no advantages of any kind. It is an undeniable fact, as the Statesman has said, it is unnecessary to go beyond Sir Charles Dilke's pages to discover we have no policy in Afghanistan: that money is being poured out like water which might as well be flung into the Indian Ocean for all the advantage that is likely to accrue to India.

If there is one journal more than another which has, from the first, loudly proclaimed against this wanton waste, it is the Statesman, and it truthfully says events pass so rapidly one after the other in India, that those even of the most recent date fall rapidly into oblivion.

The all powerful journal of Allahabad which devotes a large space on the 26th May to a review of Sir Charles Dilke's articles in the Fortnightly Review, admits that Sir Charles' statements are disfigured by inaccuracies. But I fail to see what good is likely to result from a discussion, either by English politicians or Indian statesmen, of statements submitted to the public, so highly colored and charged with inaccuracies as Sir Charles Dilke's articles are. No possible good can follow. If the Central Asian problem is ever satisfactorily disposed of, it must be by Indian statesmen in India and not by English politicians in England. It is here that the practical impregnability of our position in India either at Quetta or on the Indus can be judged. Here that the possibility of our being reduced by external force, can be guarded against by the Government of India adopting a policy of honest conciliation to both Prince and Peasant. Such a policy will entail no doubt considerable brain work, but little money and still less loss of life. If we keep the natives of India at our back, we have nothing to fear from Russia had she twofold the strength the Allahabad journal would threaten and terrify us with. All the advantages, with such a policy, are ours. Under such circumstances, I decline to believe we are in any danger of an invasion of India by Russia.

I do not advocate a policy of inactivity, but what I do advocate is—our first duty should be to make ourselves secure against any internal outbreak.

The security of our Indian Empire rests on a contented people. To attain this end, we must remove the discontent of almost all classes. In the native states in particular, the relations and condition of things that now obtain between our political officers and the officials of native states, should never have been permitted. Nearly all our Residents at native Courts, exercise undue interference, in matters they have no right to. By their bluster and bullying they not only alienate the people they were intended to conciliate, but also hamper the native officers in their attempts to introduce any reform. Innumerable instances of imprudent interference can be cited. They continue to be almost of daily occurrence, and Lord Lansdowne would do well to take up the question at once, as to the true character of our relation with our native Chiefs, if we would be secure. At this moment there is no question of greater importance.

I hold a decided opinion against the Government of India entering into any negotiations or relations which might, at any moment, embroil us in very serious difficulty with the frontier tribes and the people of Afghanistan. Having gone so far with the present Ameer, we should be acting unwisely if we did not more than make him sufficiently strong in his own kingdom so as to enable him to repel an invasion of his country, so far as a small Power is capable of in its own territory to keep out a greater Power. Admitting for argument's sake that Russia was to obtain a footing in the Candahar valley, are we better off with our defensive works at Quetta, than we would be if we had advanced no farther than the Indus? I deny that we are, and contend that the further we advance beyond our natural base, the greater is the risk of defeat.

I have the very best military authority in India and England to support my argument, that we should not shorten the distance, and remove obstacles between ourselves and the invader, but increase them. Whatever impressions Sir Charles Dilke carried away with him from India, I will not be convinced that Sir Fredrick Roberts meant anything else.

ZITO.

THE DIFFICULTIES OF IMPROVEMENT IN RURAL BENGAL.

A TYPICAL CASE.

It is not often in India that disinterested men enter on litigation prompted by enlightened public spirit, but once on a time when such a phenomenon does occur, we ought to give it every respect. Such a case has just come to our notice in rural Bengal, at a village in the metropolitan District of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs. It arose out of an encroachment on a public thoroughfare in the village of Nowrah. A resident of the place, by name Anupam Chandra Mitra, who makes his living as a subordinate clerk in a Government office in town, in the interest of his fellow villagers, sued Modhusudan Ghosh, and filed a petition, together with corroborative statements of his fellow villagers in support of it, to Mr. A. W. Paul, then Magistrate and Chairman of the District Road-Cess Committee, asking for an enquiry. In the ordinary, perfunctory style of doing things, an investigation was made, on the 17th December 1886, by the Road-Cess Overseer, which resulted in an admitted fact of encroachment, but it not being recent, it was considered desirable to prosecute Modhusudan Ghose.

A police enquiry being next instituted, the Sub-Inspector of Bhangoie Thannah took the matter up and elicited the fact that there was a bona fide encroachment, and that the road so encroached upon had been under the control of the local Board and by them kept in repair. He submitted at the same time a map showing the encroachments made on the public highway.

Subsequently, in February 1887, Mr. Forbes, the then Magistrate and Chairman of the District Board, instructed the District Engineer to serve notices upon Modhusudan, and, if necessary, to prosecute him. The investigation by the Police was both incomplete and unsatisfactory, inasmuch as other serious encroachments had been made and probably winked at by the guardians of peace, a branch road leading from the village road, under the control of the local Board, to the public village road has been completely closed by an excavation, doubtless made for the purpose, by Modhusudan Ghosh, as an obstruction to the thoroughfare, and as the map submitted shews an act cognisable by the police, as interfering with public rights. On submission of the facts to Rai Bahadur Rajendra Nath Mitra, Chairman of the local Board, it was for the first time, given out that the road in dispute was not under the control of the said Board and the matter should be brought to the notice of the Magistrate. Accordingly, a petition was filed against Modhusudan Ghosh before Mr. C. W. Bolton, Magistrate of Alipore, in August 1888, and the police was again instructed to take the matter up. At a later period (21st September,) the Magistrate made over the case to one of his Deputies, who, we are afraid, was not competent by law to initiate proceedings in such cases. The Deputy, however, entered the case in his own file and called on Anupam to deposit costs. That done, a notice was now issued on Modhu Ghose, presumably under Section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code. We are not sure, as required by that section, that any conditional order was made for removal of the obstruction with liberty to the party to move to have the order set aside. Modhu, however, on the day fixed, the 27th October 1888, appeared and, afraid of facing an open enquiry, claimed the right given by Section 135 and applied to the Deputy to appoint a jury to try the case. The Deputy Baboo ordered accordingly, and resigned himself and the case to the verdict of five men most of whom were of Ghosh's party, more or less depending on, or afraid of, him. Ghosh, though a milkman, is the great man of the day in the place the prosperous dangerous upstart whom the Bhadra were glad to conciliate.

The Jurors were not appointed till the 1st November 1888, who were to visit the spot on the 12th November and to return their verdict on the 14th of the same month. Before the time fixed, the foreman of the Jury intimated to the Court his inability to attend, and offered his resignation unless the time was extended to the Christmas holidays. There was no return of the verdict, nor any fresh order made, on the 14th November. After the lapse of more than reasonable time to enable the defendant to take any steps that he might be advised on the 4th January 1889, Anupam moved the Court to pass such orders under sec. 141, as the Deputy Magistrate thought fit. But the Deputy was unwilling to pass the final order, as indicated in that Section. He wanted to be fair to Modhu. He looked out for the defendant and called on him to enter appearance on the 10th. Even then Modhu was not to be found, and the Deputy was in no hurry to pronounce the final words. He enquired and learning that there was not in the record the return of the service of the last notice, put off the matter to the 12th January. On that day, the complainant again reminded the Deputy Magistrate of the provisions of the law and prayed, that if the Court insisted on the case being decided by any other authority than the Court itself, that the case might not be entirely left to the Jury chosen but that the foreman be appointed the sole arbitrator. Modhu had mysteriously turned up that day. The Deputy Baboo was still for the Jury, and now for the first time passed orders on the refusal of the foreman to act, to enquire when it would be convenient to him to act, and in spite of the repeated protests of the complainant to send the case to the Jury and prayers to have it disposed of by the Court itself, the Deputy, on the 27th February last made his order constituting the Jury to decide the case on spot on the 18th March and report their decision to the Deputy Magistrate.

